

LIBRARY
ALABAMA COLLEGE
MONTEVALLO

VOL. I.

CALERA, ALA., FRIDAY, JANUARY 1, 1892.

NO. 10.

-[Alice Cary.

My Choice.

A Doubting Seart Where are the swallows fled?

Frozen and dead, Perchance, upon some bleak and stormy shore.

O. doubting heart! Far over purple seas They wait, in sunny ease The balmy southern breeze To bring them to their northern home once

Why must the flowers die? Prisoned they lie In the cold tomb, heedless of tears or rain. O, doubting heart! They only sleep below The soft, white ermine snow While winter winds shall blow, To breathe and smile upon you soon again.

The sun has hid its rays These many days; Will weary hours never leave the earth? O, doubting heart! The stormy clouds on high Veil the same sunny sky That soon (for spring is nigh) Shall wake the summer into golden mirth.

Fair hope is dead, and light Is quenched in night; What sound can break the silence of despair? O, doubting heart! The sky is overcast. Yet stars shall rise at last, Brighter for darkness past,

And angels' silver voices stir the air. -[Adelaide Anne Procter.

Laddy's Final Triumph.

I taught a term of district school in a small country hamlet near Mt. Desert, two years ago.

The house in which I went to board was one of the most lonesome places imaginable. A low, rambling farm dwelling, surrounded by woods, fields and meadows. No other house was in sight, and the road in each direction lost itself in a dense growth of trees. A turn of the road a quarter of a mile away brought one to the school house, church, half a dozen dwellings and the one store of the

The family with which I boarded consisted of Mr. Enoch Blaire, an itinerant preacher, with a fair education, but an inherited dislike of work; his wife, Mary, one of the best women I ever knew, a thorough housewife, with sound, practical, common strange story." sense, a pure, earnest love of religion, which she expressed in deeds more often than words, and their son, Jem, seventeen years of age.

mornber of the family several weeks, com and the strained relations of school-'am and boarding mistress had | B worn away, Mrs. Blaire asked me to He would not be home until very late | wre delight—it was so spotlessly clean an it ipped up in Sarah; anyone could see her when he came home. Every homelike, the pleasantest room in the wri house. A warm fire added to the see cheerfulness, for the fall nights hae him

Mrs. Blaire "did up" her dishe sor brushed the floor, strained the mils, str while I looked over the next daw, lessons; then we drew our cha's near the fire for one of the talks I has grown to enjoy so much. ad

"What shall we talk about?" sa Mrs. Blaire, as she clicked her knid ting needles. "Religion?"

This was her favorite theme, and loved to hear her express her Bapi I views of life and death. So I tist her to talk, till at length I looked led the clock. It marked 11.30.

"Where can Enoch be?" said N Blair, gathering up her work. Irs. was never so late before."

She arose, went to the window peered out into the intense darks and shivered slightly, came back less, threw a few more sticks on the and We sat sometime in silence, watc fire. of the cooking stove. earth one.

The old clock in the corner st the hour of 12 with slow, delib ruck trouble. After that there was scarce- "give me some flowers for the has fresh water to shower away the

A sudden breeze sprang up swung a shutter to with a loud and ing about us. We all heard strange matter with the corpse?" "It's dead, ter. Then all was fearfully when slowly and distinctly from still, baby crying. Neighbors passing the far distance came a low, m sound.

Nearer and nearer it came, I and louder it grew, until the audie cellar. room was filled with the sweet | losentinent was of joy and happy re-

1 58 7 sounds I could within our fen The melody was everywhere, plainah look a ashen. he lines about her mouth ly drawn, and the nervous wer hand chair ok visibly.

for of id me to draw the shades close back windows and come the warmth and glow of the closer fire. I this I observed and did be-

"Di you hear anything, Mrs. Blaire

I heard," murmured Mrs. n scarcely more than a whis-

"It uldn't have been Jem," I asserted, but to satisfy myself I went to the way and listened. I heard only hard, regular breathing of a heavy eeper.

t was it, Mrs. Blair?" I asked

Mrs Blaire had resumed her accusto medl. lacid expression and said, with a light reassuring laugh:

"Ol, it was nothing at all. Come, let us so to bed. We will not sit up longer for Enoch. I will come in and sit wih you till you go to sleep, if you want, ne to."

Is id I was not in the least afraid. But llay awake for a long time, wondering over the strange scene. I felt ure Mrs. Blaire had a story, and I ranged to hear it.

anytang supernatural had a strange asch tion for me.

Mrs. Blaire and I were left alone gain the next evening. As we again lrew ur chairs up before the cracking fire, my companion said, without any introduction:

Id d not speak. "Twenty years ago my only sister, then a beautiful girl of eighteen, mar-Just fifteen months after, she One evening, after I had been a and her baby girl were buried in one Before my sister died she disred that her bosom friend, Lyddy ar, had cared for her John and had ed to marry him. We all knew bring my books into the kitchen and open had never shown Lyddy any atsit with her. Jem had gone to beil cohi ion, but she tried to make Sarah with a toothache, and Enoch was at stant k he had-said her life was revival meeting in the next district tain cked and much of that kind of and she was going to sit up for him. talk 7000 and it made her very here to New York. We expect him I accepted the invitation gladly, fo perhappy, and I have not a doubt that every day. Lyddy never married. the bright, cheerful kitchen was in and hastened her death. John was She lived right here. John went to > died. Bad as I felt myself I felt away somewhere now on a visit. rier for him. It's awful to see a ver seemed to me she cared much. mance in real life. "Well, one morning, about a year eakfast looking so haggard and door greatly excited: hite that I was frightened. I asked m what was the matter. He shook ight before, so he got up and lighted | World. is pipe and sat by the open window moking. There was no light in the oom, but the moon had just risen rom behind the hills. He felt a pre-near him and said: "'John, dear, I want you to marry Lyddy,' and then she vanished.

ence near him, and, turning, saw

Sarah in her grave clothes with the paby in her arms. She came quite the sparks fly out through the h hing | marry Lyddy; I never can marry any

ly a night that we did not have some manifestation of Sarah's spirit hoverclat- sounds, rappings, sad music or a sir," said she. - [New York News. the | house late at night would tell of seeusical ing the light either in the garret or in the cellar. It was more often in the and the farmers in Palouse county,

"Once Sarah herself came to me." dy. It was singing, but singing such Mrs. Blaire paused and I drew nearer tered over the roads, and when it set-I had never heard before. The to her, but I could not speak. She tles down, it becomes smooth and . Is were unintelligibl , but the went on:

"It was just after sunset one summer evening. Our well in the back lbound until the sweet yard was low, and I had taken my d away as they had come. basket of fine white clothes down to A Summer's Experience in the tell whether they were the spring in the meadow to rinse ithout, overhead or under them. You know where the spring is -at the foot of the slope, near the gave me a strange, unex- pine grove? It was a lovely evening. beling of awe. I turned to The sky was bright with the colors of Blaire. Her face was sunset, but the pines looked dark and lonesome. I remember thinking so as I spread the things on the grass. I grasped the back of her had just finished and was taking up my empty basket when, just as plain that I could not account as I see you this minute, I beheld Ishing to shut out the night | Sarah and her baby just in the edge of the grove. She waved her arm toward the house and said 'John-Lyddy!' and disappeared.

"Of course, all these things made a great deal of talk in the village, and many wild, exaggerated stories were

"For years this state of things continued. Oh, those terrible years! I was never left alone an evening that I did not hear sad music, weird laughter, or see flickering will-o'-thewisp lights. Steps would come up the walk, but no one come in. The whole town, of course, was in a state of excitement. Some few believed in the spirit. The minister did. Others believed that Lyddy Baker was at the bottom of the whole thing, for every one knew she was possessed to marry

"A party of men from the village came one night to investigate. The minister was with them, so we let them in. They began at the garret and went through the house. The minister led the search, and he was standing on the cellar stairs, half way down, and I a little above him, when in the far corner of the dark cellar Thugh not a believer in spirits, flashed that curious light. Only for an instant, and though we waited a long time it did not come again.

"The minister came up into the yard and told the others. While they were talking of it in hushed whispers standing in groups about the yard, Sarah appeared with her baby still My dear, I'm going to tell you a held closely in her arms and glided among the group almost touching them and disappeared as mysterously as she came.

"This was the last time she ever appeared, but nearly everyone believed after that night. Until that night I had heard nothing for several vears."

she had finished. Then I asked:

"Where is John now, and Lyddy?" After that night John went to sea. We did not hear from him till a year ago he returned. He is now master of Sarah was sick and a large vessel that carries granite from that. He was kindness itself to one except me seems to have forgot-It nearly broke his heart when ten about Sarah's spirit. Lyddy is

I thanked her for telling me the ong man so unstrung. Everyone story, bade her good night; and went burned for Sarah but Lyddy. It to bed to dream of this strange ro-

When I came from school a few ter Sarah died, John came down to days later Mrs. Blaire met me at the

"John has come!" she exclaimed, "and-and Lyddy. They are mars head, but when we were alone he | ried-were married the night we old me that he could not sleep the heard the music."-[New York

Flowers for the Corpse.

lovely evening, as I was enjoying a to my clothing, so that a vigorous "Why,' said John to me, 'I can't Looking up before me a tiny woman- of my swim and the manner of it I child, whose head was adorned with a perfect Niagara of golden hair. "That was the beginning of our "Please, sir," said the tiny voice, cept at a bathing pavilion, where one corpse." "My dear child," said I, now thoroughly aroused, "what is the Straw Roads.

Straw roads are something new, Washington, greatly admire them.

SALT LAKE.

Great Inland Sea.

Easy to Float, but the Head Has a Tendency to Sink.

During a visit to Salt Lake I "enjoyed" a swim on a summer afternoon, making the trip from town to Lake Point, the Coney Island of the region, on an excursion train, in company with a number of Mormons. The little railroad runs through a diversified tract, in which garden, farm, rocky uplift, and mud plain are oddly jumbled, the plain being spotted with tufts of pale and bristling sage brush that grows on the rocky mountain country where nothing else will. There is a bathing pavilion at Lake Point with fresh water tanks, in which to rinse one's self after the bath, but I elected to try a swim without spectators; so, walking southward rocks that formed the semblance of a beach were not too numerous.

It was a trifle difficult to keep a steady footing in the water, and at it was apparent that the difficulty of wading across arose from the buoyancy that the body has in so dense a medium as the brine. When I had waded out so far that the water came up to my neck I scaled a boulder and dived. As it is my custom to open my eyes under water, I did so as soon as I was fairly immersed. In an instant it seemed as if vitriol had been poured into them. Springing to an upright position as soon as possible, I tried to get the salt out of them, but the more I rubbed the more it seemed to get in. Nature relieved the smart after a while, by pouring through the tear ducts enough of a milder solution of salt to clear the irritated cornea of the fluid, and I took pains not to let the water into my eyes again. After that the bath was more enjoyable, if only as a new experience.

There was a singular and unaccustomed sense of lightness, and it was not difficult to float high out of water either in a reclining or a sitting posture; yet a bather who is not a swimmer will fare as badly here as anywhere, for the head being heavier than the lower extremities has a tendency to sink, unless one has the skill to keep it above the surface. To a swimmer there is no especial danger, unless he is choked by the brine or blinded and confused by it. To float requires less exertion than in the sea, a slight motion of the hand being sufficient to keep the body balanced evenly, for one depends less for his buoyancy on breathing than in ocean water. On striking out to swim I was surprised at a splashing noise behind me, and discovered that it was made by my own feet, for I was so high out of water that they went into the air at every stroke. The lightness at one end of the body tends, as I have said, to depress the other, but to one who is used to swimming this is a trifle.

On emerging from the lake I found that every inch of my skin was sparkling with salt crystals, and though I rubbed and scraped they were not so It is the custom among the poorer easily to be got rid of. These crysclass in Australia to ask a gift of tals were sharp enough to create disflowers from the neighbors with which | comfort and to suggest an undue into decorate the room in which their timacy with thistles. My hair was dead repose prior to burial. One full of them, and they even adhered quiet pipe and reverie on the veranda | shaking of raiment and a fresh water of my modest cottage at Wooloomooloo bath were in order on reaching my I was aroused by a thin small voice. hotel. When I told the people in town was laughed at, and informed that it was not the correct thing to swim exsalt that sticks to him.

Salt Lake is by no means a saturated solution of salt, yet it is five or six times as rich in salts as the ocean, and nearly as strong as the Dead Sea. In summer it contains between 20 and is a carpente.: 22 per cent. of salt, the saturation point not being reached until the salt forms a little over a third of the After the straw is threshed, it is scat- liquid. There are all through the great basin numerous saline lakes and ponds, but none of the size and importance of this in Utah. Not infre- he says. - Good News.

quently they are shallow and entirely disappear during the dryness and heats of summer, leaving to mark their sites only a stretch of some acres-or it may be miles-of clay or mud, entirely covered with salt .-[Goldthwaite's Magazine.

Fungi and Timber.

The mischievous consequences that arise from the attacks of fungi upon trees and plants do not receive half the attention from cultivators that their importance demands. The potato fungus, (or fungi, rather, for there are several) compels some degree of interest, although not sufficient to prevent farmers and gardeners from thoughtlessly doing their very best, as we have repeatedly pointed out, to faciliatate the distribution of the spores, and to promote their germination, while as to preventative and palliative measures, they are scarcely even thought of outside of experimental gardens. If this be the case with crops like the potato and tomato, in which the whole process takes place along the shore for a mile or so, I under our eyes in a limited space of found a place where the rounded time, and under familiar conditions, how much more true is it in the case of timber trees, where the processes are more concealed from observation and the action more profirst I attributed this to inequalities on | longed than in the more quickly growthe bottom, but on getting where it ing crops. The injury inflicted by a was deeper I found that my legs had | thoughtless boy, who tears off a twig a disposition to come to the top, and from a tree, is well known to the observant forester; but very few others are at all capable of estimating the potential mischief that may make itself apparent even from so apparently simple an injury, perhaps many years afterwards. It is satisfactory, under such circumstances, to find that our colonial botanists are fully alive to their duties, and do their best to place their knowledge at the disposal of the practical men. In these matters, the men of science—to use a metaphor we have often employedresembles the miner searching for ore and bringing it to the surface. It is for the practical man, so called, to avail himself of the material thus placed at his disposal--[Gardener's Chronicle.

Imitation Coffee.

Various zealous authorities have been doing the public a service, thinks bin. the Chicago News, in calling attention to the quantity of imitation coffee which is yearly foisted upon the consumers of the beverage in this country. These imitations are largely manufactured in Germany, and are described By the manufacturers in their circulars to the dealers in this country as being possessed of marvellous virtues and as being, in fact, preferable on some accounts to the genuine article. The dealer is seldom deceived by this shallow artifice, but for the sake of the increased profit he condones the deception. Wheat flour and bran mixed with molasses seem to be the favorite materials for the manufacture of imitation coffees. A damaged or worthless quantity of flour is selected and refuse crackers and other waste of bakeries supply a portion of the material employed. A factory recently seized in France employed a mixture containing 500 gramms of ferrous sulphate, fifteen kilos of chickory and thirty-five kilos of flour. Such a mixture as this is seriously detrimental to health, and in a late paper on the subject Prof. Spencer urges purchasers of coffee to be extremely careful and to purchase only of reputable dealers if they wish to insure their obtaining sound and wholesome coffee.

A King's Faithful Nurse.

The young King of Spain bade farewell to his nurse, Maximina Palazuela, a short time ago. For five years and a half she was with his youthful majesty day and night. The little fellow was so strongly attached to her that it was feared their separation would endanger his health. To make the parting easier the nurse left Madrid the day the court departed for San Sebastian. She is to receive a comfortable pension from the royal treasury. A considerable sum of money was also given to the woman's husband, who

Inheritance. Mrs. Gadd-Does your boy take father. You never can believe a word explains the supposed difficulty.

after you or his father?

Take the palace all ashine, With its lofty halls and towers; Let the little house be be mine, With its door-yard, grass and flowers Ah, for once, be kindly. Fate To my harmless plan agree;

Leave the little things to me.

HUMOROUS. A tie game-getting married. The most irresistible kitchen utensil is the potato "masher."

Take whatever things are great

How to get a woman to keep a secret-Give her chloroform.

A boy is expected to love his mother even though she cuts his hair.

It isn't the man with a drought of ideas who is most apt to make dry Advice is valuable chiefly when it makes a man mad enough to follow his own ideas.

The man who growls because he hasn't found his level has probably failed to do his level best.

"He is such a sonorous speaker," said an admirer of an orator. "Yes," replied his wife, "and sleeper."

A philosopher who had married an ignorant girl used to call her brown sugar, because he said she was sweet but not refined. Principal-"Before you sit down to write that letter, Jacob, go and wash your hands, else there will be extra postage to pay." Nothing is more disheartening to a man than the discovery that he has married a woman who loves to keep his writing table in order. Isabella-This ring that Charlie gave me is very pretty, but it's too tight.

Arabella-Well, you see, your fingers are somewhat stauter than Alice Pon-When we are poor we always have very clear ideas of the duty of the rich; but when we gain money, we are experts in show the poor how to

Jimmy-Pa, I wish I could be a ptrate and sail the Spanish main and scuttle ships. Mr. Scrimp-Well, vou just take this scuttle and sail down cellar and pirate some coal from Smith's

"What are you doing there?" asked the house dog of the hens, who were sratching in the garden. "Nothing much," was the reply; "just having our measure taken for a pair of Johnny (entertaining the young man before "Sis" entered the parlor,-I 'lowed you'd never come back here any more. Young Man-Why so, Johnny. Johnny-Sis said yesterday you was Little Sammy's grandmother was not a very old lady, but had a deeply wrinkled face. She had taught him to call her Mrs. Baker, but never told him the reason why. One day Sammy was talking about Mrs. Baker. Some one asked him, "Who is Mrs. Baker?" He replied, "Don't you know Mrs. Baker? Why she's that lady over there with the cracked face."

In my dream I had a vision-The Millennium was reached. This I knew with great precision, For men practised what they preached.

Flowers That Turn With the Sun. That sunflowers turn with the sun is about as true as that any other flowers similarly turn. In the growth of plants the flower stems take a spiral motion. In many cases the uncoiling is finished by the time the flowers open; but in many cases it continues for a short time longer. Prof. W. A. Kellerman, in a recent issue of the Kansas Academy of Science; has been testing how far the common sunflower "turns to the sun." He found 87 per cent. of the heads, while in bloom, show some movement by day, and a less percentage at night. He also found that 13 per cent. had a movement somewhat toward the west, and eight per cent toward the east. The night motion was 21 per cent. eastward and eight westward. The difference would show, if it were at all necessary, that there is no heliotropism in the case. But the knowledge that the motion is a mere uncoiling, and that there are continuous alternations in the direction of the spirals in Mrs. Gabb-He takes after his the growing inflorescence of plants, [New York Independent.

THE CALERA JOURNAL. FRANK W. GIST, EDITOR CALERA, FRIDAY, JANUARY 1.

THE JOURNAL wishes all its readers a Happy New Year.

inees. They had as well start out and that nobody will feel that there 1888. on their own hook at once, for the has been a misdeal. party will never embody these wild schemes into its platform.

in that county at fourteen to happy. twelve in the Governor's favor. This definite information only strengthen's the Journal's position heiress of the muses ask, and she it; street and electric railways, 147; words that there is work to be done in the assured for herself that she would tanneries, s6; water works, 113; woodeffort to re-elect one of Alabama's not. Surely one so favored by the working establishments, 641; and misbest and purest men.

the coming convention on a basis dens of the future opened to us, the increasing diversity in the indusof population is being discussed. the struggle ere it was begun, tremely low prices prevailing for pig We don't like it. No man or However, let us remember that we iron and cotton and the unsettled condi-county has a right to representation must all make our futures, and tion of trade the progess made is cerin a democratic convention who has upon us depends whether it were a tainly encouraging. in a democratic convention who has a picture to be gazed upon with delight, or shrunk from in terror.

The remarkable development that has taken place in the phosphate ingubernatorial vote has given very good results in the past, and there well to reflect on the beautiful year. they should dest more democratic is mothers." If women do not new cotton and woolen mills for the votes.

thing tangible. No wholesale cut bread and shoes for the children. will be attempted, for that gentle- So, too, the women who do not vote policy would only meet with a quick statesmen, its presidents, and its divines. defeat in the senate. It is evi- She is the power behind the throne; dently a better plan to propose an influence more weighty than if such changes as will assure cer- she sat upon it. relief, leaving it to the National Convention to adopt a more sweeping policy.

from the letter of Judge McEnery tion for the governorship of Louisi- interests of Alabama.—Advertiser. ana. They are words of wisdom mean necessarily that he will carry the people either directly or indirectly.

Course (Dem.)

The plan of tar of public cofficials, and will in and Mills.—St. Louis Post Dispach. reality become an alien in the state | The bill to protect the American flag

THE Selma Times-Mail certainly so far no loss of honor by being left took too much of the overjoyful on Washington Star (Ind.) Christmas. In its issue of Sunday last it announces its preference for David B. Hill for president, and A census bulletin just issued gives the gives as its reasons therefor the belief that Hill is one of the ablest transportation and ranged statistics of pair; belief that Hill is one of the ablest barran Georgia and Florida from 1880 to pair. New York, that he is conservative number carried in 1880. The table on the tariff and silver, and that he equipment snows that for each 100 miles find we mean business. We want to would make one of the ablest, most against fourteen in 1883. The statistics patriotic and most acceptable pres- for all roads in the United States show idents since the days of Jefferson that nineteen engines are required for each 400 miles of road. The number of David B. Hill's ability consists in his faculties for managing pot-house rings and ward polatics, his purity beside that of Cleveland is like the grown frost hoside the conversal of the second polatics of t gray frost beside the snowflake, 1889, 201,757. his conservatism is that of a timeserver and his patriotism after election would be contined to his own sweet self. Acceptable, indeed. Bah. The Times-Mail sees industrial developers, and their growth and prosperity means the industrial functional growth of the country. through a glass darkly.

GOSSIP OF THE CRITIC.

Today is the beginning of leap year and the dear creatures will have things their own way for twelve months. How many of us will find just how much or how little they care for us. How many A PRIMARY alliance in Tailadega of us will find that in the game to be hoped for the honor of the new district that as between the two well-used opportunities. Be men ment and improvement companies, 202; and women, and the leaves will distilleries, 7; electric light companies THE official count in Jefferson turn themselves right and the 140; flour and grist mills, 108; founder- Calera, are requested to meet at this iver Jones a majority of a little possibilities, will form themselves in and machine shore 186; furness place on Thursday, Jan. 15, 1892, for gives Jones a majority of a little resolutions will form themselves, ies and machide shops, 186; furnaces, over 600, which will place the vote May you live long and been 29; gas works, 23; ice factories, 72; the purpose of organizing a beatencamp ment. It is necessary to have five of destiny pictured there. And yet the above, 409.

HON. JAMES E. HAWKINS, of Jef- number of new leaves turned over. trade and the strangency of the money ferson, is a cannidate for congress Less than ten per cent. of the market. from the ninth district. Mr. Hawof the leaves will never be read. year are reported by the Tradesman as kins is a man of ability and will New-Year resolutions are quite follows: carry into his canvass much fashionable but never amount to Agricultural implement works, 14; strength. He has for his opponent anything. The only safe way is to barrel factories, 14; boot and shoe but it seems that with your Uncle S. M. Adams, of Bibb, and it is to take the days as they come, and factories, 19; brewesics- 19; brick and David at the head of affairs they be hoped for the honor of the new make the best of the hours as they tile factories. 108; car works, 26; can can't help themselves. district that as between the two Mr. Hawkins will win.

A proposition to appoint dele

perhaps she is right. Were the The development for the year has fight they give to the state all its year. to the valley of the shadow of death leads the list with 611 new companies THE appointment of Mr. Springer every few years, who gives up her incorporated. This is a larger number One Bean. to the chairmanship of the Ways health, her beauty her means of imand Means Committee undoubtedly provement, her social pleasures that means that tariff legislation in this state, certainly does as much for congress will be confined to some- the state as the father who buys man wisely believes that such a give to the state its electors, its statesmen, its senators, its gover-

PRESS PARAGRAPHS.

160 tons. The iron came from Birmingham and is the first shipment under a large contract to the same parties. It is a copting the democratic nomina- promises much to the future of the iron

Jones' victory in Jefferson does not and voice a sentiment of the soundest principle.

"In my opinion the government should be supported by contributions from the people. It is unwise, impolitic and it is against the will enter the supported by contributions from the people. It is unwise, impolitic and it is against the will enter the form of the hardest struggles ever undertaken for an office in this state and it will not do to daily on the way.—Greenville Advocate.

Any tariff reform programme that that does not come from the cratic house of representatives.—Buffalo

The plan of tariff reform which offers and devoid of all interest in its destiny.

The bill to protect the American hag from indignity embodies a worthy sentiment, attnough there is no indication that the general public has shown nack of respect for it. It has suffered

SOUTHERN RAILROADS.

These and other statististics show that

SOUTHERN PROSPERITY.

TWELVE MONTHS.

says openly that unless the demo- be played we have no hands strong dustrial development of the South in the 1890 and 1889 respectively. cratic party endorses the Ocala demands it will not support the nominands it will not support the nominands in the land of the

A great many new resolutions will be formed today and quite a past twelve months is especially gratifying in view of the general condition of activity in all industrial branches.

Would we look into our future mills, 66; phosphate companies, 135; if we could," the Critic heard an potteries, 8; rairroad 373; rolling mills, fates need not fear to see her cellaneous industries not classified in gates to the different counties in sorrows, the heartaches, the bur- ien steady and a gratifying feature is we might be tempted to lay down tries established. In view of the ex-> dustry is shown by the fact that 135 The woman suffragists would do companies were incorporated during the

is no reason for a change. If cer- theory expressed by Napolean when Textile interests have also attracted tain counties want more delegates he said, . The great need of France investors and the reports show 152

A woman who goes down The wood-working industry as usual than were established in in any one of the three previous years

The craze for b'a t furnsce companies A FLATTERING REPORT FOR THE PAST in the South moderated considerably during the year, and only 29 were in corporated against 83 in 1890.

More railroad companies were or-CHATTANOOGA, Dec. 20 .- The Trades- ganized than in any previous year, the man in its annual review of the in- total being 373, against 367 and 282 in year will be encouraging to all inter-The Tradesman says that the show- ested in the improvement of this section ing made by the Southern States in the and it is believed that the next twelve

> New York has a democratic leg islature at last, and will so district the state that it will remain so. The republicans are mad about it,

CONFEDERATE VETERANS.

The Confederate veterans of Beat 3, rol: Adjoining be at are invited.

John P. What,

Captain Beat 3.

HOLIDAY EXCURSION RATES.

For Christmas Honday excursion rates the East Tennessee. Virginia & Georgia (ailroad will sell round triptickets on December 20 to 25 inclusive and on December 29, 1891, to January 1, 1892 inclusive, limiting to January 5, to return at rate of one fare and one third. These exemsion rates will apply to all points east of the Mississippi river metuding all points in Iodiana, Plinois, Objo and Michigan. For father in-formation apply to any agent of the company or write to

L. A. BELI, A.G. P. A., Selma, Ala

This would be a comparatively happy world if everyionly knew the virtues of SMITH'S BILE BEANS as a family redicine, and acted upon that knowledge. One half the misery of the world comes from ailments which arise from a bad knowledge, and all liver. Chiefart a bad stomach or a bad liver. Chiefest among these are dyspepsia, bilious gess, sick headache and Neuralgia. BILE BEANS will cure all of these, she may furnish soldiers to the state, certainly does as much for the state as the father who buys Ine New York Store,

Calera, Ala.,

SAYS-Ii you are Interested in

THE following is the utterance signed to Naylor & Co, and consisted of littleng. The following is the utterance signed to Naylor & Co, and consisted of littleng. The following is the utterance signed to Naylor & Co, and consisted of littleng. The following is the utterance signed to Naylor & Co, and consisted of littleng.

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS.

CLOTHING & HATS.

soundest principles of government does not include free wool and a reductor rely for support of the government upon any scheme for revenue ment upon any scheme for revenue an everlasting discredit to the Demo-

Please Listen to Us just 20 Minutes. We are overstocked, and in order to zen and he has no relation to the government, he will become indifferent to its welfare. He will government, he will become indifferent to its welfare. He will got all the result out of the plan of a

Goods in our House

Trease listen to Cs just 20 similars. We will sell you any Dry different to its welfare. He will

Goods in our House

We have a Large Stock to dispose of and when you hear the Prices you will b istenished how such goods can be sold so low. Listen:

Cott in Checks 41-2 to 5 cents; Nice Cashine e Dress Goods 103, cents per card; Same at 224-2; a Finer Go ds at 274-2; All Woot Lidies Clo h lifty inches sine only 374-2 cents, former price 65; Ladies Fast Black Hose 74-2 cents per pair; a bitter goods for 124-2 cents; a Fine Hose for 174-2 cents, city price 40 house. onts; Salt 6) cents per sack; Fine Shoes $1 25 to $2 50; Good Shoes $1 00 per statesmen as well as one of the purest men in the land, that he is the only democrat who can carry New York that he is conservative has been pured in 1889 the number carried once. We guarantee all prices named, and a child will get as low prices as an older person. No favorites, but one price to all. Come and see us and you will not consider the number of parsengers carried in 1889 the numbe Come and see us. We have too much to mention all in this paper. Come at | Sand Beach, Mich, and are blessed

Reduce the Stock,

THEY MUST BE CUT INTO

A. G. WADE & CO.

Banking House of

W. E. Brykerhoff & Co.,

CALEFA; ALABAMA.

Receive Depsits,

Negotiate Loans,

Issue interest bearing certifietes of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York Louisville and Birmingham at 12 for rates equrged by the larger cities.

We transact a general back. business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate brangits, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchanes, manufacturers and Legiters alike.

mining and quarrying companies, 212; these encampanents in a county in order natural gas and oil companies, 25; oil mills, 66; phosphate companies, 135;

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION. Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT. 1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these de

1. It is the best of all weekly papers.
2. It is invaluable to the farm and the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happin as to the household.
3. It covers the news of the world, having its correspondents tered over the globe, and having:

the sum of the sum of the sum of the seaffered over the globe, and having:

the study champion of the agricultural interests of the south.

The sum of the sum of

4. Its Agricultural Departmen is worth many times its subs lone features and for its news service than ation any other for r of the weekly newspapers price to every farmer. This department of the south, and much more than any sedited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the lead-weekly newspaper in America. ing agricultural authority of the south, 9 It is the cheapest, being only One whose service is retained by the Yonstition at great expense.

5. It's Woman'3 and Children of partners are a source of infinite of opening of the greatest weekly newsparare to every family, and the mane of pers in the world.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses, home should be without it. is the larmers' friend, and no well regulated Agents Wan ed in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and morely in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

JONES 260.

An Easy Way To Get a Present.

The Montgomery Advertiser offer $50 cash to the first correct answer their Bible questions: "Where in the siole is first found the word marry. The conditions are that the price our weekly ($1) must accompany thanswer. They give $100 to the correlative, $50 to the second, $25 to the second. third, $15 to the fourth, $10 to the fift anh $2 each in pext 25. This is an eas way to get Christmas presents, and the awards are to be made on the 2 rd this month.

Mr. and Mrs. Loren Trescott ar keepers of the Gov. Light-house with a daughter, four years old. Last pril she was taken down with Measles followed with a dreadful Cough and turning into a Fever. Doctors at home and at Detroit treated her, but in vain, she grew worse rapidly, until she was a mere "handful of bones".— Then she tried Dr. King's New Discovery and after the use of two and a half bottles, was copletely cured

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy. RICHARD K. FOX.
Square. New York City.

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN

8. It pays more money for its special

ARCHITECTS & BUILDERS

Edition of Scientific American.

TRADE MARKS. our mark is not registered in the Patapply to Mrnn & Co., and procure protection. Send for Handbook. Immediate protection. Send for Handbook.
COPYRIGHTS for books, charts, maps, ptc., quickly procured. Address
BIUNN & CO., Patent Solicitors. Concernal Office: 361 BROADWAY N. E.

DO YOU WANT AN EXQUISITELY BEAUTIFUL SCREEN COECOP1 'An Elegan' Hovelty in Calendars." "A Touching Story Told in Colors."
"Eligibly Original, and a Work of Art." TO PROCURE THIS CALENDAR

Dr.C.McLANE'S Celeb't'd LIVER PILLS

For 25 Cents from your Druggist, and mall the outside wrapper, with your address and four cents in Postage Stamps to FLEMING BROS., Pittsburgh Pa.

Man va person is starving with a full table refore them. Appetite gone! Ambition gone! Life a burden!! What is the la ster? The Liver has ceased to do its proper work. The life channes the brown back into the blood, which should be thrown out. SMITH SBILE BE will surely stimulate the lives to do atts work well, and hendache, all lowners and bad breath will flee away. Trice, 25 cents per bettle. All druggists.

GENERAL INFORMATION.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE. LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE.

No. 1, South Bound, 4:53 a. m. 4:11 p. m. day. 5 10 a. m. 10 19 ' 6.6 2, North Bound, 44

E. T. V. & G. R. R.

No. 1, To Selma, From Selma, 10:40 p. m.

ALABAMA MINERAL. No. 85, Arrives at 86, Departs at

AT THE CHURCHES. PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m. and third Sundays, morning and night, sister. by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

Baptist Church--Rev. J. G. Lowrey, pastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday May the new year for him be a school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at bright one. 7.00 p. m , every Thursday.

CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN-J. C Comberland Preserve in Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3.

Mr. F. H. Hardy has resigned his position in the railway mail

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge-R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter Register in Chancery-D. R. McMillan.

Tax Collector—E. F. Vest.
Tax Assessor—W. H. Kidd.
County Trersurer—A. W. Strickland.
Superintendent of Education—T. N.

County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. Dyeev, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

FLORIDA VESTIBULE TRAIN.

The first regular vestibule train ever car, two day coaches and one or more Pullman sleepers. The train will be vestibuled from end to end and will be described exactly in the Times. It will be no regularly every day between Chattanooga and St. Augustine, Fla., by the East Tennessee, Virginia E. Fla., by will be over four homs quicker than at will be over four hours quicker than at present between Chattanooga and St. Augustine. Keuming it will leave St. Augustine. Keuming it will leave St. Augustine. 8:10 a.m., Jacksonville 9:50 am, Macch 7:0 p.m., Arlanta 10:50 pm, arrive. Chattanooga 4 a.m. leave 4:10 a.m., arrive. Cincionati. 5: 0 p.m...

Tuesday. This is the vestibuled train the East Tennessee promised, and if you want to

ASSIGNEES SALE.

Pssignment, executed by Strickland & Bass to me, bearing date April, 1891, and duly recorded in Shelby county in burial ground. Deed Book No. 15, page 212, proceed to sell at public auction to the highest bid-

The old year was watched out in the Journal and learned and fifty feet of 11-2 inch pipe, one 12 x and fifty feet of 11-2 inch pipe, one 12 x and fifty feet of 11-2 inch pipe, one 12 x to boiler, one 11 x 16 Atlas engine, one saw mill and carriage, three circular the devil. The News editor was Santa Claus, in the person in lots to suit purchasers.

A. H. CARPENTER, Assignee of Strickland & Bass. Gurnee, Ala., December 14, 1891. 18dec4t prs fee $10.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

'It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable week the Journal unintentionally amount of life insurance, where the storms of the financial world cannot omitted the name of Mr. W. E. touch them; where the assessor cannot Brinkerhoff as one of the gentlemen sions of the holidays, was the tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old one of the most conspicious figures. The horizontal tree at the Cumberland church on Christmas tree at the Christmas tree at the Christmas tree at the Christmas tree a bit of interesting reading resides.

TOWN TOPICS.

reports a pleasant trip.

Miss Gertie Price, of Selma, 4:40 p. m. visited the family of Mrs. Jones L. & N. railroad, was seriously Tuesday evening.

and was a very nice little hop.

Sundays in each month, morning and Revenues for this district, spent Wednesday in Calera. He was ac-

> Maj. C G. Wagner, of Siluria, was among his friends in Calera

Immediately after the New Year Alabama.

facture of lime.

Mr. W. T. Moore, of Bibb county. a student at the Southern University, of Greensboro, was in to see us on Tuesday. He has been visit- be suited in both goods and prices. ing relatives in this county.

will receive this evening at the residence of Mrs. J. D. Hardy, and their young lady friends will find them at home there after 8 o'clock do start they are immense.

cate in Calera, and will be here was in town on Tuesday. He came physician of that place, has acond.

The train will leave Cincinnati next reputation as a physician and will He will move here with his family and will have charge of the pre-> morning and night. The preaching days will continue as heretofore on the fourth Sunday in each we have been able to give heretofor,

Mr. and Mrs. Bridges attended on Tuesday morning the marriage of Ala., commencing at the hour of 10 colock a.m., I will as assignee, in complete the purposes of the purposes of the specific collection for this cause. The Journal will appreciate their speech.

der for cash, the following goods and efficient city marshal, in a brave Since then he has decided to re-One 20 x 8 wood pulley, one No. 3 colored population, rain against a up a stock of drugs in the brick mandril, one three inch flue cleaner, two 24 x 8 wood pulleys, sixty-two feet two 25 colored population, rain against a up a stock of drugs in the brick two 25 colored population, rain against a up a stock of drugs in the brick two 25 colored populations. The colored population against a up a stock of drugs in the brick two 25 colored populations. colored population, rain against a up a stock of drugs in the brick of rubber belting, twenty-five of 8 mch male beligerents. The collision re- Scott is a thorough druggist and saws, two night dogs, one 10 x 15 Wood & Mann engine, two lumber cars.

Said articles will be offered singly or editor was at the Christian Enham, was down during the holidays The next best thing possible to insur- visiting Mr. W. H. Duran. To-

In the report of the ball last ities is called to the frequency with and through their straight leaves "FROM THE MOUNTAINS TO THE which the crossing at the passen- peeped tiny tapers. Some handger depot is blocked by trains, some presents hung from the holly call on L. A. BELL, A. G. P. A., The East Tennesee, Virginia & Georgia railroad has issued a next little pamphlet entitled. "From the "Mountains to the Gulf," In which a splendid description of the country traversed by its lines is given. It is professly illes.

Hon. H. A. Herbert, Congress-

gomery, was in the city on Mon- his daughter. He was returning to Washington after a trip home, Dr. A. E. Scott made a trip to riage of his elder daughter. The small but appreciative audience. 10:05 p. m. New Orleans Saturday, where he Colonel was looking well and in With a few changes from the form-7 15 p. m. purchased his stock of drugs. He fine condition for the coming labors er one the programme was as folin the House.

Mr. Daniels, an employee of the this week. She returned home hurt while making a coupling in the yard here last Thursday morn-4:35 p. m. An impromptu dance was given ing about 2 o'clock. His arm was Solo and Chorus—"Six cents a Quarter at Black's Hall on Monday night, caught between two drawheads for Schooling"—Miss Ethel Greek and - It was attended by nine couples, and so badly mangled that amputatian was necessary. The opera-Hon. R. A. Moseley, Collector of tion was performed and he waz taken to his home in Birmingham.

Methodist-Services on the second companied by his brother and the past week, several gentlemen have been on the hunt for them.

They can all be accommodated and Calera will make room for any and all who will make their homes within her gates. Let them all come and help to build a town on one of the best locations in Control Wilson.

Motion Song—"Old Time Plays."
Vocal Duct—"Only Thee"—Miss Lutie Blevins and Mr. McKibbon.
Recitation—"The Rainy Day"—Misses Galloway. Ethel Greek, May and Fay McKibbon.
Vocal Solo—"That is Love"—Mr. Gist. Vocal Trio—"Down Among the Lillies"—Mrs. Bridges. Mrs. Wright and Mrs. have been on the hunt fer them. Monday looking well and happy. within her gates. Let them all one of the best locations in Central

> A. C. Wade & Co., have a double column advertisement in this issue. offering for sale their enormous stock of goods. The gentlemen those who did not attend were the Mr. F. H. Hardy has resigned composing this firm are too well- most unfortunate. his position in the railway mail known to the public to need any service, and will be at home in the introduction, they having been in future and engaged in the manu- business in Calera for several years. They have a very handsome and well assorted stock of goods which they desire to dispose of at an early day. Call upon them and you will

On Christmas morning the Jour-The young gentlemen of Calera thousand barrel hoops piled before the door. We presume it was intended as a Christmas present, but they were taken away before the editor got down. We have no use Even the fair ones had to get on but the kind donor evidently had run through Tennessee will be put on next Sunday. The train will consist of mail car, Southern Express car, baggage car, two day coaches and one or more branches. It will be less the business. It will be less was looked upon as a great thing time directly to the place where they are to be used. Someone will be there to receive them.

> the newspaper department than his permanent home. and hope to have the patronage of the entire county.

The Christmas ship at the Pres-Miss Emma Bridges, of Selma, to byterian church was a pretty one see sen.ett.ing gorgeous go to the Central Depot next Sunday night at 10 o'clock.—Chattaneoga Times Nov. 22newly wedded couple passed up on ful presents. Mr. Brinkerhoff, as Tuesday morning enroute to their Santa Claus made the children smile with his pleasant remarks as he dealt out the presents with a NOTICE is hereby given that on Satterday the 17th day of January, 1892, at the Presbyterian church on the the saw mill of the late Strickland & bass, near Gurnee, in Shelby county. Ala., commencing at the hour of 10 Let the other churches set aside a Campbell caught the hearts of the camera and Hendrix. Little Miss Mary The congregational collection at lavish hand. The recitations were

The Journal was in error last week when it said that Mr. A. R. Christmas night Col. West, the Scott was going to leave Calera. effort to preserve order among the main and will in a day or so open 4 ply tubber belting, forty-five feet of 6 inch 4 ply rubber belting, twenty-two teet of 4 inch 4 ply rubber belting, twenty-two teet of 4 inch 4 ply rubber belting, two lumdred and sixty-seven and a half feet offenders were acquitted.

The control of the from an energetic business man. His card will appear in the Journal offenders were acquitted. goods he will offer to the citizens The old year was watched out in of Calera. We are glad to know the Journal and News office by the he is to remain and hope he will deavor meeting. The dead year is S. K. Harrell, came to the Methoa rather uninteresting corpse to sit dist church amid the sound of ringing bells, and brought joy to the hearts of the children. The tree Mr. J. W. Beasley, of Birming- was a large one and was heavily laden. So short a time had they ance against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of Colors. to devote to the exercises, they chief attraction for them at home duced Santa Claus, in a brief his-Read and profit by the following sound and came back happy and elated tory of his origin which was interesting to the children who had been wondering where the white bearded philantrophist came from.

One of the most pleasant occasge should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-Witt Talmage.

The attention of the city author
The was church on Christmas morning. The house was beautifully decorated giving evidence of the work of a delicate hand. Palm trees from the far South, gave to the scene an appearance of summer supshing. the far South, gave to the scene Mobile and Philadelphia, via Calera some presents hung from the holly other crossing should be arranged, are to be complimented upon the trated with handsome engravings of country and places and buildings. It is clear. efforts with success.

CUMBERLAND CONCERT.

On Wednesday night the Com where he was present at the mar- berland Concert was repeated to a Piano Duet—Misses Haggins and Teague, Chorus—"Merry Laughing Girls" Vocal Solo—"When the Tide Comes In—Mrs. J. S. Bridges, Piano Duet—"Caliph of Bagdad '—Misses and so badly mangled that amputatian was necessary. The operation was performed and he wat aken to his home in Birmingham.

Houses have been in demand for Houses have been in demand for the solution of the Wilson.

Piano Dust—"Qui Vive"—Miss Teague and Mrs. Wilson.
Vocal Solo—"Madaline"—Mrs. Wright.
Vocal Dust—"Gently Sighs the Breeze."
Misses Onderdonk and Blevins.

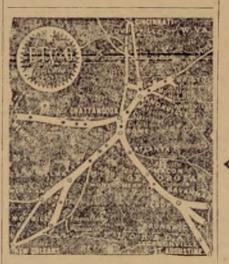

Each part was well rendered, and

M. T. & M. ABANDONED.

A special from Montgomery says: "The Montgomery, Tuskaloosa and Memphis railroad, for some time past working under financial stress, sold a number of their cars lately. NAL woke up and found about two 27 and 28 to Chattanooga, to the Today they shipped engines 25, 26, order of the Brooks Locomotive

These engines were standing in the yard at Calera last night, enfor hoops in the printing business, route for Chattanooga. This will be received with regret by our a tear during the holidays, and that an idea to a prospective change in Bibb county readers. The M. T.

Mr. Huston Price, of Florence, Mr. S. H. Gist, of Centreville, Ala., a son of Dr. Price, a leading the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia about January 15. He has quite a to secure a location and found one. cepted a position with G. J. Wright, Sunday at 11:30 a m, and leave Chatter find a hearty welcome among our during the month. Mr. Gist is an scription department. Mr. Price has tannoga at 10:40 p m, antiving at Atlanta 4:45 a m, Macon 6:45 a m, Jesup Roy, Mr. Sincette and Roy Mr. Sincette and Roy

THE

East Tennessee, Virginia & Ga., Rv. System

Is The ONLY

SHORT AND DIRECT LINE

North, East

West

and the RESORTS

of the Carolinas. Virginia & Tennessee.

Pullman's Finest Sleeping cars be tween Washington and New Orleans;

For any information write to or n this line.

Selma, Ala.,

B. W. WRENN, G. P. & T. A.

Knoxville, Tenn.

Mr. B. B. Warren, of Montomery, was in the city on Monav

A Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as it will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the latest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of the state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

Rev. Mr. Sinnott assumed pastorall charge of the Presbyterian church last Sunday, preaching at morning and night.

Rev. Mr. Sinnott assumed pastorall charge of the Presbyterian church last Sunday, preaching at morning and night.

Rev. Mr. Sinnott assumed pastorwill lend his knowledge of the busithe Alabama Medical College at Mobile. We are glad to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agent, and we want a correspondent at morning and night.

The time made by this palatial train will be county been attending lectures at contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to the improvement of the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class to all.

Quickly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

and Legal Printing a Commercial

WITHOUT CHANGE.

The Journal will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note WITHOUT CHANGE.

The Journal will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Theads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work

EVER MADE BY ANY ADMINISTRATION-THAT IS THE REPUBLICAN RECORD DURING THE PAST YEAR-THE DU-PLICITY OF TREASURY FIGURES.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the year ending June 30 last, shows a very serious increase in the disorder of the public finances even when compared with the highly unsatisfactory conditions of the preceding year. In revenues there is a loss of $2,515,000 under the Bullion-Storage act; of $10,146,000 under the prohibitive operation of the McKinley bill, with other items of loss aggregating a gross decrease of $15,-627,000, and, excluding the increase in receipts from the Postoffice Department, a net decrease of over $10,000,000 With this there is a net increase in ordinary expenditure of $57,637,198. That is, even when compared with the bad conditions of the preceding year the finances of the Administration were over $67,000,000 to the worse.

A better idea of existing conditions can be gained, however, by a comparison of the total net ordinary expenditures for the fiscal year with those of a year under each of two preceding Presi-

So for ordinary expenses Harrison for one year cost nearly as much as either Cleveland or Arthur for two, and this by the showing of Harrison's own bookkeeping. The extraordinary expenses of 1883 under Arthur for sinking fund and public debt redemption were $134,-178,000; for 1887, under Cleveland, $119,612.000; for 1888, under Cleve-land, $127,926,000; and for the fiscal year ending June last, under Harrison, $134,947,000. So that, as will be seen, Mr. Harrison is doing nothing more for the payment of the public debt than Mr. Arthur did, though a pretence of increased activity in this respect is made with much display in his message.

It is to be noted here that among the shuffles of the bookkeeping of this Administration, the Postoffice revenues are carried over to the general revenuessomething that had not been done under preceding administrations, when the postal service was self-sustaining and no deficit was expected in the general funds of the Treasury. This year the Postoffice Department is over $6,000,000 behind on ordinary expenses as above ordinary receipts, as shown by the report of the Postmaster-General, though the Treasury report makes a bookkeeper's exact balance. The Postmaster-General gives $71,339,000 as the ordinary expenditures and $64,928,000 as the receipts. The Treasury report gives receipts and expenditures for postal service as balancing at $65,931,000. This is a sample of the bookkeeping intended for the public.

The inclusion of the $65,000,000 from postal receipts accounts for Mr. Harrison's claim that the net ordinary receipts amounted to $458,000,000, when under the precedents of the Treasury before his time they would have put at $393,000,000, and net ordinary expenses, including postal deficit, but excluding Postoffice Department expenses met from its own resources, at $362,-000,000, leaving a cash balance of $31,-000,000, or $11,000,000 less than the sum required for the sinking fund.

That is, had the postal account, except deficit, been excluded from the statement of net ordinary receipts and expenditures as under Cleveland, and had the sinking fund been included in net ordinary expenditures as under Cleveland, the Harrison statement, instead of showing the net cash balance he alleges, would have shown a deficit of over $11,000,000. which is now covered by the shuffle of the postal and sinking fund accounts. To meet the sinking fund and for bond redemption, over $63,000,000 was used from the special fund for the redemption of National bank notes, which thus becomes a liability, and deducting it from the alleged total of $134,947,000 given as expenditures for sinking fund and redemption account, there remains only $71,947,000 expended on the redemption account as against $134,178,000 for 1883 under Arthur, and $119,612,000 for 1888 under Cleveland.

Treasury figures. They involve the facts, should be the nominee of his party! but pains are taken to prevent them from becoming explicit. The facts can be extorted from them, but on the face of the statement it is false.

But taking the statement on its face we

Ordinary expenditures$421,304,470 Extraordinary expenditures 134,947,635
Total expenditures$556,252,105 Total receipts Excess over expenditures3197,697,872 With this year of Harrison compare a year of Arthur:

Excess over expenditures..... $1,299,312

It must be noticed here that the extraordinary expenses are in round numbers the same ($134,000,000) for both years-which leaves Harrison $96,000,-000 worse than Arthur on the year, exclusive of sinking fund and redemption accounts, the same in both years. And this, it must be remembered, is not reached by a comparison of Harrison's ordinary expenditures with Arthur's, but applies to the economy of both administrations, taking into consideration expenditures as compared with receipts for each and only then comparing the re-

Probably this is not the worst possible showing. That for the current fiscal year will almost certainly be worse. But it is the worst showing ever yet made by any administration in the history of the country. -St. Louis Republic.

Harvard University has 2613 students

Ducked in the Horse Pond.

The Fifty-second Congress is the result of the most remarkable revolution in the history of American politics. Many administrations have suffered reverse in the mid-term Congressional elections, but it was reserved for the party of Harrison and Morton, of Sherman and Quay, of Reed and McKinley to convert, in two years, a working majority of the House of Representatives into a minority of not much more than one-

The votes cast in the elections of 1888 were screely counted before the country began to feel that it had made a sad mistake in returning the Republican party to power. An immediate reaction was seen in local elections held in the spring, and still more plainly in the State elections in the fall of 1889. Blind to all signs by which the currents of public opinion might easily have been traced. the Republican President and Congress were intent only on carrying out the bargain of purchase and sale by which they had been elected. Protected monopolies had freely contributed the money that had decided a doubtful contest. The Republican party had promised to enrich favored manufacturers at the expense of farmers and all other producers, and in the hope of further favors from the same source all the energies of the party were directed to making good its dishonest promises.

The absurd and radical McKinley tariff, the burdensome customs administration, Speaker Reed's arbitrary and revolutionary rulings, the unscrupulous expulsion of Democratic members legally elected, and even the ruffianly Force bill introduced by Lodge, of Massachusetts, were all parts of the Republican scheme to repay the protected manufacturers the money with which the Presidency and Congress had been carried.

Drunk with corruption the Republican leaders revelled in a maudlin dream that the country belonged to them and that the plain voters of the country must approve all their reckless and lawless legislation. Thus they dreamed for two years, and then the voters, whose rights of liberty and of property had been violated, roused them, deadly sober, with a ducking in the horse pond. Many of them were, politically, drowned past all hope of resuscitation. Some of those who got back to Washington this winter have, possibly, learned wisdom by the discipline received, but the action of the Republican caucus in renominating Reed and all the old House officers is an evidence of stiff-necked perversity that indicates the necessity for future chastening. McKinley and the caucus are still firm in the belief that the American people did not know their own minds at the polls last fall, and that the crimes of the Billion-Dollar Congress will yet meet popular approval.

There is only one thing to do with a party thus afflicted with ossification of the brain. It is simply bidding high for another ducking, in which a millstone and a rope shall play an important part.

Unreciprocity.

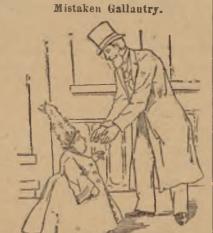

The simile of the jug-handle still describes accurately the Administration's socalled reciprocity treaties. So far as benefits to the people are concerned they are all on the side of the foreigners..

The Blaine-McKinley style of renew arrangement with Germany, if rati- Salvation Army. fied by the Reichstag, will reduce the taxes paid by Germans on a variety of fully resisted an effort to return to American food products, but it will not the ten-hour day. take one penny of taxation from any German products consumed by Americans.

German beet sugar is already on the free list. The pretense that the duty would be restored by the President if Germany did not make the concessions desired in her tariff schedules is too who want to be deluded. If it were carned out it would simply restore a tax on keep out German sugar it would enable half a cent a bushel. the sugar-producers of other countries to raise their price on account of the shortened supply in this great market.

To reimpose arbitrarily a tax upon sugar, coffee, tea or hides, in the interest of "reciprocity" or anything else, would throw away the Presidential election in advance. And Mr. Harrison is not likely This illustrates the duplicity of the to do that-at least not unless Mr. Blaine Reciprocity has taught the voters of this country that the tariff is a tax paid by consumers. And they are likely to ask, with new emphasis, why the people of the United States are not as deserving of relief from taxes on their necessaries as are the people of foreign lands. - New Short Sighted Stranger-"Allow me to help you up, madam. No wonder you fell, on these slippery sidewalks!"

She-"Get away, you rude fellow! I am Madam Saudoffe, Barnum's celebrated Insurance Solicitor—"Well, doctor, have you examined this new client?" Doctor-"I hadn't thought it necessary. You see, I've been treating him for the last seven years." Insurance Solicitor-"That's enough, doctor. If he survived that he must he a man of wonderful vitality."-Boston Courier.

THE WORLD OF LABOR.

POINTS OF INTEREST TO EVERY WAGE EARNER

What Is Being Done by and for the Workingmen and Workingwomen of the Country-A Column for Those Who

General Labor Ne

OSTON wants Boston wants the city to run the cars.

NEW YORK has twenty-five labor singing societies.

SOUTHERN Pacific railroading union men.

SWITZERLAND has abolished national banks. NEBRASKA'S eight-hour law is constitutional. Vienna painters run an appren tices' school.

THE municipality runs Milan's labor exchange.

Paris unions sent $6,000 to London striking carpenters. SWITZERLAND will have an international labor congress.

Some rubber workers at New Brunswick make 50 cents a day. Five Virginia cheese factories turn out 15,000 pounds a week. United States farm mortgages amount to $15,350,575,000.

'Frisco box sawvers and trunkmakers have amalgamated.

ONE Birmingham (England) shop makes 10,000,000 pins daily. A New York cloak manufacturer has reduced wages 20 per cent. France street railway employes will hold a national convention.

ORDER for 10,000 tons of steel rails was made at a Pennsylvania mill.

THE Crown Steel Works of Cumberland, Md., have been reorganized. THE Indiana State Federation of Labor wants senators elected by the 'Frisco printers were acceded all their demands with only one exception. In thirty-three years $30,000,000 has been expended on Condon's drainage system.

AT a recent Cawker City (Kan.) election thirteen more women than

THE American Nut Lock Company of St. Louis turns out 30,000 nut locks a day. THE Sydney (Australia) lighthouse has an electric light equal to 12,000,-TWENTY of Carnegie's furnaces at Pittsburgh have resumed the use of coal for fuel. TWENTY MILLION acres of the land of the United States are held by Englishmen. THERE are over 1.100,000 railroad cars and 33,000 locomotives in the United States. THE British War Office has preciprocity untaxes foreigners only. The | sented 30,000 worn out helmets to the

PITTSBURGH horseshoers success-

MITTOM factories will give employment to 10,-

An instrument called the auroinclinometer, to study the aurora in Alaska, is making.

Six steel rail mills, five of which transparent to deceive any except those are in Pennsylvania, control the output of the country.

Eight thousand coal miners of our own people. And if the tax should Pittsburgh want an increase of one-

THE Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company has agreed to the Two Weeks' Payment law. FIFTY of the workmen on the proposed gas line from Indiana to Chicago struck for better food.

ABOUT 8,000,000,000 pieces of mail matter are distributed by postal clerks in the country yearly.

THE Tinsmiths' Union has reduced its initiation fee to 50 cents and weekly dues to 10 cents. It is estimated that there are twenty-two and one-half acres of land for every living person. THE Austrian police have confiscated the report of the Brussels International Labor Congress. THE Labor Day celebaation at Canon

City, Col., took the form or a parade of cowboys on their broncos. THE first Indian tobacco sign erected in America was put up in Baltimore and it still stands. KNOXVILLE, Tenn., has about induced the Brush Soap Company of Philadelphia to remove there.

THE Denver Hodcarriers' Union has 700 members, and a physician is in their employ to attend their families. AT St. Henry, P. Q., 500 hands struck because Canadians were discharged and their places filled by Americans.

THE German House Painters' Union New York buried a member who was killed while at work. The union has 900 members.

The railroads of the country employ 700,000 men. Each year they lose 2,000 of their number in killed and 20,000 of them are injured.

ADVANCES in wages for carpenters have been generally conceded all over Great Britain this year. The advance has been one-half penny per hour.

Figgs-I have no more use for signs; I found a four-leaf clover yesterday. Diggs - Well, what happened? Figgs-I fell in love with four grass

A New York Herald reporter was taking "a modest chop" in a Sixth avenue restaurant when two young women came in and sat near himstudents at the Art League, as soon transpired from their conversation. The head-waiter, an aged colored man, had already attracted the notice of the reporter, and was now eying the young women with peculiar interest. Soon he made an errand to rearrange something at their table.

"Excuse me," he said, in his soft, old voice, "I've been hoping you'd excuse me since the first night you came in if I asked you what part of the South you came from."

"Me?" said the girl, pleasantly. "I come from Tennessee. I suppose you knew I was Southern by the way

"Yes'm; yes'm," the old man answered, hastily, taking the plates from the waiter in charge a little flurriedly. "My young missus she marry down in Tennessee. She was one ob de Kentucky Prentices."

He stopped abruptly and looked at the girl, who was staring at him. "She marry one ob de Tennessee Sinclairs," he added.

"Why, that was my mother!" "She was my young missus," said the old man.

The girl held out her hand to him. "Why, my mother always loved her old people so much," she said, the tears springing to her eyes. "She always wanted to know what became of all of them after the war, but she never could learn much. Now-" she stopped. The old-time slave was trembling all over.

"Please tell-please tell her that Ike, Yellow Ike alluz-"

The girl was looking at him steadfastly through a mist of tears. "She's dead!" she said.

The old man leaned on a chair for a moment; then the habits of a lifetime came to his aid; he took a dish from the waiter as he came up, although his hands still shook a little.

"I'll wait on these ladies," he said, and then gave some directions about another part of the room. He caught the proprietor's eye fixed reprovingly on him; but he meant to wait on those ladies if it cost him his place. Pretty soon he brought in some dish that had not been ordered. "There is nothing here fit for you, missy," he said in an undertone; "is you named for your ma?" The girl nodded.

"I thought I knowed you by the favor," he continued, and with an attempt at a smile he took himself off to a little distance, and stood waiting

As the reporter was putting on his coat he heard the Southern girl say, "I suppose he would rather never have seen me at all, than to see me here like this." But the reporter believed that she was wrong in that troubles by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Possessing the best known stomach tonics as well as the best alterative remedies, this excellent medicine gives the stomach the strength required to retain and digest nourish-

Like Magic

A Good Appetite and gently but effectively assists to natural motion the whole machinery of the body. Most gratifying reports come from people who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for dyspepsia, indigestion and similar troubles.

Hood's Pills. -For the liver and bowels, act easfly yet promptly and efficiently. Price, 25c.

ADVICE TO WOMEN

If you would protect yourself from Painful, Profuse, Scanty, Suppressed or Irregular Menstruation you must use

BRADFIELD'S FEMALE REGULATOR

CARTERSVILLE, April 28, 1886.
This will certify that two members of my immediate family, after having suffered for years from Menstrual Irregularity, being treated without benefit by physicians, were at length completely cured by one bottle of Bradfield's Female Regulator. Its effect is truly wonderful. J. W. STRANGE.

Book to "WOMAN" mailed FREE, which contains valuable information on all female diseases. BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO. FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Many a life has been lost because of the taste of codliver oil.

If Scott's Emulsion did nothing more than take that taste away, it would save the lives of some at least of those that put off too long the means of recovery.

It does more. It is halfdigested already. It slips through the stomach as if by stealth. It goes to make strength when cod-liver oil would be a burden.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, 132 South 5th Avenue, New York. Your druggist keeps Scott's Emukion of cod-liver oil—all druggists everywhere do. $1.

THE SMALLEST PILL IN THE WORLD! TUTT'S PILLS

Pavenil the virtues of the larger ones; equally effective; purely vegetable.
Exact size shown in this border. ASTUBEA DR. TAPT'S ASTHMALEAN Address, we will mait trail GUIL Daver fails; send us your address, we will mait trail GUIL Daver fails; send us your address, we will mait trail GUIL Daver fails.

"What makes a woman marry?" asks an article in the North American Review. And we answer, man.

MALARIA cured and oradicated from the system by Brown's Iron Bitters, which enriches the blood, tones the nerves, aids digestion. Acts like a charm on persons in general ill health, giving new energy and strength. South Carolina planters report a sher'

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house piaces a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the pame of the word and they will return you BOOK, BEAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FIREE.

Illinois pays a bounty of two cents for

Brown's Iron Bitters cures Dyspepsia, Malaria, Biliousness and General Debi.ity. Gives Strength, aids Digestion, tones the nerves—creates appetite. The best tonic for Nursing Mothers, weak women and children.

Train robberies are on the increase in

There is more catarrh in this section of the There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. It is many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional ure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from the local and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer $100 for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O. Sold by Druggists. 75c.

FITE stopped tree by DR. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORES. No fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline, 931 Arch St., Phila., Pa.

Dr. Swan's Pastiles Cure female weaknesses; his T-Tablets cure chronic constipation. Sam-ples free. Dr. Swan, Beaver Dam, Wis.

Who suffers with his liver, constipation, bi ious ills. poor blood or dizziness-take Beecham's Pills. Of druggists. 25 cents.

If afflicted with sore eyer use Dr.lsaac Thompson's Eye-water.Druggists sell at 25c.per bottle

"German Syrup'

"I have been a great Asthma. sufferer from Asthma and severe Colds every Winter, and last Fall my friends as well as myself thought because of my feeble condition, and great distress from constant coughing, and inability to raise any of the accumulated matter from my lungs, that my time was close at hand. When nearly worn out for want of sleep and rest, a friend recommend-

Gentle, Refreshing

life Almost the first Sleep. dose gave me great relief and a gentle refreshing sleep, such as I had not had for weeks. My cough began immediately to loosen and pass away, and I found myself rapidly gaining in health and weight. I am pleased to inform thee—unsolicited—that I am in excellent health and do certainly attribute it to thy Boschee's Syrup. I am confident it saved my

BEAUTY OF POLISH SAVING LABOR, CLEANLINESS, DURABILITY & CHEAPNESS, UNEQUALLED NO ODOR WHEN HEATED.

HIGH FIVE OR EUCHRE PARTIES

Sold by druggists or sent by mail 60c. E. T. Hazeltine, Warren, Pa.

AGENTS make 100 PERCENT $748 CACH Prizes Territory. Dr. Bridgman, 213 B'way, N.Y.

Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio. 4 MONTH for 8 Bright Young Men of Cadles in each county. Address P. W. ZIEGLER & CO., Phila., Pn.

No 53, 1891,

Full of troub -the ordinary pill. Trouble who you take it, and trouble when you' got it down. Plenty of unpleasar; ness, but mighty little good. With Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, there's no trouble. They're made to prevent it. They're the original little Liver Pills, tiny, sugarcoated, anti-bilious granules, purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, the smallest, easiest and best to take. They cleanse and regulate the whole system, in a natural and easy waymildly and gently, but thoroughly and effectively. One little Pelle for a laxative—three for a catha tic. Sick Headache, Bilious Hea ache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bi ious Attacks, and all derangement of the liver, stomach and bowels ar prevented, relieved and cured.

They're the cheapest pill you can buy, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned.

You pay only for the value received. Can you ask more?

Cheapest Family Atlas KNOWN. ONLY 25 CENTS.

191 Pages, 91 Full Page Maps Colored Maps of each State and Territory in the Inited States. Also Maps of every Country in the World. The letter press gives the square miles of ach State; time or settlement; population; chief ities; average temperature; salaries of officials and he principal postmasters in the State; number of arms, with their productions and the value thereof, ed me to try thy valuable medicine, Boschee's German fe, speedy cure. Returns here. All genuine goods bear Send us 2 cent stamp for 32-page DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo.

cents. Many smokers novuse ars. DOIL in prefer

WOODBURY'S FACIAL SOAP. Holes, Warts. India lok and Powdes Earls, Sears, Pitilegs, Redness of Rose, Seperflows Hair, Pimples, &c., removed.
JOHN H. WOODRURY, DERNATOLOGICAL
INSTITUTE, 125 West 42nd-Street, N. T. City. Consultation tree, at office or by letter. Agent wanted in each place.

TOME STUDY, BOOK-KEEPING, Business Form

PENSION no Pension. No Fee.
JOSEPH H. HUNTER,
WASHINGTON, - D. C.

Colds, Coughs, Consumption,

HOARSENESS AND ALL AFFECTIONS OF THE THROAT AND LUNGS

TAYLOR'S CHEROKEE REMEDY OF

ET GUM AND MULLEIN

IS THE BEST KNOWN REMEDY.

Ask your druggist or merchant for it, AND TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE.

VOL. I.

CALERA, ALA., FRIDAY, JANUARY 8, 1892.

NO. 11.

Sunlight is Beyond the Storm. Up the mountain side, since morning,

We had plodded all the day: Saw the frightened chamois bounding From our sight away, away; Saw the mighty rocks and boulders, Careless scattered all around. As if dashed from giant shoulders In a passion to the ground.

Now, all obstacles surmounted, On the summit glad we stood, Where a glow of gleaming glory Surged upon us like a flood. Oh, the sunlight! Oh, the sunlight! How it shot in quiv'ring bars, Telling of the walls of jasper And the city o'er the stars.

Far below a storm was raging, And the clouds of blackest hue Rolled and tossed in mad confusion, While the lightning glittered through, Hidden from us all the valley, By the moving, murky screen; But above, where we were standing,

All was quiet and serene. And my heart went out in pity To the dwellers far below Hidden from them all the beauty, Hidden from them all the glow-And I wondered if in future,

After we have done with life, When the mountain is ascended-Left below the storm of strife-

If we then would look in pity On the cloud-hid souls below: Whisper that sweet rest was o'er them, Bid them bravely upward go. Ye within the storm-swept valley, Look beyond the dark'ning sky! On the mountain top, is sunlight; Ye shall reach it by and by. -[Mattie Bonner, in Philadelphia Ledger.

A BOULEVARD CONCERT.

BY EMMA A. OPPER.

"Yes-no-oh, I don't know, Dan, dear!" said Annie, with languor. "Just as you please. Don't you think it's too warm?"

"A drive might cool me off," said Dan Morris; "but I'm not particular.

It is sleepy weather." He yawned. Then there was an irresolute and indifferent pause. "I actually believe I'd prefer taking a nap," Annie confessed, playing with the fringed end of her red silk sash. Her afternoon gown was charming, and so was she, with her gray eyes and blue-black hair.

"Which means that I'm to go,' said Dan, without resentment. "I'll have a game or two of billiards before dinner, I guess. Do you care about going to the boulevard concert tonight? I thought, if you didn't, I'd run up to Lint Haddon's; he's been at me to come and see his new bachelor den-"

"Go, of course, dear," said Annie; "and if I care to go to the boulevard, papa will take me. Good-by!"

"By-by, dear!" said Dan .: Annie's Aunt Ernestine sat motion_ less for three minutes after the goodlooking, well-dressed, attractive young fellow had betaken himself serenely up the street.

"Annie, 'P she demanded, agitatedly fanning herself, "if you and Daniel Morris do not love each other, why are you engaged?"

"You dear old goose," Annie cried sweetly. "Love each other? Of course! But do you expect us, this awfully hot weather, to be exerting ourselves; and rushing and fussing-"

"You will not exert your selves to speak to each other soon." said Aunt Erne stine, sternly. "You are getting worse and worse. In my day, betrothed lovers were not above showing some affection. I believe you and Dan are utterly indifferent to one another. 1-"

"Dear Aunt Ernestine," Annie protested, showing pretty teeth as she laughed, "you do not understand. Of course we're fond of each other. But do you know how long we've been engaged? Six whole months; papa will have it a long engagement, you know. And we're both sensible. I don't expect Dan to-to keep it up, you know, as he did at first, and he doesn't expect me to, We're matter-of-fact and Dan never cared for another girl-" moderate. If we don't see each other every day, we don't mind; we are Mr. Knight remarked. "Miss Murphy reasonable. And we never get jealous. Oh, it's so much better, Aunt Ernestine, our way, is! If all young engaged couples only realized it,"said Annie, amiling with placid superiority upon her unenlightened rela-

"Thank goodness, they don't!" said

Aunt Ernestine, devoutly.

ient, and trees and shrubs and refresh- and honestly puzzled.

ment booths, and an orchestra played there two evenings a week.

It was popular always, and on this special Tuesday evening it was a little. crowlled.

strolled down the long walk on her father's arm.

"Every body's here," she said en- she didn't know! joyingly. "I almost wish that Dan-Why, is that Dan, papa?"

She stared at the spot where a goodlooking young man stood talking with a pretty girl.

"It is! Who is that he's talking to, papa? Papa!"

her father was shaking hands with a young man in a pale suit and eye- clinging hand through his arm. glasses. "Mr. Knight, my dear," he said;

"my daughter. Mr. Knight is on from Bostor for a time," he explained further. "I met him there. I may have spoken of it."

Annie didn't know whether he had spoken of him or not. She felt slight interest in him. She didn't want him to offer his arm and make her promenade with him while her father sm ked.

She accepted it coolly. Her frowning eyes, as well as her displeased mind, were on Dan Morris and his companion.

"It is decidedly pretty here," Mr. Kuight began. "The lights out on music-"

"Too fresh," said Annie. "I'm cold." She was perfectly comfortable. "Pray look at that red lace hat, Mr. Kuight."

It belonged to the pretty girl with Dan Morris.

"I see it."

Mr. Knight smiled a little.

"Dreadful, isn't it?" she demand-Mr. Knight's glasses somewhat disguised his expression, but at that moment it was peculiar.

"A little loud, you think?" he assented.

"Awfully!" said Annie, gratified. Dan and the red hat were strolling

"Do you- You don't know her?" "Well, yes," Mr. Knight responded, indifferently, "a little. She's a Miss Murphy."

Annie did not pause to consider how the young Bostonian happened to know a young lady whom even she did not know.

She sniffed her disdain, "I suppose she'd be called pretty?"

she observed. "But do you know I don't like that—that obvious style of prettiness. Do you? Such awfully light hair and pink cheeks, and-" "I know it," said Mr. Knight, in prompt agreement, and smilingly. "She isn't tall enough, either," Annie declared, her pretty nose high. "That's sure." Mr. Knight was stroking his mous-

"And a girl of that style ought to know enough to dress quietly," said Annie with sharpness.

"I'm with you."

Mr. Knight seemed to find real pleasure in the conversation; he looked delighted.

"Do you know the young man she is with?" he ventured.

"Yes, I do." Annie's lovely eyes looked rather stormy. "Mr. Morris," "They're going to have some ice cream, I'see. Let us have some; or something warmer, if you're cool "Thank you, no!"

There was no use; if she looked away from Dan and that horrid little Murphy girl, she looked back the next instant. She gave it up, and looked at them helplessly, fixedly.

"I don't care: of course I don't ka she murmured, inwardly. "Only

"It's soda water they're having," has chocolate, you see, and Mr. Mor-

"I haven't the least interest in them," Annie announced-not having the least interest in anything else. "How absurd she looks, really coming nowhere to his shoulder!"

How ill-bred of her to be talking ill-naturedly of an acquaintance of the Bostonian's-How dreadful! The boulevard was the grand prom- When had she ever done such a guade of the town. It overlooked thing? How could she? What had room, kitchen, and separate exercising the bay; it had a broad asphalt ex- come over her? She was seriously grounds for each arrision of the in-

"I suppose you think-I don't know-I haven't meant to be rude," she tried to say, but her voice broke

She was strangely miserable. She The latest popular air was being de- had never felt like this before. Were lightfully rendered when Annie Dan and Miss Murphy coming over? The Only Survivor of the They seemed to be. Did she want them to, or didn't she? Oh, dear,

But she knew that they were close, introduced, and Dan and Mr. Knight; that the other three stood chatting and laughing for five minutes, she standing oddly sileut; and that presently, by a manœuvre on somebody's part, she She was anxiously undging him, but and Dan were left together and alone. "Oh, Dan!" she faltered, slipping a

"I saw in a minute something was the matter with you," said Dan; and he pressed the hand, despite the two hour to get her over here, for I knew Fair. that her fellow would take her off then, and I could have you, dear."

"were you trying? Oh, Dan, I've Fort Riley was a constant reminder of just been miserable! I never knew I the severest blow the Seventh ever rewas such a goose! I suspected-Oh, ceived, and he had all care that loving I don't know what! You said you hands could give. Comanche was a were going to Lint Haddon's."

down here, and then Mrs. Marsh got and tail. Only an estimate could be hold of me and introduced me to Miss | made of his age, but it was put down the bay and the fresh breeze and the Murphy-Boston niece visiting her- as twenty-five to twenty-eight when and all the time I was trying to see he died. you, you know, and I rather wished the whole of them were in-" came right on after her, and-" "Who is he, Dan?" said Annie.

Annie, vaguely.

She raised horrified eyes to him.

the fellow you were flirting with. on both flanks and in the middle, thus fellows-" more for two appalled minutes.

Then she told him everything, her unhappy.

Dan. I.knowit," she ended. "I was was confronted by two divisions too ridiculous, and I know he saw it all. Oh, how they will laugh—he and the latest and best government rifles Miss Murphy! Dan, I didn't think I could be such an idiot if I tried!"

"And you're a dear sweet duck of a little girl to have been just such an horse had been in several battles and idiot without trying!" said Dan, contentedly. "I was in the same fix. dear. I wanted to abuse Knight, if I didn't."

Annie was reflecting, her gaze on the great, murmuring, many-lighted the great force of the enemy and

"Aunt Ernestine," she whispered-"Aunt Ernestine, when I tell her about it, will be just tickled to death!" -[Saturday Night!

Cost of Superstition.

in this age?" asked a gentleman at bulle's gave the order to the men to the Grand last night. "Nine people kill the horses and take refuge behind out of ten would say it cuts no figure their bodies. The order was obeyed. in finance, but there never was a He still rode Comanche-and here greater mistake. Just to illustrate the there is a variance as to the manner point it is only necessary to call atten- in which the escape of the animal octien to the fact that on the street rail- curred. Some Indians say he broke road lines the receipts per car, are, on away and ran, but the more popular an average, from $4 to $5 smaller on version is, that his master being unable Friday than on the other days of the to consider the thought of taking the week. The cause is plain. There are life of the beast who had served him in the city today thousands of people so well dismounted, and giving the who will not move about on Friday animal a stinging, blow with his because of the superstition connected sword, drove him away and turned with the day, and as a consequence his unprotected front to the foe. the street car companies suffer. Inquiry develops the fact, also, that the their ticket receipts fall off heavily on hoofs. that day."-[San Francisco Call.

Dogs in England,

The point to which English dogbreeding has reached is illustrated by the opening last week of a new sanitarium near London under the direction of Dr. Sewell, the queen's veterinary surgeon. Here are separate wards for each dog disease, a surgical operation-room, dissecting-room, bathstitution. - [Chicago Times.

"COMANCHE"

Thrilling Story of a Famous War-Horse.

Custer Massacre.

There died at Fort Riley recently the most famous horse in the West in that she and Miss Murphy had been many respects. It was Comanche, the war-horse that was the only thing on Custer's side that came out of the massacre in June, 1876, alive. Comanche had never been under saddle since, and lived at ease until death by old age, the pet and care of the Seventh Cavalry. He was 25 years old. and was visited by sight-seers from far and near during the last years of his life. Professor Dyche, of the state university at Lawrence, was sumor three people looking at them. moned by telegraph and secured the "Such a bore! Well, that's rude. She's skin and skeleton for mounting and a nice girl, but I've been trying for an will prepare them for the World's

It has been the lot of few horses to receive the attention and homage that "Oh, Dan," she breathed, happily, fell to Comanche. His presence at large gray, being 15 1-2 hands high, "I did, and he made me come on long of limb and with heavy mane

The Indians tell an interesting story of the horse's famous action. Custer . "From Boston, Dan, dear?" said arrived at the banks of the Little Big Horn River June 26, 1876, "Yes. She came on to Mrs. Marsh's and saw spread out before for a week, she says, and her fellow him in the valley a camp of 9000 Indians, under the leadership of Sitting Bull. The camp was fully three miles long, and Custer, following his usual "Who? Why, Knight, of course- tactics, decided to attack the enemy Oh, yes, you were! Mind you, I bring to disconcert and rout them easily. He you to the boulevard hereafter! No ordered Major Reno to attack the east more of your carrying on with Boston end of the camp with one division, Captain Benteen the center with an-"Dan!" Annie gasped, and said no other, while he should take the west end. The result is familiar to allhow Reno reached his attacking point face brightly flushed and her dark too soon, was repulsed and withdrew eyes shining in a way not wholly from the ground; how Custer proceeded to the west end and instead of "I know he understood all about it, finding a small company of redskins massed against him, all armed with and guns.

With Custer was Captain Miles Keogh, who rode Comanche. The could stand fire like a post or run like a mustang. At first the soldiers seemed successful, but then the terrific fire told on their ranks. Captain Benteen and Custer were driven slowly before waited for Reno to attack the rear, but he did not come.

Leaving Captain Keogh on a lower ridge, General Custer and his men ascended the crest of the knoll to which they were driven and there made his last stand. Keogh, seeing "What is the value of superstition his men exposed to the fearful rain of

Comanche dashed over the steppe regardless of all before him, and the same conditions apply to steam roads Indians, being on foot, made way and steamer lines, and it is found that rather than meet death beneath his

The circle around Custer and Keogh was complete, and a few minutes after Comanche's escape every soldier in Custer's division was dead. Two days later Captain Charles King, who was coming to the scene of the massacre, having received word from Reno's scouts, met Comanche dragging his weary limbs over the trail on which he had traveled a few days before bearing his brave master. The soldiers took him along to the place of the final stand, and when it was they determined that the horse should not be again ridden, but should be cared for in a way no horse had ever (concert les

Until his death Comanche was the pet of the Seventh. He had the finest stall in the stables, the best oats and the choicest hay. Not a man dared speak roughly to him, and when he died one of the regiment could hardly have been more missed.

Comanche was one of the original mount of the Seventh Cavalry when the regiment was organized at Fort Riley in 1866 and was in nearly every skirmish from that one until 1876. His first encounter was against the allied tribes of the central plains in 1868, when General Sherman commanded in person. He received his first wound in September of that year at the bloody battle of the Sand Hills. He had Spanish blood in his veins and was tractable and intelligent. During the past six months, while it was seen that he was failing, every military post in the country was notified of his condition, and every soldier who visits the exposition will want to see the mounted remains of the famous steed. -[Chicago Herald.

Pike's Peak.

In the first decade of this century, Major Zebulon Pike gazed from afar at the grim slopes of the mountain named in his honor, and doubted if human foot would ever tread its summit; nor did he express this doubt lightly, as might one who had not made the endeavor, but as one who had put forth his best efforts, and had been baffled at every turn by frowning steeps, chilling blasts, and fastfalling snow.

Having reached the height of a much lower peak, now known as Cheyenne Mountain, he decided that further efforts would be but to incur an unnecessary risk for his small band of men, and therefore retraced his steps to the valley.

Forty years or more passed by, and the mighty monarch yet reared aloft its proud head in seeming defiance of human touch, when another venturesome traveler contemplated the ascent of the mountain and an exploration of the magnificent canons opening in every direction from his camping ground. He had pitched his tent in a nook of surpassing beauty, wherein was situated numerous health-giving prings, a place where the Indians were accustomed to bring their sick that the "Manitou," the Great Spirit, might heal them by those life-renew-

Then a band of hostile Indians appeared in large numbers, and he who might have blazed a trail to those lonely heights was forced to make haste in his departure, and to "stand not on the order of his going."

But the magic word "gold" had set in motion many an emigrant wagon, and the lonely plains were soon marked by an almost continuous train, in one case at least, bearing in visible letters on canvas, and in all, bearing in equally clear characters on the brows of the occupants, "Pike's Peak or bust!" Some perished by the way; many reached the goal; but to each and all the grand old peak, now shrouded in clouds, now gleaming in the sunlight, stood a landmark for miles on miles of toilsome journey-

Not all of those who reached the goal were rewarded by the sight of the yellow metal; but wealth is not counted wholly by nuggets, and many who failed in their search for gold found that which money cannot buy. The "Great Spirit" had not withdrawn his healing touch from the water, though his dusky children no longer came to drink of them, and ere long the fame of sparkling springs and invigorating air was calling hundreds to the famous mountain who otherwise might never seen it .- [St. Nich-

Remarkable Ear of Corn.

A freak of nature in the shape of an ear of corn was presented to us Tuesday by Mr. Wm. Daniels. Aperfect ear of corn, solidly filled with grains, is surrounded by seven smaller and almost equally perfect ears, about one-half the size of the central ear, and all joined in one ear at the base. It is a curiosity well worth preserving, and was grown by Mr. Daniels on Aunt Polly Ann Maupin's place, near Steinmetz. - [Glagow Missourian.

Shadows.

See, on the Dial of the past, This noouday sun looks fiercely down, No tell-tale shadow does it cast, To warn us that the time has flown.

And so I trust in future years, No shadow from this midday skies Will cross our life. Love hath no fears, And love cares not how swift time flies.

The ivy with its tender hold Hath wound the Dial all about-And so love's canopy of gold Wil shut time's passing shadows out. -F. S. Mines, in Munsey's Magazine.

HUMOROUS.

A haunted tavern is the home of an inn-spectre.

Striped goods are still fashionable in criminal circles.

The hotel waiter can always point out the tip-pical guest.

Any man would much rather be a fool than look like one.

Processions on the march are bound together by brass bands. A man hunting for a heavy cold will go out with light clothing. A man with an elastic step should be able to walk for a long stretch. Kite-shaped tracks have been well patronized this year by the fivers. A book on etiquette might justly be termed a work on haughty-culture.

The rain producers don't seem to quite know how to handle the rains. The next industry of the rain producer will be to make the rain dear. In society we try the hardest to please the people who love us the

"This is a regular sugar loaf," said the candy-store clerk when business

Horse sense is a pretty good thing to have at times. It teaches a fellow to say neigh.

rule. They have no eagerness for new wrinkles. Nurses make the meanest kind of Women are not inventive as a white cap gentry, for they will even hold up babies. If there is one thing more than another that a man is up to his neck in it is his shirt. The Universal Press Society wants to discourage cats from mounting backyard walls. Talking of the thieves of the present day, the greatest pirate of old was a mere Kidd to them.

The man who "cannot sing the old songs" and won't try is the one we like to meet at an evening party, "I wish I hadn't rejected him."

"Why?" "Because he didn't seem the least bit put out when I said no." Teacher-Bobby, what does lazy mean? Bobby-Lazy means always

A promoter is pungently defined as a man who sells something he hasn't got to a man who doesn't know what he is getting.

to want your little sister to get it for

If stock companies are formed to control the rain-making enterprise, they must expect to have big drops in their business.

The course of true love may never run smooth, but this fact doesn't prevent the lovers from striking a gate now and then.

It is sadly but frequently the case that the man who hurrahs the loudest has the least idea of what he is hurrahing about. "And she said that I was no lady."

"The idea. And what did you do?" "I just slapped her face and scratched her eyes most out." That was a considerate reporter who, in writing of the demise of a an advanced youth." Foreman-They say old Jones is dying by degrees. Editor-Just like him. He never will hustler when he spinster of eighty, said: "She died at strikes a good thing. Jack- Well, Jim, I proposed to Miss Summer last night. Jim-Did she give you her heart? No-but 1 got a niece of her mind.

Mrs. Grubly-My boarders have no right to growl at my victuals. Dumby -I am sure I don't. I had three years' experience in the army.

When the young girl's father comes into the parlor and rudely turns off the gas, we suppose the young man can safely regard it as time to light out.

CALERA, FRIDAY, JANUARY 8. THE JOURNAL prints the report of the county commissioners for the on hand of $5,474.38.

last half of 1891. It show a balance

REV. S. P. WEST, of this place, the agent of the Methodist orphanage at Summerfield, has begun the publication of a paper in the interest of that institution. It is a neat four column folio dated at Birmingham. We trust it will be a source of aid to the orphanage.

THE Advertiser announces that Hon. Jno. L. Cobbs will be a candidate for renomination for the office of State Treasurer. While Mr. Lester, Mason & Co, house Cobbs has made a faithful and efficient officer, his is one of the positions to which the third term should not be extended. The people will W R A Milner, judge's fees.. not take kindly to his candidacy for renomination, and he does not EF Vest, taxes collected well to ask it of them.

Hon. R. J. Lowe and Col. J. W. Bush of Jefferson, are in the race for congress in the ninth district. Both these gentlemen are well fitted for a position in national congress, WR Carter, road service and each would ably represent his W R Carter, attending on constituents. Jefferson now has three candidates and it should give to the strongest man her entire Dr. AT Rowe, medical servsupport so that there will be no danger of letting in the pompous Parker & Armstrong, medicine gentlemen from Bibb.

SHERMAN has been re-elected to RF Johnson, two days and 68 the United States senate from Ohio, over the candidaey of TB McClusky, two days and Foraker. As between the two Ohio DC Davis, four days and 54 may be congratulated that she elected a man of brains to so im- W A Richie, rspairing Bear portant and dignified a position. The country is reasonably safe as II Fulenwider, holding inquest long as it is in the hands of Lester, Mason & Co, m'dse honest intelligent men. We believe R W Cobb, road serv-Senator Sherman to be both. That he is a republican is a matter of R W Cobb, ex-officio servprinciple, and it does not prevent him from being the ablest financier R W Cobb, two days as comin the land.

SEVERAL candidates have been C C Dubose, printing and staalready spoken of for the office of Dr. W S Dubose, medical servprobate judge, and there are probably more to follow. Before Mrs E Roper, feeding and lodgany of them are publicly announced the Journal desires to call E F Vest, express on books attention to the importance of the office. It is the highest in rank of the county officers, and only equalled in importance by that of Mrs E Porter, feeding paupers. high sheriff. On the wise and Dr A T Rowe, medical services faithful discharge of its duties depend a great many estates in which the welfare of widows and orphans are concerned, one of his highest Gat Harkins, repairing court trusts being the supervision of administrators, executors and guardians. He is at the head of the CCDebose, publishing treascourt of county commissioners, who have the finances of the in their hands, and his duty it is to see that the county's contracts are faithfully performed, and that its public improvements are provided for. In this county the peculiar construction of the county court attaches an increased importance R W Cobb, three days' writing to this office. Here we have a bimonthly criminal court, and cach will Kidd, postage..... fourth month, by a special act of French Nabors, holding inthe legislature, there is a jury term, at which the probate judge must preside in the capacity of a judge of law. The ends of justice and the enforcement of law demands TB McClusky, six days and that he have a knowledge of the law. He also has charge of the county convicts, a matter of great JE Dykes, three days and miinterest to the people. All in all, the responsibilities of the office are too great to be made a matter of personal preference. This should be thrust aside at all times for the CC Dubose, stationery and adbest interests of the public service, but in this position it is especially John A Campbell, advertising. important that the best and ablest W R Carter, valve for jail man be selected. The Journal Marshall & Bruce, stationery offers these remarks merely as suggestion, and not in the interest A D Wortham, buck and of any candidate. Having no personal knowledge of the capacity of WRA Milner, stamps....... any of the proposed candidates, we R W Coob, two days as comhope the people will do their duty R W Cobb, postage...... as they know it. Let no prejupices John B Randall, lime for jail ... or preference sway their judgment WH Wimpee, regaining jail so much at stake.

REPORT.

Receipts and Disbursements ofthe Treasurer for the Six Months Ending January 4, 1893.

RECEIPTS. Amount on hand at last re-$5334 36 T. A. Milner, coal..... W R A Milner, Judge's fees R W Cobb, Simon Berlin, ped dler's license......

E T Hunter, shingles from court house..... sold to them..... R W Cobb, B Lewis' license ... R W Cobb, license for W H Harris' Exhibition

E F Vest, taxes collected E F Vest, taxes collected.....

Total..... DISBURSEMENTS. WR Carter, ex-officio ser-to date..... courts.....

W R A Milner, exofficio services and hiring convicts ... ices jail and poor house ... for poor house and jail miles as commissioner..... creek bridge.....

John E Dykes, two days and 8 miles as commissioner ... miles as commissioner.....

ices.....

Milner & Co, merchandise for poor house.....

ing jurors

and postage..... N T Lupton, state chemist, analysis of stomach of D C Hand.....

at poor house.....

Johnston & White, merchandise for poor house...... J M Reynolds, holding inquest house..... Shelby News, publishing treasurer's report.....

urer's report and four subscriptions.....

R F Johnson, three days and mileage as commissioner... D C Davis, three days and mileage as commissioner......

B Clusky, three days and mileage as commissioner... John E Dykes, three days and mileage as commissioner... for commissioners' court...

quest..... W J Rhodes, repairing bridge. R W Cobb and J E Dykes, material and repairing court house..... mileage as commissioner...

R F Johnson, two days and mileage as commissisioner. leage as commissioner..... D C Davis, two days and mileage as commissioner A C Ingram, hauling for bridge George Kroell nails for bridge.. vertising.....

and blank books nails....

in a matter in which there is so HC&WB Reynolds, lumber and nails.....

J S Leeper, frieght and express

A W Strickland, 5 per cent. commission on $2875 34.... Shelby Chronicle, advertising and blanks..... Roberts & Son, stationery and blanks..... Shelby News, publishing tax notice..... John S Leeper, frieght on car coal for jail...... W R Carter, attending court, cleaning court house and hauling coal.... Zenida Coal Co. coal for jail Mrs E Porter, feeding paupers three months..... 40 John E Dykes, tour days and 8 miles as commissioner..... TB McClusky, four days and 34 miles as commissioner... D C Davis, four days and 50 miles as commissioner..... R F Johnson, four days and 68 miles as commissioner.....

R W Cobb, making abstract

3 49 R W Cobb, two days as commissioner..... 9 75 Davis & Raley, lumber for publie road..... 80 75 book for tax collector...... 1306 63 Lester, Mason & Co, m'dse for 1000 00 jail and poor house...... 3657 29 Milner & Co, supplies for jail and poor house..... Johnston & White, supplies for jail and poor house.... Parker & Armstrong, m'dse jail and poor house..... 45 00 J R Finley, timber for road.... Roberts & Son, stationery and 39 20 Dr W S Dubose, medical attention to prisoners in 150 00 jail.....

27 00 Alabama Coal & Transportation Co, lumber for road ... 19 80 H C & W B Reynolds, lumber and nails for road..... 6 40 Pickens Miner, timber for road..... 9 40 J R Ray, lumber for raod Joseph II Johnson, clothing and tuition for blind pu-

14 40 WR A Milner, coal for court house and jail..... 55 00 W C Horton, stationery for sheriff..... 131 75 CC Vandergrift, lumber for road..... E McMath, transcribing old records..... H E Herton, lumber for road. 200 00 R W Cobb, services as county judge.....

A W Strickland, commission on $2834 11.... Paid county court jurors...... Paid eircuit court juors Pald riding and court baliffs ..

D C DAVIS,

29 00

7 87

10 70

10 00

24 25

84 29

9 20

9 40

8 50

21 08

1 89

14 75

2 50

89 42

2.00

6 00

15 75

41 00

2 00

tal $5994 92 T B McClusky) R H Johnson, (Commissioners. J E DYKES, WOMEN SOLD IN SLAVERY.

SEATTLE, Wash., Jan. 8 .-- A similar scandal to that in Victoria, in which traffic a Japanese women and the de-4 93 grading life they are forced to live, in all its horror, shame and misery, has been unearthed here.

The United States authorities learned that a man named Ithaki had purchased in Yokohoma some time ago three Japanese women, paying their parents $00 each. He passed them off as his wife and sister. They were all forced to live 1900 as fallen women and gave all their earnings to their owner, who merely allowed them enough food and clothing to keep them alive. Ithaki has been arrested, and the aid of the Ministerial Association has been requested in breaking up this system of slavery.

5 40 ATTEMPTED JAIL DELIVERY.

A BOLD EFFORT TO RELEASE TWO

On Saturday evening about 6.30 o'clock, Jailer Slaughter was attacked by three men on the street in Columbiana. One of them held him up at the point of a pistol, and at once proceeded to divest him of 34 70 his weapons. They then demanded 61 85 the jail keys, which Mr. Slaughter informed them were in the house. It was at an hour when the town 12 40 was at supper and Mr. Slaughter found himself wholly at the mercy 13 70 of the three men, who expressed their determination to release two prisoners, Hanley and Merrill. They forced the jailer to go to his house for the keys. Arriving 600 there he told them that the keys were just inside the back room. They allowed him to step through 100 00 the door, and once on the inside he quietly shut it and left through 32 35 a rear entrance toward town. Mrs. Slaughter then stepped out

39 2

16 75 and found herself at the point of the desperate men's weapons. She 17 25 acted in as cool a manner as pos- Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms. sible, giving her husband time to 36 13 escape for assistance. As soon as 170 she informed them that he was gone they saw that they had been outwitted and at once took to their heels. By the time Mr. Slaughter had returned with help they were 145 00 gone. Sheriff Grant at once telegraphed to Jemison for dogs, and as soon as they could be gotten there, started on the trail. It was followed toward the Coosa river swamps until the early dawn Sunday, when the melting frost destroyed the trail. A thorough search was made at the jail Sunday and twelve saws 66 75 were found concealed. Two bars had been sawed nearly in twain 100 45 and there were several evidences of an attempt to escape. Tom Elliott, 13 14 of Vincent, has been arrested. charged with furnishing the prison-568 ers with the saws, and is now in Hanley, one of the men whose 600 release was attempted, is charged with the murder of one Bowman And if you ever Buy two years ago, and who was caught a few weeks since.

422 90 and is supposed to be also an im-1307 10 portant state witness against 220 00 | Hanley.

Thinking it was unsafe to keep the men in reach of their friends. Sheriff Grant on Monday removed Goods in our House them to Birmingham, where they will be lodged in jail until circuit

All three of the men who attacked the jailor were recognized, and a sharp lookout will be kept for

Mr. Slaughter is to be commended upon the success with which he baffled the attempt to release two desperate criminals.

An Easy Way To Get a Present.

The Montgomery Advertiser offers The conditions are that the price our weekly ($1) must accompany the answer. They give $100 to the correct answer, $50 to the second, $25 to the third, $15 to the fourth, $10 to the fifth anh $2 each in next 25. This is an easy way to get Christmas presents, and awards are to be made on the 23rd of this month.

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA. Receive Deposits.

Negotiate Loans.

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York
Louisville and Birmingham at regular rates equipments the larger cities
We transact a general backing business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

Fire and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

The New York Store,

Calera, Ala.,

SAYS-If you are Interested in

DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, BOOTS, SHOES, GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS. CLOTHING & HATS,

Merrill is in jail for burgulary, Hose, Half-Hose, Silk Ties Scarfs, Etc., Etc.,

Please Listen to Us just 20 Minutes. We are overstocked, and in order to Reduce Stock before we take invoice on February 1st, we will sell you any Diy

We have a Large Stock to dispose of and when you hear the Prices you will be astonished how such goods can be sold so low. Listen:

Cotton Checks 4 1-2 to 5 cents; Nice Cashmere Dress Goods 1934 cents per vard; Same at 22 1-2; a Finer Goods at 27 1-2; All Wool Ladies Cloth fifty inches wide only 37 1-2 cents, former price 65; Ladies Fast Black Block Former pair; a better goods for 12 1-2 cents; a Fine Hose for 17 1-2 cents, city price 40 cents; Salt 65 cents persack; Fine Shoes $1 25 to $2 50; Good Shoes $1 00 per cents.

Come and see us. We have too much to mention all in this paper. Come at $250 cash to the first correct answer to their Bible questions: "Where in the Bible is first found the word marry?" older person. No favorites, but one price to all. Come and see us and you will older person. No favorites, but one price to all. Come and see us and you will

Reduce the Stock,

before taking Invoice, and if Prices can do it

THEY MUST BE CUT INTO

A. C. WADE & CO.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION.

Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, -12 Pages. REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these de-

1. It is the best of all weekly newspapers.

2. It is invaluable to the farmer and the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to the household.

3. It covers the news of the whole world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thorough news service from every important news center in the world.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone "Aunt Susie," the editress of these departments, is a household word throughout the south.

6. Bill Arp, Plunkett, and Uncle Remus and a host of other special writers are engaged by the year, and their inimitable sketches appear each week.

7. It is the People's Friend, and is the sturdy champion of the agricultural interests of the south.

8. It pays more money for its special features and for its news service than news center in the world.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone is worth many times its subscription price to every farmer. This department is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, weekly newspaper in America.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One whose service is retained by the Constitution.

Pollar service:

8. It pays more money for its special features and for its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers of the south, and much more than any weekly newspaper in America.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One Dollar service:

whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasure to every family, and the name of the south,

9. It is the cheapest, being only One Dollar ser year, each paper at the price of a postage stamp. Think of it! Every time a hen lays an egg she pays for one issue of the greatest weekly newspapers in the world.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga,

Brick Store, Montgomery Avenue.

FRESH DRUGS, PATENT MEDICINES. CIGARS AND TOBACCOS.

75 Prescriptions Carefully Compounded at All Hours by an Experienced Druggist.

Having Just Opened a Drug Business in Calera, I Desire to Solicit the Patronage of All Who are in Need of Goods in My Line, Which are Offered at the Lowest Possible Margines.

A. R. SCOTT, Proprietor.

GENERAL INFORMATION.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

	LCUIS	ATTIE 4	NASII	VILLE.
No. 1.	South	Bound,		4:53	a.	n
" 3.		100		4:41	p.	11
46 9.	66	66		5:10	a.	11
11 2	North	Bound,		10:19	- 4
. 4	. 11			10:05	p.	n
10,	Feb.	116 2	To 10	7:15	p.	11
- 1		T. V. &	(1 12	12
			(1. 100	4:36	-
150	To Sal	133.11.		9 (11)	21	11

" 2, From Se'ma,

No. 85, Arrives at 80, Departs at

METHODIST—Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sablath school at 2,220 bath school at 9:30.

Baptist Church—Rev. J. G. Lowrey, paster. Practice the holidays Calefa has been very dull in the way of news, and the Journal has not very much to say this week.

Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at much to say this week.

A free fight was engaged in CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN-J. C day school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3.

Mrs. Francis was calle mer Monday night by a appropriate the serious

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter.

Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector—E. F. Vest.
Tax Assessor—W. H. Kidd.
County Trersurer—A. W. Strickland.
Superintendent of Education—T. N. County Solicitor-J. L. Peters.

ASSIGNEES SALE.

NOTICE is hereby given that on Saturday the 16th day of January, 1892, at the saw mill of the late Strickland & Bass, near Gurnee, in Shelby county.

The proceedings of the Shelby Class Drill in Mathematics," was taken up by J. W. Ellenburg, Prof. Wilson. C. E. Evans, Hammond, Scale Bass, near Gurnee, in Shelby county.

Ala., commencing at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., I will as a-signee, in compliance with, and for the purposes of the trust set forth in a certain deed of assignment, executed by Strickland & Bass to me, bearing date April, 1891, and duly recorded in Shelby county in land Rock No. 15 ways 212 ways and the same as messenger for the South-running as messenger for der for cash, the following goods and chattels, to-wit:

chattels, to-wit:

One 20 x 8 wood pulley, one No. 3 mandril, one three inch flue cleaner, two 24 x 8 wood pulleys, sixty-two feet of rubber belting, twenty-five feet of 6 inch 4 ply rubber belting, twenty-five feet of 6 inch 4 ply rubber belting, twenty-two feet of 4 inch 4 ply rubber belting, twenty-two feet of 4 inch 4 ply rubber belting, two hundred and sixty-seven and a half feet of 1 inch pipe, one 12 1-2 inch safety valve, one No. 3 rump, one hundred and fitty feet of 1 1-2 inch pipe, one 12 x 40 boiler, one 11 x 16 Ailas engine, one saw mill and carriage, three circular Assignee of Strickland & Bass.

Gurnee, Ala., December 14, 1891.
18dec4t prs fee $10.

Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts stationery.
with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the storms of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot ship is composed of young gentletax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-Witt Talmage.

FLORIDA VESTIBULE TRAIN.

The first regular vestibule train ever from Chartanooga to the Ponce de Leon.

The time made by this palatial train will be over four hours quicker than at present between Chartanooga and St, Augustine. Returning it will leave St, Augustine 8:10 a.m., Jacksonville 9:50 am, Maccue 7:50 p.m., Atlanta 10:50 pm, arrive Chartanooga 4 a.m., leave 4:10 a.m., arrive Chartanooga 4 a.m., leave 4:10 a.m., arrive Cincinnati 5:50 p.m., This is the vestibuled train the East. Tennessee promised, and if you want to Tennessee promised, and if you want to see something gorgeous go to the Central Depot next Sunday night at 10 o'clock.—Chattanooga Times Nov. 22.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy. RICHARD K. FOX.

Franklin Square. New York City.

TOWN TOPICS.

Rev. R. M. Honeycutt, of Chilton county was in town today.

Mrs. E. R. Carleton, of Montevallo, will move to Calra, in the near future.

A few flakes of snow fell on :04 a. m. has not shown up.

Mrs. Crawford, of Fayettesville, was in Calera yesterday. She was formerly a resident of Calera, and of County Superintendent of Education in Shelby county.

C. W. Serle was elected Secretary.

The following names were enough of the county Superintendent of Education in Shelby county.

The following names were enough of the county Superintendent of Education in Shelby county. owns property here.

Since the holidays Calera has

A free fight was engaged in Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first among the colored population the Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sun-other day, and Squire Huggins had

> Mrs. Francis was called to Bessemer Monday night by a telegram were enrolled, as members. announcing the serious illness of her son, Mr. Dave Francis.

The JOURNAL Job Office is still turning out some fine work. It is prepared to do almost anything in a commercial or legal line, at prices competing with any.

Go to the new drug store for the finest

Tax Collector Vest, of Monte-County Commissioners—John E. Valle, was in town yesterday. Mr. Dyeey, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, Vest is an efficient and painstaking officer, and has been in public serofficer, and has been in public service for the county for a number of Deed Book No. 15, page 212, proceed to sell at public auction to the highest bid-returned to his home here, and is On motion the Institute adj returned to his home here, and is now confined to his bed with "la until seven o'clock p. m. grippe". His many friends will regret to learn of his illness and we met at 7:15, with Supperintendent taw mill and carriage, three circular tive stock of goods, which he offers taws, two night dogs, one tox 15 Wood & Mann engine, two lumber cars Said articles will be offered singly or in lots to suit purchasers.

A. H. CARPENTER.

was in town this week looking out for a locking for a location. He continent?" Miss C. Cooper opened that of some country on the Eastern with a but not a passenger was killed. And yet people will go right on insisting that thirden is an unlucky number.—Indianticular the discussion of the question with a passenger was killed. And yet people will go right on insisting that INSURE YOUR LIFE.

The next best thing possible to insurance against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of Calera.

Tor a locking for a location. He intends moving his family here in the discussion of the question, with a pointed talk. Prof. J. H. Hammond followed with some searching thoughts, Rev. W. I. Sinnott also followed with a pointed talk.

Another question. Do our teachers pay enough attention to the history pay enough attention to the history.

Go to the new drug store for fancy

Invitations are out for a calico ship is composed of young gentlemen not less than six feet in height. The boys in and around Montevallo age and vicinity always make a grand success of their balls, and this one may be anticipated with pleasure.

On New Year's evening the young men of Calera gave a reception to their young lady friends. run through Tennessee will be put on next Sunday. The train will consist of mail car, Southern Express car, baggage car, two day coaches and one or more Pullman sleepers. The train will be vestibuled from end to end and will be described exactly in the Times. It will be run regularly every day between Chattanooga and St. Augustine, Fla., by the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Road.

Mrs. J. D. Hardy and the use of her parlors, and they had been tastefully decorated for the occasion. The young gentlemen receiving were: A. R. Scott, R. J. Lowrey, L. G. Privett, W. C. Hazard, D. W. Boyd, Walter Bailey. Geo. Holcomb, W. H. Duran, T. C. McKibbon, F. H. Hardy and F. W. Gist, The ladies run through Tennessee will be put on Mrs. J. D. Hardy had kindly The train will leave Cincinnati next Hardy and F. W. Gist. The ladies The train will leave Cincinnati next Sunday at 11:30 a m, and leave Chattannega at 10:40 p m. arriving at Atlanta 4:45 a m, Macon 6:45 a m, Jesup 12 noon, Jacksonville 3:55 p m, and St. Augustine 5:30 p m, only sixteen hours from Chattanooga to the Ponce de Leon.

The time made by this palatial train

A circular has been issued by President M. H. Smith, of the Louisville & Nashville railroad, Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes Jan. 1, 1892.

SOMETHING MICE FREE. wuyour address to B. W. Wrenn, Gen. Pass. Agent. 28 Tenn. Virginia & Georgia Lines, Knoxville, Renn., and he will send you a handsome lithographic 19. Ocstage par TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

INTERESTING MEETING OF SHELBY

The Shelby County Teachers Institute met the Ist day of January 1892, Wednesday, and we have been ex- in the court house in Columbiana. 4:40 p. m. peeting a poem. Fortunately it The Institute was called to order by

The following names were er-was property here.

J. H. Hammond, W. D. Lovett, S. J. Strock, J. M. Baldwin, J. P. Kinnett J. W. Moore, J. W. Ellenburgh, PRESENTERIAN—Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m.

Mr. B. Moore and Miss Scott Ozley were married at Columbiana on Tuesday. They left Wednesday night for a trip north.

Mr. B. Moore and Miss Scott Ozley were married at Columbiana on Tuesday. They left Wednesday night for a trip north. A. W. Horton, Miss Carrie Cooper, S. Shelby News, and the Chronicle for the S. Clumpton, Miss Ruby Cooper, C. publication of the programme of the Go to the new drug store for well preE. Evans, John W. Stone, J. A. Spearared medicines.

Since the holidays Calera has Evans, Miss Earl Anchors, W. W. WilEvans, WilEvans, Willey Evans, Miss Earl Anchors, W. W. WilEvans, Willey Evans, Willey Evans

On motion the Institute adjourned until t vo o'elock p. m. THE AFTERNOON SESSION of the Institute met at two o'clock p. m. with Mr. T. A. Huston in the chair. Miss Carrie Cooper, J. W. Store, Miss Ruby Cooper, and R. C. Curtis.

P of. Savage in his welcome address, though short, made the members of the Institute fee' that they were welcome indeed.

Prof. Wilson, spoke in response with words expressing due appreciation of the welcome.

Savage, Lovett, and others.

The question, "What disposition drop on the track. The recent tests should a teacher make of his time out of his School Hours," was opened.

An auditional arrangement is a scoop to drop on the track. The recent tests were very satisfactory.—Exchange.

An exceedingly tired public—weary out of his School Hours," was opened by Prof. J. H. Hammond, Profs. W. Wilson, J. H. Savage, J. J. Strock, delighted to learn that Chili has or-W. D. Lovett, Speasman and C. E.

The question, "Should Tent-books be Prepared with Questions and Answers," was opened by Prof. S. J. Mr. D. E. McLendon, who has been Strock, with a very reasonable talk. This address was followed by a talk

On motion the Institute adjourned

T. A. Huston in the chair.

The question, "Can teaching be reduced to a science," vas opened by toilet soaps.

The advertisement of A. R. Scott proprietor of the new drug store, appears in this issue. He has appears in this issue and attraction. Upon request Rev. W. I. Singular transfer and attractions are all the results and attractions. nott made an address on the subject.

following questions were presented. "How and what is the best method of teaching the geography of our stove and thirteen passengers were state?" and is it not more important struck by a locomotive. The car was Capt. R. E. O'Brien, of Needmore, to treat local or state geography, than reduced to kindling wood and took fire, of Alabama?" was discussed by Prof.

"Do the teachers of this Institute approve of corporal punishment on ball at Aldrich, on the 15th inst. the pupils for misconduct?" was also of the Kildee club, whose member- unanimously in favor of the use of the rod. It was also discussed by Profs. Evans, Hammond, Strock and Sav-

Another question, "What is the best we can do to get the state to give us money enough to at least run a public school in each township in the Go to the new drug store for good state?" The question was discussed. by Profs. Hammond, Wilson, C. E. Evans and Savage. Messrs. I. D. Mason and Dr. Roe offered same suggest

> On motion the question was postponed until Saturday at 9:30 a.m. Miss Carrie Cooper and Miss Ruby Cooper delivered interesting recita-

Reading by Prof. Wilson was enjoyed by the members of the Institute and visitors. The Irstitute adjourned to meet at 8:30 a. m. Saturday. THE SATURDAY SESSION was called to order by T. A. Huston. and opened with prayer by C. W. Seale. Roll was called.

The programme was taken up and the question "What rules ought a taken up by Prof. Wilson fellowed by Profs. Strock, Ellenburg, Kendrick Evans, Spearman and Gulledge.

The "causes of failures in teaching" was discussed by Profs. Savage and Strock. On motion made and carried to select place and time of next Institute,

Profs. Ellenburg, Evans and Gulledge. The committee reported as follows: Resolved, That an executive committee of three, consisting of one lady teacher and two gentlemen, be appointed for appointed by the chair as follows,

Resolved; That every teacher of the county endeavor to attend the institute and see that the teacher nearest him or her be solicited to come and do or say T. A. Huston County Superintendent something in the interest of education in Shelby county.

Resolved, That we, the teachers of the institute, tender to the citizens of Columbiana our many thanks, for their beautifuling. hospitality and for the many courtesies shown us while in attendance upon the institute, and we especially tender same to Prof. Savage.

son, Miss Loven't Lovelace, Miss Lelia Anchors.

Prayer was offered by the Rev

U. Sinnett

An Executive con mittee was appointed, compe ed of M'ss Carrie Cooper, Profs. Savage and Ellenburg. A committee on badges, was lapcointed, composed of Misses Loveace, Earl Anchors and Ruby Cooper.

"A Paper on Best Methods of teachinw" by Mr. Payne, was read by Miss Coper and discussed by Profs. Savage, Ellerburg, Wilson and Dr. Roe.

PRESS PARAGRAPHS.

An electric device for cleaning a track of obstructions is amoning the newest Prof. J. H. Savage made an address of a triangular steel folding frame, over which a net is dress was followed by addresses from of a locomotive and can be opened at Profs. Wilsom, Ellenburg, Strock, will, catching the obstruction upon it. An additional arrangement is a scoop to dered Minister Montt to make full and unconditional apology to the United States for the Baltimore affair, Now let grim-visaged war smooth his wrinkled front.—News.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court has decided that a saloon keeper is liable for damages in case of injury received resulting from the sale of liquor to intoxicated persons. The decision is based upon the statute law of the state, it will doubtless be followed by other states and courts. - Birmingbam News.

A hitherto unknown stone has been found in the mining district of Kandelaria, Nevada. It is a dark green color and takes a very high polish. It is classed by the state, geoglogist as "sariscite." Several beautiful onrnaments have been produced from it, but so far it has not been found in any con siderable quantities.—Retail Jeweller.

Mr. John Miscall, one of the head bakers in James Reed & Sons' bakery, Norfolk, Va., has been made the proud possessor of the ninth consecutive pair of healthy and strong twins, a boy and a girl. Mrs. Miscal has never given The question box was opened and the birth to one child at a time. - Baltimore American.

In Chicago, a horse car, a red hot but not a passenger was killed. And yet poople will go right on insisting that East Tennessee, Virginia & Ga., Ry.

System

Is The ONLY

SHORT AND DIRECT LINE

North, East

West

and the

RESORTS

of the

The committee on resolutions was Carolinas. Virginia & Tennessee.

For any information write to or call on L. A. BELL, A. G. P. A., Selma, Ala., B. W. WRENN, G. P. & T. A one year, whose duty it shall be to prepare the programme and submit same to the Superintendent of Education for distribution. Resolved, That a committee of three ladies be appointed to prepare a badge with the letters "S. C. T. I." engraved thereon, and present teachers on enrollment at next institute, to be left with executive committee on leaving the institute.

Knoxville, Tenn.

A Weekly Newspaper.

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the latest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of the state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest provides an all products of interest to its readers. It will tain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at every wint in the county.

dun blit M

every point in the county.

«JOB PRINTING»

Quickly, Neatly and Cheaply Done!

and Legal Printing a Commercial

THE JOURNAL will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work

Out of Sorts WHO PAYS THE TAX?

Describes a feeling peculiar to persons of dyspeptic tendency, or caused by change of climate, season or life. The stomach is out of order, the head aches or does not feel right.

The Nerves

seemed strained to their utmost, the mind is confused and irritable. This condition finds an excellent corrective in Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by its regulating and toning powers soon

Cures Indigestion

rostores harmony to the system, gives strength of mind, nerves and body. Be sure to get

Hood's Sarsaparilla which in curative power is Peculiar to Its To Young

Makes Child Birth Easy. Shortens Labor,

Lessens Pain, Endorsed by the Leading Physicians. BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS

DONALD KENNEDY, Of Roxbury, Mass., Says:

Strange cases cured by my Modical Discovery come to me every day. Here is one of Paralysis—Blindness—and the Grip. Now how does my Medical Discovery cure all these? I don't know, unless it takes hold of the Hidden Polson that makes less it takes hold of the Hidden Polson that makes all Humor.

Principle 1. Principle 2. Principle 3. Principle

"August Flower"

well known to the citizens of Appleton, Me., and neighborhood. He says: "Eight years ago I was taken sick, and suffered as no one but a "dyspeptic can. I then began tak-"ing August Flower. At that time "I was a great sufferer. Every-"thing I ate distressed me so that I "had to throw it up. Then in a "few moments that horrid distress

"would come on and I would have

For that Horrid Stomach

"again. I took a "little of your med-"icine, and felt much "better, and after "taking a little more "August Flower my

'to eat and suffer

"Dyspepsia disap-"peared, and since that time I "have never had the first sign of it. "I can eat anything without the "least fear of distress. I wish all "that are afflicted with that terrible "disease or the troubles caused by "it would try August Flower, as I "am satisfied there is no medicine "equal to it."

CHEAPEST -:- FAMILY -:- ATLAS KNOWN.

DNLY 25 CENTS: 191 Pages, 91 Full-Page Maps.

Colored Maps of each State and Territory in the United States. Also Maps of every Country in the World. The letter press gives the square miles of each State; time of settlement; population chief cities; average temperature; salary of officials and the principal postmasters in the State; number of farms, wish their productions and the value thereof different manufactures and the number of employes form of government; population; principal products and their money value; amount of trade; religion; size of army; miles of railroad and telegraph; ber of horses, cattle, sheep and a vast amount of in formation valuable to all. Postpaid for 25c. BOOK PUB. HOUSE, 134 conard St., N. Y. City.L

$50 REWARD to any person who who had to the Tonilers of our DON'T brand of cigars.

DON'T brand of cigars the can get as good a one for 5 cents. Many smokers now show to 10 cent cigars.

KING COTTON Buy or sell your Cotton on JONES 5-Ton Cotton Scale.

For terms address
JONES OF BINGHAMTON, BINGHAMTON, N. Y Health Helper tellshow. 5.0c. a year. FRFE Send for sample. Dr. J. H. DYE, Editor. Burialo, N. Y.

Minabled. 2 fee for increase. 23 years ex-perionce. Write for Laws. A. W. McCounter Sons Washinston, D. C. & Cincinnati, O.

$700 In Prizes. Word Contest, For details send 2c, stamp to W. R KRAMER & CO., Chanute, Kansas OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

PATENTS W. T. Pitzer and to the book free.

$65 A MONTH for 5 Bright Young Men or Ladies in each county. Address P. W. ZIEGLER & Co., Phila., Pa.

Am. N. U. No 1. 1892.

THE CONSUMERS, THE GREAT MASSES, TIES OF THE M'KINLEY TARIFF-AS-SUMING THAT THE PEOPLE ARE FOOLS.

The President declares in substance that the McKinley economists were right when they "argued that the loss of revenue, largely the result of placing sugar on the free list, would be a direct gain to the people; that the prices of the necessaries of life, including those most highly protected, would not be enhanced; that labor would have a larger can out of the arrangement into which market and the products of the farm ad- we have entered. It is natural that I market and the products of the farm advanced prices.

And Secretary Foster talks in the same strain, asserting that "the price of nearly every article of common consumption has been reduced to the consumer. that a comparison of the prices of goods imported respectively under the old and new tariff is a tax upon the foreign com-petitor in our markets: * * * that petitor in our markets: * * the duties are in fact thus deducted from the foreign market value and are paid by the foreigner as a tax for the privilege of selling his goods here at prices fixed by our own people competing among themselves in their own market." the same time he declares that the destruction of our manufacturing industries or the reduction of wages "to the European basis" would be "the inevitable result of a reduction of duties with a view to revenue only."

It is hard to believe that rational men can talk in this style without cherishing in their hearts a feeling of profound contempt for the intelligence of the American people. They must know enough themselves to be able to perceive that the claims they make for the system of what they are pleased to call protection are utterly inconsistent and contradictory.

Who are the men that go to Washing. ton to demand "protective" taxes on imports? They are not the consumers of the taxed goods. When consumers go to Washington to ask for legislation they ask for lower taxes on the articles they consume. For instance, the New Eng. land manufacturers of woolen goods ask for lower taxes, or no taxes, on the wool they consume in making their goods, and the coal they consume in running their machinery, and the manufacturers of iron goods ask for free coal and free iron ore. Do these men ask to have the taxes lowered or removed because they believe that the taxes make the wool and the coal and the ore cheaper? Not they, indeed. The producers of such goods as are "protected" are always the men who demand higher taxes on like goods when imported. Why? It is because they believe that if their prayer is granted and the taxes are raised they will be compelled to sell their goods cheaper? To ask this question is to answer it. Producers demand higher taxes because they believe the taxes make the prices higher. Consumers demand lower taxes for the same reason.

Are both entirely mistaken? Do their private interests require them to accept the new doctrine of McKinley, Harrison and Foster and change positions? If so. the potters should send a lobby to Washington to demand that all foreign crockery be admitted free of tax, and all who use crockery on their tables should petition Congress for a still higher tax on the imported goods. And the woolen manufacturers, as consumers of raw wool, should petition for a double tax on imported wool, and as producers of woolen experimentally. Not many claim to be goods they should go to Washington in fairly embarked in the industry. force and demand that foreign woolen goods be admitted free.

McKinley, Harsison and Foster do not expect or wish to convince such men as these that they are mistaken. All they seek to do is to convince the masses that taxed goods are cheaper than free goods. Will they succeed? They say that the foreigner pays the tax. If that is so the tax doesn't protect the home producer. They say that increasing the tax doesn't raise the price, but has, in fact, reduced the price of nearly every article. And yet they try to make the masses believe that if the tax were lowered to a revenue basis either our manufacturing industries would be destroyed or wages would be reduced dringhaus, who has been receiving the "to the European basis." It is a poor compliment they pay to the intelligence of the masses when the say that a tax which torces the manufacturer to sell at lower prices also enables him to pay higher wages. It is a poor compliment they pay when they assert that manufacturing industries are fostered by taxes which lower the prices of the products, and that they would be destroyed by lowering or abolishing these price-reducing

And they assume that the masses are ignorant of facts as well as destitute of understanding when they say that the foreigner pays the tax for the privilege of selling in our markets. They assume that the masses are ignorant of the fact, for instance, that the whole amount paid to foreigners for unpolished common window glass in 1889 was $1,462,714, and that the amount of taxes paid on this glass was $1,661,264, or $198,550 more than all that the foreigners got for the glass. People who know that fact will not believe that the fcreigners paid the tax, for they know that foreigners who know enough to make glass are not such fools as to give us $1,462,714 worth of glass outright and pay us a bonus of $198,550 besides for the priv-ilege of "selling" it in our market for nothing. When the opportunity is presented in. 1892 the American people who pay the cost of "protection" will hardly thank Mr. Harrison and Mr. Foster for assuming that they are a lot of ignorant Spontaneous Combustion.

A fire accredited to spontaneous combustion occurred in Brooklyn Sunday evening, destroyed the four story grain elevaton of Francis G. Pinto & Sons and causing a loss of $100,000. The flames spread to the grain storage warehouse and its contents were damThey Find It Natural.

The morals of the Harrison Administration have been illustrated in the defence of Dudley against the law and the ARE THE SUFFERERS BY THE INIQUI- Grand Jury; in the appointment of Wanamaker to the Cabinet; in the frauds at the opening of Oklahoma; in the Subsidy and Tariff policy; in the conspiracy to shield the Philadelphia bank wreckers; in the attempt to blackmail Hayti; to uphold the dictatorship in Chili, and in many other ways before Steve Elkins was nominated to the Cabinet. But it is all summed up in Elkins as it was once before summed up in terms as follows:

"You urge me to make all I fairly should do my utmost to that enti-This is what the Harrison Administration has meant from the beginning, and this is what it means now. Those who are most clearly representative of the Administration find it most natural to make all they can out of the arrangements into which they have entered with Consider this defence of the Administration's doings in Chili, made the other morning in its local organ:

"I had an interview with United States Minister Egan to-day in regard to the finding by the Procurator Fiscal of the document empowering Mr. Egan's son Frank to act with full authority of attorney for the North and South America Contruction Company. Minister Egan said that early this year Bernstein, the agent of the Construction Company, died, and the Vice-President, McDonald, wrote asking him to accept the powers of attorney, adding that he could obtain the consent of the State Department at Washington. Mr. Egan replied refusing to accept the attorneyship under any circumstances. The document was then sent to Frank Egan, but it was not filed or acted upon in any way. Minister of Public Works Edwards, in his report to the Chilian Congress, calls special attention to the disgraceful operations of this same company, which he alleges is now, through a Chilian representative, trying to obtain a against the Chilian Government. Mr. Edwards asked for a full and judicial investigation in this project.'

This explanation is itself entirely policy. An American Minister Plenipotentiary takes his son abroad with him, and when a disgraceful connection is discovered it is his defence that his son, not he, was engaged in it—his son, holding no official position, being free to engage in any speculation he pleases. And the organs of the Administration offer this as a sufficient explanation, a complete defense, when evidence is disclosed showing that private speculation and disgraceful intrigue have been a concomitant of the operations of the Administration's "policy."

What more is needed to show the controls the Republican party and the Federal offices?—St. Louis Republic.

Tin Plate Statistics.

The McKinley press is still laboring to prove that the tin plate industry is flourishing in the United States as though everything depended upon the demonstration. The organ of the league of tariff-protected members of trusts and combinations, the American Economist, recently printed a list of twenty tinplate-making concerns, the most of which either promise to make tin plate some time, or claim to be making it now

Among these concerns we find the celebrated corrugated and McKinley tinmedal works at Piqua, Ohio, which turns out plates coated with some tin and more lead. The manager of these works reported that he had made some terne plates experimentally, but had not perfected the plant. Another of the concerns is that of Mr. Cronemeyer, of Demmler, Penn., who recently sent a whole box of plate to President Harrison. Mr. Cronemeyer admits that his "output at present is not very large," but he "expects" it will be larger next year. Another concern is that of the St. Louis statesman and manufacturer, Mr. Nieattention of a grand jury as an importer of labor under contract.

The present and prospective capacity of these twenty establishments is said to be about 2700 boxes of 112 pounds per day. This would give a total capacity of about 90,000,000 pounds annually, or less than one-seventh the quantity imported during the nine months ending September 30, not much more or less than the average monthly import.

The anxiety of the high tariff organs to make the best possible showing for this industry may be due to the provisions of the McKinley bill, making tin plate free after October 1, 1897, unless the home output in some intervening year shall equal one-third of the total amount imported in any fiscal year following the adoption of the new tariff. It is necessary to satisfy the President, whoever he may be, on that point, in order to the prolongation of the life of tin plate protection after the date named. The Mc-Kinley papers evidently intend to Porterize the statistics to the best of their ability. In some way the President must be convinced that the conditions of continuance have been fulfilled.

In this connection comes a statement that a revenue official is making a tour of iaspection to find out what the tin laters are really doing, It will take nore than one such official to keep track of domestie production and obtain satiseach fiscal year .- Chicago Herald.

follows: One cupful of sugar, one-half milk, the beaten whites of four eggs, two cupfuls of flour and a heaping teaspoonful of baking powder.

fisheries of Nova Scotia, the crustace-ans being more plentiful than ever be-

READING BY LAMP-LIGHT.

Pertinent Points on This Pernicious Practice.

On the "Care of the Eyes" was the title of an article I was much interested in recently, says Robert J. Burdette in the New York Herald. My memory is neither so accurate nor so imaginative as it was a score of years ago, but the article in question runs, as near as I can guess by memory, something like this: "Have a reading-lamp for night use." There is a great deal of wisdom in this. In a brightly lighted room at noon, or as late as 3 o'clock p. m., if the room be on the sunny side of the house, a person with strong eyes may be able to read coarse print with. out injury. But after 9 o'clock at night, and in a very dark room, most people will find a lamp indispensable to comfortable reading, especially in fine print or paper. The learned physician who writes the article does not say that the lamp should be lighted, but, speaking as a layman, I should certainly advise lighting the illuminator. I may be wrong in this, but nevertheless such has been my own custom, and I can now read a circus-poster in two colors without the aid of glasses, that is. "Hold the book at your focus." This is a rule that any person able to read should commit to memory. Very few people realize the importance of this aid to preserving the evesight. Until I read this valuable rule I used to prop my book up on the other side of the room, where I could not distinguish the print from the margin, and try to read. I did not suppose it made any difference about the focus. And many people, I have no doubt, who supposed they were blind because they could not see to read a book at a distance of 150 yards, will, upon learn. ing this rule and puting it into practice, soon find that they can read quite well enough to drive everybody out of the room. The medical profession has been very remiss in its duty that it did not publish this rule long ago.

"Reading in bed is strongly advised against; it is injurious." I should characteristic of the Anchor to Windward say so. I have always found it so. If you get comfortably fixed you read about one page and then find the blooming book isn't cut, and the paper-cutter is down-stairs, and your pocket-knife is in the pocket of your trousers, hanging away over near the coldest window. The colder the night the more the book is not cut. get settled down again, and the lamp smokes. You fix it and drop back again. The pillows you piled up have fallen down and your head comes crashing back against the headboard of the bed. It is late at night and the bang brings somebody out into moral status of the element which now the hall with a shriek of "What's the matter?" After awhile order is restored and you get quiet, then interested, finally absorbed, and then somebody comes out into the hall crying "What's the matter?" again. You say, "Nothing; it's all right." "But your lamp is burning." "Yes," you say, "am reading." A wail of dismay and rebuke follows this confession. "What! in

It is a matter of a quarter of an hour before the book tastes right again, and then once more the appealing voices comes drifting from a distant room.

"Are you going to read all night?" you say; the public is not interested in your commonplace remarks. But whatever you do say elicits a pathetic sigh that makes your heart ache and secures you quiet for yourself and your book once more. And then, just as you get to a place where you just couldn't stop for anything in the world the beggarly lamp falters, turns yellow, grows black in the face, and goes dead out, dry as a bone. There is no fun and no good reading in bed. It doesn't help matters much to sit up in your den, or, if you prefer, your study, and read. It annoys the rest of the family. I have tried it, and always experience great difficulty in getting to bed quietly after 1 o'clock. One or two challenges in quick, frightened tones that always thrill me with terror by their very earnestness, I am sure to encounter. Sometimes I remove my slippers and glide along the hall with the stealthy tread of a ghost that has intentions on the hat-rack. The very quiet is startling and the challenge comes:

"Who's there?" And I have to say "It's me." I never think to say "It is I" and explain. On the other hand, I sometimes seek to avoid unpleasant notoriety by walking boldly down the hall, with the tramp of a policeman. Then the voice, or it may be two or three voices, says or say:

"What's that?" Which is still worse, because the implication is that I am not a human being, but a thing."

Did You Know This?

It is well known that a smooth disc of steel driven at a high speed will cut in two a file held to the edge of the disk. The principle does not seem to have been practically used, save in one instance named by Mr. Richards, the well-known engineer, who states that it was employed in the United States Armory in Springfactory proof of the quantity obtained in field, in preparing a tenon, or reduced section, on the ends of tempered steel ramrods, such as were used in loading A good formula for layer cake is as the muskets of twenty-flye years ago The material was hard and could not cupful of butter, one-half cupful of sweet | be cut, so small wheels of iron, about six inches in diameter and one inch thick, were used. They were driven at 6,000 revolutions per minute, and melted or abraded the metal away There is a big boom in the lobster instantly, at the same time drawing the tempered rod.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh heing a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

The Only One Ever Printed.

The Only One Ever Printed.

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alke except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, BEAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE.

He who has not a good memory should never take upon him the trade of lying.

—Montaigne.

For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and Stomach disorders, use Brown's iron Bitters. The Best Tonic, it rebuilds the system, cleans the Blood and strengthens the muscles. A splendid tonic for weak and debilitated persons.

No cord or cable can draw so forcibly or bind so fast as love can do with only a single thread.—Burton.

FITT stopped free by DR. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORES. No fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline, 931 Arch St., Phila., Pa.

Moderation is the silken string running through the pearl chains of all virtues.

—Fuller.

For impure of thin Blood, Weakness, Malaria Neuraigia, Indigestion, and Biliousness, take Brown's Iron Bitters—it gives strength, making old persons feel young—and young persons strong; [leasant to take.]

The true danger is when liberty is nibbled away for expedients and by parts.—Burke.

FOR THROAT DISEASES AND COUGHS USE BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES. Like all REALLY GOOD things, they are imitated. THE GERVINE ARE SOLD ONLY IN BOXES.

For indigestion, constipation, sick head-ache, weak stomach, disordered liver-take Beecham's Pilis. For sale by all druggists.

ONE ENJOYS

Both the method and results when Syrup of Figs is taken; it is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and cures habitual constipation. Syrup of Figs is the only remedy of its kind ever produced, pleasing to the taste and acceptable to the stomach, prompt in its action and truly beneficial in its effects, prepared only from the most healthy and agreeable substances, its many excellent qualities commend it to all and have made it the most popular remedy known.

Syrup of Figs is for sale in 50c and $1 bottles by all leading druggists. Any reliable druggist who may not have it on hand will procure it promptly for any one who wishes to try it. Do not accept any substitute.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. LOUISVILLE, KY. NEW YORK, N.Y.

THE SMALLEST PILL IN THE WORLD! TUTT'S STINY LIVER PILLS & have all the virtues of the larger ones: equally effective; purely vegetable. & Exact size shown in this border. 8666666666

THE WORLD'S SOUVENIR.—A beautiful, brigh Aluminum Pocket Coln. Larger than a silver dollar. Lighter than 50 cents. New patent. Simple and Instructive. A wheel within a wheel. Shows whole year at sight for ever. Shows Dominical Letter yearly. Temperance pledge on back. Best advertising medium in the world. $20 made daily selling them. Cut this out. Name this paper. Two samples by mail for $1. Agents wanted everywhere. here. W. W. KITCHEN, Patentee, Rockford, Ill.

HIGHFIVE OR EUCHRE PARTIES

ASTHWA A THE DIEVE HALL ENE Address, we will mail trial UNED NOTTLE THE THE TAFT BROS. M. CO., ROCHESTER, N.Y.

It's an insult to your intelligence, but some unscrupulous dealers try it. For instance: you're suffering from some Skin, Scalp or Scrofulous affection, or are feeling "run-down" and "used-up." There's a torpid liver, impure blood, and all that may come from it. You've decided, wisely, that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the medicine to help you. You know that it's guaranteed to do so, as no other bloodpurifier is.

If it doesn't benefit or cure, you get your money back.

But what is best for you to take isn't always best for the dealer to sell. He offers something else that's "just as good." Is it likely? If the makers of a medicine can't trust it, can you?

One of two things has to happen. You're cured of Catarrh, or you're paid $500 cash. That's what is promised by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. By its mild, soothing, cleansing, and healing properties, it cures the worst

NOT GRIPE NOR SICKEN.
Sure cure for SICK HEAD-ACHE, impaired digestion, constipation, torpid glands. They arous vital organs, remove nausea, dizziness. Blagical effect on Kidneysandbladder. Conquerbilious nervous disorders. Establish natural DALLY ACTION. Renutify complexion by purifying blood. PURENY VROETABLE.

The done is nicely adjusted to suit case, as one pill can never betoo much. Each, a contains 42, carried in vest pocket, like the case. It is not a suit in the convenient. Thus incess many's great convenient. Thus caster than sugar. Sold everywhere. All genuino goods bear "Grescent." Send 2-cent stamp. You get 32 page book with sample.

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo. GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa from which the excess of oil has been removed,

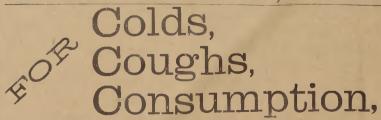

has been removed,
Is absolutely pure and it is soluble. No Chemicals are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with nomical, costing less than one centa cup. It is dellcious, nourishing, strengthening, EASILY DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalida as well as for persons in health. Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

We are anxious to know every one who wants a piano, new or second-hand. Are you one of them? Then send your address, with request for catalogue, etc., to Ivers & Pond Piano Co., Boston.

HOARSENESS AND ALL AFFECTIONS OF THE THROAT AND LUNGS TAYLOR'S CHEROKEE REMEDY OF

EET GUM AND MULLEIN

IS THE BEST KNOWN REMEDY.

Ask your druggist or merchant for it. AND TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE. Thorough, Practical Instruction.
Graduates assisted to positions.
Catalogue free. Write to BRYANT & STRATTON BUCINESS COLLEGE, LOUISVILLE,

Cradle Song. Rock, rock, rock! What is the dream I'm dreaming? I press a kiss on the golden crown, I smile at the shower of gold dropped down Where the cowslip balls are gleaming.

Rock, rock, rock! What is the future bringing? And where will the tiny pink feet stray, To the perfect end of a perfect day, With the golden sheaves upspringing?

Rock, rock, rock, rock! What are the tears I'm weeping? _ It's ah! for the sound of the wayward feet, Once soft and dimpled and pink and sweet, Afar from the mother's keeping.

Rock, rock, rock, rock! This is the prayer I'm praying,-"For patience, Lord! for the weary time, For the ruined life and the broken rhyme, For the foot-steps' sad delaying.

Rock, rock, rock, rock! This is the promise ringing: "I am a lamp to the wayward feet,-Weary and foot-sore, pink and sweet, Unto one goal I'm bringing."

Rock, rock, rock! Sound is the baby sleeping, Soft are the hands on the baby breast, Dimpled the feet in the cosey nest, All in the Father's keeping. -[Mary R. Corley, in Boston Transcript.

THE TWO MARIES.

During the "Reign of Terror" in France, one dark morning an unusal number of the aristocracy had been marched forth, and countless heads rolled from the block. A gaping multitude stood by and wild shouts rent the air as the aristocracy were thus butchered.

Among the multitude that dreary morning were two females. One of them was plainly clad, while a cloak was thrown around her, with which she kept her features nearly concealed. But a close observation would betray the fact that the woman had been weeping.

Her eyes were inflamed and red, and she gazed eagerly upon the platform, while a shudder passed over her frame as each shock of the glittering knife severed the head from the body of some one who had been unfortunate enough to fall under the ban of the bloody leaders. The face of the woman was very beautiful, and she was young-certainly not more than six-

The other female was quite different in character. Her face was fair, but there was a brazen expression about it. She was clad in rags, and as each head fell, she would dance, and in various ways express her delight, and then exclaim:

teen or eighteen years of age.

"There falls another aristocrat who refused me charity when I humbly sued to him!"

Each expression of the kind would create a laugh from those who heard her. But any thoughtful person must wonder how one so young could have become so depraved. The first female watched the creature for a few moments, and then pressing her way to her side, she laid her hand upon the shoulder of the wretch and wispered:

"Would you like to become rich at

The female in rags turned about with a look of surprise, burst into a loud laugh, and then replied: "Of course I would."

"Follow me, and you shall be."

"Enough. Lead on."

It was with considerable difficulty that the females extricated themselves from the crowd; but they did so at length, and then the first female asked of the other:

"What shall I call you?"

"Oh! I'm called Pauper Marie." "You live by begging?"

"Yes; but what's your name, and what do you want?"

"My name is Marie, the same as your own."

"Are you an aristocrat?"

"It does not matter. If you know where we can find a room lead me to it, and you shall have gold."

The pauper led the way into a narrow and filthy street and then down into a cellar and into a dark and filthy

The other female could not but feel a sickening sensation creep over her, but she recovered herself. After contemplating for a time the apartment the and what it contained, she asked:

"Are you well known in Paris?" "Yes. Everybody knows Marie the

If so, I want to make a bargain with advancing near her. you."

'I am. What do you wish"

"You see my clothing is better than your own, and I wished to exchange brother. Ask him." with you. I want you to consent to remain here, and not to show yourself to all for a short time, or until I come to you again. As recompense for aiding me I will give you a thousand francs, and when I come back I will give you a thousand more. As security for my return take this ring."

The lady drew a diamond ring from her finger and gave it to the pauper. Then she handed her a purse containing gold.

The girl appeared a little puzzled and asked:

"Well, what are you going to do with my dress?"

"I want to put it on and go where I first met you."

"Oh, I understand now. You want to see the chopping going on and you are afraid you will be taken for au aristocrat if you wear that dress. You want to represent me."

"Yes, I want to look as near alike as possible."

"Well, that won't be very difficult. Your hair and eyes, and even your mouth is like mine. Your face is too white, though. But you can fix that with a little dirt."

They exchanged dresses, and soon the young, rich and noble Marie de the pauper of Paris.

The history of Marie de Nantes was a sad one. Her father and two brothers had fallen victims to the remorseless fiends of the revolution, and a third and last brother had been seized. But of his fate she was ignorant, although she expected that it would be similar to that of her other relatives. He had been torn from her side but a few hours before.

After the exchange had been made the pauper looked on the stockingless and shoeless feet of the lady and said:

"That will never do. Your feet are too white and delicate. Let me arrange matters."

In a few moments Marie was prepared, and in the filth and rags she merged into the street.

She now took her course back towards the guillotine, and at length reached the square where the bloody work was still going on. Gradually she forced her way through the crowd and nearer and nearer she came to the scaffold. She even forced a laugh at several remarks she heard around her, but those remarks sounded strangely.

She now stood within a few feet of

She swept it with her eyes. Her brother was not there.

"Here comes another batch."

Her heart fluttered violently and she felt a faintness come over her as she heard the tramp of the doomed men approaching.

The crowd opened as the body of men passed.

Marie gazed among them. A low cry escaped her.

Her brother was there. But he walked proudly and fearlessly forward and ascended the very steps which led to the block.

Up to this time the strength of poor able to put her resolve into execution.

But now a sister's love swelled up in her breast and she recovered her strength. She sprang forward, bursting through the line of guard, and ran up the steps. Grasping her brother by the hand, she cried:

"What does this mean? It is only the aristocracy that are to die."

the executioners.

"Your brother?" was the echo.

"Yes, this is my brother." "Well, who are you?"

"Ay! I look like one, don't I?"

"The pauper?"

"But this man is not your brother?"

"It is. Ask him -- ask him." Young Antonio de Nantes had turned a scornful glance upon maiden, but a light passed at once across his face and he murmured: "Oh, my sister!"

"Is this your brother?" asked "Are you known to Robespierre? Robespierre of the supposed pauper,

"It is."

"Then you are mistaken. He is my

"Does Marie speak the truth?" asked Robespierre.

"She does," was the brother's reply. "And you are not De Nantes?"

"I tell you I am her brother." "Why did you not tell us this be-

"I attempted to speak but was si-

"But you might have declared your-

"You would not have believed me."

"But your dress?" "It belonged to an aristocrat. Perhaps to him for whom I was taken.' Robespierre advanced close to young Nantes and gazed earnestly into his face. Then he approached Marie and looked steadily in her eyes for a

It was a moment of trial for the poor girl. She trembled in spite of all her efforts to be calm. She almost felt that she was lost when the human fiend, whose word was law, turned and said:

"Release that man."

The chains were instantly removed and Antonio de Nantes walked down from the scaffold, followed by his sister, while the shouts of those around rent the air, for they supposed Nantes was clad in the rags of Marie, it was a commoner who had thus

> The young man worked his way through the crowd as rapidly as possible, leading Marie.

> They had scarcely escaped it before the poor girl fainted from the intensity of her feelings. The brother scarcely knew what to do, but a hand was laid upon his arm and a voice said:

"Bring her to my room again. She will be safe there."

The brother conveyed her to the apartment of the pauper, and then asked of her:

"Have you seen the female before?" "Yes, I know all about it," returned the pauper. "She borrowed my clothes to save her lover. She has done it and I am glad." Before the noble sister returned to consciousness the brother had learned all. When she did so they both sought secure quarters, after rewarding the beggar girl as had been promised.

"Do you think Robespierre was really deceived?" asked Marie de Nan-

"I think not," returned the brother. "Then why did he order your re-

"He saw your plan. He admired your courage. Could a fiend have done less?"

"Perhaps this was the case. But. if so, it was a deed of mercy and the only one that man ever did."

"Your are right."

Antonio de Nantes was not again arrested and lived happily with that sister who so nobly perilled her own life to save him by representing the pauper of Paris.

Some Facts About Meteorites.

In a recent lecture Professor Huntington considered the distribution of meteorites and the phenomena of their Marie had failed her, and she was un- fall. They, he said, are peculiar; coming from the cold regions of planetary space they strike our atmosphere with an intense velocity. The resistance from the air results in intense heat and the appearance of a "fire ball." The friction not only fuses the outer surface of the meteorite but the surface is pitted and guttered by contact. The moving mass bears a train "Away, woman!" exclaimed one of of fire, sometimes vari-colored, behind it. They frequently explode before "No. I will not away until you tell they reach the earth, probably owing me why my brother is here and thus to the unequal heating of the mass while passing through the air. There are two classes of meteorites-of iron and of stone. The latter usually carry grains of iron. There are on record "I am Marie. Don't you know some 200 falls of each class; the stones have been seen to fall, but the iron is recognized, not by its having been seen to fall, but by its chemical peculiarities. The illustrations which ended the lecture included severa ideal sketches of meteoric showers. and numerous meteorites, enlarged to exhibit their peculiarities .- [Boston Transcript.

A Silver Question. Ponsonby-Heigho! every silver lining has its cloud.

Popinjay-Yes. You can't earn a quarter dollar without working for it. "But his name is down differently." | __ [The Jewelers' Circular.

THE MAGUEY PLANT.

Mexico's Most Useful Vegetable Plant.

Multifarious Uses to which it is Put.

As soon as the cocoanut clumps and banana plantations of the seaboard are passed, the cactus procession begins, and it does not end until the hot lands of the opposite coasts are reached. Nearly every species is to be found growing in grotesque forms, from creeping stems and round balls bristling with spikes, to columnar masses of prickly pear and organ cactus. The Turk's cap, set with thorns, springs from the crevices of the rocks at great altitudes. Cereus grandiflorus wastes the sweetness and glorious radience of its shortlived bloom in deserted pastures. There are palisades of the tall, shapely organ cactus lining the railways, and there are ragged and loose-jointed hedges of mingled varieties for corralling cattle. In this motely throng the maguey, armed with its bristling sheath of sword-blades, forms the rank and file. All the way from the Rio Grande to the southern border of Mexico it is seen, now massed in cultivated fields of hundreds of acres, and again straggling in neglected wildness by the roadside or on the rocky crest of inaccessible hills. So sluggish is its vital action that it grows and thrives where other forms of vegetation perish.

The Indian races used the maguey in many ways before the conquest, and it is still one of their chief resources. It was the Toltecs' wine, and the Aztecs' paper. It is the Mexican's pulque, mescal and tequilla, and it is one of the most valuable fibres known to the textile industry. From the refuse leaves a thatch is made with which the Indian huts are covered, and when there is no other fuel, they serve to keep the pot boiling. The Indian woman will use the thorns for pins and the longer spikes for needles, if they do not find their thread in the fibres of the youngest plants. When the honey water is clarified with lime, boiled down with syrup and crystallized after filtration -good, raw sugar is made. If the Indians' supply of corn and beans starting .- [Denver Republican. (tortillas of frijoles) runs low, the roots can be cooked and eaten as food, and there is a larger percentage of alcohol to be extracted from them than from the leaves or the juice. The natives obtain from it a caustic for healing their wounds, and American physicians, impressed by the fact that Bright's disease is almost unknown in Mexico, have brought pulque into use as a medicine and a tonic. But to return to the Mexican staff of life. An ordinary maguey will yield 250 cubic inches of sap a day. Very vigorous plants will produce 450 cubic inches in 24 hours and not dry up in five months. Maguey under cultivation on good soil can be depended upon to furnish from a gallon to seven or even nine quarts a day. All the great haciendas in Central Mexico have maguey plantations, which are highly profitable. In a field of 10 acres 1200 plants can be set out from sprouts. When tapped at maturity each plant flows with milk and honey like a vegetable spring, and its produce is worth between $20 and

The maguey produces more alcohol than either sugarcane, potatoes, corn or grapes. Pulque, which is the fermented juice, is very cheap, being sold everywhere in Mexico at a penny a large mug, and it is the universal beverage of the working classes. Mescal is a gin obtained from the juice extracted from the leaves and roots, fermented with pulque and car- all the hues of the spectrum. ried through a still. Tequilla 18 an alcoholic whiskey, and there is also a brandy made from pulque. The pulque carrier with his donkey is seen on every country road and city street. He supplies the pulque-shops with like pigs on their heads or backs.

The product of the maguey fibre, dressing the fibre, and the work is done in their cabins and huts. The hemp which they send to the Aine River market is of excellent quality and there is an increasing demand for it, so that it promises to become an import of the greatest importance. On this account the invention of an improved dressing machine is greatly to be desired .- [St. Louis Republic.

Two Miles a Minute Down a Flume.

the city. He was sitting in the Wind-

Benjamin Edwards of Nevada is in sor yesterday discussing the early days of that state, when the subject changed to fast riding. "You can talk as you like about the Vanderbilt specials and other trains that make phenomenal time, but if you never rode down a lumber flume in Nevada you don't know what it feels like to cleave through apace like a meteor. Why, up in the Sierra Nevada range there are flumes from five to forty miles long, built on a regular engineer's grade, with a sixteen foot drop to the thousand. They are built of heavy planks shaped like a V, and carry eight inches of water in the acute angle and discharge it at the rate of 400 miners' inches per minute. "I was up at Lake Tahoe one day, which is sixteen miles from Carson, and after we got through our business Ed Patton, the superintendent, said we'd better take a flying trip back to town. He ordered out what he called a 'yacht,' which proved to be a Vshaped canoe fourteen feet long. It had a brake which controlled two rubber pads on each side, so applied as to lift the yacht and let the water run underneath when it became necessary. 'Button up your coats, tie on your hats and don't get scared, boys, said Patton, as we climbed into the machine. Then he told his men to turn on three inches more of water. Great Scott! but how that cance did jump! Down we went through that threadlike flume, and the trees looked like spectres. My teeth tried to chatter and couldn't make it, and as I occasionally opened my eyes and caught a glimpse of the landscape it appeared to be only a blur on my vision. We shot around curves with a velocity that was fearful to contemplate, and finally Ed weighed anchor at Carson, just eight minutes from the time of

The Ruthless Turk.

The Turk has been for centuries, says Alfred D. F. Hamlin writing in the New England Magazine, the most ruthless of Vandals in classic lands, destroying the most precious antique monuments to obtain lime and mortar. Much havoc of this sort has been wrought in and about Stamboul, but a wiser use has sometimes been made of ancient ruins. Wherever a bit of mediæval wall could answer his purpose, he has made of it the basement of his house, thus subserving at once the interests of his purse and of the picturesque. The frowning machicolations of the old fortress become the windows of his kitchen and storeroom, and upon their crest his wooden walls perch in truly triumphant fashion. Part of the walls of old Byzantium are thus crowned with houses, and at Roumeli-Hissar, beneath the windows of the American Robert College, a whole village clings to the scarpments and towers of the frowning "Castle of Oblivion." No odder or more delightful confusion of beetling walls and comical houses could be imagined. The tops of the thick walls form lanes and alley-ways, leading down from level to level by steep inclines or crumbling steps. The crow's-nest houses stand at every possible angle and elevation, overhanging the abyss on the further side of their lofty foundations, and gay with camera has been the detection of skin disease before the eye could discover any symptoms. A later and even more liquor from his bags of undressed striking feat is the location of tumors sheep-skin, looking for all the world on the brain by instantaneous photography. A tumor on the brain causes violent spasms by pressing on a nerve called ixtle, is worth from 10c to 15c centre, and while the patient is in the a pound when cleaned, and a full- midst of a spasmodic attack he is phosized maguey, after-yielding a return tographed, the nerves affected are of $20 or $30 in pulque, is good for determined by the pictured contor-$3.50 more in textile The Indian tions, and the tumor is readily located. women have the patience required for | - [Trenton (N. J.) American.

The Eye of Science in Medicine. Among the achievements of the

It Might Have Been. Had we those words of comfort spoken To heat the heart with sorrow broken. Which came into our minds to say. More glad would be that heart today: The time to speak those words were then, We failed. Alas! It might have been! Had we but helped in word and deed That sufferer, in time of need, As well we know we could have done, His life had not gone with the sun; The time for doing good was then. We failed. Alas! It might have been.

How often as we view the day Which from our grasp has passed away, We see the things we failed to do Or say, as we were passing through, We should have done or said them then; We failed. Alas! It might have been!

Oh, let us each, in life's short span Think, say and do what good we can, Remembering, at break of day, "We ne'er again will pass this way." Improving every chance, and then We need not sigh, "It might have been!"

-Jennie E. Stouffer, in Chicago Sun.

HUMOROUS.

The wheelwright should be selected as spokesman for the trades union.

"Oh, yes she does," was the reply. 'She's engaged to be married now.'

The young graduate who takes up medicine finds it pleasanter than taking it down.

The watch that is placed over the people's interests at the polls must not

The pessimist loves to carry an umbrella when the sun shines and a cane when it rains. If a boy refuses an extra piece of pie you may rest assured that the pie is particularly bad. The theatrical mechanic is not quarrelsome, but he often finds it necessary to raise a scene.

The artist who is away up in art doesn't like to see his pictures at the exhibition in a similar position.

law, but they are a long way from being equal before the policeman. "Yes," said the sensible girl, "she's

All men may be equal before the an heiress, but I'm afraid she doesn't know how to husband her resources." "Our baby is awfully nice," remarked Mabel. "It pulled my hair yesterday, and then cried because I

When our hopeful comes home and tells us of an increase in his salary we can almost feel the glow of the son's

Interviewer-You began life as a clerk, did you not? Merchant-No, sir; I began life as a king. I was the first baby.

courtships? Miss Spoons-I don't believe in more than six or eight hours at a session. The man who says he is "going to get there, and don't you forget it,"

Mr. Fresh-Do you believe in long makes more noise about it than the man who is actually there. "Well, cook, and what did you think of the young lady's singing?" "Lor, mum, she sung beautiful-just as if she was a-gargling." The man afflicted with frontal baldness hath this to console him-it will be quite impossible for any one "to pull the wool over his eyes." Every young man has a private idea that the woman who gets him will win a prize. Somehow his sister entertains a very different idea. Mother-Nellie, if you should give Effic half of that pudding and give the other half to Eddie, what would be left? Nellie-I'd be left. "You ought to see our baby play," said Jimmy, proudly. "What can a six-months-old baby play?" asked

Freddie. "Bawl," laughed Jimmy. "I thought I saw Vickars come in just now." "Yes; he is in yonder writing a love letter." "H'm! How do you know that is what he is writing?" "Well, a man wouldn't be grinning and winking one eye every minute or so if he were writing a business communication, would he?"

A very peculiar effect was produced by the following announcement, contained in the advertisement of a county fair: "Among other attractive features of this great Fair there will be highly amusing donkey races and pig races. Competition in these two contests open to the citizens of the county only I'

> "I'll take her picture as I live, Ah, she must share my lot!" He called on her; her negative Was what he straightway got, plaining at hard times.

THE CALERA JOURNAL. FRANK W. GIST, CALERA, PRIDAY, JANUARY 8.

county, is mentioned as a candidate for Judge of the Fifth Circuit. He is a prominent attorney and would preside over the courts with dignity and marked success.

wood, fer which a bill was promptly froctamation, says:

"I especially desire that our children may be taught to observe and reverence the divine energies which are unfolding themselves in leaf and flower that sheds a perfume in spring or ripens i to a robe of beauty in autium so was the assignations of children.

ton writer has discovered that Mrs. was sent to all parties concerned. teaching of nature lead up from the

the state convention held in that city. We see no particular reason conceive what good it would do for When the little drops of water first either the convention or Birming- begin to fall they make one feel a ham. The capital is the better peculiar sensation of rest, as the Chambers county, is an avowed one begins to feel that some heavy candidate for a position on the supreme court bench as Associate it. Any long continued absence of Justlee. No man in Alabama is sunchine brings a mixture of wormore deserving of the confidence of rying and disgust with one's self. the people than he, and the Jour- Nothing goes well, everything goes NAL would most gladly see him in what is known as the "blues." that exalted position. He would pity in all sincerity and sympathy fill it with honor and credit.

Cleveland is a statesman.

all the colleges and schools observe piness. Arbor day, which has been set for the 22nd of February. It is a fitting and beautiful custom, that of planting out trees to the memory vision rests longest on graves and Kolb. It must be claimed as a victory for the former. The party machinery was in the hands of the Scanlon, the sweet singer, has lost he changed the conditions so that the same record! in the convention on Monday the Kolb men made overtures for a Wednesday and listen to the dis compromise. For the sake of har-cussion of political issues. Educamony in the future their request tion along this line will hurt none. was granted and the vote of the county was divided equally between them. The efforts of Kolb and his followers to carry the county by a method of gag rule was beautifully defeated, but like a greedy vulture be begged for quarter. When he stresses a Atlanta Lorreal. he begged for quarter. When he ststesman .- Atlanta Journal. can take all he does so without any hesitation, but when he is in the minority he begs to be given that which he could not take by force.

The tin plate tax will reach nearly $20,000,000 a year. It will come out of the people's docket. If the employment of American labor is the purpose of the tax it would be cheaper to tax the people to pay the wages of the plate makers which the people to pay the wages of the plate tax will reach nearly $20,000,000 a year. It will come out of the people's docket. If the employment of American labor is the purpose of the tax it would be cheaper to tax the people to pay the wages of the plate tax will reach nearly $20,000,000 a year. It will come out of the people's docket. If the employment of American labor is the purpose of the tax it would be cheaper to tax the people to pay the wages of the plate tax will reach nearly $20,000,000 a year. It will come out of the people's docket. If the employment of American labor is the purpose of the tax it would be cheaper to tax the people to pay the wages of the p It is a mistake to give him any while they did nothing at all.—Cleve quarter. When he can be deprived land Press. of any support by fair means it should invariably be done. He will get more than he deserves anyway. We hope to see the governor's friends awake to the fact that they friends awake to the fact that they need all they can get, and be aggressive enough to take it.

thought he was reaching for a product the knocked him down and beat him imo insensibility. Preachers should carry their Bibles in their hands when travely gressive enough to take it.

GOSSIP OF THE CRITIC.

My attention has been called to one of the most peculiar business tees A FAMINE in Russia is causing desolation and death, while we in America who have plenty are comweek to Six Mile on a visit to some It is a beautiful, instructive and use-Hon. W. A. Collier, of Chilton wood, fer which a bill was prompthim to the other young lady, who tumn, so must the aspirations of child-presented it to Mr. Duran. Pay-hood, led by beautiful surroundings, THE Age-Herald rays a Washingon writer has discovered that Mr.

ment was refused and the paper may form higher and broader concepwent to protest. Notice of protest tions of life and humanity; for the Jerry Simpson does not share her husband's antipathy to hosiery, It is very probable that if she did the cool breeze from the Potomac would soon overrule her objection.

was sent to all parties concerned. Now, it strikes me as very deplorable that the finite to the infinite."

Voicing this sentiment, Governor Fifer, of Illinois, in his Arbor Day Proclamation, gives utterance to these words:

"Let the children in our schools, the young men and women in our colleges, seminaries, and universities."

place for a political gathering. upon the roof soothes one into the youth of the land, as worthy of from Lima oil. JUDGE James R. Dowdell, of hours of darkness and dampness, burden is resting upon the world, and that his life is helping to carry wrong, and you find yourself with any one who has them. I used to NEARLY everybody who has ever been in politics and knows that politics are politics is an admirer of David B. Hill. The following of Clevealed is mostly sentimental.— Age-Herald.

Just so. Hill is a politician, who uses his offices for a continuation of uses his offic rainfall it is hard to hear, even contrast is this: Cleveland is a statespower and personal advancement; with the eye and car of faith, the with the eye and ear of faith, the sun that is to shine. Were it all rain we would die of inertness; are mere reflections of what he deems THE State Superintendent of Ed- were it all sunshine we might overucation has issued a request that charge ourselves with reckless haphas been fought. It was the sec- who but yesterday caused thine eye ond engagement between Jones and to see the world in all its witching

The sad intelligence comes that Kolb men and they tried to use it his mind, and that his life is deto his interests by forcing the peo- spaired of. That one so gifted and ple to make a decission before they with so great a hold upon the pubhad heard the issues discussed. It lie heart should go down is truly sad. Sadder still, they say that was practically a walk over for dissipation undermined his intellect Kolb when the governor went up and swept away his reason. How to present his claims. In a week many lives have gone out and left

LET the people come out next

PRESS PARAGRAPHS.

Read Hill's two hazy, contradictory

ARBOR DAY.

To the Superintendents and Trus-fair friends. They stayed long ful engage rent. Governor Currier, of

THE Birmingham papers want see these young ladies they had better take along a sufficient suparity and their instructors, co-operate in the It has been a rainy week, scarce- beautify the home, adorn the public why it should be, not being able to ly a ray of sunshine for eight days. grounds, add wealth to the State, and > music of their continued drip, drip perity of the country should be taught peaceful sleep. But after a few their most carnest attention. Let the the most pepular thing of the hour .- Chattanooga Times.

My friend who "murmurs" in the Age-Herald, musing on memory, says, "as we look backward our vision rests longest on graves and the choice of a Cogressman is the absorbing question of the present in this district. Two excellent men are in the race, both two excellent men are in the race, both two excellent men are in the race, both two excellent men are in the absorbing question of the present in this district. Two excellent men are in the absorbing question of the present in this district. Two excellent men are in the absorbing question of the present in this district. Two excellent men are in the absorbing question of the present in this district. Two excellent men are in the absorbing question of the present in this district. Two excellent men are in the race, both when the absorbing question of the present in this district. Two excellent men are in the race, both when the absorbing question of the present in this district. Two excellent men are in the race, both when the absorbing question of the present in this district. Two excellent men are in the race, both when the absorbing question of the present in the race, both when the absorbing question of the present in the race, both when the absorbing question of the present in this district. Two excellent men are in the race, both when the present in the race, both when the absorbing question of the present in the race, both when the absorbing question of the present in the absorbing question of the present in the absorbing question of the present in the acceptance when a construction of the present in the race, both as a construction of the present in the acceptance when a construction of the present in the acceptance when a construction of the present in the acceptance when a construction of the present in the acceptance when a construction of the present in the acceptance when a construction of the present in the acceptance when a construction of the present in the acceptance when a construction of the present in the acceptance when a construction of the p planting out trees to the memory of some one dead or in honor of some one dead or in honor of some one living. They make monuments eternally green, while marble shafts stand white and chilly and bare.

Two notable deaths occurred in England yesterday—the young Duke of Clarenee and Cardinal Manning. The one was the presumptive heir to the throne of England, the other a prince of the Church of Rome. The death that snatched a crown from the one more quickly starred the other's brow. One lost a coronet of life, the other gained a diadem of heaven.

Ur in Madison county a battle has been fonglit. It was the second over the world in all its witching to some one dead or in honor of some one living. They make monor this past were crowned with the past were crowned with chaplets of sorrow. He even dares to look beyond the memory of a pretty girl to a skeleton which he says grins, behind her. Naughty wretch is he to let his vision go beyond a pretty girl, or to admit that he can see aught else when such a picture looms up before him. How can he have any thought save those of "the violets and daises that lie at her feet?" Avaunt, cynical murmurer, put not such a ghoulish skeleton athwart so divine a form.

Cast a shadow on the soal, when in gold and purple state. Visions, crowned with rainbow chaplets, by its inner temples war?

Never, murmurer, never. Bow by head in suppliant penitence for so great a sin. Seek the pardon of that beautiful heiress of the ages who but yesterday caused thine give the selection of his cleent, the people. The same and the results of the same make him elemination over the state proposes sing and pleasing to look in the district has proved. It is manner is bein prepasses in the hard to recognize the intervent his agreesive to the point of heir invincible. Years at the hard provided the proud of the week. His state legistrate has proved. It is manner is SOMETHING MICE FREE. Cyour address to B. W. Wrenn, Gen. Pass. Agent.

Tenn. Virginia & Georgia Linos. Knozville, and he will send you a handsome lithographic postuge OIL USED AS FUEL

It Is Less Troublesome and Much Cheaper

An editorial in a recent issue of a Cincinnati paper urgos the manufacturers of Cincinnati to consider the question of using crude petroleum as fuel. Investigation shows that Cincinnati is behind many other cities in the use of the liquid fuel which is found in such abundance in Chio and within such easy access of that city.

Cleveland manufactures and uses the Lima oil extensively as fuel, and is even experimenting with good re-sults in the direction of converting it into a gas for fuel purposes. Chicago is using 10,000 barrels a day of the new fuel. Even the town of Hamilton, O., has made more progress in this direction than Cincinnati. A gentleman just returned from Hamilton says the number of oil cars Le 22w on the sidings led him to make some investigations. He found a large flour mill which is running three 100-horse power boilers with Lima oil as fuel. These boilers required nine tons of coal for a twenty-four hours'

The same boilers are run with twenty-eight barrels of oil, costing 50 cents a barrel at Hamilton, a total of $14.

Two stokers and coal shovelers were colleges, seminaries, and universities, and their instructors, co-operate in the proper observance of the day by planting shrubs, vines and trees that will beautify the home, adorn the public grounds, add wealth to the State, and thereby increase the comfort and happiness of our people."

I most healtily endorse the ideas and sentiments above. The material paos perity of the country should be taught the youth of the land, as worthy of the youth of the land, as worthy of their most carnest attention. Let the school officers of our state prepare for the proper observance of the 2rd day of February, that every pupil may ave impressed upon the mind the beneficial and excellent lessons taught.

Yours truly,

JNO. G. HARRIS,
Supt. Education.

Clevland never had to own and boss a town council when he was mayor, a legislature when he was governor, a congress when he was president, to make was watching the progress of liquid fuel telieve that within a year 120,000 SAYS—If you are Interested in terrests a day will be used for this pas-berreis a day will be used for this papose.

The Lima Oil company is composed of Obio oil producers, and is entirely outside of the Standard oil company, has 600 cars of its own, and every one of the number is kept bury day and night. This company has made contracts to farmish oil in Hamilton, O., for two years at 50 cents a barrel. The amount of this oil that is being produced in Ohio is much greater than the public generally supposes.

The total output of the wells is not under 1,000,000 a menth. When the sectual gauges show a less production it is when the large wells are shut in and are not allowed to yield up their tall capacity. This is the case at this time, owing to the inability of the pipe ince to handle all the oil that could be preduced. The Standard Oil company pays the producers 15 cents a barrel for the oil at the wells, and the fact that they have now 9,000,000 barrels in tanks in the precion is evidence. fact that they have now 9,000,000 bar rels in tanks in the region is evidence Reduce Stock before that they believe in its future. The tanks in which the oil is stored and Goods in our House taken down and removed from taken down and removed from to Tennsylvania fields where so much tankage is no longer needed. The oil is now being used for fuel purposes in twelve states and territories, and it is not unlikely to uitsmately take the place of coal for manufacturing purposes, except in the vicinity of coal mines.—Clobe-Democrat. mines - Clobe-Democrat

Buckwheat, often called "the lazy mæn's crop," deserves better treatment than it generally gets. It is a "catch crop," easily grown between regular suc-cession crops, and will respond to more generous usage than is frequently accorded it. The grain itself is nutritive and palatable, giving both heat and muscle making constituents, and brings, as a rule, fairly remunerative prices, com-pared with other cereals. Manure with a liberal hand, or fertilize with say 300 pounds of a good superphosphate, and see the difference in the result compared with one grown on the thin, poor land to witch it is generally allotted. Sow from one to one and a half pecks of seed to the Brick Store, Montgemery Avenue.

PATENT MEDICINES.

CIGARS AND TOBACCOS.

Having Just Opened a Drug Business in Calera, I Desire to Solicit the Patronage of All Who are in Need of Goods in My Line, Which are Offered at the Lowest Possible Margines.

A. R. SCOTT, Proprietor,

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA. Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New-York Louisville and Birmingham at regular rates energy by the larger cities.

We transact a general backing business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

Fire and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

The New York Store,

Calera, Ala.

DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, BOOTS, SHOES, GENTS' FURNISHING GOOFS. CLOTHING & HATS,

And if you ever Buy

Hose, Helf-Hose, Silk Ties Searfs, Rtc., Ric.,

Please Listen to Us just 20 Minutes. We are overstocked, and in order to Reduce Stock before we take invoice on February 1st, we will sell you any Diy

We have a Large Stock to dispose of and when you hear the Prices you will be

Cotton Checks 4 1-2 to 5 cents; Nice Cashmere Dress Goods 1934 rents per vord; Same at 22 1-2; a Finer Goods at 27 1-2; All Wood Ladies Cloth fifty maches wide only 57 1-2 cents, former price 65; Ladies Fast Black Hose 7 1-2 cents per pair; a better goods for 12 i-2 cents; a Fine Hose for 17 1-2 cents, city price 40 cents; Salt 65 cents per sack; Fine Shoes $1 25 to $2 50; Good Sho 3 1 60 per cents

Come and see us. We have too much to mention all in this paper. The at once. We guarantee all prices named, and a child will get as low prices as as older person. No favorit-s, but one price to all. Come and see us and you will find we mean business. We want to

Reduce the Stock,

before taking Invoice, and if Prices can do it

THEY MUST BE CUT INTO

C. WADE & CO.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION. Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers -12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT. 1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these de-papers.

2. It is invaluable to the farmer and throughout the south.

the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to the household.

6. Bill Arp, Plunkett, and Uncle &court are engaged by the year, and their inimitable heathly a grouper and work.

the household.

3. It covers the news of the whole world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thorough news service from every important news center in the world.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone is worth many times its subscription price to every farmer. This department is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasure to every family, and the name of the south of the south.

8. It pays more money for its special features and for its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers of the south, and much more than any weekly bewspaper in America.

9. It is the People's Friend, and interests of the south.

8. It pays more money for its special features and for its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers of the south.

9. It is the People's Friend, and it the sturdy champion of the agricultural interests of the south.

9. It is the People's Friend, and its the sturdy champion of the agricultural interests of the south.

9. It is the People's Friend, and its the sturdy champion of the agricultural interests of the south.

9. It is the People's Friend, and its the sturdy champion of the agricultural interests of the south.

9. It is the People's Friend, and its the sturdy champion of the south.

9. It is the People's Friend, and its the sturdy champion of the south.

9. It is the People's Friend, and its the sturdy champion of the south.

9. It is the People's Friend, and its the sturdy champion of the south.

9. It is the People's Friend, and its the sturdy champion of the south.

9. It is the People's Friend, and its the sturdy champion of the south.

9. It is the People's Friend, and its the south.

9. It is the Champion of the south.

9.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

R. T. V. & G. R. R. 4:36 a. m. No. 1, To Selma, 4:40 p. m. 2. From Selma, > Arrives at Sti, Departs at

AT THE CHURCHES.

PRESENTERIAN-Services on the 4th toilet soaps. Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m.

and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Powling, pastor. Sabbath school at 2-30.

Baptist Church--Rev. J. G Lowrey, pastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

Friday evening at 3.

COUNTY OFFICERS. Probate Judge-R. W. Cobb.

Circuit Clerk-W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff-W. R. Carter-Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-

Ian.
Tax Collector—E. F. Vest.
Tax Assessor—W. H. Kidd.
County Trersurer—A. W. Strickland.
Superintendent of Education—T. N.

County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners-John E. Syeey, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, Dyeey, T. B. D. C. Davis.

ASSIGNEES SALE.

NOTICE is hereby given that on Saturday the 16th day of January, 1892, at the saw mill of the late Strickland & Bass, near Gurnee, in Shelby county. Ala., commencing at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., I will as assignee, in compliance with, and for the purposes of the trust set for h in a certain deed of as. Innert, executed by Strickland & Bass to me, bearing date April, 1891, and duly recorded in Shelby county in Peed Book No. 15, page 212, proceed to cell at public auction to the highest bid-service here, who has been on a deer for each, the following goods and drive the following goods and the following goods and the following goods and drive the following goods and t Cer for eash, the following goods and chattels, to-wit:
One 20 x 8 wood pulley, one No. 3

randril, one three inch flue cleaner, two 24 x 8 wood pulleys, sixty-two feet of rubber belting, twenty-five of 8 meh 4 ply fubber belting, twenty-two feet of 4 inch 4 ply rubber belting, twenty-two feet of 4 inch 4 ply rubber belting, two two feet of 4 inch 4 ply rubber belting, two hyndred and sixty-seven and a buff feet.

A couple of weeks by a severe attack of the parties connected with the attempted jail delivery last week:

On Wednesday of last week Deputy Sheriff Slaughter succeeded in hundred and sixty-seven and a half feet of 112 inch pipe, one 121-2 inch safety and, one No. 3 pump, one hundred and fitty feet of 11-2 inch pipe, one 12 x sive trade. A Journal representation of the pipe, one 12 x sive trade. A Journal representation of the pipe, one 12 x sive trade. A Journal representation of the pipe, one 12 x sive trade. A Journal representation of the pipe, one 12 x sive trade. The pipe size of the pipe, one 12 x sive trade. Aw non and carriage, three circular preparing for a busy season. Her and articles will be offered singly or in lots to will be offered singly or in lots to suit purchasers.

A. II. CARPENTER,
Assignce of Strickland & Bass.

Gurnec, Ala., December 14, 1891. 18dec4t prs fee $10.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

ance against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of Mr. Jno. Carmichael of Birming.

Two charges have been preferred against him, namely, highway robbery and attempting to aid prison-

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the stours of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old sege should you live. A life insurance will do this and mare: therefore all the Vanderbilt, for the winters of the day. The speaking will begin at 11 o'clock a. m. Everybody is invited to come out and hear him.

Mrs. Brown, of Birmingham, writing is still at large, but will doubtless soon be run to cover, as officers in every direction are on officers in every direction are only the first than two years. Hall is about 25 years of age.

His pal, Tom Wilson, at this writing is still at large, but will doubtless soon be run to cover, as officers in every direction are on officers in every direction are on the first than two years. Hall is about 25 years of age. will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract nom a sermon by the Rev. T. De-Witt Talmage.

FLORIDA VESTIBULE TRAIN.

The first regular vestibule tain ever mamie and Ida, will add much to run through Tennessee will be put on next Sunday. The train will consist of mail car, Southern Express car, baggage car, two day coaches and one or more Pullman sleepers. The train will be revestibuled from end to end and will be ceived at the office of the Bachelor's without effect. The train was consistent of the proposals will be revestibuled from end to end and will be ceived at the office of the Bachelor's without effect. The train was described exactly in the Times. It will be run regularly every day between Chattanooga and St. Augustine, Fla., by the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia

Read Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia

present between Chattanooga and St.
Angustine. Returning it will leave St.
Angustine 8:10 a m, Jacksonville 9:50 pm, arrive Chattanooga 4 a m, leave 4:10 a m, arrive Cincinnati 5:50 p m.
This is the vestibuled train the East Tennessee promised, and if you want to see something gorgeous go to the Cenhave been seen rushing frantically

THE POLICE GAZETTE

RICHARD K. FOX.
Square. New York City. dent. Franklin Square.

TOWN TOPICS.

This morning the sunshine made ts appearance and everybody feels present there is no supply.

Go to the new drug store for the finest

Mr. E. S. Lyman, of Montevallo, 4:35 p. m. was in town Tuesday. Mr. Lyman Howell, an aged shoemaker, who 10:25 a. m. is one of Shelby county's most had long been a citizen of Calera, prominent young attorneys.

and attractive sign in front of his METHODIST-Services on the second drug store, which can be seen from in Calera last night. He is on a family was all grown up, and his tour of the district. In reply to a life ended at a ripe old age. question from the Journal as to Wednesday night between eleven his congressional prospects, he and twelve o'clock Rev. C. D. said: "It is all right."

the position of assistant post mis- not unexpected. He was one of tress, Miss Juddy McElroy having Calera's oldest citizens, and was resigned. The post office is much highly esteemed by all our people. more conveniently fitted up than in He had lived a long life of active the old quarters.

Railway Mail Service, spent Tues-day at home here. The boys are ily, and to their tender care he always glad to see him, and he will find the latch string on the outside feels his death a loss, but after of all their doors.

visit with his wife to relatives in

Mr. I. N. Brazeale and family are visiting the family of Mr. F. cently been managing the Printup reward of $25 offered by the officers The next best thing possible to insur- at Gadsden. He is now out of bus- of that county.

ham, will be in Calera on Wednes- first named offense is not less than Read and profit by the fellowing sound counsel, every word of which smarts day, the 20th inst., at which time twenty years imprisonment, and the with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

he will address the people on the he will address the people on the for the latter, where the prisoners political issues of the day. The are charged with a felony, not less > the Vanderbilt for the winter. Calera is a good place to rest from the noise and bustle of the Magie City, and we are glad to have any of her citizens stop with us. We trust their stay will be a pleasant one. The two young ladies, Misses

The JOURNAL is requested to say a speed of thirty miles an hour. that sealed proposals will be re- One shot was fired at him, but accompanied by a guarantee of cers left the train and started on The train will leave Cincinnati next Sunday at 11:30 a m, and leave Chattannoga at 10:40 p m. arriving at Atlanta 4:45 a m, Macon 6:45 a m, Jesup 12 noon, Jacksonville 3:55 p m, and St. Augustine 5:30 p m, only sixteen hours from Chattanooga to the Ponce de Leon. The time made by this palatial train will be over four hours quicker than at present between Chattanooga and St.

see something gorgeous go to the Central Depot next Sunday night at 10 o'clock.—Chattanooga Times Nov. 22. empty bottle in one hand and an oyster can in the other. The de-Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX.

THE DEATH MESSENGER

COMES TO TWO HOUSEHOLDS IN ONE SHORT WEEK.

Through the misting rain came Go to the new drug store for well pre- the death angel, and hovering pared medicines. awhile over our little city, selected There is a great demand for two marks for its fatal dart. In houses in Calera, for which at two days it took away two of our oldest citizens.

Tuesday night the town was startled with the news of a most sudden and unexpected death. Mr. dropped dead at his home. He had Go to the new drug store for the best been out on the streets during the oilet soaps.

A. R. Scott has placed a neat health, and about night; started home. He was accompanied by a friend, and as they were walking home he complained of being tired. He sat down by the roadside to Go to the new drug store for fancy rest for a few minutes, and then walked on. He had only been in Send your order for printing to the house a few moments when the SHORT AND DIRECT the JOURNAL Job Office. Patron- ruthless hand laid hold of him and ize a home institution, especially he was dead. It was evidently a Cumberland Presentenan—J. C. Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evenings at 3: there was no apparrent trouble with his health. He was a man of Oliver passed into the great beyond. He had been seriously ill Miss Pearl Galloway now holds for several days, and his death was service in the cause of the Master, Mr. John D. Campbell, of the and many jewels adorn his crown. left his aged companion. Everyone life's weary labors his sleep is rest.

The following from the Chronicle Huntsville, has returned to his is an account of the capture of one > capturing Jim Hall, one of the parties who may the attempt to release Hanley and the other prison-

M. Vance. Mr. Brazeale was at was it the Tuscaloasa jail at the one time the proprietor of the time he went over there after young Vanderbilt Hotel, but has more re- Elliott, and for whom there is a

Mr. Jno. Carmichael, of Birming- bery and attempting to aid prisoners to escape. The penalty for the the alert for him. Saturday Deputy Sheriff Slaughter and Mr. Charles W. Grant came near captuuring Wilson on a Columbus and Western train, but he was apprised of his presence before they could act, and running to the rear end of the coach, jumped from the train while it was running at tion, Dr. King's New Life Pids, Buck-

East Tennessee, Virginia & Ga., Ry. Systom

Is The ONLY

LINE

To the East

West

RESORTS

of the

Carolinas, Virginia & Tennessee,

B. W. WRENN, G.P. & T. A

Knoxville, Tenn. TAX ASSESSOR'S NOTICE.

THE STATE OF ALABAMA SHELBY COUNTY.

I will be present at the following ers then in the county jail. He times and places for the purpose of was captured at Grisham's ferry, in assessing the state and county Taxes Talladega county, while attempting two rounds and tax payers are requested to meet me at these appoint-After his capture Mr. Slaughter ments, and have with them a descriprecognized Hall as a prisoner who tion of their tax assessable property. FIRST ROUND,

-	77 1	0.)
Gurnee,	Feby.,	22
Aldrich,	-	23
Montevallo,	47	24
Calera	44	25
Spring Creek	41	26
Shelby Ironwo	rks "	27
Vandiver	70	29
Bold Springs	Meh	1 :t
High Land		2
Helena	10	3
Pelham	46	.1
Aldrich	11	4
Elliottsville	0	5
Yellowleaf	46	7
Spearman	41	8
Columbiana	112	9 ana 10
Wilsonville	-	11
		12
Harpersville	44	14
Vincent		7-7
SECON.	D ROUND.
Gurnee	Meh	21
Aldrich	++	22
Montevallo	110	23
Calera	90	54
Spring Creek	41	25
Shelby Iron wo	cks"	62
Vandiver	- 0	28
Bold Springs	. 6	29
High Land	6.6	30
Helena	10-	31
Pelham	April	1st
Tylers	11	lst
Elriottsville	44	2
Yellowleaf	46	4
Spearman	44	5
Columbina	18	6 and 7
Wilsonville	44	8
	41	9
Harpersville	44	11
Vincent	W. H K
	Tax As	SUSSOI

Shelby county Ala.

Happy Hoosiers.

Wm. Timmons, postmaster of Idaville Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from from Kidney and Liver trouble." John Leslie, farmer and stockman, of same place, says: "Find Electric Bitters to be the best "FROM THE MOUNTAINS TO THE GULF."

The East Tennesee, Virginia & Georgia railroad has issued a neat little pamphlet entitled. "From the "Mountains to the Gulf," In which a splendid description of the country traversed by its lines is given. It is profusely illustrated with handsome engravings of country and places."

The Interpolation of the answer man." J. W. Gardner hardware merchant, same town says:
Electric Bttters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't man who is all run down and the same who have any work and the same its lines is given. It is profusely illustrated with handsome engravings of country and places and buildings. It is a bit of interesting reading hesides,

The Galera Journal,

A Weekly Newspaper.

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as it will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the latest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of the state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at every point in the county.

every point in the county.

«JOB PRINTING»

Quickly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

Commercial and Legal Printing a Specialty

FastEating

like Hood's Sarsaparilla. Read this: "Owing partly to irregularity in eating, I suffered greatly from dyspepsia, accompanied by Severe Pain After Meals I took two or three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and entirely recovered, much to my gratification. I frequently have opportunity to praise

Hood's Sarsaparilla and am glad to, for I consider it a great medicine."

C. I. TROWBRIDGE, Travelling salesman for Schlotter

Shortens Labor, Lessens Pain. Endorsed by the Leading Physicians.

Book to "Mothers" mailed FREE. BRADFIELD RECULATOR CO. ATLANTA, GA. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Cod-liver oil suggests consumption; which is almost unfortunate. Its best use is before you fear consumptionwhen you begin to get thin. Consumption is only one of the dangers of thinness.

Scott's Emulsion of codliver-oil makes the thin plump, and the plump are almost safe.

Let us send you a book on CAREFUL LIVING-free.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, 132 South 5th Avenue, New York.
Your druggist keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil—all druggists everywhere do. $1.

RELIEVES all Stomach Distress. REMOVES Nausea, Sense of Fullness, CONGESTION REVIVES FAILING ENERGY. RESTORES Normal Circulation, and Warms to Toe Tips.

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo.

Cheapest Family Atlas

ONLY 25 CENTS. 191 Pages, 91 Full Page Maps.

Colored Maps of each State and Territory in the United States. Also Maps of every Country in the United States. Also Maps of every Country in the World. The letter press gives the square miles of each State; time of settlement; population; chief cities; average temperature; salaries of officials and the principal postmasters in the State; number of farms, with their productions and the value thereof; different manufactures and number of employes, 2tc., etc. Also the area of each Foreign Country; form of government; population; principal products and their money value; amount of trade; religion; size of army; miles of railroad and telegraph; number of horses, cattle, sheep, and a vast amount of information valuable to all. Postpaid for X-C. MOO. PUB. HOUSE, 134 Leonard St., N. Y. City.

••••••••

UICH FIVE OR EUCHRE PARTIES

Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured.

A FREE BALLOT.

HARRISON PREACHES THE DOCTRINE CONCERNING FAIR PLAY IN POLITICS AND PRACTICES ANOTHER-STATE STEALERS WHOM HE HAS "VINDI-

President Harrison, in his Message to Congress, has much to say concerning the ballot and fair play in potitics. The course of the Michigan Legislature in providing for minority representation in the Electoral College he denounced as destructive of representative government. So desirious was he to "elevate the suffrage" and give full and fair expression to the voice of the people, he suggested that a non-partisan commission composed in whole or in part of the Judges of the Supreme Court, be appointed to consider the whole matter and devise measures of

This is the doctrine which President Harrison preaches; let us see how his practice accords with his precepts.

In 1888 the voice of the people of Indiana was stifled, and the vote of the State was counted for Mr. Harrison.

All the evidence accessible to the public clearly indicated that a plan to purchase votes in "blocks of five" had been successful and the scheme was so notorious that Judge Woods referred to it officially.

Two men were justly or unjustly held by the public responsible for the conception and execution of the plan of campaign by which voters were to be purchased in blocks of five. These men were William A. Dudley and Stephen B.

Investigation began, but just as it became interesting Judge Woods reversed his own rulings, changed front on the issue, practically putting an end to the prosecution and shielding the perpetrators of the outrage.

What course has President Harrison pursued in relation to Judge Woods? How has he manifested his displeasure at his partisanship on the bench? How has he proclaimed his devotion to a free ballot and a fair count?

Among the names of the Judgee sent to the Senate for confirmation, that of Judge Woods led all the rest. By the action of the President, who secured the electoral vote of Indiana in 1888, Judge Woods-who so ruled as to protect the men who conducted an organized conspiracy against the ballot-is placed in a more dignified position, and given greater power to protect men charged with crimes at the polls.

So much for Judge Woods and Mr. Dudley. What of Mr. Stephen B.

That gentleman has waited three year for a "vindication." He did not appea to the courts, evidently relying on the good offices of the chief beneficiary of the Indiana conspiracy of 1888.

At last this vindication comes in the shape of an appointment to the Cabinet, as Secretary of War.

In no other way could the President so clearly indorse the methods of Quay, Clarkson, Dudley and Elkins as by these two appointments, and they are a fit commentary on the President's dissertation on the purity of the ballot, a little while ago sent to Congress.

This contradition of the position Mr. Harrison has in public esteem. He is a man whose private character seems to be above reproach. He is eminent in the councils of a great church. His speeches are excellent, and on all occasions he expresses his devotion to the common rules of honesty and fair play with as much

But in politics he stops at nothing. There is no offense which he will not condone; there is no offence he will not pardon, if by so doing he can advance his cwn political fortunes.

It is these contradictions between precepts and practices which deprive Mr. Harrison of that public confidence which a man of his personal character and public position should always possess.-Lunisville Courier-Journal.

Barbarous Legislation.

M. Tirard, formerly French Minister of Finance, in an intervinw on the subject of the negotiations for a commercial treaty between France and the United States, says

"Treaties of this kind are useful as a modus vivendi between countries where tariffs are so high that they paralyze trade. A treaty with the United States will be extremely opportune, and will go a long way to secure our enthusiastic participation in the Chicago Fair.

"The McKinley law has so much lamed our trade that I would favor going to the United States for staples only when it is impossible to obtain what we need elsewhere. The McKinley Administrative bill is a barbarous piece of legislation, and has caused great ill feeling in France. The whole McKinley law is due to an error of judgment.

"The Americans urged that as their exports are natural products that other nations must have, they would be sure to find buyers, and so they could shut their ports to foreign manufacturers. This reasoning is fallacious. The population of the United States might easily increase to four times its present figure in twenty years. In that case America would become a still greater exporting country. Look how England has developed since she adopted free trade. If the United States were to adopt a like policy America would soon govern the markets of the whole world. By following the policy of prohibitory protection she restricts the future to the limits of home consumption. In France, where it is impossible to develop resources any further, there may be some excuse for protection, but not so in America, where the possibilities of development are unbounded."

There is a big boom in the lobste fisheries of Nova Scotia, the crustaceans being more plentiful than ever-beArticles Consumed.

There are many protectionist journals that periodically : form tables of the quantities of various articles consumed in this country and Great Britain, with the intent of showing that the average American has much more of the good things of this world than the average Briton. But the journals are obliged to confine themsel ves to those articles which Americans must consume in larger necessary a large consumption of clothing by Americans. Hesice our per capita consumption of vool, woolens, cotton and cotton goods is large. But when we come to other: garticles the showing for this country is by no means as good, even when those articles are selected, which it is generally supposed that we consume most freely. Thus, our cheap newpapers are the wonder of the world; and one would suppose that our consumption of paper is very large. But as a matter of fact we consume less paper per capita than the English. Again, our extensive railroad sy stem, made necessary by our large territory, compels us to use immense quantities of steel rails, not only to build new road s, but also to keep old roads in repair. We might, therefore, expect that our consumption of iron would be very large; but it is not as large per capita as that of (freat Britain. Turning to an article of diet, it is well known that Americans are great lovers of sweetmeats, especially of candy, and we would therefore expects that our per capita consumption of sugar would be very large.

But even here the ave rage Briton outdoes us. There are other articles, the consumption of which is larger in Great Britian than in this country, but these will suffice. Facts certainly indicate that the fence, Griswold blew another blast while wages are undoubtedly much higher in this country than in Great Britian, the difference is largely offset by our severe climate, compelling, as it does, a very large consumption of clothing and fuel on the part of our workmen. Men are able to work much harder in a severe than in a mild climate; and hence our laborers can earn much higher wages than the British, but these higher wages must, in a great measure, go for increased necessaties .- Brooklyn

The Tariff is a Tax.

Perhaps no five words in the English language so inflame the Republican journalists as these: "The tariff is a

They have denounced the phrase, derided it, denied it, but it is an argument in itself that goes to the root of this whole controversy and it sticks in the public mind.

But even Republicans are forced at times to admit that the tariff is a tax, and to defend it because it is a tax. Some importers have resisted the collection of duties under the McKinley bill, and one of their counts is that it provides a bounty for the production of sugar, for which bounty no authority can be found in the constitution.

Solicitor-General Taft, arguing for the Government, insists that the bounty is only a change in the method of "protecting" the sugar producers; a change from a tariff to a bounty. Reviewing our tariff history at some length, he concludes:

"The principle"—of a protective tariff -"thus established, necessarily justifies bounties, for in the beginning of the operation of a protective tariff the amount of duty levied is a bounty to the domestic manufacturer, and it is with a view to such a benefit to him that it is sugar producers.'

Whether or not legally the Solicitor-General is right, the court will determine, but practically, commercially and economically, the amount of duty levied is a bounty to the domestic manufacturer. A duty is a bounty; that is, it is a tax which yields a bounty to the domestic manufacturer.

We refer our Republican contemporaries to Solicitor-General Taft for instruction on this point, merely repeating what we have said before, that "the tariff is a tax." -- Courier-Journal.

PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS.

Inter-State Commissioners, Consuls, Judges and Others.

the following nominations: Inter-State Commerce Commissioners: James W. McDill, of Iowa, vice Thomas L. Cooley, resigned, William Lindsey, (Democrat) of Kentucky, vice W L Bragg, deceased, and W R Morrison, of Illinois, a reappointment. For Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, Estees G Rathbone, of Ohio.

William B Hess, United States Consul-General at Constantinople. William D McCoy, of Indiana, Minister Resident and Consul-General to Liberia. Andrew P McCormack, of Texas. United States Circuit Judge for the Fifth Judicial Circuit.

Matthew T Allen, United States Attorney for the Southern District of California.

Abram J Seay, Governor of the Territory of Oklahoma. Daniel Array, of Illinois, principal clerk of the surveys of the general land office. Daniel T Hindman, agent of Indians of Sisston Agency, South Dakota.

States Engineer in Chief and Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, with the relative rank of Commodore. Maxwell, of Ohio, at San Domingo; Charles Weare, of Iowa, at Aix La Chappell; David S Buyck, of Oregon, at Sonneberg: Elias B Choney, of James Leitch, of Louisiana, at Belize. California salmon have been placed in the Seine, France,

New Hampshire, at Matawzas,

BRUIN FACED THE MUSIC.

Lured to Death by the Bass Horn of a Brass Band.

George Griswold, who lives on the Loyalsock Creek, a mile and a half north of Forksville, Tenn., plays the bass horn in the Forksville brass band. On a recent Saturday evening, Griswold tucked his big horn under his arm and strode down to Forksville to practice with the Americans must consume in larger other members of the village organiza-quantities than the English. Thus our tion. A little after 10 o'clock Griswold severe and changing climate makes started for home in the bright light of the full moon. When he had gone nearly a mile from the village, where the road led through Andrew Harper's farm, he heard a noise in a field a short distance to the right, and looking that way he saw a bear pawing around and crunching nuts under a big chestnut tree. Griswold watched the greedy animal for a moment, and then he stole up to the fence, squatted behind it, poked his bass horn between the rails, and blew a single blast that sent the echoes flying among the surrounding hills. The toot of the big horn gave the bear an amazing start. In his sudden fright he rolled over a number of times and then he jumped up and legged it across the meadows at full tilt. Griswold thought he had scared the bear half to death, and he was about to pull his horn out of the fence, when he saw the bear turn about and slowly march back toward the chestnut tree. He said the brute seemed to be eager to find out where the noise had come from and what had made it, and so he left his horn in the fence and kept perfectly still.

The bear cautiously approached the tree, but he didn't stop under it to paw up more nuts. He waddled directly toward the fence, sniffed the air frequently and had his eyes fixed on the horn, the big end of which glittered in the moon-light in front of him. When the inquisitive animal was within a few yards of with all the lung power he had, and the bear rolled all over himself and went dancing across the lot as though he had been shot at. Before he had reached the end of the field he faced about, snorted half a dozen times, and shambled back to find out more about it. Griswold kept the curious brute capering across the lots in this way for nearly half an hour, when Charles Harper, a son of the owner of the land, ran down the road to ascertain what the horn was being blown tor.

As Harper drew near Griswold gave another blast, and the bear started off again. Griswold told Harper in a whiser how the bear had been acting, and Harper began to look around for something with which to tackle the bear when he came toward the fence the next time He soon found a rusty old ploughshare near the roadside. By that time the bear had turned back once more and was tramping slowly toward the horn. Gris wold promised not to toot the horn again, and while the bear was marching back, with his eyes bent on the shining brass. Harper took the ploughshare, crawled through the fence, crept along on his stomach to the chestnut tree, and concealed himself behind the stump.

The bear appeared to be determined to find out what kind of a machine the big brass thing was, for he slouched toward it in a bee line, and he didn't turn his head to either side as he neared it. The moment he passed the chestnat tree Harper tiptoed up behind him, sprang to his side, and drove the point of the ploughshare into the top of the bear's skull with all his might. The bear gave a roar, reared up on his hind legs and wheeled around, knocking Harper off his feet. Harper rallied at once and, before the bear had taken ten steps he dealt him another blow on the head with the ploughshare and felled him to the ground. Griswold then jumped over the fence with a large stone, but before he got a chance to do anything Harper levied. The sugar duties have always had the effect of a bounty to domestic sugar producer." Farmer Harper was on his way to the spot when the bear turned up his toes, and the three men lugged the carcass to the barn. The bear was hog fat, and weighed 406 pounds.-[New York Sun.

Punishing Naval Cadets.

It is said that the punishment inflicted upon the cadets at the Naval Academy at Annapolis are carefully devised to have as much influence as pessible in preventing a recurrence of the offense. These regulations are the fruit of years of experience and are enforced with undeviat-ing impartiality. When a cadet is guilty of tardiness at any formation, he is required for a given period subsequent to eport to the officer in charge half an hour before the time of the formation, standing by until it takes place. Those The President has sent to the Senate who oversleep themselves in the morning are compelled for a month to turn out one hour before reveille, and at the first note of the bugle to report themselves and the room ready for inspection. Visiting during study hours is punished by solitary confinement on the prison ship Santee as a corrective for too great sociability. Inattention at drill carries with it the penalty of one or more extra drills during recreation hours. Habitual untidiness is cured by requiring the care-less cadet to report for inspection to the officer in charge every hour for a number of days, usually a month. Should non-regulation clothing be found in a cadet's possession, it is seized by the authorities is contraband and not restored until the offender leaves the academy. It is thus difficult to appear out of uniform .- [New Orleans Picayune.

Well-paid Base-ball Players.

"Who wouldn't be a star base-ball player, especially a pitcher?" remarked festive Geary Rich the other day as he read of Rusie's engagement by the Chicago Association Club at $6,000 per f Sisston Agency, South Dakota.

Chief Engineer Melville, United tates Engineer in Chief and Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, with the relative rank of Commodore.

United States Consuls: Campbell T

[Agywell of Chief at Son Depringer States and States Consuls of Computer Scampbell T

[Agywell of Chief at Son Depringer States and States Consuls of Computer States Consults of Computer States game lasts two hours; that's $75 per hour or $1.25 a minute. And there are Connor and Richardson who refused to play as Giants any longer for $3,500 per year, and went over to Philadelphia, where they get three years' contracts at $4,500 guaranteed. Tell you, base-ball is the profession to adopt. Discounts anything else." And Geary smiled.—[San Francisco Chronicle olsoo Chroniole.

How's This?

How's This?

We offer One Hundred Dollars reward for any case of catarrh that cannot be cured by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & Co., Props., Toledo, O., we, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions, and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.

West & Truax, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo,

WALDING, KINNAN & MARVIN, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.
Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free.
Price 75c. per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

The Only One Ever Printed. CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look forit, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, BEAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE.

Actors and lovers have one trait in com-mon. They often "make up" with each other

The Most Pleasant Way

Of preventing the grippe, colds, headaches and fevers is to use the liquid laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs, whenever the system needs a gentle, yet effective cleansing. To be benefited one must get the true remedy manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only. For sale by all druggists in 50c. and $1 bottles.

The only woman a man has a right to dictate to is his beautiful and attractive type

Ir your Back Aches, or you are all worn out, good for nothing, it is general debility. Brown's fron Bitters will cure you, make you strong, cleanse your liver, and give a good appetite—tones the nerves.

You can't argue with a bigot without agreeing with him in thinking you're a fool. FITT: stopped free by Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Regional. No fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline, 881 Arch St., Phila., Pa.

When a drunkard gets lost his friends don't worry. They know he will soon "turn up."

Brown's Iron Bitters cures Dyspepsia, Malaria, Billousness and General Debility. Gives Strength, aids Digestion, tones the nerves—creates appetite. The best tonic for Nursing Mothers, weak women and children.

When a man is not very bright it seems a hardship to leave him to his own reflections.

"'Brown's Bronchial Troches' are excellent for the relief of Hoarseness or Sore Throat. They are exceedingly effective."— Christian World, London, Eng.

DR. SWAN'S PASTILES Cure female weaknesses, his T-Tablets cure chronic constination. Samples free. Dr. Swan, Beaver Dam, Wis.

Don't fool with indigestion nor with a disordered liver, but take Beecham's Pills for immediate relief. 25 cents a box.

CATARRH

Obstinate Blood Humor.

I HAD TERRIBLE ECZEMA FOR EIGHTEEN YEARS—WAS and limbs swollen and scaly like a dead fish. The itching was terrible, and finally LOST MY SIGHT. After treatment by five physicians, and other remedies without relief, I took S. S. S. AND IT CURED ME. My skin is soft and smooth, and the terrible trouble is all gone.—R. N. MITCHELL, Macon, Ga. I know the above statement to be true.—S. S. HARMON, Macon, Ga.

I was for some time troubled with an obstinate RASH OR HUMOR, that spread over my face and breast. I consulted physicians, and used many remedies without a care. At the suggestion of a friend I used Swift's Specific, which completely cured me. This was two years ago, and I have had no return of the trouble.—E.H.Wells, Chesterfield, Va. S. S. S. is the safest and best remedy for all troubles of the Blood and Skin. It cures by removing the cause, and at the same time builds up the general health.

Send for our Treatise, mailed free. SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Atlanta, Ga.

ALL AFFECTIONS OF THE THROAT AND LUNGS. TAYLOR'S CHEROKEE REMEDY OF

SWEET GUM AND MULLEIN

Is the BEST KNOWN REMEDY. Ask your druggist or merchant for it, and take no substitute, as nothing else can take its place.

IF WORTH OWNING IS WORTH CARING FOR.

stand Symptoms. TREATING WRONG DISEASE IS WORSE THAN NO TREATMENT.

To Cure Disease You Must Under-

To detect symptoms and understand them requires the services of a Dog Doctor, which are not to be had outside of large cities, and are expensive; hence the necessity for a good

Dog Doctor Book

SYMPTOMS AND TREATMENT OF ALL DISEASES.

We offer one written by H. CLAY GLOVER, D. V. S., of N. Y. City, Specialist in Canine Diseases, Veterinarian to the Westminster Kennel Club, N. J. Kennel Club, Hartford (Conn.) Kennel Club, R. I. Kennel Club, Syracuse Kennel Club, American Fox Terrier Club, &c., &c., which ought to be sufficient proof as to his capacity.

PRICE 40 CENTS. POSTPAID.

Eighteen Beautiful Full-Page Illustrations of Champion Dogs of Popular Breeds.

FINE PAPER, HANDSOMELY BOUND IN CLOTH.

BOOK PUBLISHING HOUSE. 134 Leonard St., N. Y. City.

E. C. MEACHAM ARMS CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

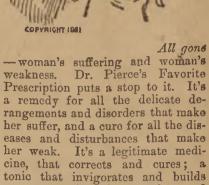

Am. N. U. . No 2, 1892.

Yes don't want comfort. If you don't wish to look well dressed. If a don't want the best, the you don't want the Lace Back Suspeader. Your dealer has it if he is nive. If he is nivit he should if he your dealer. We will mail a pair on receipt of $1.00. None genuine without the stamp as above.

Lece Back Suspender Co.

W Frince Street, N. Y. ASTHMA DR. TAFT'S ASTHMALENE address, we will mail trial CURED BOTTLE Send us your address, we will mail trial CURED BOTTLE THE E sex, it's a safe and certain remedy. Other medicines claim to cure? That's true. But they don't claim to do this: if the Favorite Prescription fails to give satisfaction, in any case for which it's recommended, the money paid for it is refunded.

up; a nervine that soothes and strengthens. For bearing - down pains, displacements, all the functional irregularities peculiar to the Judge for yourself which is likely to be the better medicine. And think whether something else offered by the dealer is likely to be "just as good."

You pay only for the good you get. On these terms it's the cheapest.

Memory and Hope. Oh, for thy glory of sunlight and flowers, Shimmer of ocean and dazzle of sky. Where the wind sleeps and the cloud never Sweet By-and-By! Yet your soft light let me never deny, Tenderly mingled of shadow and shine, Fresh to the spirit and fair to the eye, Days of Lang Syne.

Oh for the rapture of moonlighted bowers, Kisses that tremble and vows that reply; Oh for the loves of the heart to be ours, Sweet By-and-By!

Yet with those visions these ever must vie, Friendships that hallow and souls that entwine.

Fellowships dear in your bosom that tie, Days of Lang Syne!

Oh for thy magic unfolding of powers, Silvery tongue with brave truth for ally, Art that impassions and wisdom that dowers, Sweet By-and-By! Here, too, are thoughts springing noble and

Gems of the soul how they sparkle and

Yours are the counsels that shall never die, Days of Lang Syne.

ENVOL. Friend, may it be that we ever shall sigh,

Sweet By-and-By. Thine are the lees, and for you was the wine, Days of Lang Syne. - [Dorathea Dimond in Traveller's Record.

When Jason Went Courting.

Jason was five and forty. He was a tall man and very lean, and had little reason to pride himself upon his good looks. His usual costume consisted of an old hat gone to seed, a knee-high below and reaching to his armpits above, held in position by one suspender. It was rumored that he was possessed of a pair of shoes, but never wore them. As for a coat, he had never owned one in his life-a had gone down then, and the blanket serving his purpose in cold

It is not, however, a case of laziness or unthrift with Jason; on the contrary, he was very industrious and successful in gathering a full share of this world's goods around him.

Jason was not a miser, nor was he a misanthrope. He was a very liberal and jolly fellow, full of fun and fond of laughter.

His home was a big, rambling log house on the edge of the timber bordering Magnolia Creek. There he had lived alone since his sister married and went away to a home of her own. Jason had never liked the life he was leading, but he could not make up his | house, come to supper, Mandy." mind to marry, for, strange to say, in spite of his own outward appearance, of him as never before, when Mandy had but small effect. Ray returned to Magnolia Creek, a widow.

They met one night at a candy pulling party. He had not felt so young and happy for ten years; and the more he thought of it the more he ingly. "I'm going a-courtin", Pete, wendered if it had been on account and I want to go now while I know of losing Mandy, long ago, that he had | what I want." found it so hard to choose a wife.

"It sorter seems like in a dream, now that she is back again, that I used to think a heap of Mandy." he mused. "It's a wonder I never in all these years thought of it before. It seems. that it was because-well, because she married that feller?"

other things connected with the olden to this, thinking that perhaps his long-days, and I was took good care of. I more willing to go afterward. reckon that's the reason I didn't know what was the matter with me. But waded into the middle of the lake and I'm all alone now."

and he bowed his head in his hands. nervous. His thoughts went back to Mandy once more.

see me the other night. I wonder on either hand were the dark woods, what she would say if I went to see where the fireflies darted hither and her."

of it the more he felt impelled to pay | the moonlit sky.

the widow a visit. By evening his mind was made up. It was with boyish eagerness that he determined to go.

his fovorite mule, but that sagacious remembered he had heard some hunt-chase, the mule permitted himself to in his surmise.

Jason mounted upon his steed was care about his appearance; he was as fast as his legs would carry him. simply himself, exactly like the Jason everybody knew, and nothing more.

saw who it was, she smiled and brambles. blushed prettily.

"Come in," she said.

He started to dismount, when the mule suddenly became frightened at something, and began to jump and plunge wildly. Jason regained his mule was too strong for him, and almost before he knew it, they were going homeward again at break-neck speed.

Mandy ran to the gate to see what would happen, and when she saw that Jason was sitting securely in the saddle, but unable to turn the mule to hickory shirt, and pantaloons, almost the left or the right, a mirthful smile hardly nobody in the world that looks overspread her pretty face.

"How funny. But I hope he won't get hurt," she murmured.

Then she returned to the gallery and picked up her sewing, but the sun twilight shadows were gathering fast, and sat there dreaming.

"It doesn't seem so long since I was a girl on Magnolia Creek," she mused. "Jason was just about the same down. then as he is now; but I reckon I have changed. I used to think that he cited by this time, and could find no ping down. Aboard the steamer the thought a good deal of me, them days, though he never said so in so many words. I wonder what he was com- got up and walked to the edge of the hold three, and on some vessels four, ing here for this evening. I'm foolsh, maybe, but somehow I think he cares for me still. If he only knew," -here her thoughts were rudely disturbed by some one calling within the | Mandy."

In the meanwhile Jason and the ing merrily. his ideal of a wife had always been a mule had made good time toward home. They were almost there when But there may have been another Jason managed to turn the mule reason for his remaining single so around, and then they began the jourlong. The loneliness of the old place ney anew. It was tedious work, for weighed more and more upon him and | the mule was unwilling to go, and the the idea of marrying took possession kicks and blows the rider administered resolute for a moment.

> "What's got into you to-night, any way?" Jason inquired of the mule.

The mule stopped in the middle of "Git up, Pete," said Jason coax-

Whether the mule understood what Jason said or not would be hard to say, but he certainly started off again at a brisk trot.

Just below where the road crossed Magnolia Creek was a small lake too, now when I think of it, that I wherein the water, during the dry didn't feel right well the day she mar- season, was a little over one foot in ried. But who would have thought depth. When the mule and the rider came in sight of this small lake, the former took it into his head to turn Jason smiled sadly, but his face aside from the road and go into the sobered presently as he thought of water. Jason did not seriously object eared steed was thirsty, and that by "I had mother and sister Nice them humoring him a little he would be

Pete did not drink, however, but stopped. Then he began to bray so There was a moisture in his eyes, loud that Jason became startled and

The moon was just rising and illuminated the east, but the little lake "She seemed to be awful glad to was still in deep shadow. Behind and thither like miniature flashes of light-Jason thought the matter over long ning, but in front and above, the and deeply, and the more he thought bank of the creek rose clear against respondent, the poet has lately con- do is to shoot down those afflicted.

Jason looked up and his heart almost stopped beating with fear. Plainly outlined against the sky he saw an animal the like of which he He went to the pasture to catch Pete, had never seen before. He suddenly blue."-[London News.

animal refused to be caught. Gentle ers say, a few days before, that they or harsh words were the same to Pete had seen the tracks of a Mexican lion just then, and even an ear of corn not many miles away. Straightway How Bullocks Are Transported could not tempt him to come within he thought that he recognized in the animal before him the shape of the In the light of later events Jason lion, as it had been described, and thought the mule was endowed with when he heard it utter a roar which second sight; but just then he was drowned even the loud braying of angry and excited. After a long Pete, he was certain that he was right

It was about sundown when Jason shaped his course so that it would about these men, their trials, their rode up to the house where Mandy bring him to Mandy, and he succeeded hardships, their desperate predicawas living with her parents. She in reaching his destination about 9 ments. Wonderful stories they tell to was sitting out on the gallery, sewing o'clock, wet from the water and dew, any person who will listen to them. busily; she looked up, and when she and scratched and torn by briars and Thoy are all hardy fellows and are > lery as if she had been expecting him, the, then across the ocean, back to New and when he came to the gate she York and across the continent to the spoke to him cheerily.

"Come in, Jason," she said. "I was determined to come, Mandy, seat in the saddle, and tried with all and I have got here at last. Was you his strength to hold back, but the looking for me?" he asked, as he seated himself on a chair beside her.

> "Well, maybe." "What made you?"

"Oh, just because-"

somebody else, Mandy." "Jason!"

"Well, you see, Mandy, there ain't out the unhealthy ones. for me, these days, and I could hardly the cattle are driven upon barges, put believe it when you said so."

Jason tried to gaze into her eyes, but she kept them hidden from him by looking down on her folded hands. down the Hudson into the East River son continued. "Mother is dead and to carry them to England. The floats so that instead of resuming her work | Sister Nice is done married, and the are tied to the steamship with stout she folded her hands idly on her lap old place don't seem like home any ropes and then the work of transfermore."

"I am sorry for you, Jason," Mandy

Jason had become nervous and ex-

"Well, I guess I better be going home and not keep folks out of bed main and steerage decks. A large all night," he said. "Good night, steamship like those now used carries fool I ever saw," cried Mandy, laugh- let the animals lie down or roll about ing toward the gate. "Good night, Jason."

out; but he had not gone far when he the head of the stall and knotted on came to a sudden halt, and stood ir-

"I'll ask her if it kills me," he cried, and turned and walked back to "Say, Mandy, won't you come out here for a minute?" he said, as he grasped the gate post for support. A happy smile played around Man-dy's pretty face as she stepped off the gallery and went to him.

"I came to ask you something," he said, when she was near to him, "and I'll ask it or burst."

"What is it?" she inquired very "I want you. I love you. Will vou have me?" "Yes," she whispered .- [New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Poetry and Ornithology.

March" has long since been identified terrible bellowing. Some break from on the authority of the poet himself, their stalls, plunge into ocean and folas neither the swallow nor the wheat- low the ship's boats, swimming until ear nor the blue titmouse, as various they become exhausted. readers have suggested, but simply the "Despite contrary reports the cattle kingfisher. It has already been pointed are very well protected during the out that the phrase bears a close re- trip from the elements. Iron decks semblance to the "sea purple birdiof are raised over their bodies, but even spring," by which the Spartan lyric these offer but little resistance to the poet refers to the halcyon; bu Lord furious seas that often sweep over the Tennyson states that he derived the steamer, carrying decks, fittings and phrase directly from his own remem- hundreds of head of cattle overboard. brance of the kingfishers, who were "Disease among the cattle while at wont to make their first appearance sea is difficult to attend to. It is next about the Lincolnshire rivers in the to impossible to separate the diseased month of March. In answer to a cor- from the healthy. The only thing to firmed this solution of a much-dis- Pleuro pneumonia kills off a great cursed question, with the interesting many at sea. addition that were he rewriting the "When the cattle reach the other poem he would substitute "darts" for side they have but twenty-four hours "flits by" and "sea shining" for "sea to live. It is the law that they must

SHIPPING CATTLE.

Across the Ocean.

Many Like a Sea Voyage and a Sniff of Salt Air.

Beasts shipped from this city to Jason did hot stop to see what Europe are all bullocks. Men emwould happen but slid off the mule's ployed by the owners in the West look a sight to behold. But little did he back into the muddy water, and ran after them all the way from the plains to the stockyards on the other side. Even in his excitement his errand Each man has the care of thirty head was not forgotten, for he thoughtfully of cattle. Much could be written mostly from the West. They work Mandy was setting out on the gal- their way to New York with the catplains. They are always on the go. never have any money, and generally die with their boots on.

Upon reaching Jersev City from the West the cattle are taken from the close cars into an immense box-like pasture. Here they are allowed to roam at will for twenty-four hours. This gives them exercise and a chance "Pshaw! You was a-looking for to breathe. They are well watered, well fed and examined by a specialist upon the diseases of cattle, who weeds

After this first twenty-four hours back into the box cars or aboard railroad floats. The floats are taken in tow by powerful tugboats and towed "I'm awful lonesome, Mandy," Ja. | to the dock of the steamship which is ring the animals begins.

Broad gang planks with high railmurmured, still persistently looking ings on either side are set in place over the ship's side. These planks are "ribbed" to keep the cattle from slipmore words to say. He moved about cattle are driven to their compartuneasily in his chair, and presently he ments. These are large enough to bullocks abreast.

The cattle are carried on the spar. from 1000 to 1500 head. The com-"Say, Jason, you are the biggest partments are just large enough to a little. The beasts are tied in these "I know it," muttered Jason, mov- immediately they are driven aboard from the float. A stout rope is put about the animal's horns, then passed He opened the gate slowly and went through a hole in a 3-inch board at the other side. Fresh straw is put in the stalls every day, and the animals are well fed and well watered during the voyage.

"It is amusing," said the captain of one of the vessels the other day, "to watch the cattle during an ocean vovage. Like human beings some of them seem to enjoy the trip and the salt air. Others appear to be timid and frightened. Some of them get deathly seasick, others are good sailors. The creatures seem to be able to scent a storm from afar just as they do out on the plains. Their terrified bellowings during a gale are enough to try the best of nerves. The animals seem to know when the ship gets the worst of it in a gate and to understand and appreciate its danger and their own. I have never been on a wrecked cattle ship, but friends of mine who have say that when they Lord Tennyson's "sea blue bird of abandon the ship the cattle set up a be slaughtered within that time after | fresh .- [Detroit Free Press.

leaving the steamer. The English passed this law to keep the shippers' prices down, claiming that the shipped cattle all suffered with pleuropneumonia, and that if permitted to live longer than that time among the home animals they would spread this disease by contagion. So the American cattle are put on barges from the steamer, taken up to the slaughter houses and killed." - [New York Recorder.

Flight of the Wild Geese.

Of all the migrating birds none are more interesting than these great and far journeyers, which are, with the exception of the wild swan, the biggest of them all. One of their mysteries is the wonder how they contrive to live—as they do—till November, in the upper regions of Bafflu's Bay, and even up to latitude 80 degrees, or thereabout; for the waters on the shores where they live must all be frozen hard and fast by that timeaud under such conditions how do they get the marine plants on which they largely exist?

However that may be, here they come, sweeping southward through the cold autumnal sky, either in a straight line, or (as is quite often the case) in two great lines, diverging to a point at the head, and flying generally very high. That one object at the pointed head of the columns is always an old gander. His loud honk, honk, heard faintly down the wind as a veritable voice from the sky, leads the farmer or the pedestrian to look up and to search the gray sky for a sight of the well known V shaped lines of these sky voyagers "who bring the cold weather following after them." The leader's frequent call is answered by the members of his large company, in a half gurgling, indescribable set of notes-as if the leader had asked, "How are you all getting on, there behind?"—and his followers were responding, "All's well-all's well." They fly over the continent in a direct line. They take the most direct route-be it over land or water; and they are likely to alight for rest or food on some water, be it on the shore or inland, at a time when they are not likely to be seen. But their one's hour upon the stage." too sociable calls and noises betray tauk Point, where they always pre- to set. ferred to stop for a good sociable time, they have been so mercilessly pursued by sportsmen that they are less seen there now than they once were. They delight, like the wild swan, in such feeding grounds as are afforded by the bays and sheltered waters-half fresh and half salt-of the extensive tract on the North Carolina coast known as Albermarle Sound; r region where they linger long and stay late, and would perhaps, but for the hunters, remain, many of them, all winter,-[Hartford Times.

A Western Wonder. The greatest wonder in the State of Iowa, or perhaps any other state, is Wright county, 12 miles from the Du- | could talk?" buque and Pacific railway and about 150 miles west of Dubuque city. The water is from two to three feet higher than the earth's surface. In most places the wall is 10 feet high, 15 feet wide at the bottom and five feet wide at the top. Another fact is the size of the stone used in its construction: the whole is of stone, varying in weight from three tons down to 100 pounds. There is an abundance of stone in Wright county; but, surrounding the lake, to the extent of five or ten miles. there are none, No one can form an idea as to the means employed to bring them to the spot, or who constructed the wall. Around the entire lake is a belt of woodland half a mile in width, composed of oak with this exception. the country is a rolling prairie. The trees, therefore, must have been placed there at the time of building the wall. In the spring of 1856 there was a great storm, and the ice on the lake broke the wall in several places, and the farmers in that vicinity were obliged to repair the damages to prevent inundation. The lake occupies a ground surface of 1000 acres, with depth of water as great as 25 feet. The water is clear and cold, soil sandy and loamy. It is singular that no one has been able to ascertain where the water comes from, and where it goes to, yet it always remains clear and Down On the Farm. When a boy I used to dwell In a home I loved so well, Far away among the clover and the bees, Where the morning glory vine Round the cabin porch did twine, And the robin redbreast sang among the trees.

There were brothers young and gay,

A father old and gray,
And a mother dear to keep us from all harm; There I passed life's golden hours, Running wild among the flowers, In my boyhood's happy home, down on the went-de

Many weary hours have passed Since I saw the old place last, But memory still steals o'er melike a charm; Every old familiar place,

Every kind and loving face, In my boyhood's happy home, down on the And today as I draw near

The old home I loved so dear, A stranger comes to meet me at the door. 'Round the place there's many a change, And the faces all seem strange-Not a loved one now to greet me as of yore.

My mother dear is laid 'Neath the elm tree's pleasant shade, And the golden summer's sunshine bright and warm;

In the old familiar place I can see a stranger's face, In my father's old arm-chair, down on the farm.

Many weary years have passed Since I saw the old place last. But memory still steals o'er me like a charm; Every old familiar place, Every kind and loving face, In my boyhood's happy hours, down the -[Buffalo News.

HUMOROUS.

All men are not homeless, but some are home less than others.

"I cannot account for it," exclaimed the defaulting bank cashier.

A wooden dog-kennel should be built with the bark on and be lighted by a bay window,

"Were you ever ambuscaded by a coal-man?" "No; but I always find them lying in weight."

Talking of the thieves of the present day, the greatest pirate of old was a mere Kidd to them.

In the days of the old-time omnibus we all knew what it was to "fret

The difference between an editor them-and in such places as the ponds and his wife is that his wife sets and coves about Long Island's Mon- things to rights while he writes things

> Tommy-Paw, what are "wings of the wind?" The wind does not have real wings, does it? Mr. Figg-No. That is merely a poetic expression for side-whiskers.

A girl in Norway must be able to bake bread before she can have a beau. The one who takes the cake as a cook is considered the flower of the

"Who said there that it was tired," asked the farmer sternly, looking around. "I hink," said the horse. meekly, "it was the wagon wheel spoke."

"Say, papa," said Willie, "will you tell me something?" "Certainly, my what they call "Walled Lake," in boy." "What would a hen say if she > Stranger (on European railway) -... Ever been in America? Fellow passenger (stiffly)-I visit the country sometimes on business, sir. I am the editor of a New York paper.

> Examiner-I am surprised that you all have made mistakes in answering the question, Where was Magna Charter signed? Think it over. Can no one tell me? Little Boy (at bottom of of class)-I can sir. Examiner-Well? Little Boy-At the bottom of

Jones-I take no more pleasure in life. The world is full of thieves and rascals. I don't really believe there is an honest man left in the world. Smith-Cheer up. When a man acknowledges his own frailties he has already taken a step in the direction

Philadelphia's Nylghai.

There has been a new arrival at the Philadelphia "Zoo." The stranger is a little fawn-colored antelope from India, whose species boasts the peculiar name of nylghai. The bashful li tle nylghai has the very distinguished honor of being the first of his family ever born in captivity. The nylghais are very valuable animals, natives of India having nearly exterminated them for their hides .- New Orleans Times-Democrat.

FRANK W. GIST, EDITOR

CALERA, FRIDAY, JANUARY 22.

ANNOUNCEMENTS. We are authorized to announce G. B. better place for the county seat. Deans as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic par-We are authorized to announce D. R. McMillan as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county

subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic and conservative party.

John A. Campbell.

GENIAL Jim Armstrong, of the for the state senat. The Journal candidates are warned that the who I know desires to see me out serve the people. Four candidates Written in the best companies. has need for him there.

THE Birmingham News says this of the people to make it so. Let places. everyone strive to fulfill the prophecy of the News.

THE Chronicle predicts that the alliance congressmen will vote with the republicans. Give the devil his dues, brother. Sockless Jerry made a democratic speech yesterday.

BIRMINGHAM is making a material effort to build a four hundred thousand dollar cotton factory. Her industrial development has heretofore been in the iron line, and in thus diversifying her interests she does well. Alabama should didate for the office of Probate have more of the music of the Judge the name of John S. Leeper, above will soon be changed, and I spindles to mingle with the smoke who is too well known the to citizens will be wont to come to the gang of her furnaces.

The national democratic convention has been called to meet in Chiwill be quite in order for the great service with the railroad company with the head of a tack, and with which it is entitled in the electoral contest for the nomination to be- as agent at Columbiana shows him sulphurous exclamations the next gin. That settled one of the great- to be a man of marked business est battles of the times will be qualifications, and the JOURNAL "Take me back to home and mothfought. It will be a struggle for is safe in saying that he will make er." Then I'll think of the gang. ciations and differences, who can Goods in our House victory between republicanism and a good officer. democracy. Third party movements will cut no figure.

a candidate for congress fuom this with a strong following.

for the past few weeks. This has safe in his hands. been owing to the fact that to run a printing business by oneself and In the call for the national conbe everything from editor to devil vention, published in another place, is an uncertain condition. In a Chairman Brice invites all who defew days we will be joined by Mr. sire to join in at "effort for pure, S. H. Gist, and then we shall meet economical and constitutional govour readers on time each week, ernment," irrespective of past poand turn out their job work as fast litical associations and differences, as it comes in.

issue as a candidate for the office ciated by all those who have the of Probate Judge Mr. G. B. Deans. advancement of democratic princi-Mr. Deans has spent the greater ple at heart. Of course, there part of his life in Shelby county, should be a stricttest applied to in and near Calera. He is known the motives of new converts, but it as an upright business gentleman is very fitting that the hand of and his record is clear of aught fellowship should be held out to the that would unfit him for public repentant ones. trust. Competent and energetic, he would fill this office with credit to himself and with honor to his nouncement of John A. Campbell, constituents.

this issue of the Journal is that for more than ten years, the two of Wm. R. A. Milner, who seeks a last of which have been spent in re-election to the office of Circuit the publication of the News at this Clerk. He has held this position place. We have found him in our for a term of six years, and has brief association to be a conservafilled it acceptably. The best court tive and conscientious gentleman, clerks are those whose practice has who would, we believe, serve the made them familiar with their du- county faithfully and well. He ties, and the people could do no has many friends among the people better than to re-elect Mr. Milner. with whom he lives. He is attor-His long residence in the county new of some practice, and would be makes him well known to all.

THE COURT HOUSE.

The Journal announces itself in favor of removing the court house less intended for the Critic. from its present location to Calera. him we leave it. [Editor.] Calera for several reasons, is the EDITOR JOURNAL.

It is more centrally situated, and nearer to all parts of the county.

The business facilities are better, and means of communication are point in the county;

submitted to the people, but failed you are mad, on account of the intentional neglect of the member from this county.

The effort will be repeated in the next legislature, and prospective as a token of triendship from one offers him its support. Alabama man who represents us will have to of my single cussedness into a are announced for the position, and give us an election.

time comes to present her claims much-to-be pitied dupe of man's are thoroughly competent, and year will be one of great prosperi- in a tangible and material way and persuasion will be ready to meet there need be no uneasiness in ty. That depends upon the efforts she will be supported by other they may know the fight is on.

her present bright prospects, and hope they will be gloriously real-has been called to meet on the 26th, at which time the state convention will be called. The campaign will no relenting. then open in earnest throughout the state, and it will be lively.

of the county to need any introduc- for consolation. Reflecting on the June, 1892, as the time, and has chos

Hon. Gaston A. Robbins, of Probate Judge D. R. McMillan, have offered to do me a great kind-vention. Selma, has formerly announced as Esq., of Columbiana. Mr. McMillan is a prominent member of the district. Mr. Robbins is a prominent democrat, an able attorney and a man of eminent capacity.

He was a Cleveland elector in 1884 and has been prominently mentioned as a candidate for Attorney General. He will enter the race

Shelby bar, is an energetic of the happy days gone by. I will of the happy days gone Shelby bar, is any energetic General. He will enter the race himself for the practice of his profession, in which he has met with I am recalled from this spirit of levity by the remembrance that one the reduction can be to unite in sending delegates from the states. This is a move toward THE JOURNAL announces in this conservatism which will be appre-

THE JOURNAL contains the an-Esq., as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge. Mr. Campbell Among the announcements in has been a resident of the county I familiar with the law.

GOSSIP OF THE CRITIC.

It is more accessible, having three some 35 years ago, when you were a some 35 years ago, when you were a some 35 years ago, when you were a boy then, a little wayward, per-bareforted and in patched pants upon the green hills of Bibb, I feel it my hap then the cares of life and the com-Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county convenient and pleasant to transact the five of Circuit Clerk of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic public would find it more convenient and pleasant to transact their business here than at any other subject to the action of the democratic public would find it more convenient and pleasant to transact their business here than at any other subject to the action of the democratic public would find it more convenient.

The people, the officers and the outside public would find it more convenient and pleasant to transact their business here than at any other subject to the action of the democratic public would find it more turning some fair heart. Twice before, if you remember, I was engaged on a simple to the fortunate bidder I hope you will see to it that the young lady of your latest choice is on band at the selected hour and does not disappoint you as have the others. The only consideration I was an action of the important of an angel's love the fortunate bidder I hope you will see to it that the young lady of your latest choice is on band at the selected hour and does not disappoint you as have the others. The only consideration I was an action of the important of an angel's love. and does not disappoint you as have the others. The only consideration I ask is that you will continue to visit the "Row" An effort was made in the last consistent to have the question your temper so as not to be angry when the property of the last consistent to have the question your temper so as not to be angry when the property of the last property of the l for misery. He will be promptly four gentlemen already announced Calera will be ready when the on hand, and this time the fair but the lights are all out in the "row;" effice is an important and respon-The JOURNAL serves this notice when the human shadows will fall on those who are interested, that about us like the spectres of death sible one, and it is meet that the across the fathomless upper deep; democratic convention should select WE congratulate Sylacauga on spirits mingle with the soughing is a source of congratulation that night winds and the voice of na- our conditions enable us to elect ture is changed to the harsh whisout. All the gang must be there have no other standard. When we to warn her of the terrors that elect a Probate Judge it is for six THE State Executive Committee await her, and if she resigns her- years, too long to suffer for a hasty self bravely to a fate that will be action when the motive which doom, she will be left to the uncertain mercies of one who knows prompted it would probably be for-

A. Scoot, Justice, Room 16 Murderers' kow.

Yes, I will return from my en-WE announce this week as a can- vironments, when I can slip off, to visit the special mattinees. doubt the scene I have pictured obstacle will be a wounded voice from among the pillows sobbing, an absence of table linen we banness, and I thank you.

The Journal has been delayed of the duties of the office would be of the friends of my younger days carried out the cotton planters will real-has just gone over the river. I ize about as much for their cotton crop hallowed his memory with a silent tear. As they sang his requiem in The following letter was doubt- melody that touched the heart ! To heard his voice again as it came to me from the starry nights of long

THE office of Probate Judge seems to be attracting a great deal of at-The above kind offer is accepted tention from those who desire to hitherto unknown but oft longed there will probably be others. The her fate. It will be at an hour making a wrong choice. We re- Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms. when the performance is over and peat by way of emphasis that the when the moaning of restless the best from among them all. It pers from the awful darkness with. men for their fitness, and we should

NATIONAL COMMITTEE CALL.

Washington, Jan. 22.—The nation-No al democratic committee today issued this call: "The national democratic committee, at a meeting held this day in the city of Washington, D. C., has appointed Tuesday, the 21st. day of tion at our hands. He has been a possibilities of that time the antic- en the city of Chicago as the place, for citizen of Shelby county for many ipation is interesting; the realiza-holding the national democratic contion will be more so, when slip- vention. Each state is entitled to a years, and is thoroughly identified ping home and entering with un-representation therein equal to double cago on the 21st of June. Now it with its interests. His countinued covered feet the off one collides the number of representation to ollege, and each territory and the District of Columbia shall have two delegates. All democratic and conservative citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political assoand long for the nights when with unite with us in an effort for pure economical and constitutional govern-THE JOURNAL this week announc- queted on pickled pigs feet and ment are cordially invited to join us es as a candidate for the office of hard boiled eggs. My friend, you in sending delegates to the conven-

CALVIN S. DRICE, Chairman. S. P. SHEHAN, Scoretary.

rowers' and Merchants to other crops, such as corn, wheat, etc., of which it is now necessary to ship looked on his face for the last time just as the dawn was breaking, and turned away with a sigh and change .- Mountain Eagle.

Banking House of

I see you are advertising for sealed proposals for ministerial services on a matter sounding something like unto that of a uniting of two souls into one. As your triend in the boyhood days of some 55 years are when you were a new existence. Description of a new existence.

CALERA: ALABAMA. py pleasure to tender you my services, since it seems that you have finally after so many attempts succeeded in capflowers had aroused him to real Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans,

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York tears that blind the eyes of him who writes are but those of all vour friends. Wait for us on the

Fire and Life Insurance

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

The New York Store,

Calera, Ala.,

SAYS-If you are Interested in gotten ere the tenure of office DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, BOOTS, SHOES, GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS.

CLOTHING & HATS,

Hose, Half-Hose, Silk Ties Searfs, Etc., Etc.,

Please Listen to Us just 20 Minutes. We are overstocked, and in order to Reduce Stock before we take invoice on February 1st, we will sell you any Diy

We have a Large Stock to dispose of and when you hear the Prices you will be onished how such goods can be sold so low. Listen:

Cotton Checks 4 1-2 to 5 cents; Nice Cashmere Dress Goods 193/cents per verd; Same at 22 1-2; a Finer Goods at 27 1-2; All Wood Ladies Cloth fifty inches wide only 37 1-2 cents, former price 65; Ladies Fast Black Hose 7 1-2 cents per pair; a better goods for 12 1-2 cents; a Fine Hose for 17 1-2 cents, city price 40 cents; Salt 5 cents per sack; Fine Shoes $1 25 to $250; Good Shoes 1 00 per

Come and see us. We have too much to mention all in this paper. Come at once. We guarantee all prices named, and a child will get as low prices as an older person. No favorites, but one price to all. Come and see us and you will find we mean business. We want to

Reduce the Stock,

before taking Invoice, and if Prices can do it

THEY MUST BE CUT INTO

C. WADE & CO.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION.

Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, -12 Pages. REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

papers.

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.

3. Bill Arp, Plunkett, and Uncle Re-

the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to the household.

3. It covers the news of the whole world, having its correspondents scattered over the g obe, and having a thorough news service from every important news center in the world.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone features and for its news service than ews center in the world.

8. It pays more money for its special
4. Its Agricultural Department alone features and for its news service than

Prescriptions Carefully Compounded at All Hours by an Experienced Druggist.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone features and for its news service than is worth many times its subscription any other four of the weekly newspapers of the south, and much more than any weekly newspaper in America.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

Think Open Think of it! Every times its subscription and other four of the weekly newspaper in America.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One tution at great expense.

Think Open Think of it! Every times its subscription and other four of the weekly newspaper in America.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One tution at great expense.

partments are a source of infinite pleas- one issue of the greatest weekly newspaure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these deapers.

"Aunt Susie," the editress of these deapers.

tution at great expense.

of a postage stamp. Think of it! Ev
of a postage stamp. Think of it! Ev ery time a hen lays an egg she pays for

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga,

Brick Store, Montgomery Avenue.

CIGARS AND TOBACCOS.

Having Just Opened a Drug Business in Calera, I Desire to Solicit the Patronage of All Who are in Need of Goods in My

Lowest Possible Margines.

Line, Which are Offered at the

R. SCOTT, Poprietor,

GENERAL INFORMATION.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

	Louis	VILLE 4	NASHVI	LLE.
	I, South	Bound,	. *		a. m.
	3, ''	44			p. m.
	9' "				a.m.
	2, North	Bound,		10:19	p. m.
 1	0, "	44			p. m.
	F	57 T. F	C 32. R.

No. 1, To Selma, 2, From Selma, 2:04 a. m

10:40 р. т. ALABAMA MINERAL. $5, Arrives at 4:35 p. m.

AT THE CHURCHES.

86, Departs at

PREFBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be suppled. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m.

METHODIST-Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sab-bath school at 9:30.

Baptist Church--Rev. J. G. Lowrey, pastor. Preaching every first and second desires to purchase. Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

Combernand Presenterian-J. C Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Funday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting related, is engaged this week in Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's getting located in his new home. Rand meets 3:30 p. m. each ist and 3rd He is a valuable addition to our line of cotton goods which has made Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother town and we give him a hearty it famous and which goods have Friday evening at 3.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge-R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk-W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff-W. R. Carter. Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest.

Tax Assessor-W. H. Kidd. County Trersurer - A. W. Strickland. Superintendent of Education-T. N.

County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. Dyeey, T. B. McCiusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

The next best thing possible to insurfamily to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the of Mr. E. B. Nelson.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

world containing all the latest sensa-tional and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes has been very unpleasant besides.

We learn that the ball at Aldrich last Friday night was one of the last Friday friends wherever it goes.

Franklin Square.

Attention Teachers.

each month to transact business with full report. teachers and School patrons. corres pondence will reach me at Wilsonville | stated that Mrs. T. J. Francis had medicines combined, for that bad feel- at the cemetery on Monday. ing arising from from Kidney and funeral services were held at the Liver trouble." John Leslie, farmer Presbyterian church, of which he and stockman, of same place, says:

> T. A. HUSTON, County Sup't.

Rappy Hoosiers.

"Find Electric Bitters to be the best by his host of friends. David P. obsequies.—Shelby Chronicle. Kidney and Liver medicine, made me Francis was born in Wales, and hardware merchant, same town says: Electric Bitters is just the thing for a He came to this country with his man who is all run down and don't father in 1881, and his youih was care whether he lives or dies; he happily spent in Calera. He folfound new strength, good appetite lowed in his father's footsteps in a troubled with Neuralgia and Rheuma- Together they had lived happily, tism, his stomache was disordered, his and his married life had made of Liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and be was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. His future was bright and con-Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured tained for him and his young wife

Specimen Cases.

Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had death cut the future off at an early a running sore on his leg of eight years' age. He died willingly and with a standing. Using three bottles of Elec- hope of a better life beyond. He trie Bitters and seven boxes of Buck- was a member of the lodge of len's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound Knights of Pythias at this place, and well. John Speaker, Catawla, O., and by them was tenderly laid to had five large Fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One rest. His father, mother, brothbottle Electric Bitters and one box ers, sisters and his young widow Bucklens Arnica salve cured him on are accorded the sympathy of all

TOWN TOPICS.

Slaughter were in Calera yesterday and to-day on official business. The New Drug Store sells fancy sta-

Mr. Jim Shelly, of Birmingham, a son of Ex-Congressman C. M.

Shelly, speat several days in Calera begun at once. 1:30 a. m. this week. The attraction is a 4:40 p. m. fair one.

The New Drug Store sells fine tobacco mill at Alleghany, Penn. and eigars.

nesday, did not put in an appear-vestment of fully $1,000,000. ance. The bad weather kept him More than that the remo from filling his appointment.

The New Drug Store sells all kinds of

A notice of mertgage sale appears in this issue, to which we call attention. The property is valuable, and may be considered a safe investment for any one who removal to Calera we have already est mill in the country, and we are getting located in his new home. cauga. This mill manufactures a town and we give him a hearty it famous, and which goods have welcome among us.

The New Drug Store fills prescription one of the company, he says: carefully at all hours.

soap and gives you a hand mirror.

general merchandise, were closed built at Sylacauga, will be enlargup by an attachment in favor of Mackay & Norton, of Birming- improvements in cotton manufacham, on yesterday. The failure turing machinery. It is a gigantwas for a small amount, and will ic enterprise, and we feel assured probably be arranged.

Mr. Reuben Kolb, of Montgomery, was in Calera Wednesday night. He is a son of Capt. R. F. Kolb, the promient opponent of Governor Jones. He is a young man of pleasing address, and made several friends during his short

Mr. H. S. Nelson and Miss Jenis nie McMillan, of Columbiana, were ance against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & to... the progressive Life Insurance Agents of Rev. W. I. Sinnott officiating, Read and profit by the following sound They were attended to the altar by counsel, every word of which smarts Neal McMillan and Miss Nora Leewith a truism like a sparkling jewel:

Der. T. J. Nelson and Miss Anna per, T. J. Nelson and Miss Anna DuBose. After the ceremony a resting prace with a ing to his distinction. sge should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and lesure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a seamon by the Rev. T. De-Witt Talaname in the Alabama river. Lime works throughout this county is better for his having lived in it. have been compelled to lie idle and Though he is now cold in death, his Is the only illustrated paper in the has been very unpleasant besides.

most pleasant ever held there. Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX.

Huntsville to Mobile. Court Street Methodist Church in this city was built during his pastorage in Montgomery, and he was one of the original content. RICHARD K. FOX.
Square. New York City. Cauley, Mary Kroell, Katie Kroell, -Hardin, Ada Dill, Leila McConaughy, Fannie Leech, Hattie Stien, | brother of Dr. S. C. Oliver, who long be-Bettie Hoskin; the young gentlemen were Messrs. P. J. Kroell, F. The School Board of Shelby county McCracken, A. J. Lee, S. S. Allen, will meet at Columbiana on the first Sims, W. Fuller, C. Fuller,—Saturday's in Nov., Jany., March. McKoffie, P. W. McConaughy, E. May and July. Teachers who wish to K. Huey, E. L. Willis, M. M. Kuffget license to teach will please apply ner, B. Hoskins. The Journal reat the above mentioned times, I will grets very much its inability to be be at Columbiana the first Saturday in represented by some one to give a

Some time since the JOURNAL was about twenty-five years of age. and felt just like he had a new lease business way, and was a first class foundryman. At this trade he was working in Bessemer when he died. About one year and a half ago he was married to Miss Myrtle Alvis, S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was a beautiful young lady of Briarfield. much of joy and happiness, but from Chattanooga to the Ponce de Leon.

their friends.

A MILLION DOLLARS

Deputy Sheriffs Grant and TO BE INVESTED IN A COTTON MILL AT SYLACAUGA.

> The largest cotton mill in the continent will be built at Sylacauga, says the Age-Herald.

The mill is that one which has

This great enterprise as set up Mr. Carmichael, who was to have at Sylacauga will be improved and 10:25 a.m. addressed the people here on Wed- enlarged, and will represent an in-

More than that the removal of the mill to the south is a direct evidence of the investment of something like $2,500,000 of eastern capital at Sylacauga. This is the immediate result; and it foreshadows very much more. vast amount of additional capital is to be invested at what has been called the Marble City.

In an interview with Mr. Drape,

"We have purchased the Penn Dr. H. T. Caffey, whose intended cotton mill of Alleghany, the larggoing to remove it at once to Sylabeen in great demand all over the The New Drug Store sells a cake of south. We appreciate the necessity of bringing the cotton mills to J. F. Palmer & Co., dealers in the cotton fields. The Penn, as reed and will contain all the latest that it will be vastly more profitable here in Alabama than in Pennsylvania.

> These friends of ours who are with us are all men of property, and are not boomers. We are not going to have any formal sale at Sylacauga, but we will give our party all a chance to invest.

GOOD MAN GONE,

Rev. C. D. Oliver, D. D., Laid to Rest at Calera-Who He Was

On Friday last, at Calera, the late Rev. C. D. Oliver, D. D., an eminent divine of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was laid in his last resting prace with a ceremony becom-

The deceased was well known all tax thems; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they were swolen, and much trouble was will become your protection in your old were swolen, and much trouble was feeble in body, he waxed stronger in consequence. over the State, having served for years > general business has been dull. It glorious deeds will ever live to remind those who, knew him of his goodness > > important pulpit in his church from Huntsville to Mobile. Court Street gomery, and he was one of the original trustees of the Vanderbuilt University, at Nashville, Tenn. He was a fore the war represented Montgomery county for nineteen consecutive years in the legislature. A good man is at rest .- Montgomery Advertiser.

There was a small sized wreck occurred in the L. & N. yard Thursday night.

Samuel Merrill died on the 6th inst, in the 82d sear of his age, The deceased had resided on Spring creek continuous-Some time since the JOURNAL stated that Mrs. T. J. Francis had been called to Bessemer by a telegram announcing the illness of her son, Mr. D. P. Francis. This week we regret to chronicle his death. He died at Bessemer on effects of which he died. He was the death. He died at Bessemer on effects of which he died. He was the saturday night last, after several third of eleven children born to Amos and Francis Merrill, who gave from Wm. Timmons, postmaster of Idaville Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other Sunday afternoon and were interred born to Amos and Francis Merrill, who came from South Carolina in 1821 and settled on Spring creek. They were the progenitors of the large Merrill settlement here, which at one time consisted of seven-teen freeholders and households within a radius of three miles. His remains were interred at Bethlehem on the 7th.

FLORIDA VESTIBULE TRAIN.

The first regular vestibule train ever run through Tennessee will be put on next Sunday. The train will consist of mail car, Southern Express car, baggage car, two day coaches and one or more Pullman sleepers. The train will be vestibuled from end to end and will be described exactly in the Times. It will be run regularly every day between Chattanooga and St. Augustine, Fla., by the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia

The train will leave Cincinnati next Sunday at 11:30 a.m., and leave Chattannoga at 10:40 p.m., arriving at Atlanta 4:45 a.m., Macon 6:45 a.m., Jesup 12 noon, Jacksonville 3:55 pm, and St. Augustine 5:30 pm, only sixteen hours

The time made by this palatial train will be over four hours quicker than at present between Chattanooga and St. Augustine. Returning it will leave St. Augustine 8:10 a m, Jacksonville 9:50 am, Macon 7:50 p m, Allanta 10:50 pm, arrive Chattanooga 4 a m, leave 4:10 a m, arrive Cincinnati 5:50 p m. This is the vestibuled train the East Tennessee promised, and if you want to see something gorgeous go to the Central Depot next Sunday night at 10 o'clock.—Chattanooga Times Nov. 22. present between Chattanooga and St.

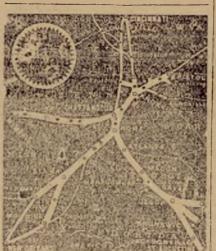

TAX ASSESSOR'S NOTICE.

I will be present at the following south and one of the largest on the times and places for the purpose of assessing the state and county Taxes for the year 1892, I will make only The site will be selected and work two rounds and tax payers are requested to meet me at these appointbecome famous as the Penn cotton ments, and have with them a description of their tax assessable property.

FIRST ROUND.

Gurnee,	Feby.,	0.0	1
Aldrich,	61	23	1
Montevallo,	44	24	ļ
Calera	££	25	ı
Spring Creek	٤.	26	ı
Shelby Ironw	orks "	27	1
Vandiver	44	29	l
Bold Springs	Mch	1st	ı
High Land	44	2	2
Helena	46	3
Pelham	46	4
Tylers	"	4
Elliottsville	££	5
Yellowleaf	2.5	7
Spearman	£-	8
Columbiana	6.5	9 and 10
Wilsonville	- 94	11
Harpersville		12
Vincent	"	14
SECO:	ND ROUND.
Gurnee	Meli	21
Aldrich	44	22
Montevallo	"	23
Calera	44	24
Spring Creek	44	25
Shelby Iron w	orks"	26
Vandiver	"	28	l
Bold Springs	"	29	ı
High Land	65	30
Helena	16	31
Pelham	April	lst
Tylers	ic	lst
Eliiottsville	44	2
Yellowleaf		4
Spearman	c	[5]
Columbiana	4.6	6 and 7
Wilsonville	46	8
Harpersville	44	9
Vincent	44	11
	W. II. K
	F17 A		ŧ

Tax Assessor Shelby county Ala.

THE

East Tennessee, Virginia & Ga., Ry. System

Is The ONLY

SHORT AND DIRECT LINE To the North, East

West

and the RESORTS

of the Carolinas. Virginia & Tennessee.

Pullman's Finest Sleeping cars be tween Washington and New Orleans; Mobile and Philadelphia, via Calera

WITHOUT CHANGE For any information write to or call on L. A. BELL, A. G. P. A., > Selma, Ala., B. W. WRENN, G. P. & T. A Knoxville, Tenn.

Many a person is starving with a full table before them. Appetite gone! Ambition gone! Life a burden!! What is the matter? The Liver has ceased to do its proper work. The life channels are clogged. Poisonous fluids are thrown back into the blood, which should be thrown out. SMITH'S BILE BEANS will surely stimulate the liver to do its work well, and headache, sallowness and bad breath will fice away. Price, 25 cents per bettle. All druggists.

TAX ASSESSOR'S NOTICE. THE STATE OF ALABAMA THE CALEBY COUNTY. SHELBY COUNTY.

A Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the acest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of he state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at every point in the county.

Quickly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

and Legal Printing a Commercial

The Journal will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work and rapid eating, too much rich food, hurrying to and from meals, overuse of stimulants or narcotics, etc. The inevitable result must be indigestion, and with all the horrible suffering so many people know-too well. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention to diet and a good medi-

No Stomach

Dyspepsia

Hood's Sarsaparilla which regulates the stomach, liver and bowels, stimulates secretion of the gastric juice, removes acidity and tones the entire system to health.

Hood's Pills cure liver ills. Price 25c

CHILD BIRTH ... · · · MADE EASY!

"MOTHERS' FRIEND" is a scientifically prepared Liniment, every ingredient of recognized value and in constant use by the medical profession. These ingredients are combined in a manner hitherto unknown

MOTHERS' FRIEND"

WILL DO all that is claimed for it AND MORE. It Shortens Labor. Lessens Pain, Diminishes Danger to Life of Mother and Child. Book to "Mothers" mailed FREE, containing valuable information and voluntary testimonials.

Sent by express on receipt of price $1.50 per bottle BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO., Atlanta, Ga. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Syrup" "I have been a great

Asthma.

sufferer from Asthma and severe Colds every Winter, and last Fall my friends as well as myself thought because of my feeble condition, and great distress from constant coughing, and inability to raise any of the accumulated matter from my lungs, that my time was close at hand. When nearly worn out for want of sleep and rest, a friend recommended me to try thy valuable medicine, Boschee's German Refreshing Sleep.

Syrup. I am confident it saved my Gentle, life Almost the first dose gave me great relief and a gentle refreshing sleep, such as I had not had for weeks. My cough began immediately to loosen and pass away, and I found myself rapidly gaining in health and weight. I am pleased to inform thee-unsolicited-that I am in excellent health and do certainly attribute it to thy Boschee's German Syrup. C. B. STICKNEY, Picton. Ontario."

DONALD KENNEDY. Of Roxbury, Mass., Says:

Strange cases cured by my Medical Discovery tome to me every day. Here is one of Paralysis—Blindness—and the Grip. Now how does my Medial Discovery cure all these? I don't know, unless it takes hold of the Hidden Polson that makes VIRGINIA CITY, NEVADA, Sept. 9th, 1891. Tennedy—Dear Str. I will state my case out nine years ago I was paralyzed in to, and the best doctors gave me no relicity, and I was advised to try your Dis-then did its duty, and in a few months!

DNLY 26 CENTSI 191 Pages, 91 Full-Page Maps.

Colored Maps of each State and Territory in the United States. Also Maps of every Country in the World. The letter press gives the square miles of sach State; time of settlement; population: chief cities; average temperature; salary of officials and the principal postmasters in the State; number of farms, with their productions and the value thereof different manufactures and the number of employes stc., etc. Also the area of each Foreign Country form of government; population; principal products and their money value; amount of trade; religion; atze of army; inlies of railroad and telegraph; number of horses, cattle, sheep and a vast amount of in-formation valuable to all. Postpaid for 25c. BOOK PUB. HOUSE, 134 conard St., N. Y. City.L.

000000000000 THE SMALLEST PILL IN THE WORLD! TUTT'S TINY LIVER PILLS eve all the virtues of the larger ones; ually effective; purely vegetable. xact size shown in this border. 00000000000000 TENTS Washington D. C.

PRIZE for best plants raised by anyone or Prize Chrysanthemum seed Packar d Pitcher Manda, Short Hitls, N. d guidon in a Presidential election.—St. dalabled. 22 fee for increase. 25 years ex-arience. Write for Lawa. A. W. McCounties.

Washington, D. C. & CRECINNAIL.

THE FAVORED FEW

A correspondent of the St. Louis Republic calls attention to the statement of a magazine writer to the effect that this country is to-day practically owned by 250,000 people, or one in sixty of the adult population, with the prospect of having this number reduced in thirty years to 50,000, or one in 500 of the adult population.

The operation of the McKinley tariff will directly contribute to the result here pointed out. According to the figures collected by the writer referred to, only about five per cent. of our working population derive any benefit from a protective tariff. Quoting Edward Atkinson, who based his estimates upon the census of 1880, the last census being uncompleted when he wrote, he says:

"For the entire country forty-four out of each hundred are engaged in agriculture, but in the Southern States, including Missouri, the number so engaged is seventy out of each hundred.

"Mr. Atkinson finds that out of this entire wage-working population 1,200,-000, at most, are or can be in any way subject to foreign competition, while on the other hand 1,400,000 in agriculture and 200,000 factory operatives, mechanics and machinists depend wholly on foreign sales and the export of the products of their labor for their sustenance.

"We have, therefore, the following distribution of our working population:

Number who are wholly dependent on the export of the product of 1,600,000

ence by tariff except as consumers...... 14,600,000

"Who, then, we may now ask, own the taxing power in this country? The capitalists who employ the 1,200,000 laborers specified in the above table. As to their number we can only guess, but if we average ten employes to each employer we have 120,000 out of the population of 1880-says 130,000 of our present population as the entire number of the direct beneficiaries of the tariff laws. Here, then, is our privileged class enjoying two privileges elsewhere accorded to royalty alone; first, an exemption from their just share of the burdens of government, and the sovereign prerogative of taxing all the rest of the people for their own benefit."

According to these figures, out of our 17,400,000 workers only 1,200,000 are supposed to be protected against European cheap labor. In point of fact, however, the persons really protected are their employers, some 130,000 persons out of our population of 64,000,-

These protected bosses are leagued with other bosses-the money kings of Wall street-and together they own the country, dictate legislation and direct finances and taxation in channels that impoverish the many and build up the fortunes of the few.

If this oppression runs through another generation the country will be no better off than Russia. Our only hope is to make the fight at the b. llot box against McKinleyism and plutocracy beforc it is too late. The Democratic masses must carry the elections of this year or prepare to to be governed by the privileged classes for an indefinite

Plain talk is best at all times. The truth of the situation is that the Democratic fight for reform is simply a struggle for self-preservation on the part of the many against the galling oppression

The Bloody Shirt Again.

From this time on, look out for the Bloody Shirt. It is a mistake to suppose that it has fallen into innocuous desuetude. In 1890, a great many Union veterans in the West refused to be handled by the politicians. Besides the thousands of them who have always been Democrats, there were other thousands who, though they had generally voted the Republican ticket, declared their independence and either voted with the Democrats or did not vote at all. The Republican managers feel the need of getting these back into line, and they are working on them very hard. This is the meaning of the sudden animosity of Grand Demander Palmer to Confederate flags and other relics. The old veterans have been swapping captured flags with each other "across the bloody chasm" for years in the best natured way possible, but now they are being stirred up to feel that it is unpatriotic to let a rebel and a traitor keep either in actual pos-session or in mind any relic of his rebellion and his treason. They are to be reminded of the "horrors of Andersonville," and all that, until they are convinced that if they do not get every and abjure rebellion and treason over again the coming generation will be ruined.

It is a miserable business, but the end of it is in sight." The "young men of the country" are getting to be grandfathers, and the further along they get want to cut each other's throats, the more they are convinced that the worst treason to Americanism is that which produces or perpetuates hate in one American against another. The days of Bloody Shirt demagogy are almost over. The new generation at the South are for the Union of peace, fraternity and justice, and the new generation at the North will not care one rap how often | cult to cut down the expenditures. But the old Confederate veteran sees his battle flag or how much he cries over it to the Republican brethren is not easy to when he does see it. The future of the new America is broadening and the mind of the new American is broadening with The bloody shirt is not buried yet, but it will be. It is being shaken out now for its last appearance as a sectional

The Case Against Judge Woods.

The appointment of Judge Woods to the Supreme Bench, following after the President's protest in his Message against alleged corruption of the ballot box, is such an exhibition of Republican hypocrisy that it justifies repeated comment.

It is no longer disputed by well informed men that the Republican leaders secured the vote of Indiana by following the written instructions of W. W. Dudley and purchasing votes in "blocks

So notorious was this method of corrupting the ballot box that November 13, 1888, when the Federal grand jury was assembled, Judge Woods felt called on to instruct it plainly and specifically concerning their duty. In his charge, Judge Woods said:

"The Federal statutes make aiding, counseling or procuring or advising any voter to commit bribery, to commit any of the acts declared in section 5511 to be a crime, a substantial offense, not dependent upon the committing or attempting to commit any of the named offenses.'

Following these instructions, the Grand Jury began its investigations. These led right home to persons in high authority, and the Judge was called on "to save the men who elected President Harrison."

An adjournment was secured until January. When the jury reassembled, Judge Woods was ready with a new opinion concerning section 5511. Again he delivered his charge to the Grand Jury, in which he said:

"But in any case besides the mere fact of the advice or counsel, it must be shown that the crime contemplated was committed, or any attempt made to commit. It results, of course, that the mere sending of one to another of a letter or document containing advice to bribe voters, or setting forth a scheme for such bribery, however bold or reprehensible, is not indictable."

ensible, is not indictable."

The second charge fitted Dudley's case exactly. The Judge from the bench in January ruled that an offense was not indictable, though in November he declared this offense was a substantial

This change of front was a shock to the moral conscience of the people. Nothing since the days of the exposure of the Whisky Ring so aroused the people, one good effect being a general demand for the adoption of the secret ballot. That was three years ago. Now the President proposes to vindicate both Dudley and Woods by elevating the Judge to the Circuit Bench. Will a Republican Senate confirm such a nomination?.—Courier-Journal.

The Difficulty of Economizing.

The Republican brethren are delighted to see that the Democrats recognize the fact that the task of reducing the public expenditures is not an easy one. They are careful, however, not to dwell upon the principal reason why it is difficult. They note the fact that the work of the appropriations committee has been divided and that some of the bills carrying very large totals are in the hands of other committees. They are rejoiced to know that the pressure for large appropriations for the Agricultural Department, the navy, coast defenses, rivers and harbors, the World's Fair, etc., will be strong, and that Economist Holman will have his hands full in keeping down the totals in his own committee, and will not have much strength to apply in resisting the demands of other committees. These and like difficulties they contemplate with more than satisfaction, hoping that dip into the Treasury after the manner of

But they are careful to avoid mention of the fact that retrenchment would be easy but for the fact that the Fifty-first Congress committed the Government to a great permanent increase in expenditures-to expenditures over which the present House alone can exercise no control. They seek to cover up the fact that the increase in expenditures on account of ship subsidies, on account of sugar bounties and on account of pensions cannot be cut off without the concurrence of the Senate and the President. or two-thirds of the Senate without the President, while the added obligation on account of bank note redemption cannot be thrown off by both houses and the President without dishonorable repudia-

It is estimated that $20,000,000 will be required this year for sugar bounties, ship subsidies and bank note redemption. This may be a somewhat excessive estimate, but not less than $15,000,000 will be required for these purposes, all due to the acts of the Billion Congress.

As for pensions, while Commissioner Raum in some way-probably by deferring payments-kept the expenditure below the appropriation in 1891, he estitraitorous and rebellious ex-Confederate mates that $148,000,000 will be necesin the country to get down on his knees | sary to meet the obligations of the Government this year under existing laws. The obligation existing before the Billion Congress did its work was about $82, 000,000 a year. That Congress, therefore, added about $66,000,000 to the annual obligation on this account. To this add the $15,000,000 at least on the without hating each other enough to other accounts mentioned and we have no less than $81,000,000 increase by the Billion Congress which the Fifty-second Congress must provide for unless the Republican Senate and President can be induced to concur in the repeal of some of the money-spending legislation of the Billion Congress.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the new House will find it exceedingly diffiwhy the situation should afford delight understand, since they and their Billion Congress are responsible for the legislation which necessitates the outlay and for the further legislation which has cut down the revenues until they are likely, with the utmost economy, to come short of the necessary expenditures. - Chicago

FOR THE YOUNG FOLKS.

PRIDE HAS A FALL.

Little Miss Chrysanthemum stood in s window,

As proud as proud can be; She had frills on her apron and frills on her skirt, And-everywhere-frills could be.

She flaunted and frisked, and scornfully giggled

At a poor little pale-faced rose. "You'd better wilt up and go back to sleep Before somebody nips your nose."

Along came a lady all feathers and fuss And said, "I'll take one of these." And the florist nipped off Miss Chrysanthemum's head

Before she had time to sneeze. -[Belle Hunt, in New York World

THE PARROT AND THE HEY.

Our next-door neighbor owns an amusing parrot which is always getting into mischief, but usually gets out again without much trouble to herself. When she has done anything for which she knows she ought to be punished she holds her head to one side, and, eyeing her mistress, says in a sing-song tono, "Polly is a good girl," until she sees her mistress smile; then she flaps her wings and cries out: "Hurrah! Polly is a good girl!" She has been allowed to go free in the garden, where she promenades back and forth sunning herself and warning off all intruders.

One morning a hen strayed out of the chicken yard and was quietly picking up her breakfast, when Poll marched up to her and called out, "Shoo!" in her shrill voice. The poor hon retreated to her own quarters, running as fast as she could, followed by Poll, who screamed

"Shoo!" at every step.
A few days later Poll extended her morning walk into the chicken yard. Here, with her usual curiosity, she went peering into every corner, till she came to the old hen on her nest. The hen made a dive for Poll's yellow head, but missed it. Poll, thinking discretion the better part of valor, turned to run; the hen, with wings widespread, followed close after.

As she ran Poll screamed in her shrillest tones, "O Lord! O Lord!"

A member of the family, who had witnessed the performance, thought it time to interfere in Poll's behalf, as the angry hen was gaining on her. He ran out and stooping down, held out his hand. Poll lost no time in traveling up to his shoulder. Then, from her high vantage ground, she turned and, looking down on her foe, screamed: "Hello, there!

The frightened hen returned to her nest as rapidly as she had come .- [Ashland (Penn.) Item.

TWO GYMNASTS.

Big newspaper space is daily taken up with accurate throwing and catching and hitting of balls, the aim of the human eye, the speed of the human foot, the accuracy and dexterity of the human hand, and the young people who play base-ball and tennis enjoy this reading

But a short time ago I saw two creatures only a year old outdo in aim and accuracy any human being I ever knew.

They were a pair of barn swallows. A very gentle little house-cat was in the habit of taking her daily nap in the hayloft, directly under the nest among the rafters. All went well until the mother bird began to sit on her Then, presumably, the cat lifted her eyes to contemplate the pretty sight, for about 4 o'clock of the first day the bird stayed on the nest the cat came rushing out of the barn, the two swallows after her. Giving her in turn a vicious peck, they rose in air, swooped down and pecked her squarely on the back, one after the other, though she was running in all directions.

Twenty-three times I watched them rise in air so high as to be out of sight, then come sailing down, one behind the other, and each time giving the poor cat a peck apiece on the back, although she was speeding hither and thither bewildered, seeking to hide under carts, under trees, here and there; they never missed her once, though they never slowed their swift flight to do it, never paused for the peck, but swiftly gave it to her as they skimmed down over her, rising on the same point of curve, to descend again

For about two weeks they were seen to fly out and repeat this punishment whenever the cat appeared on the green near the barn. - [St. Louis Republic.

THE law is perhaps less friendly to dogs than to any other species of proper-The Supreme Court of Mississippi has just decided that the city authorities of Jackson are not responsible for the loss of a dog killed by a police officer on the street. The dog was usually kept confined, but escaped, and the wife of the owner was running after it when it was shot. The court holds that it was "running at large," and that the officer had the right to shoot it. The court says that dogs are more peculiarly the subject of police regulations than any other class of property. It is held, the opinion continues, with great unanimity by the courts that regulations of the most stringent character, and the most summary proceedings for the destruction of these animals kept contrary to such regula-tions, are entirely within legislative power, and free from constitutional obection, though the property of the owner is destroyed without notice or hearing, in the execution of the law. The Mississippi court quotes with approval a Massachusetts decision that a dog not licensed and not provided with a collar might be shot by the officers even within the owner's inclosure, and the opinion of a New Hampshire court that a private person might lawfully kill a dog having on a collar bearing only the owner's initials, although the citizen knew who the owner was, when the law required that the name of the owner should be engraved on the collar.

Observation ste is due s are used by the Belgian $ar.n_0$.

Deafness Can't be Cured

Deafness Can't be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an infiamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure Send for circulars, free.

F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O.

Soid by Druggists, 70c.

Signor Crispi, late Premier of Italy, is Signor Crispi, late Premier of Italy, is writing his memoirs for posthumorous publication.

COPYRIGHT 1881

danger.

else has failed.

They mean it.

cine.

R

可用

The wrong way, with Catarrh, is to stop it without curing it. The poisonous, irritating snuffs, strong caustic solutions,

"creams," balms and the like may, perhaps, palliate for a time. But they may drive the disease to the lungs. The wrong way is full of

The right way is a proved one. It's with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Reme edy. It cures, perfectly and permanently, by its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties,

the worst cases of Chronic Catarrh.

It has proved itself right, thousands of times, when everything

And this makes its proprietors willing to prove that it's the right thing for you, no matter how bad your case or of how long standing.

they'll pay you $500 in cash.

If they can't cure your Catarrh.

They're certain of their media

ONLY TRUE

Will purify BLOOD, regulate KIDNEYS, remove LIVER

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis. No.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

nomical, costing less than one centa cup: It is delicious, nour-ishing, strengthening, EASILY DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalida as well as for persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

from which the excess of oil

Is absolutely pure and

No Chemicals

are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with

Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more eco-

LADIES needing a tonic, or children who want building up, should take Brown's Iron Bitters. It is pleasant to take, cures Malaria, Indigestion, Billouness and Liver Complaints, makes the Blood rich and pure.

Colonel J. S. Mosby, of war time guerilla fame, practices law in San Francisco, Cal.

The Only One Ever Printed.

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words all except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house p aces a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look torit, send them the name of the word and they will return you Blok, BEAUTIFUL LITHORAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE. CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

The late Lord Lytton is said to have been firm believer in ghosts.

MANY persons are broken down from over-work or household cares. Brown's Iron Bit-ters rebul ds the system, aids digestion, re-moves excess of bile, and cures malaria. A spendid tonic for women and children.

The Emperor of China has begun the study of English arithmetic.

FITTS stopped free by DR. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORM. No fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline, 981 Arch St., Phila., Pa.

SUDDEN CHANGES OF WEATHER cause Throat Diseases. There is no more effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, etc., than Brown's BRONCHIAL TROCHES. Sold only in boxes. Price 25 cents.

The Emperor of Japan lately entered on his fortieth year.

Ir you are constipated, billous or troubled with sick healache, Beecham's Pills afford immediate relief. Of druggists. 25 cents.

Both the method and results when Syrup of Figs is taken; it is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and cures habitual constipation. Syrup of Figs is the only remedy of its kind ever produced, pleasing to the taste and acceptable to the stomach, prompt in its action and truly beneficial in its effects, prepared only from the most healthy and agreeable substances, its many excellent qualities commend it to all and have made it the most popular remedy known.

Syrup of Figs is for sale in 50c and $1 bottles by all leading druggists. Any reliable druggist who may not have it on hand will procure it promptly for any one who wishes to try it. Do not accept any substitute.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. LOUISVILLE, KY. NEW YORK, N.Y.

HIGHFIVE OR EUCHRE PARTIES

Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days, No pay till cured. DR.J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio.

$65 A MONTH for 3 Bright Young Men or Ladies in each county. Address P. W. ZIEGLER CO., Phila., Pa. ASTUTED A DR. TAFT'S ASTHMALENE address, we will mail trial the Monthey fails, send us your address, we will mail trial the Monthey Fig. 1.

KING COTTON Buy or sell your Cotton on JONES 5-Ton Cotton Scale. For terms address
JONES OF BINGHAMTON. BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

Am. N. U. . No 3. 1892.

ALL AFFECTIONS OF THE THROAT AND LUNGS, TAYLOR'S CHEROKEE REMEDY OF

WEET GUM AND MULLEIN

Is the BEST KNOWN REMEDY. Ask your druggist or merchant for it, and take no substitute,

as nothing else can take its place.

We send pianos on approval, returnable if unsatisfactory, railway freight both ways at our expense. Distance, even thousands of miles, makes no difference.—With our patent soft-stop the piano wears less and lasts longer; also is provided and practically poissons. rendered practically noiseless, when de-

We take old pianos as part pay balance to suit reasonable convenience. Catalogue, etc., free. Write.

Ivers & Pond Piano Co., Boston.

VOL. I.

CALERA, ALA., FRIDAY, JANUARY 29, 1892.

Nothing is Lost. Nothing is lost; the woods and fields grow green again in spring, The earth and flowers are full of life-new life in everything.

it daily life,

of care and strife Nothing is lost, for life itself is only a passing thought! We lose our yesterday, 'tis true, but hold the good it brought. Nothing is lost, the sweet, sweet songs come to us o'er and o'er, The same foud faces oft return, and will forever more.

-[J. W. Donovan, in Frank Leslie's

The Cruise of the "Ice King"

BY GEORGE ETHELBERT WALSH. thick all winter that nearly all of the well have tried to escape an express skins and furs had been sent down to the stations by pack-sleds drawn over upon him with the speed of the wind. nearly exhausted. the ice by skaters. There were only several such fur-trading stations along the whole length of the river St. John, for you at Aroostook." and these journeys were often long and toilsome.

trapper living on the shores of the Eagle Lakes, had made an innovation in the business which had at least the marks of novelty and uniqueness. Out of the solid trees of the woods he had constructed a large, strong iceboat, which with a favorable wind could skim over the ice with the speed of a lightning express. With this boat Willis intended to do business.

He offered to make a weekly trip to the stations, carrying the skins and hides of the animals with him for a very small sum. At first the trappers did not enter into the new scheme with much enthusiasm, but before the winter was half over, Willis could weekly collect enough skins along his one for him.

Jim Carson was his only competitor. Jim was a rough, gruff old trapper who did not believe in modern conveniences, and when Willis proposed to carry his skins for him on his new ice-boat, the man replied:

"No, thank'ee; I kin carry my own skins. That old hulk of yours ain't goin' to prove much of a success. It an' it'll be wreeked some time."

"Then I'll pay for all the skins that's lost," Willis replied.

"Where would ye get the money? No, thank 'ee; ye ain't comin' round me with any new-fangled notions. 1 kin carry my own skins faster than ye kin with that boat."

could beat him one-half the way from the night-birds. Eagle Lakes down to Aroostook station, and have several hours to spare at that.

"Now, ye can't do any such thing, but ye can brag."

day, skating leisurely along the river, time to think of chasing it. drawing a sled pried high with furs behind him. The man was a fine skater, and though he had no grace about his strong form, he could make a snag. Going at this rate everything the skates spin.

A very light wind was blowing and that old Jim was going to prove his with him, and then he said:

k . "I suppose ye think that ye can beat me now? I ain't in none too good trim, but I can beat that rig."

"There isn't much wind today," Willis replied, L. doubtfully, "and this fright, but the Ice King kept steadily is as fast as I can go until the wind freshens up."

"Well, then, if this is your fast travellin', I'll leave ye, an' wait in Aroostook for ye."

The old trapper laughed a loud, grating laugh, and then moved swiftly ahead of the boat. Willis could only make the best of the situation, and trust to the wind for better speed on him, and once or twice he saw him wave his rifle over his head as a token of farewell.

"You wait until the wind blows," Willis muttered to himself, "and I'll show you if you can beat the Ice and had he abandoned his pack-sled to ter of a swarm, "b-r-r-r" the slaughter

But the wind did not seem to freshen up much and Jun Carson was soon lost in the distance. He was skating rapidprobably reach it by night.

At noon time Willis ate his light lunch and anxiously watched for any sign of a stiff breeze. About one We fall asleep and rest, and wake, and call ness and the lee King soon increased solitary form of a skater making her speed. As the minutes passed, And sleep at last—an end of pain—an end the breeze continued to increase and increase.

> "Now, Jim Carson, look out for your laurels," Willis muttered, exultantly. "I'll pass you now before night."

About three in the afternoon he still skating vigorously along. The man saw the ice-boat coming and he The ice had been so smooth and quickened his speed. But he might as "Good-by, Jim," Willis shouted, as he came up to the skater; "I'll wait I'll come for you," Willis shouted, "I

The old trapper exerted every muscle in his body to keep abreast of the Willis Boynton, the son of an old Ice King, but in half a minute he was several lengths in the rear.

The Ice King reached the trading station long before sundown, and discharged her cargo before Jim came up with his pack-sled. Willis was strange apparition, and the boat had with the year 1880 there is a decrease arranging to take back a load of pro- ample time to pass ahead of them. of 40.94 per cent. of the number of visions and other useful articles, and When just abreast of them, Willis the following morning was spent in took his Winchester and shot several loading the Ice King.

Jim, on the contrary, started to return in the forenoon, determined to beat his young rival back to Eagle Lakes. He was tired with his exer- they were tearing the flesh off the vic- and to the discovery of mineral oils tions of the previous day, but his tims, the Ice King was heading for sled was light and his heart was Jim Carson again.

route to make each trip a profitable dead against him in returning, and a checked. She came almost to a stand-In the afternoon it shifted around to side. another quarter, and the sails of the Ice King were hoisted.

It was a fine afternoon, but there were indications of a cold, windy night. The wind howled and moaned among the trees on either side of the river, and in two hours it was necessary to keep on the leeward side of ain't no good. Ye can't depend on it, the wooded shore to avoid the gusts of wind.

Jim Carson had made good time, and he had several hours the start. The afternoon waned and darkness settled over the land early. The cold was intense, and Willis had to beat his hands to keep them warm. In the rope to run, and the sail to fill from distant woods he could hear the howl-Willis smiled and told him that he ing of the wolves and the shrieks of > "How I wish some wolves would come for me and give me a race!" he said, laughing heartily at the thought.

He did pass one or two of the ani- jelly. mals on the ice, but the boat swept by Willis met the old trapper one so suddenly that they did not have

> As the darkness incremed, it became more difficult to see objects on the ice. "My only danger is running against would go to smash if I hit anything."

He sped on rapidly for half an hour the ice-boat moved slowly. Willis after this, and then the sound of rig has saved my life, and I can thank longed for a fair breeze, for he saw wolves ahead of him attracted his at- 'ee for it."-[Harper's Weekly. tention. They seemed to be on the ice claim by racing with him. The trap- directly in his path. He peered as far per waited until the ice-boat was even ahead in the darkness as he could, and in so doing he did not see objects close > splinters of some heavy object flew and will seek food at a distance of into the air. The boy jumped back in on her course. He gave a quick glance ward or backward, with upward. behind him, and in the dim light he downward or suddenly arrested to him?" he gasped.

boat up in the wind and go around to or spiracle. The buzz is produced by investigate, when another sound at- the first two, and the hum, which may tracted his attention. He listened at- be "surly, cheerful, or colloquial sigtentively. He heard the umistakable nificant," by the vocal membrane. A He watched the trapper gain rapidly sounds of skates dashing wildly over number of the bee's notes have been the ice; but above the ring of the interpreted. "Humm" is the cry of skates the patter of many feet and the | contentment, "wuh-nuh-nuh" glorihowls of wolves could be distinctly fies the egg layings of the queen, run cold, and he trembled with ex- young queen is answered by the "quacitement. The wind was now blowing a qua-qua" of the queens still imly toward the station and he would small hurricane, and the Ice King was prisoned in their cells .- [Scientific almost flying.

> Was Jim Carson pursued by wolves, escape the fiendish animals?

In a few minutes he could catch sight of the hungry pack of wolves, rushing headlong up the river. Far o'clock it came up with great sudden- ahead of them he thought he saw the Facts About an Important but desperate efforts to escape. The boat was going so fast that in one hour the ice boat was fairly there was not much chance of Jim humming over the ice. The speed getting on it unless she was brought was something tremendous and at around, and that meant the wolves every turn in the river it seemed to would get up to them before they could get under headway.

> "I must work it some way," the boy said under his breath.

He steered the Ice King close up to the bank of the stream, and passed on one side of the wolves. Then caught sight of the trapper, who was bringing her out into mid-stream, he soon overtook the solitary skater.

"Jim, I'll rescuo you," he shouted, The man looked around at the approaching boat, and Willis could see train, for the ice-boat swept down by his unsteady motions that he was

> "Skate up to the other shore and can't stop here."

The trapper mechanically obeyed the order. The Ice King was then brought up close to the wind, and her course changed so that she would cross directly in the path of the howling wolves. The animals slackened their times right into the pack.

His shot was effective, for the whole pack stopped, and growled over their dead and wounded comrades. While

The boat ran in front of him, and Willis had another object in waiting then she was brought up into the wind until the afternoon: the wind was so suddenly that her headway was change was expected before night. still before the sail filled on the other San Francisco 27; Provincetown, young ice-boatman shouted.

When within a few rods of the the other course, allowed the sheet behind. She whistled along with tremendous speed; but one of the foremost wolves gave a mighty spring. and landed directly in her path, There was a crunching of bones and the wolf was crushed into a mass of head of sail, and in five minutes the pack of wolves were nearly out of sight. Five minutes more and they gave up the chase. Carson said nothing but simply watched the Ice King sail. When they had covered ten miles be ejaculated:

"Wonderful! Wonderful! Ye always carry my skins after this. This Power of the Bee. In a recent work on the bee, Mr.T W. Cowan states that the insect can draw twenty times its own weight, Suddenly there was a crash, and the can fly more than four miles an hour, four miles. By a beautiful mechan. ical adaptation its wings bear it forcaught a glimpse of Jim Carson's sled. | course. Its threefold voice organs are "Gracious! has anything happened the vibrating wings, the vibrating rings of the abdomen and a true vocal He was about ready to bring the apparatus in the breathing apparatus "shu-u-u" is the note of the young bees at play, "s-s-s-s" means the musor expulsion of the drones, and the This thought fairly made his blood "tu-tu-tu" of the newly hatched American.

WHALE FISHERIES.

Languishing Industry.

Down East Harpooners Now Rendezvous at San Francisco.

A bulletin recently issued from the Census Department is devoted to the business done out of United States ports in the whale, fur, seal and sea otter industries for the year 1889.

The first table is devoted to the whale fleet of the United States, giving the names of vessels, their rig, ports, net tonnage and whaling grounds. It shows a total of 101 vessels engaged in the service, over one-half of which are barks and about one-quarter schooners. Over forty of these on leaving port have for their destination Behring sea and the Arctic ocean, while the Atlantic ranks second as a whaling ground, with some thirty-six vessels. The remainder go to the Indian and South Pacific oceans and to the Japan sea. The num ber of vessels, 101, with a tonnage of 22,660.39 net tons, shows a constant and ceaseless decline in speed a little at the sight of this the whaling industry. Compared vessels, of 41.35 per cent. of the net tonnage and of 38.06 in their value which for 1889 was $1,913,275. This decrease has been growing more and more marked for the past thirty years and is due both to a scarcity of whales and of substitutes for whalebone.

One of the most interesting comparisons afforded by the bulletin is in the figures assigning to each ship its home or hailing port. These read as follows: New Bedford, Mass., 57; Mass., 9; Edgartown of the same state, "Now quick, Jim, get on her," the 3; New London and Stonington, Conn., 2 each, and Boston 1. The The trapper skated up to her, and old home of the whalers, New Beddropped down upon the welcome ford, yet leads the list, but her glory boards exhausted. The wolves had, is only a reflected one, as 24 of her meanwhile, started in pursuit again. 57 ships rendezvous at San Francisco, The chase was not over. To get head. outfitting and disposing of their proway on this tack, Willis had to let the ducts within the Golden Gate, which boat run right down the howling pack. may thus claim the distinction of The animals saw it coming, and yearly seeing more whaling vessels

The total amount of money reprewolves, Willis brought her around on sented by the business is $1,913,275. Of this the vessels represent over onehalf, $994,800, the apparatus $147,. 639, the remainder being credited to a cash and credit capital and to other investments. The total catch for the year was 780 whales, of which 527 were sperm. 109 right, 121 bowhead and the remainder humpback, finback and black-Away the Ice King sped under a full fish. The product of 128 was brought to San Francisco, a majority of which, 88, were bowhead. In connection with this a table in the bulletin shows that although the right and bowhead varieties form but 29.49 per cent. of the captures they yield 70 per cent. of the total value of products.

States coast.

> The total number of men employed during the year was 3017, and of these 1802 were native or naturalized Americans, 228 were from Great Britain, 699 from Portugal and the remainder from various climes and nations; 1039 find employment in San Francisco, and to New Bedford, including those who rendezvous at San Francisco, belong 1651.

During the year five vessels valued at $65,000, were lost, carrying down with them 22 members of their crews. Another industry to which the bulctin devotes attention is the fur seal and seal ofter fisheries. Twenty vess is are engaged in this, and with a single exception every one of the twenty sails from ports on the Pacific coast. Of the nineteen eleven hail from San Francisco, one from Santa Larbara and seven from Port Townsend, Wash.; while the single exception comes from Salem, Mass. Nineteen of the twenty vessels are schooners and one is a steamer. The total capital invested in the industry, according to the bulletin, is $152, 757, and of this $112,861 belongs in San Francisco. For the amount of capital invested the value of the products was decidedly large, viz : $114,318, by far the larger part of this, $81,594, coming to San Francisco's por . Of this $81,594, $45,518 came from seat among them were only six illiterate skins, The total number of men employed was 422, 192 of whom hailed Matilda, jest you mind them hens, from the city by the Golden Gate. During the year two vessels, the Annie and the Otter, were lost .-- [San Francisco Chronicle.

levent

Honors to the Flag in the Navy. I am not so familiar with the customs of the army in regard to the flag; but in the navy I know they are admirable, and decidedly worthy of emulation in civil life. You may perhaps know that the flag of a ship does not fly during the night. It is taken in at sunset; and I think the simple little ceremony that attends the hauling down of the ensign at sunset is one of the prettiest in existence. The first time I ever saw it I was sitting on the quarter-deck of the U.S. S. "Yantic," conversing with three of her officers. We had been dining together, a d were enjoying the cool evening breeze under the awning. I knew that it was almost time for "evening colors," and I was anxious to see whether the ceremony in the navy was different from that aboard a first-class yacht. I speedily learned that there was a difference.

A few minutes before sundown a bugle-call sounded from the flag-ship, and the call was immediate y repeated by the bugler in the other ships of the squadron.

"What is that?" I asked. "That's 'Stand by the colors,' " said one of the officers.

Two sailors came aft, cast off the ensign halyards, and stood by with their eyes on the flagship. In a few minutes we heard bugles sounding again; for you must know that on board ship many of the commands are conveyed by a few musical notes upon the bugle. A marine came aft and, saluting, said:

"Haul down, sir."

"All right," said the officer of deck. "Sound off."

At that order the bugler of the Yantic blew the lovely call, "Evening Colors.

The moment he sounded the first note, the officers rose from their chairs, took off their caps, and stood silent, in respectful attitudes, while the two seamen slowly hauled down the colors, bringing them in over the rail as the call came to an end. When stopped in consternation, but ready than any other harbor on the United gathered in by the seamen, and the last note died away, the officers put on their caps, resumed their seats. and went on with their conversation. Removing the cap in honor of the colors is the common form of salute in the navy. When an officer comes up from below he always lifts his cap in the direction of the quarter-deck; and all boys should remember, when visiting a man-of-war, that the proper thing to do when you go on board is to turn toward the stern of the ship where the ensgin always thes at the taffrail staff, and raise the hat. If the officer of the deck sees you he will return the salute; but whether any one sees you or not, always raise your hat when you go aboard. The salute is to the flag, not to any person, and surely every American boy ought to be proud to lift his hat to the flag of his country .- [St. Nicholas.

The Smallest Banker.

Robert Philson and child, Jacob C. Philson, Miss Eleanor Philson and B. F. Collins and wife, a party from Berlin. a little mountain town in Somerset county on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, ate dinner at the St. Charles the other day. They came to Pittsburg for a day's pleasure. Robert Philson is a banker and modestly proud of being the smallest person in that business in the world. He conducts a general banking business in Berlin without assistance. He is married to a lady of normal stature and is the father of a four-year-old child as big as himself. Mr. Philson mea. sures about 38 inches in height, but does not mind his absence of stature. - [Pittsburg Post.

No Illiteracy in Bavaria.

According to the late military statistics there are no illiterate persons in Bavaria. Among 2772 recruits enlisted in the army in the Palatinate there were only three individuals who could not read or write. But that district forms no exception to the rule. The general number of recruits from the entire population was 20,584 and skins and $37,755 came from sea otter | persons.-[San Francisco Chronicle.

Tending the Hens. And shoo 'em out away from here; They're scratching all the garden up; Why, Tildyis gone, wa'l, wa'i, that's queer. She hain't contrary, as a rule, And gen'lly oteys my will; But, though she heard me, off she put-

Why, there's Lorenzo Pettingill! He's met her, and she stopped to talk! Them hens will eat up everything. He's wanting her to take a walk-Wa'l, it's nice to walk in spring.

He took her hand-come, that won't do-She seems to stand uncommon still; I'd better let them know I'm round-Good evening, Mr. Pettingill!

He don't mind me-it ain't no use-Ah, wa'l, my time has come and gone! But, then, I'd reely no idee How Tildy was a gettin' on. Those gals grow up, and pretty soon

They lay us old ones on the shelf. Lorenzo is a smart young man-I guess I'll tend them hens myself.

-New York Advertiser.

HUMOROUS.

Literary Longings-Long hair, long fasts, and long accounts.

A collar, like a man, gets tight by having too much inside of it.

Time heals all things except wounded pride and old rubber boots. Some men imagine that their wrongs mature immediately after their wedding rites.

A ticket agent may be a dandy, but the train crier is the high-toned man about a depot.

In breadmaking, as in baseball, there is nothing like a good batter in the hour of knead. A wooden dog kennel should be built with the bark on and be lighted by a bay window. People who can't afford to follow the fashion usually try to follow the people who do follow it. A tombstone is about the only place where the average man doesn't really care to have his name in print. First Fair One-But, darling, I have many social engagements this season, you know. Second Fair One-Oh, indeed! As a chaperon, I presume. Mr. Dudelet-I have great talent, Miss Caustic, and could do wonderful things if I only had a mind to. Miss Caustic-Yes; you only lack the mind.

Scene: A family boarding house. the colors reached the deck and were Time: Sunday evening. "You are not eating any chicken, M. Lemachin!" "No, madame, thanks, I never work on Sundays."

> Hicks-I saw Jarndyce just now. What a man he is to talk of his aches and pains! Wicks- And so interesting, too. Nothing like it outside of Dunglison's Medical Dictionary.

> Do not look down upon the sprint runner. He may one day be a useful member of society. As a married man, for in age, how hands he Hard to temble: There Did it > ever strike you that it took Jobiots a long time to tumble to anything? Diggs-I guess yes; he wouldn't tumble if he stepped on a banana "Just see how fondly that man > kisses his wife good-by," said the optimist. "There is no sham demonstration there." "O, that is because she is going away," said the pessi-"What is the matter, dearest?"

"Somefin' awful's happened, mamma." "Well, what is it, sweetheart?" "My d-doll baby got away fwom me and bwoked a plate out in the "I hope," he said to her in the carriage, "your father will not be able to catch up with us." "Oh, there is no danger, darling. Father himself went so far as to make sure you had engaged the pastor before we eloped."

Juvenile Johnny, having had the meaning of the phrase "multum in parvo" (much in little), amply explained to him, and being called upon to give an illustration, replied with much enthusiasm, "Why, baby, just after dinner."

The Fattest Babies. The fat babies from Stone county were on exhibition at the Monett reunion. They are both girls. The oldest, aged five years, weighs 107 pounds and the youngest, aged two and one-half years, weighs 98 pounds. Stone county is closely competing with Douglas in the matter of producing fat girls.

FRANK W. GIST,

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

We are authorized to announce C. B. Deans as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic part the substance of the resolutions:

McMillan as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county

We are authorized to announce John S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county

R. A. Mi'ner as a candida'e for the cf-fice of Circuit Clerk of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

I bereby announce myself a candidate themselves. for the office of Probate Ju ige of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic and conservative party. JOHN A. CAMPBELL.

STRAWS show which way the wind blows. Read the political beats. complexion of the southern press ed by the Mississippi legislature. Gov. Jones in Madison. time comes to drink.

Ir Gabriel should go to Columal until the backs came in from the ble prescription.

Excuse us, brother Chronicle, ed. we don't want the house. We ex- The fourth will cause more conpect to leave that as a town hall, fusion, perhaps, in counties where When Calera gets the county seat other plans have been in practice, reminds me that we ought to stop she will build a house which the but it will, if followed, serve to often to inquire into our country's

SINCE the committee passed its resolutions two counties have called conventions, one to prorate; the same old basis. They don't seem to pay much attention to the party will come from them. action of the committee.

THE notice of Mr. Adams' with. drawal from the congressional race, published elsewhere, proves since put in type to be an error. The gentleman from Bibb is still in the race. He will be out when all the counties hold their conventions.

THE Chronicle does not seem to of Alabama. The history of reconstruction and its awful results will "Democratic and Conservative parevery Alabamian.

Look at the statement of Calera's the CURNAL. business for the month of December, brother Chronicle, and weep THE JOURNAL has no desire to till your eyes are green with envy. say aught against Columbiane, and Did all your hotels combined take Chronicle should not have forced in $1,200 in any three months last us to defend our town. year? Did Columbiana do $105,000 worth of business all last year?

our labors for an occasional game of penny ante or a call on the tiger.

Though we can assure the brother that we are not yet aware of the libb as the principal battlegroan of the principal battlegroan of the principal battlegroan of the cortest. location of the tiger or the chip joint; so that when he visits us he perts the farmers of the south have alwill have to talk politics.

Let the Journal should live until be the farmers "alt in all" Less ection Calera gets the county seat, it will will be planted this year than last and each succeeding year will see the crop

Correct. When the court house stands in Calera Gabriel's horn can be heard throughout the county. At present it would be impensible for him to put wind enough in it to throw the sound cut of the woods which surround the court house.

THE CALERA JOURNAL STATE COMMITTEE MEETING.

The state executive committee

The committee prescribed the qualifications of voters.

It declared that county commit beat meetings, primaries or con

We are authorized to announce Wm tees have no authority to order a spoken, and a name, pure as the prorate of the delegates elected at a primary, that power being lodged white rose of virtue is worse than in conventions or in the people him who steals at midnight, and

> It ordered that all county conventions must be composed of dele- against a possible error. Evil be democratic vote in the respective spoken of him who gladly hears all persons who have voted with aiding publicity to a falshood. the party in state elections and all excellent rule is to believe nothing democrats who have come of age you hear and but half you see. biana on the train the inhabitants since the last election are entitled would rest where purity dwells, and thereof would not know of his arriv- to vote. This is a fair and equita- even the wickedness that does exist

The second clause is a very good As everylady expected Senators one, and will prevent any injustice George and Walthall were re-elect- to candidates such as was done to

The sister state didn't take any The declaration that county com left used quotation beginning subtreasury in hers. Alabama mittees have no right to order a pro When in the course of human will take hers straight when the rate is a correct decision, though it events," will not effect those already order- the production of Robert Emmett.

adopted is the only correct one.

The action of the committee is doubtless a little unusual, but at the Herald got very religious the other and the other to elect delegates on time necessary, and if the instruct merning and wrote an editorial in tions are followed much good to the which he attempted to quote a

> Amour the only business that we have heard of recently having any songs. Doubtless the religious ed facility down your way is the blind iter was away on that occasion. tiger, with an occasional outburst and the author of the error is to be of the red, white and blue chip in- excused. dustry.—Chronicle.

argument by the use of what he conceives to be cutting slurs. In Does the Calera Journal, editor the above we find nothing to be ap expect the county business to be preciated, and the Chronicle wil transacted in an ark?-Chronicle. find that the people of Calera do No; but we would like to see it not take such thrusts kindiy. We transacted in a building which do not dony that whisky is sold on would do Shelby county more cred- the sly in our little town, nor that it than the one she has at present, the beys play at poker; they may and a place where somebody would do so, but they do not care to be reminded of it by a town that has a touch of the same disease. If, however, the brother will come like the word "Conservative," when down among us he will End that applied to the great political party the business of Calors is surprisingly larger than he thinks. But the teach the Chronicle that it was the amount of business done is not the question. We made the point that ty" that won our proud state from bublic business was better here. the facility for transacting the the hands of negro rule. For what Possibly the brother could not see it has done the name is dear to the point, in his wilful inability to comprehend the chaste language of

Have you got any two merchants is sorry to have to publish figures who sold $3,500 worth of goods? so far beyond her reach; but the

PRESS PARAGRAPHS.

$104,523.92 in one menth, exclusive of the "blind tiger" and "red, white and blue chip industry." We can afford to rest from our labors for an occasional game

GOSSIP OF THE CRITIC.

One is frequently reminded how CALERA, FREDAY. JANUARY 29. met on Tuesday and called the con- gently and guardedly the name of a vention for the 10th of June, woman should be handled. Too frequently are we forcibly brought Some resolutions were passed by face to face with this ques the committee which are creating tion of tale gossip. Tragedies. much comment. The following is wrecked lives, broken friendships, are too often the result of a foul slander or mayhap an unguarded remark. It all teaches man to guard his tongue, to handle the name of earth's tenderest plants as tees must give thirty days notice of he would handle a delicate spray of myrtle. Once I saw a single breath blown upon a flower, and its fresh beauty faded; again I It declared that county commit- beard a single word in carelessness wilfully, intentionally chills the there is no place in hell dark enough for his soul's eternal dwell None can be too guarded gates elected on the basis of the to him who evil thinketh" neav b that he may repeat. There is an thing gained in repeating even the The first of these prescribe that truth, and there is too much lest would not stand out as a printed seroll or the archways of society.

One of the brightest of our literary gents made a bad break the other day. He was reading the I smilingly rebuked him for forgetting the authorship of the words that made this the freest and great est of earth's great nations. This many people who come here will bring about a uniform action history, and especially of those care to look at.

throughout the counties. The basis points which mark her political

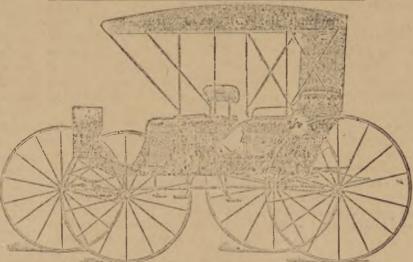

> My friend the editor of the Ageverse from an old Methodist hymn. The next time he should have the hymn book by his side, that he may of murder the measure of the old

CONVENTION OF 1892.

VOTES TO WHICH THE COUNTIES ARE

Russell

Our neighbor can only answer THE ALABAMA (PREMIUM NO. 14) FREE.

This handsome Carriage is only one of the many Vehicles which THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY is offering its customers for 1892.

Special Fremiums for Men, Women, Boys and Giris.

THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER produced the Champion Crops reported in the State last year.

Write for Circulars and Prices.

ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY, MONTOOMERY, ALABAMA

Store, Montgomery Avenue.

CHARLES WELL STREET, SALES OF STREET, SA

the increase of the cereal product last year indicates that conton is no longer to Prescriptions Carefully Compounded at All Hours by an Experienced Druggist.

be in full blast when Cabriel toots dominish notil it will become purely a Having Just Openal a Drug Business in Calera, I Desire to Societ the Patronage of All Who are in Need of Goods in My Line, Which are Offered at the Lowest Possible Margines.

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA. Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans,

Issue interest bearing certificates of Daposit, and sell exchange on New York Louisville and Birmingham at regular rates equived by the larger cities.

We transact a general backing business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchanis, manufa turers and planters alike.

Fire and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

The New York Store.

Calora, Ala.

SAYS-Il you are Interested in

DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, BOOTS, SHOES,

GENES' FURNISHING GOODS,

CLOTHING & HATS.

And if you ever Buy

Hose, Half-Hoss, Silk Tios Searfs, Rtc., Etc.,

Please Listen to Us just 20 Minutes. We are overstocked, and in order to Reduce Stock before we take invoice on February 1st, we will sell you any Dry Goods in our House astonished how such goods can be sold so low. Listen:

Cotton Checks 41-2 to 5 cents; Nice Cashmere Dress Goods 1924 cents per vard; Same at 22 1-2; a Finer Goods at 27 1-2; All Wool Ladies Cloth fifty Inches varid; Samu at 22 1-2; a riner though at 21 to only 37 1-2 cents, former price 65; Ladies I ast Black Hose 7 1-2 cents per pair; a better goods for 12 1-2 cents; a Fine Hose for 17 1-2 cents, city price 40 ents; Salt 6, cents per sack; Fine Shoes $1 25 to $2 50; Good Shors 1 00 per

Come and see us. We have too much to mention all in this paper. Come at once. We guarantee all prices named, and a child will get as low prices as aa older person. No favorites, but one price to all. Come and see us and you will

Reduce the Stock,

before taking Invoice, and if Prices can do it

THEY MUST BE CUT INTO

A. C. WADE & CO.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION. Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers -12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT. 1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these depapers, partments, is a household word.

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.

the farmer's family, bringing each weak cheer to the fireside and happiness to the household.

It covers the news of the whole world, having its correspondents scattered over the gobe, and having a thorough news service from every important interests of the south.

Bill Arp, Plunkett, and Uncle Remains and a host of other special writers are engaged by the year, and their inimitable sketches appear each week.

7. It is the People's Friend, and is interests of the south.

8. It mays more money for its special

ough news service from every important news center in the world.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone is worth many times its subscription price to every farmer. This department of the south, and outen more than any weekly newspaper in America.

5. Its Woman's and Children's Departments are a source of infinite pleasures are a source of infinite pleasures in the world.

8. It pays more money for its special features and for its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers and outen more than any weekly newspaper in America.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One Dollar ser year, each paper at the price of a postage stamp. Think of it! Every time a hen lays an egg she pays for the every family, and the name of

are to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Lil-eral terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE. LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE.

4:53 a. m. 4:41 p. m. 5:i0 a. m. 10:19 66 North Bound, 10:05 p. m.

E. T. V. & G. P. R.

No. 1, To Selma, 4:40 p. m. 2:04 a. m.

ALABAMA MINERAL-No. 85, Arrives at 80, Departs at AT THE CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th

Sundays in each menth, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m. Methodist-Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30. Baptist Church-Rev. J. G. Lowrey, vastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

Cumberland Preserverian-J. C Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Funday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge-R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk-W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff-W. R Carter. Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. II. Kidd.

Superintendent of Education-T. N. County Solicitor-J. L. Peters.

County Commissioners—John E. Dyecy, T. B. McCausky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

The next best thing possible to insur- tacks of the grippe. ance against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of will do this and more; therefore, do The Journal is requested to ten-your days and insure immediately in der the thanks of Mr. and Mrs. T. rome good, old reliable Company."-Isx tract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-Witt Talmage.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Bather, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes letter from him to his company restricted that the targetic leading up. friends wherever it goes.

States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX Franklin Square. New York City

need deciers.

has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeland stockman, of same place, says: "Find Electric Bitters to be the best Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength, good appetite bail. and felt just like he had a new leaso

A Wender Worker.

Mr Frank Huffman, a young man had been under the care of two prominent physicians, and used their treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case to be Consumption and incurable. New Discovery for Consumption, sippi. She will be back soon is a Coughs and Colds and at that timt consideration to the sad heart she was not able to walk across the stree left behind her. without resting. He found, before he had used half of a dollar bottle, that he was much better; he continued to Monday, in which Arthur Harris he at and is to-day enjoying good was shot by Frank Jackson. It health. If you have any Throat, Long or Chest Trouble try it We ris had gone into the house after guarantee satisfaction.

Mpceimen Cases.

troubled with Neuralgia and Rheama- shot gun, and the contents took eftism, his stomache was disordered, his feet in Harris' face, inflicting a Liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was painful but not serious wound. terribly reduced in flesh and strength. The parties came at once to town, Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured and the wounded man was cared Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had son was placed under arrest by a running sore on his leg of eight years' Deputy Sheriff Fields. Philip Har-er. standing. Using three bottles of Electris was also arrested as an accomtric Bitters and seven boxes of Buck-len's Arrica Salve, and his leg is sound was accidentally discharged, but and well. John Speaker, Catawra, O., the evidence is against him. He had five large Fever sores on his leg doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box county, and is wanted there. A Bucklens armica salve cured him in woman is at the bottom of the tirely.

TOWN TOPICS.

Mr. B. Warren, of Montgomery, made his regular weekly visit to Calera on Monday.

10:40 p. m | and eigars.

The New Drug Store sells all kinds of

We are glad to see Mr. Willie Wingo up again. He has been in his room for several days with a renewed attack of la grippe.

The New Drug Store fills prescription carefully at all nours.

Miss Sallie Dial, who has been teaching school at Dayton, Ala., has returned home, and is heartily welcomed by her friends.

The New Drug Store sells a cake of soap and gives you a hand mirror.

Mr. John S. Leeper, a prominent candidate for probate judge, was in his many friends.

Miss Bessie Hardy left last Friday morning for Montgomery, to her a pleasant and profitable stay.

The advertisement of the Alabama Fertizer Co., of Montgomery, County Trersurer - A. W. Strickland. appeacs in this issue. They make an excellent quality of fertilizer, as testimonials from many Alabama farmers show.

> Several cases of sickness are reported in town this week, none of which are serious. The weather ing to say in regard to the removal of has been very unfavorable for a the Penn Cotton Mill from Allegheny, week or two, resulting in slight at- | Pa., to Sylacauga in this state:

and we are now living at home with Read and profit by the following sound the old folks. We will stay there the convent will enlarge it to one of the coursel, every word of which smarts antil A. Scoot, Justice, comes finest cotton plants in the South. The

J. Francis to their friends and to says they intend to engage in the mann-the Knights of Pythias for the facture of cotton goods in rylacanga. It bereavement.

Mailed to any address in the United ports that the trade is looking up. the sunshine is heartily welcomed.

ville Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters of Jemison, and Bev. C. W. O'Hara, cast into absolute darkness and gloom. of Columbiana, will assist the pas- But there is hope of a tree, if it be out tor in conducting the services, the down that the tender root thereof will Several witnesses in the Trott Kidney and Liver medicine, made me murder case from Bibb county feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner passed through this week to Birhardware merchant, same town says: mingham to attend a habeas corpus trial. The trial resulted in remanding the prisoner to jail without Deputy Sheriff Grant had a perweek, growing out of a private and never heal. delicate matter. His action in the matter relieves him of any direct of Burlington, Ohio, states that he blame. We trust the unfortunate affair will cause him no trouble.

Miss Eila Thorpe, who has been visiting the family of Mr. J. S. Bridges for several months, left on presence. He was persuaded to try Dr. King's Monday for her home in Missis-

A shooting scrape occurred on the row begun to get his pistol, when Jackson went to a window, and raising his gun fired through S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was the glass. It was a double barrel for by Dr. Gunn and Caffey. Jack-

"BUSINESS FACILITIES."

WHAT A BLIND TIGER AND POKER

10:05 p. m.

Mr. T. J. Francis came home from Bessemer quite sick last week, but we are glad to state that he is improving.

Mr. T. J. Francis came home from ness transacted in Calera during the month December. It will be been that the names of only two merchants approving.

Mr. T. J. Francis came home from ness transacted in Calera during the month December. It will be been that the names of only two merchants approving.

Mr. T. J. Francis came home from ness transacted in Calera during the month December. It will be been that the names of only two merchants approving.

Mr. T. J. Francis came home from ness transacted in Calera during the month December. It will be been that the names of only two merchants approving.

Mr. T. J. Francis came home from ness transacted in Calera during the month December. It will be been that the names of only two merchants approving.

Mr. T. J. Francis came home from ness transacted in Calera during the month December. It will be been that the names of only two merchants approving.

Mr. T. J. Francis came home from ness transacted in Calera during the month December. It will be been that the names of only two merchants approving.

Mr. T. J. Francis came home from ness transacted in Calera during the month December. It will be been that the names of only two merchants approving.

Mr. T. J. Francis came home from ness transacted in Calera during the month December. It will be been that the name of only two merchants approving.

A. C. Wade & Co. G. J. Wright Calera Lime Co. W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co. L. & N. R. R. 32,000.00 E. T. V. & G. R. R. 26,000.00 Vanderbilt Hotel Pest Office Cancellations

When we reached a hundred thousand dollars, we got sorry for Columbiand and quit. Besides these figures Knoxville, who is for Blaine. we have several other merchants, but the above is enough to convince the town Monday shaking hands with Chronicle that we do a little business the business of the county included.

SYLACUGA COTTON MILL.

THE REPORT CONFIRMED BY A PENN-SYLVANIA PAPER.

The Pittsburg dispatch has the follow-

The steckholders of the Marble City Mr. S. H. Gist, with his family, as taken up his abode in Calera, and we are now living at home with the old folks. We will stay there the company will enlarge it to one of the family at home with the old folks. We will stay there the company will enlarge it to one of the family at home with the company will enlarge it to one of the family at the company will enlarge it to one of the family at the company will enlarge it to one of the family at the company will enlarge it to one of the same of the family at the company will enlarge it to one of the same of the sam with a truism like a spatkling jewel:

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the stoams of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot solve them; where the solve them; family should you live. A life insurance results of the color of the c Penn Cotton Mill from Allegheny takes another industry from that city, but it is an ineystable result of trade laws. W. A. Acheson, president of the company, kin lness shown them in their late is an w town, but it already has enough sterling in lastries to warrant its fature growth. A number of local prominent Mr. J. D. Hardy is absent this people are interested in this southern venture

IN MEMORY OF DAVID P. FRANCIS.

To the mighty world this was as The bad weather has had a depres- though a tiny stone was thrown into a sing effect upon the business, and fathomless ocean, a few ripples and all s over. But to the grief strickened par There will be an ordination ser- ents, sorrowing and beloved wife, bevice at the Baptist church on next reaved brothers and sisters, this is to Sunday night. Two deacons are to them as though the sun had set, as if be ordained. Rev. A. E. Burns, the wondrous Heaven itself had been ing arising from from Kidney and former preaching the ordination sprout again and we know he only went Liver trouble." John Leslie, farmer sermon. to sleep to rise to a better day and brighter life. For many long years how short they seem, he has been the light and life of the family circle, rendering care and trouble, as though the wound of an

To his wife and sorrowing parents, we tender that consolation which like some balm in Gilead, it is hoped will take sonal difficulty in Anniston last away this, great scar, which time can

It is sweet to know that he still lives, and we shall meet again in that vast Unknown on some sweet summer day.

Pessessed of a good and true heart, he was ch witable and kind. Always casting about him the light of a cheery

Who can doubt that without him the She will be back soon is a family is without light and cheer? That to them it is midnight darkness > though the sun be shining bright. But there is a God who will heal every sorrow wipe away eve y tear. To liss tender mercies we can leave the sorrowng family, while we rest in the belief that he will be cared for by flim who even notes a sparrow fall. Our Heavenly Father makes no mistakes: He is under God's tender care. It may be said of him to live in the hearts of such a large vircle of triends is not to die. Mas. S. STEIN.

> Greenville Advocate: Gen. Grant said demodratic blunders. If the democratic early brings forward other issues with hat of the tariff it will make a blunder that mae again the republicans in powsouthern editors, at least those who are members of the Southern Press Association, seem to be strongly for Cleveland. In a few minutes the JOURNAL man | They were interviewed here today upon The New Drug Store sells fancy sta- went out in town, and obtained from were asked for their first choice, their the following statement of the busi- second choice and their ideas as to the pear. These were taken for the rea- H. Richardson, Columbus Enquirer; The New Drug Store sells fine tobacco son that they were seen while on the Adolph Ochs, Chattanooga Times; J. C. the eigars.

CLEVELAND IN THE LEAD.

The New Drug Store sells fine tobacco son that they were seen while on the Adolph Ochs, Chattanooga Times; J. C. the eigars.

The statement is given for Heighbill, Charleston News; J. H. Estill Macon Telegraph; W. C. Tatum, Know-Hon. A. P. Longshore, of Columbiana, was in town yesterday and called at the Journal office for a few minutes.

The New Drug Store sells all kinds of the statement is given for the benefit of the Shelby Chronicle, and shows the actual amount of business done by these named for the month of December.

Jasper Holcomb $1,553.92

3,500.00 lauta Constitution; Messrs. Curry and

3,500.00 Schaefer, Streveport Times, and F. P. O'Brien, Birmingham Age-Herald.

10,000.00 For Gorman there are H. J. Browne, Roanoke Times; and C. L. McClung, Knoxyille Tribune.

Non committal are Nichols of the 26,000.00 New Orleans Picayune, Cowarder of the Richmond Dispatch, Stockton of the Jacksonville Times-Union, and Walsh of 70.00 the Augusta Chronicle.

The Hill and Gorman men want financial relief and tariff reform made the issues. The noncommittals are for tariff reform exa pt Cowarder whose platform is, "I am a democrat.

The only republican present is Rule of

TAX ASSESSOR'S NOTICE.

I will be present at the following besides selling blind tiger whiskey times and places for the purpose of and playing poker. We ask the assessing the state and county Taxes Chronicle to look on this picture and for the year 1892, I will make only enter the convent school. We wish weep. We challenge the Chronicle to two rounds and tax payers ar requestshow from the books, as we have, that ed to meet me at these appoint-Columbiana has done halt that much ments, and have with them a descripbusiness in the past thirty days, with tion of their tax assessable property. FIRST ROUND,

Febv.

Gurnee,	reny.,	22
Aldrich,	4.6	23
Montevallo,	"	24
Calera	14	25
Spring Creek	6.	26
Shelby Iron x	orks "	27
Vandiver	66	29
Bold Springs	Mch	1st
High Land	4.6	2
Helena	"	3
Pelham	66	4
Tylers	64	4
Elliottsville	46	5
Yellowleaf		7
Spearman		8
Columbiana	44	9 and 10
Wilsonville	1+6	11
Harpersville		12
Vincent	66	14
SECO	ND ROUND.
Gurnee	Meh	21
Aldrich	64	22
Montevallo	4.6	23
Calera	- 14	24
Spring Creek	" (25
Shelby Iron w	ro.lts "	26
Vandiver	"	28
Bold Springs	44	29
High Land	"	30
Helena	Ŗ	31
Pelham	April	lst
Tylers	44	1st
Elriottsville	44	2
Yellowleas	44	4
Spearman	"	5
Columbiana	4.4	6 and 7
Wilsonville	6.6	8
Harpersville	6.6	9
Vincent	4.6	11
	33" 37 57	TATA

W. II KIDD Tax Assessor Shelby county Ala-

DO TOU WATEL AN ENQUENIFICE SCREEN - masco REPRESENTING THE "An Flogant Nevelty in Calendars." "A Touching Story Told in Colors." "Algely Griginal, and a Work of Art." TO PROCURE THIS CALENDAR Br. G. Molane's Colod'ed Liver Pills 26 Courts from your Druggist, and secutified wrapper, with your address and four stars.

FLEBTING BROS., Pittsburgh, Pa.

RCHITECTS & BUILDER Edition of Scientific American.

TRADE MARKS. In case your mark is not registered in the Patent Office, apply to MUNN & Co., and procure immediate protection. Bend for Handbook.

(OPYRIGHTS for books, charts, maps, stc., quickly procured. Address MUNN & CO., Patent Solicitors.

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 23.—Special—The outhern editors, at least those who are nembers of the Southern Press Association, seem to be strongly for Cleveland.

A Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of he state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patternage of these who desire this class of information, and

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at every point in the county.

«JOB PRINTING»

Quickly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

and Legal Printing a Specialty Commercial

THE JOURNAL will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work that people smile and shake their heads. Now we do not claim Hood's Sarsaparlila to be a cure for this VIEWS OF EX-PRESIDENT CLEVELAND, As really dangerous complaint. If you have the Grip the best thing you can do is to call a reliable physi-cian. But we do claim that for two conditions in ist, as a Preventiva

THE CRIP ISSUES OF THE DAY.

Up the average the true and the content of the content of the true. This companies not when disfeeling, which Hood's Sarsuparilla taken in season will soon overcome, and serious illness be thus pre.

2d, After the Grip

Convalencence from any form of the Grip is very slow, and to regain the desired strength a good tonia is absolutely necessary. Words are not strong enough to express our confidence in as a tonic after attacks of the Grip, or after typhoid fever, searlet fever, diphtheria, pneumonia or other prostrating diseases. Many testimonials from peo-ple who have taken it, conclusively prove that it possesses just the building-up effect so much needed; it vitalizes and enriches the thin and impoverished blood, and it invigorates the liver and kidneys. Hoed's Pills act easily, yet promptly and efficiently on the liver and bowels, cures headache.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

CHILD BIRTH · · · · · · MADE EASY!

" Mothers' Friend" is a scientifically prepared Liniment, every ingredient of recognized value and in constant use by the medical profession. These ingredients are combined in a manner hitherto unknown

"MOTHERS' FRIEND"

WILL DO all that is claimed for it AND MORE. It Shortens Labor. Lessens Pain, Diminishes Danger to Life of Mother and Child. Book to "MOTHERS" mailed FREE, containing valuable information and voluntary testimonials.

Sent by express on receipt of price $1.50 per bottle BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO., Atlanta, Ga.

There is nothing that may not happen to a thin baby.

There is nothing that may not happen to a man who is losing his healthy weight.

We say they are "poor." They are poorer than we at first suspect

Do you want almost all that is known of the value of plumpness told in a way to commend to you CAREFUL LIV-ING-and Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil if you need it.

A book on it free.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, 132 South 5th Avenue, New York. New York.
Your druggist keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver
oil—all druggists everywhere do. $1.

Sold every-Sold every-Levels good bear "Crescent." Substamp. You get 32 page book with sample. DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Ma.

THE RIPANS TABULES regulate the stomach.

STUDY, BOOK-EKEPING, Business Forms, Framanship, Arithmetic, Short-hand, etc., Thomoughly Taught by MA 11.2. Circulars free. Bryant's College, 407 Main St., Buttalo, N. Y. Health Helper FRFE talls how. 50c. a year. FRFE Send for sample. Dr. J. H. DYE, Editor, Buffato, N.Y.

- 100 PER CENT - win $748 CASH Prizes Corsets, Belts, Brushes and Medicines, ory. Dr. Bridgman, 872 B'way, N.Y. The Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cared.

EXPRESSED REFORE THE BUSINESS MEN'S DEMOCRATIC ASSOCIATION IN

Jackson's great victory at New Origans meet of mount favoritism. We have was calebrated in New York by a three adopted an issue great enough to banquet, given by the Business Men's Democratic Association. Ex-President Grover Cleveland was the chief speaker of the evening. His address in full was

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN: No one can question the propriety of the celebration of this day by the organiza-tion whose invitation has called us together. Its right to celebrate on this occasion results from the fact that it is an organization attached to the doctrines of true Democracy, having a membership composed of business men, who, in a disinterested way, devote themselves to honest party work, and who labor for the growth and spread of the political principles which they profess.

This anniversary has not gained its place as a festival day in the calendar of Democracy by chance nor through unmeaning caprice; nor is it observed by the Democratic party merely because a battle was fought on the eighth day of January, many years ago, at New Orleans. That battle in itself had no immediate political significance, and considered solely as a military achievement in comparison with many other battles fought by Americans both before and since, it need not be regarded as an event demanding especial commemoration.

The Democratic zest and enthusiasm of our celebration of the day grows out of the fact that the battle of New Orleans was won under the generalship of Andrew Jackson. So, while the successful General in that battle is not fogotten tonight, Democrats wherever they are assembled throughtout our land to celebrate the day, are honoring the hero who won the battles of Democracy and are commemorating the political courage and steadfastness which were his prominent characteristics.

It is well that there are occasions like this where we may manifest that love and affection for Andrew Jackson which have a place in every Democratic heart. It is needless to attempt an explanation of this love and affection. They are Democratic instincts. So strong is our conviction that Jackson's Democracy derived its strength and vigor from the steadfast courage, the honesty of purpose, and the sturdy persistency which characterized the man, and we willingly profess the belief that these same conditions are assential to the usefulness and success of the Democratic party in these latter days. Thus, wherever party principle or policy may lead us, we have constantly before us an unquestioned example of the spirit in which our work should be undertaken.

It may not be unprodtable for us at this time to recall some incidents in the career of Andrew Jackson and note their bearing upon the position of our party in its present relations to the pople. We may thus discover an incentive for the cultivation and preservation of that Jacksonian spirit which ought to belong to Democratic effort. When General Jackson was sent with troops to protect our border against disturbers of the peace whose retreat was in the Spanish Province of Florida, he notified our Government that if it was signified to him that the possession of the Floridas would be desirable to the United States, it should be forthwith accomplished. He only believed he had the assent of his Government, but in that belief, and because his word had been given, he never rested until his military occupation of the territory was

The Democratic party has lately declared to the people that if it was trust-I like partheir burgens inci. that a better and more just distribution of benefits should be assured to them. There is no doubt concerning our commission from the people to do this work, and there is no doubt that we have received their trust and confidence on the faith of our promises. In these circumstances there is no sign of Jacksonian determination and persistency in faltering or hesitating in the cause we have undertaken. If we accepted the trust and confidence of the people with any other design than to respond fully to them, we have been dishonored from the beginning. If we accepted them in good faith, disgrace and humiliation await us if we relax our efforts before the promised end is reached.

At New Orleans General Jackson attacked the enemy as soon as they landed and fought against their making the least advance. It never occurred to him that if he yielded to them a foot of ground or gave them a moment's rest his opportunity to defeat them would be promoted.

We, who are proud to call ourselves Jacksonian Democrats, have boldly and aggressively attacked a political heresy, opposed to the best interests of the people and defended by an arrogant and unscrupulous party. The fight is still Who has the hardihood to say that on. we can lay claim to the least Jacksonian spirit if in the struggle we turn our backs to the enemy or lower in the least

President Jackson believed the United States Bank was an institution dangerous to the liberties and prosperity of the people. Once convinced of this, his determination to destroy it closely followed. He early began the attack, utterly regardless of any consideration of political expediency or personal advancement except as they grew out of his faith in the people, and giving no place in his calculations for any estimate of the difficulty of the undertaking, from the time the first blow was struck un- cattlemen from the Indian Terri-him from his purpose, and permitted no other issue to divide his energy or to be substituted for that on which he was

The Democratic party of to-day, which conjures with the name of Jackson, has also attacked a monstrous evil, entrenched behind a perversion of Governmental power and guarded by its selfish beneficiaries. On behalf of those among mode one neglected, we have indo me the audivided efforts of our party, involving considerations which we pro fess to believe lie at the foundation of the justice and fairness of popular rule.

If we are to act upon our declared belief in the power of that Jacksonian spirit which was the fuspiration of our party in the days of our great leader, we shall be steadfast to the issue we have raised until it is settled and rightly settled. The steadfastness we need will not permit a premature and distracting search for other and preplexing questions, nor will it allow us to be tempted or driven by the enemy into new and tangled paths.

We have given pledges to the people and they have trusted us. Unless we have outgrown the Democratic spirit of Jackson's time, our duty is plain. promise was not merely to labor in the people's cause until we should tire of the effort or should discover a way which seemed to promise easier and quicker party ascendency. The service we undertook was not to advise those waiting for better days that their cause was hopeless, nor under any pretext to suggest a cessation of effort. Our engagement was to labor incessantly, bravely and stubbornly, seeing nothing and considering nothing but ultimate success. These pledges and promises should be faithfully and honestly kept. Party faithlessness is party dishonor. Nor is the sacredness of our pledges and the party dishonor that would follow their violation, all we have to consider. We cannot trifle with our obligations to the people without exposure and dis-We ourselves have aroused a spirit of jealous inquiry and discrimination touching political conduct, which cannot be blinded; and the people will visit with quick revenge the party which betravs them.

I hope, then, I may venture to claim in this assemblage that, even if there had been but slight encouragement for the cause we have espoused, there would still be no justification for timidity and faintheartedness. But with the success we have already achieved, amounting to a political revolution, it seems to me that it would be the height of folly, considered purely as a question of party management, to relax in the least our determination and persistency. If we suspect anywhere in our counsels, compromising hesitation or a disposition to divert the unity of party efforts, let us be watchful. least retreat bodes disaster; cowardice is often called conservatism, and an army scattered into sections invites defeat.

We have preached the doctrine that nonesty and sincerity should be exacted from political parties. Let us not fall under the condemnation which waits on shifty schemes and insincere professions.

1 believe our countrymen are prepared to act on principle, and are in no mood for political manœuvring. They will not waste time in studying conundrums, guessing riddles, or trying to interpret doubtful phrases. They demand a plain and simple statement of political pur-

Above all things, political finesse should not lead us to forget that at the end of our plans we must meet face to face at the polls, the voters of the land, with ballots in their hands, demanding as a condition of their support of our party fidelity and undivided devotion to the cause in which we have enlisted

If, inspired by the true Jacksonian spirit, we hold to the doctrine that party nonesty is party duty, and party courage s party expediency, we shall win a sure and lasting success through the deserved support of a discren ninating, intelligent, and throughtful people.

The Harrison Taxes.

The Administration organ denies that American consumers of sugar, coffee and hides will be taxed by the reimposition of duties on those articles by the President's proclamation. It says that "prices will not be raised, but the source of supply changed," inasmuch as "six-sevenths of the imported sugar and two-thirds of the imported coffee are already covered by reciprocity treaties."

The organ's idea that shutting out by a virtual embargo one-seventh of the imported sugar and one-third of the coffee crop in Venezuela, Colombia and Hayti were destroyed by a blight, is it probable that the loss would have no effect upon the price of the berry in this coun-If the supply from these countries shall be cut off by a prohibitory tariff, as the defenders of "reciprocity" propose, why should the effect be different?

The same thing is true, though perhaps to a less extent, of sugar. If the ruling out of one-seventh of our foreign supply does not induce and enable the favored producers in Germany and the West Indies to advance their prices it will be strange.

The scheme of reciprocity untaxes foreigners only. It gives them from fifty to a hundred staple articles free of duty upon which our own people pay a tariff of from forty to 100 per cent. And retaliation upon reciprocity hits American citizens the sharpest blow. It will tax us if the prescribed articles are imported. It will raise prices if they are not. -New York World.

Cold Weather in Texas.

number of points, and teams and footmen are passing to and fro. The til the contest ended in his complete tory, report the blizzard very disastriumph, he allowed nothing to divert trous to stock, hundreds having died. becoming a nuisance.

at a little town in Central New York, where Griswold delivered a lecture on Oil Wells of Pennsylvania, Tuesnight, and Artemus Ward his nore lamous skit on the Mormons the evening following, each illustrating his work with a panorama. This was long before the days of magic lanterns, big and little. Ward persuaded Griswold to stay over and hear his discourse, and then, finding that the arrangement of trains and things would keep them over another day. they agreed to lecture concurrently on Thursday night, each using his own words to the other's pictures. Now the opening illustration in Ward's show was "Brigham Young in the Bosom of His Family," portraying the patriarch surrounded by his wives and children, while Griswold's was "The Great Derricks of Titusville," displaying all the huge skeleton structures of that remarkable oil field. So Ward began: "This picture, ladies and gentlemen, is intended to represent Brigham Young, the great Mormon leader, surrounded by his numerous progeny and their mothers. This [pointing to the big derrick] is Brigham, towering above his many relatives by marriage. This [indicating the next largest derrick] is Ann Eliza, his favorite wife, to whom he is devotedly attached, as is indicated in an allegorical way by the large rope extending from Brigham to his devoted spouse." Thus he rattled away for half an hour, Then when Griswold's turn came the Contributor began in this way: "This, my male and female fellow citizens, will give you an adequate idea of the great derricks at Titusville, Pa. The principal derrick, called the 'Howling Shouter," said he, as he pointed toward Brigham's likeness, "has a daily flow of 3,000 barrels; while the next largest well, poetically named the Epluribustah, which may here"as he indicated broadly the clusters of posterity gathered round the various maternal knees-"be aptly translated 'Many from One,' has a much smaller flow and one much more variable." Here the audience was convulsed with laughter and the speaker had to stop. After dividing more money than either had taken in his single evening they parted.

Senators' Native States.

In the new Senate there will be no less than thirteen natives of New York. Here are their names: Stanford and Felton of California, Davis of Minnesota, Sanders of Montana, Paddock of Nebraska, Stewart of Nevada, McPherson of New Jersey, Hill and Hiscock of New York, Casey of North Dakota, Dolph of Oregon, and Squire of Washington. McPherson of New Jersey and Casey of North Dakota were born at York, Livingston County, the former in 1833 and the latter in 1837.

Next to New York stands Ohio, who will have eight of her sons in the Senate. Pennsylvania and Kentucky will have six each; Vermont will have five; Tennessee, Georgia, Massachusetts, Maine, and Virginia will each have four; North Carolina and Delaware will have three each; Illinois, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, South Carolina, and West Virginia will have two each, and each of the States of Arkansas, Connecticut, Louisiana, Maryland, Missouri, Iowa, and Indiana will have one native in the Senate.

Four members of the new Senate, and only four, were born beyond the limits of the United States. Senator McMillan was born in Hamilton, Ont. and Senator Gallinger first saw the light of day at Cornwall, in the same province. Senator Jones, of Nevada, was born in Herefordshire, England, and Senator Pasco, of Florida, was born in London.

"Blue Hen's Chickens,"

verybody knows that natives of Delaware are called "The Blue Hen's Chickens," but not one in a hundred can tell you why they are so called. The epithet is said to have its origin in the following: One of Delaware's most gallant fighters in the war of the revolution was a Cant. Caldwell. who was notorious for his fondness for cock fighting. He drilled his men admirably, they being known throughwill have no effect on prices is at war out the army as "Caldwell's game with the laws of trade. If the ooffee cocks." This same Caldwell held to the peculiar theory that no cock was really game unless its mother was a blue hen. As the months were away Caldwell's men became known as 'The Blue Hen's Chickens," a title which only increased their respect for the old game-cock captain. The nick name became famous, and after the close of the war was applied indiscriminately to all natives of the "Diamond State."

Making Reynard Useful.

A new use for foxes has been found in Sable Island, which has exemplifled in its time several curious vicissitudes of animal population. The island is as overstocked with rabbits as New Zealand itself. These animals were introduced at the beginning of the century for the benefit of the life-saving staff which constitutes the whole population of that wreckstrewn island. Once the rabbits were exterminated by cast-away rats, and again by a flock of Arctic owls. A third time the rabbits were introduced, and now have so increased For the first time in eighteen years that there will be no grass left for the Red river is frozen over solid at a cattle and ponies unless something is done. It has now been decided to import a number of foxes, with the hope that they will keep down or kill off the rabbits without themselves

A CHARACTERISTIC SCENE.

The Audienen Enjoyed the Joke as Well as Griswold and Ward.

There are many anecdotes related of A. Miner Griswold, the "Fat Contributor," but none better than the one below. Griswold was a warm friend of Artemus Ward, and the two met at a little town in Central New York,

STATE OF UHIO, CITY OF TOLEDO, Lucias County.

Frank J. Cheney makes oath that he is the senior partner of the firm of F. J. Cheney & Co., doing business in the City of Toledo, County and State aforesaid, and that said firm will pay the sum of $100 for each and every use of catarrh that cannot be cured by the use of Hall's Catarrh Cure.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence, this 6th day of December, A. D., &Sd.

A. W. Gleason, Notary Public.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Sens for testimonians, free.

F. J. THENEY & Co., Toledo, O.

Sold by Drugsists, 75c.

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they wil return you BOOK, BEAUTI-BUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE.

T. W. Wood & Sons' New Seed Catalogue for 1892 is pronounced the most T. W. Wood & Sons' New Seed Catalogue for 1892 is pronounced the most instructive and useful work of its kind published. It not only gives full cultural directions and descriptions of all Garden and Farm seeds, but contains much valuable information to enable the Farmer and Gardener to decide which are the best and most profitable to grow. Mailed free on application. (See advertisement in another column.)

"I have been occasionally troubled with Coughs, and in each case have used Brown's BRONCHIAL TROCHES, which have never failed, and I must say they are second to none in the world."—Felix A. Man, Cashier, St. Paul, Minn.

The settings for diamonds are plainer than heretofore. The most precious are set with very little gold.

Brown's Iron Bitters cures Dyspepsia, Malaria, Biliousness and General Debi.ity. Gives Strength, aids Digestion, tones the nerves—creates appetite. The best tonic for Nursing Mothers, weak women and children.

Three tunnels are being constructed under the harbor of Glasgow for foot passengers and fevers is to use the liquid laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs, whenever the system needs a gentle, yet effective cleansing. To be benefited one must get the true remedy manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only. For sale by all druggists in 50c. and $1 bottles.

The Most Pleasant Way

The population of Greece is increasing at a greater ratio than that of any other European country.

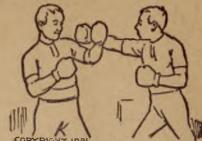

MALARIA cured and eradicated from the system by Brown's Iron Bitters, which enriches the blood, tones the nerves, aids digestion. Acts like a charm on persons in general ill health, giving new energy and strength.

A New York clergyman bas married over 12,000 couples and received over $60,000 in wedding fees.

FITM stopped tree by DR. ALINES GREAT NERVE RESTORRS. No fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline, 931 Arch St., Phila., Pa.

Dr. Swan's Pastiles Cure female weaknesses; his T-Tablets cure chronic constipation. Sam-ples free. Dr. Swan, Beaver Dam, Wis. BEECHAM'S PILLS cost only 25 cents a box. They are proverbially known throughout the world to be "worth a guinea a box."

If afflicted with sore eyes use Dr.Inaac Thompson's Eye-water.Druggists sell at 25c.per bottle disease by removing the cause of it. It's with the liver or the blood, nine times out of ten. A sluggish liver makes bad blood-and bad blood makes trouble. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery makes pure blood. It invigorates the liver and kidneys, rouses every organ into healthful action, and cleanses and renews the whole system. Through the blood it cures. For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Scrofulous, Skin and Scalp Diseases - even Consumption (or Lung-scrofula) in its earlier stages, it's a certain remedv.

Nothing else is "just as good." Anything "just as good" could be sold just as this is. It's the only blood-purifier that's guaranteed to benefit or cure, in every case, or the money is refunded.

The catarrh that isn't cured costs $500. Not to you, but to the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. They promise to pay you the money, if you have an incurable

They don't believe that you have

FOR THE

My little girl suffered for three years from a large Abscess on her hip, the result of a fall and dislocation. The Abscess was large, with six openings, all of which discharged puss. I was induced by friends to give her S. S., and by the time the fifth bottle was finished the Abscess was entirely healed, and the child was well and happy.—Mrs. J. A.

I had three little girls who were attacked with obstinate ECZEMA or Blood Trouble, which at first resembled heat, but soon grew to yellow blisters, some of them quite large. One of the children died from the effects of it, but we got Swift's Specific and gave to the other two, and they soon got well. S. S. S. forced out the poison promptly. The cure was wonderful—J. D. RAINS, Marthaville, La.

S. S. S. has no equal for Children. It relieves the system promptly, and assists nature in developing the child's health. Our Treatise mailed free.

SWIFT SPECIFIC COMPANY, ATLANTA, GA.

Colds, Coughs, Consumption, HOARSENESS AND ALL AFFECTIONS OF THE THROAT AND LUNGS

TAYLOR'S CHEROKEE REMEDY OF

ET GUM AND MULLEIN IS THE BEST KNOWN REMEDY

Ask your druggist or merchant for it, AND TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE.

well known to the citizens of Appleton, Me., and neighborhood. He says: "Eight years ago I was taken "sick, and suffered as no one but a "dyspeptic can. I then began tak-"ing August Flower. At that time

"I was a great sufferer. Every-"thing I ate distressed me so that I "had to throw it up. Then in a "few moments that horrid distress "would come on and I would have 'to eat and suffer "again. I took a "little of your med-For that

Horrid Stomach

"icine, and felt much "better, and after "taking a little more "August Flower my Feeling. "Dyspepsia disap-"peared, and since that time I "have never had the first sign of it. "I can eat anything without the "least fear of distress. I wish all "that are afflicted with that terrible "disease or the troubles caused by "it would try August Flower, as I "am satisfied there is no medicine "equal to it."

@ G G G G G G G G

Cheapest Family KNOWN. ONLY 25 CENTS. 191 Pages, 91 Full Page Maps.

191 Pages, VI Full Page Maps.

Colored Maps of each State and Thirtory in the United States. Also Maps of every Country in the World. The letter press gives the aquare inlies of each State; time of settlement; population; chies cities; average temperature; salarles of officials and the principal postmanters in the State; number of farms, with their productions and the value thereoff different manufactures and number of employes, etc., etc. Also the area of each Foreign Country form of government; population; principal product and their money value; anaount of trade; religions size of army; miles of railroad and telegraph; number of horses, catile, sheep, and a vast amount of information valuable to all. Postpaid for 250.

Am. N. U. - No 4, 1892.

OUR INSTRUCTIVE CATALOGUE. giving full information and direction for cultivating all Farm and Garden Crops, mailed free. Send for it. Address T.W. WOOD & SONS Seedsmen, RICHMOND, VA.

VOL. I.

CALERA, ALA., FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1892.

NO. 15.

In the reign of Queen Victoria England had fifteen wars.

The enormous growth of the city of London is shown by the fact that its present population is given at 5,670,000. or considerably greater than that of Paris, Berlin, Vienna and Rome com-

There are 536 authorized guides in the Alps. One hundred and ninety-four of them have taken a regular course of instruction in their profession and have received diplomas. Thirty-five of them are between sixty and seventy years of But! save not other friends who need thee age and six are over seventy.

Equatorial Africa promises another treasure to civilization, announces the New York Press. It is a much scent plant, the branches of which ca ried about the person will frighten away mosquitoes. The smell of the plant is neither unpleasant nor unhe althy, but no mosquito will nventure within its

To use the phone are and for recording the chatter of mo are yet and to attempt from such a record to evolve the language of the si minus is something which in the opin of the San Francisco Chronicle o At-Darwius Darwin. With such meth as these we ought to get hold of the missing link before the end of the gentury.

V Ay cannot, asks the New Orleans P kayune, some able designer get up a representation of the eagle that looks something like that glorious bird? The spread-wing idea is unnatural and absurd. It is only because of its antiquity that it is tolerated. An eagle that would spreadits wings and legs, in an attempt to symbolize peace and war deserves to be shot. A fine design of an American eagle at rest, perched on a crag or limb of a tree, would not be a bad one for our silver coins.

A man by the name of George Hukee, at New Haven, Conn., was named as an executor in a will. When the will was probated two witnesses, through an honest mistake, swore that he was dead, and the court had an order to that effect entered upon the records. A short time afterwards Hulce turned up all right, but he has been de lared to be legally dead and is so in www until the record is changed. Thi cannot be done without reopening the case, which will cost some money. This, Hulce declares, he will not pay, and as no one else has any interest in the matter he will probably remain legally dead as long as he actually

The depreciation of farming lands in England has gone so far, asserts the Boston Cultivator, that in many localities they are worth only half what they were twenty years ago. The low price of wheat, and competition with other countries in meat and other food products, is responsible for much of this decrease in price, though part of it is due to a succession of bad seasons. The United States now leads all competitions in wheat production. But it is certain that after a few more years American increase in population will take all the wheat we can grow. When that time comes, not only English but other wheat growers will share in the increased prosperity of farming that must everywhere prevail.

The census bulletin giving the population of Texas by minor civil divisions shows some wonderful percentages of increase of population, notes the Louisville Courier-Journal. The increase over 1880 in the whole State was 643,774. equal to 40.44 per cent., which is itself a healthy percentage, though quite insignificant compared to the growth in population of some of the counties. Only sixteen counties show decreases. Armstrong County shows an increase of 2945.16 per cent.; Childress, 4600; Collingsworth, 5880; Hardeman. 7708; Randall, 6133.33, and Floyd, 17,533.33 per cent. The effect of these magnificent percentages is somewhat impaired by giving the figures upon which they are based. Armstrong, for example, had only thirty-one population in 1880 and 944 in 1890-an immense relative but very moderate positive increase. Childre:s increased from twenty-tive in 1880 to 1175 in 1890; Collingsworth from six to 357; Hardeman, from fifty to 3904; Rundall, from three to 187, and Floyd, f an three to 529. There are still aties in the State the population of wi is put down at 3, 4, 7, 9, 14, 15, 16 respectively.

A PARTING GUEST Dear world, how shall I say farewell to

As from thy friendly house I great last? Let me not like an unloved wan herer be From thy door cast.

No, I have been a little while thy guest; Still there are light and a music, down thy

The laughing recognition of a jest Rises and falls.

Thou hast with have and bread my wants supplier'
And hurr ad on my hours in joyous flight;

But longe with thee now I cannot bide - I come to say good-night

Give me thy hand and I am quickly gone; Thy lamps will light me with their genial Until I meet the dawn. -Meredith Nicholson, in the Century.

A MIDNIGHT ASSIGNMENT.

HEN Sandy Graham, stone mason and bailie, kicked Fergus Cameron down the back stair of his home on the Lochee Road, of Dundee, and shied a bag of onions and a clothes line where his big foot could not reach, he was an unconscious fact or in one of the prettiest romances that ever cast a fragrance over the life of a newspaper man.

This was the cause of all the trouble. Fergus Cameron was the ten-shilling-aweek clerk at the salt pans. One and one made two during the day, but one and one in the evening represented only one, for while the former might be bags of salt, or pounds, shillings or pence, the latter were the mutually sympathetic hearts of Fergus Cameron and Maud Graham, the pretty daughter of the Dundee bailie.

Now, the average Scotch bailie is a much bigger man, in his own estimation, than the President of the United States. A chief magistrate of our nation might allow his daughter to marry an ordinary book-keeper; but a President of the United States is no criterion in estimating a man chosen to fill the chair once graced by such illustrious characters as Donald MacTavish and Sandy Jamieson. Shades of Nebuchadnezzar! who so great as a Scotch bailie? You may have heard of the Scotch bailie, but I knew one. It was long ago, but the awe-inspiring influence of a personal acquaintance with him has not yet departed. He was a newspaper man, so he said, claiming the title by virtue of part ownership with his wife and Kirsty Buckley, a crabbed old maid, in a newspaper and magazine depot. All in all, he was a great man in the town. Examination day always brought him to school, and on such an occasion he generally stood with the Latin book upside cuse me, you have the book upside story of a strange discovery made by him when his vessel had been driven off

Latin upside down?"

How we prayed that a kind Providence in much love and mercy might make of us bailies and newspaper men.

Do you wonder that Fergus Cameron was kicked downstairs, and that a bag of onlons and a clothes-line hastened his departure, and that three weeks later he stood upon the deck of an Atlantic liner, gazing with tearful eye on the fast fading shore-line of the land of blue mist and purple heather? An American youth would have been happier under the circumstances, for he would have had Maud Graham with him; so little respect has an American youth for the exalted office of a Scotch bailie.

HE FOUGHT THE BLAST

Cameron arrived in New York with a few dollars in his pocket and fewer friends by his side. He spent the first night in a cheap lodging-house on West street, and in the morning set out to find an old friend of his father. The prospects of employment at his own occupation were by no means bright, but au acquaintance on the part of the old man with the city editor of a morning paper opened for him the door of the newspaper kingdom. Into the humblest position went Fergus Cameron. Naturally bright, well educated, and with no end of capacity for work, he cheerfully and manfully faced his new duties with a prefer to forego the pleasure of a few calm determination to turn the battle of life into victory, and be a bigger man | -Philadelphia Record.

than a Scotch bailie. His was the old, old story of success and failure, of failure and success, but his application to business and the excellence of his work carried him into the good graces of his superiors in office. The star that ruled his luckless lot might have fated him much that was disheartening, but its adverse influence did not extend to his busi-

A wild night in January, 1888. Snow had fallen all of two days and nights, and the States were beginning to feel the deadly effects of the great blizzard. Fergus Cameron was in the West, plowing his way toward a country village. A midnight assignment had fizzled out, his only horse had stumbled into a ditch and broken its leg, and his choice lay between death in the snow and a struggle toward the village. Every minute was like an eternity; he seemed to be dragging the world at his heels. Mindweary and body-sore he fought the bitter, blinding blast until overtaxed nature gave up the battle, and he sank

PERGUS CAMERON SURPRISED.

Two weeks later Fergus Cameron woke from the torpor of oblivion and saw the world of light again. From the large heating stove in his bed-room a cheerful fire shot shafts of light over the soft rugs on the floor. The surroundings were strange; what did it mean? He lay there looking drowsily about him, and slowly recalled the incidents of his terrible battle with the storm, wondaring to whom beguitality he was wondering to whose hospitality he was indebted for his salvation. His dream-ing was pleasantly disturbed by the entrance of r graceful female figure. Who was it? Cameron rubbed his eyes wondering if it was a new phase of his delirium. Another rub; another look; were his senses playing him false? By his bedside stood grace and goodness personified in his old sweetheart, Maud Graham.

They are married now, and all the trials of the past are forgotten in the sweet bliss of the present. Old Bailie Graham's views have broadened considerably since he failed in business and crossed the ocean, and no one is more willing to admit that his handsome sonin-law is a much more important than a Scotch bailie who can read Latin upside down .- The Journalist.

An Island of the Dead.

"Excuse me, Bailie," our teacher would remark in his meekest way, "ex-The captain of a coasting vessel that "Sir, don't you think a bailie can read her course some weeks ago. He sighted an island not down on any of the charts. He sent a boat ashore and the men returned and said that no one lived there, but there were many houses and evidences that at one time the island had been inhabited. The captain himself then went ashore and found that the island had undoubtedly been swept by a scourge of some kind, which had carried off every living being. There were numerous huts showing that at one time the place had been thickly inhabited, but not a living thing could be found. An investigation showed that the former residents had died in such numbers that they had not been buried, but the skeletons were lying around the island wherever the people had been when death had overtaken them. In one hut were the remains of seventeen people, while in many others skeletons were found in great numbers. They had been dead for such a time that the bones were beginning to decay. There was little to show what kind of people they were, but it is supposed that they belong to some of the numerous island tribes which were so abundant on this part of the coast fifty years ago .- New Orleans Picayune.

A Contractor's Little Scheme.

A local contractor has a peculiar method of keeping tab on a gang of Italian laborers working under him. The men are known only by numbers, and to keep track of the doings of each individual is a matter of considerable difficulty. They are all apt to sneak off when the foreman's back is turned, and sit down for a rest. The unique plan of the contractor in question is devised to put an end to this lazy practice and the consequent loss of time. In the morning before the gang goes to work each man's number is printed in chalk on his trousers. When the men knock off work in the evening the chalk marks are inspected, and if any are found to be erased or blurred, the unfortunate Italian to whose trousers the blurred number appertains is docked a day's pay. The scheme works admirably, as the men minutes' rest rather than lose their pay.

WISE WORDS.

It is sometimes hard to distinguish innocence from bluff.

Contentment is not knowing anyone who has anything better than you have. Every man in trouble feels that his friends are not as indignant as they should

Nearly any man will spend $100 worth of time to get thirty cents worth of re-

Men are like little boys; they all like to have a great big rag tied around a lit-

The man who can win the reputation of being able to lick everybody saves himself lots of fights. There is one thing you can always depend on a man doing, and that is the thing he wants to do. Men and women are the only things ever created that the nearer you get to them the smaller they get. There is one thing in which the poor man has the advantage of a rich man; he knows who are his triends. When a girl who is engaged to be married tells of her engagement, it is a very good sign that she was never engaged before.

Every woman believes that if her husband could be married to some other woman for a week he would know how to appreciate her.

Marriage seems never so much a failure to a man as when something goes wrong at home that he can't possibly blame on his wife.

It makes no difference how worthless a man is; his mother thinks it no sacrilege to delude the best girl in the world into marrying him.

We heard two young men discussing boarding-houses. "At the place where I board," one of them said, "the home influence is better than the meals."

Young people usually talk so much to each other when they are engaged that by the time they are married they have nothing left to say, and begin to invite

A New Story of General Grant.

I was told a good story about General Grant, the other day that I never saw in print, writes the Washington correspondent of the Courier-Journal. It will be recalled that early in the war the New York Fire Zouaves were a crack regiment, commanded by Colonel Ellsworth. Every man in the ranks had been a fireman, and it was confidently believed that Ellsworth's command was able to put down the war without assistance. The Colonel was a young man, handsome, gallant, burning with military ardor and thirsting for military fame. He was as much the idol of the North as Ashby was a few months later the idol of the South. The Fire Zouaves were the first troops to march into Alexandria, Va. Their Colonel was at their head, and after the town had surrendered Ellsworth saw a Confederate flag flying from a hotel. Instead of ordering a squad to remove it he bolted into the house, ascended the stairway, went out on the roof and captured the flag; descending he was confronted by the landlord-one Jacksonwho shot him dead. Jackson himself was then shot to death, and the affair created more sensation than considerable battles a few years later. After the war a daughter of Jackson secured an appointment in one of the departments here. She was a modest, diligent and oapable young woman, and discharged her official duties acceptably. In the course of time a super-loyal gentleman was put in charge of the bureau in which she worked. Nosing around, he soon discovered the antecedents of the young clerk and discharged her. She was friendless and penniless, and as a last resort went to the White House and called for General Grant. He received her, and she related her story to the silent man. Without saying a word he took a piece of paper and wrote: "The war against men is ended, and my Administration shall not begin one against women. Restore Miss Jackson to her former clerkship instantly." This was addressed to the loyal bureau official, and the young lady is yet in the public service. That was an ex-hibition of chivalry that Duriois or Francis I. might have envied.

Twenty Dined Off One Potato.

George W. Scott has brought into the Telephone office a half-dozen of the largest sweet potatoes ever raised, perhaps, in the country. They are 'new issues," and the six weighed fifty pounds. The largest one was given by the editor to a family in which there were eighteen members—the husband and wife and sixteen children-all of whom were great lovers of potatoes. Sunday they decided to have it for dinner. It was fried-a part of it at least-and was amply enough for all the family, besides a married daughter and her husband who were spending the day there. The remainder of the mammoth potato was made up into potato pone and furnished dessert enough for the whole crowd and to spare. - Tahlequah (Indian Territory) Telephone.

"I've lost my situation," remarked a young man who had been working for a Fifth avenue firm. "Is that so?" "Why; I understood that you worked in a fire-proof building."-Pittsburg Chronicle.

SCIENTIFIC AND INDUSTRIAL.

Steam pipes are made of ramic fibre. Blotting paper is made of cotton rags

Scientists say that a grasshopper has its ears on its forelegs.

A man breathes about eighteen pints of air in a minute, or upward of seven hogsheads in a day. A company has been formed in Chicago, Ill., to manufacture a metallic substitute for wooden railway ties.

According to a statistician of small things, the human heart in a lifetime of eighty years, beats 300,000,000 times.

The interesting fact has developed in the case of table glass that the much-admired iridescent film is slightly soluble in water.

An underground hydraulic power distribution plant is being talked of for Berlin, Germany. Such systems have already been successfully used in England.

A torquoise mine has been discovered near the town of Ibrahim-Olga about fif-teen miles from Samarcand. This is said to be the third turquoise mine found in Central Asia.

The largest animal known to exist in the world at the present time is the rorqual, which averages 100 feet in length; the smallest is the monad, which is only 1-12,000 of an inch in length.

There have been many collisions at sea which have seemed wholly unaccountable, and it may be suspected that they have proceeded from the not uncommon inability to distinguish between green and red lights at night.

It has recently been discovered that in a cubic centimeter of milk, two hours after removal from the cow, there are 9000 microbes, and in twenty-five hours these have increased to over 5,000,000. Their number is enormously increased by elevation of temperature. These microbes are harmless, and by many scientists are supposed to even aid digestion.

Field flasks of aluminum instead of the ordinary glass flasks are being introduced experimentally in the German army. They appear to be servicable and strong, and should they fulfil their promise the whole army is to be supplied with them. In addition to their greater durability the metal flasks are much lighter than those of glass, their weights being respectively 450 and 500 grams.

Arc light carbons frequently possess characteristics of the diamond, to which in composition they strongly approximate. The pieces of unburned carbons which are thrown away are very often found to contain very hard, sharp ends, which will cut glass, and the mischievous street Arabs have discovered this fact and use the pieces for defacing windows and doing other destructive work.

A comparatively new system of construction, the invention of Mr. Monier, is being applied to the building of houses, bridges, fortifications, reservoirs, sewers, etc. It consists of a network of iron rods covered with cement concrete, and the most remarkable feature in connection with it is the great strength of the constructed material, relatively to its weight. It is also claimed that the material is perfectly fire-proof and cheaper than any other at present employed and that space is considerably economized owing to the comparative thinness of material em-

A Fine Game Preserve.

The Rev. N. M. Jurney, of Leesville, N. C., has associated a number of gentlemen with him, and they have established in Cartaret County one of the finest game preserves in North Carolina. The gentlemen who own the preserve are only worth $18,000,000 in the aggregate. They have purchased 8000 acres of land. and have posted it, to be used exclusively for their own hunting. This large tract of land is a vast forest, and it contains the finest fresh water pond in the State. This pond is three miles long, and from a hundred yards to a half mile in width, and abounds in fish. In the forest there is an abundance of deer, wild turkeys, wild ducks, wildcats, quail, squirrels, etc. Forty-five deer killed on this tract alone last season. Mr. B. N. Duke, of Durham, N. C., is President of the company. The company is erecting a handsome lodge to cost $3000, and will stock their preserve with game of all kinds. They will also sow grass, peas and grain for the benefit of deer, turkeys, quail, etc.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Water Purified by Electricity.

The Webstef method of purifying waste water by means of electricity has been tested by Dr. Fermi in the Hygienic Institute, at Munich, Germany. During the course of the experiments it was found that the water became purified in about fifteen minutes, the organic substances being reduced by about onehalf, and the suspended substances being precipitated to the bottom. The smell of the water was perceptibly im-

While the results of the tests show that electricity does not at the present time realize the ideal of water purification, it has two great advantages; first, that very little iron is precipitated and its removal is not so difficult as in the case of purification by chemical means, and, second, the dissolved organic substances, which are not precipitated by any of the known chemical methods hitherto employed, are at least partially removed by the electric current.—Philudelphia Record.

MY MOTHER'S HAND

Such beautiful beautiful handal They're neither white nor small. And you, I know, would scarce, think That they were fair at all. I've looked on hands whose form and hus A sculptor's dream might be; Yet are those aged, wrinkled hands

Most beautiful to me. Such beautiful, beautiful hands! Though heart were weary and sad, These patient hands kept toiling on, That the children might be glad. The tears well forth, as, looking back To childhood's distant day, I think how these hands rested not

While mine were at their play. Such beautiful, beautiful hands! They are growing feeble now, For time and pain have left their work On hand and heart and brow.

Alas! alas! how near the time Of pain and loss to me, When 'neath the daisies, out of sight. Those hands will folded be.

But, oh, beyond the shadow land, Where all is bright and fair, I know full well these dear old hands Will palms of victory bear Where crystal streams through endless years Flow over golden sands, And where the old grow young again, Ill clasp my mother's hands.

HUMOR OF THE DAY.

China has a revolution alle samee South American man .- Boston Herald. A locomotive travels better and a man worse with a headlight .- Columbus Post. The detective, like the dude, should be catchy in his makeup.—Binghamton

How could a critic ever become famous, if there were no minor poets to Republican.

The successful politician must be sharp enough to cut all the people who expect favors from him .- Puck.

"How did your friend become a Colonel?" She—"He married a Colonel's widow."—Boston Beacon.

Put a handle to a man's name, even if he is a crank. A crank without a handle is of little use .- Boston Transcript. Corporal (at the inspection)-"That fellow looks as plump and tat as if all the cooks in the town had fallen in love with him." It's the woman who has a brown plush sacque on who can quickest tell a seal-skin when she sees it on another woman. Texas Siftings. The kangaroo is a funny animal. It has four legs in all, but two of its legs are longer than its fore legs put together.

-Elmira Gazette. Some papers make it the "grip," others the "grippe." Still a spell of it is bad enough no matter how taken.—

Philadelphia Times. A-"If I were a minister I should hate to dine at a banker's table." B-

"Why?" A-"Think of three days of grace!"-Yale Record. If college men would only tackle the world as they do their foot ball opponents, the rest of us would never get a goal .- New York Herald.

How goodlooking some of us would be could we only live up to the photograph which we regard as a perfect likeness! -Boston Transcript.

"Oh, mamma!" cried Willie, on seeing a zebra for the first time, "do come here and see this poor little convict pony." -Harper's Young People.

Don't pen missives to your best girl on postal cards. She may have a suspicion that you do not care two cents for her. - Union County Standard.

Marriage seems never so much a failure to a man as when something goes wrong at home that he can't possibly blame on his wife.—Atchison Globe.

When Strephon, hearing in the dark
A step, gave Bridget Daphne's kiss,
He evidently missed his mark
By having failed to mark his Miss.
—Puck.

A hermit and a tramp present about the same general appearance; the dis-tinguishing feature is that one is a recluse, the other a wreck loose .- Union County Standard.

"My hair," mused Van Smythe, as he carefully consigned his two remaining wisps to their appointed places, "reminds me most painfully of a fool and his money."—Life.

There are lots of them in the world at the foot of the procession who believe they are at the head, though they admit that the procession is going the wrong way .- Atchison Globe.

"Did you ever notice how sometimes the earth seems to smile at the sun?" said the poetic young woman. "Oh, yes," he answered. "The sun's an old flame of hers, you know."

Saidso-"When Joblots made his debut as a star the audience went wild; the encore was terrific." Herdso—"In which scene was it?" "The one in which he was beheaded."—New York Herald.

Tommy—"What is a 'running account?" Pa says it's an account merchants have to keep of customers that are in the habit of running away from paying their bills." Uncle-"That's one definition of it." Tommy—"Is there another?" Uncle—"Yes. A running account is, in some instances, an account that gets tired out running after a while, and then it becomes a standing obligation."-Boston Courier.

THE CALERA JOURNAL. FRANK W. GIST, EDITOR.

CALERA, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 4. ANNOUNCEMENTS.

We are authorized to announce G. B. Deans as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic par-

We are authorized to announce D. R. McMillan as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county

S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject

We are authorized to announce Wm. R. A. fillner as a candidate for the ci-tice of Circuit Clerk of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the demperatic and conservative party.

John A. Campbell.

for the club.

ONE would think to hear the Chronicle cry out about taxing the dear people that its editor had an recently joined the farmers' allivictory in every county contested so far in this campaign. The result in Jefferson was remarkable. The outcome in Madison was astonishing. And now comes Butler.

As a result of the meeting of the executive committee of Bullock county, Union Springs reports a personal combat, in the streets on the 30th ult. Fellow democrats should not tear one another's eyes

THERE is a call in the Birmingham dailies for the organization of a Da vid B. Hill club in that city. The call describes him as a "democrat who never lost a battle." Why is it he didn't carry New York for Cleveland in 1888?

THE contest for governor is get-

Gov Joves has answered the attack of the Alliance-Herald on the subject of his private debts. His answer is full and complete, and some may say that he ought not to have noticed it, but we are glad he did so, for he passes through it all without blot or blemish, and if the Herald will publish it, the governor will be stronger with the democratic alliancemen than he was before the Herald's assault.

When the campaign opened up aition as a possible candidate. the Journal was fearful that the democratic clubs that have been organized early in the fight would become tired of work, lose that zeal that becometh good and true democrats and go to pieces, but we are glad to see that not only the old clubs are still at work, but that new ones are being formed and that most of them are organizing in the interest of the Governor. Tuscaloosa organized a straight out Jones club last night with over six hundred names. The governor's adherents in Tuscaloosa seem confident of success, and are sanguine of victory perching on their banners in this contest.

MARSHALL county is the first to call a mass meeting. The commit- it was done in an honest way, and tee is reported to be for the Ex- for the good of the party and the commissioner, and it is hoped by people. The action of the conventhis method to send up a solid dele- tion was the action of the democratgation for him. The scheme wen't ic party, and democrats will ratify work, gentlemen, the democrats of in this campaign by nominating as old Marshall have seen too much of good and pure a man as Alabama then they are lying side by side of that retire gracefully from the field that grand old democratic county of politics and give the people a of Jackson, which will have the rest. good effect of purifying the politiby placing six in the Jones column. tion contest.

BUSINESS IS BUSINESS

The Chronicle is now worrying gages have been given in Calera. cares anything about the mortgages on Calera property, for the reason that it does not make any difference. a certain amount of business is done in the town, and it matters not if the capital is borrowed or owned. We are authorized to announce John The money has been invested, the business transacted and the people to the action of the democratic county of Calera are the customers. It is fortunate that a place affords facilities for securing the establishment of business even on the basis of borrowed capital. Calera affords financial backing within her own borders for those who can secure it. We can take pleasure in informing the Chronicle that the firm which AT THE Hill meeting in Birming- he probably refers to have a comham there were not enough persons mercial rating which makes them. present from whom to select officers | financially responsible for consider. ably more than fifty thousand dollars. It is frequently the case that Gov. Jones has won a decided thereby benefit it and themselves, shows up in other counties as he nobility there is in the living as for with his ante or lay down his hand. | month. We have opened the pot on a strong hand, and as the cards are stocked the county by an overwhelming where he was forced to the wall .majority. He will get the entire State Central Express. delegation, consisting of twenty-six votes, which will place him in the convention with a good prospect of winning. The most pleasant thing ting warmer all over the State, and connected with the result of that judging from present indications, primary was the fact that Mr. Adit will soon be at white heat. It is ams was so beautifully snowed unreported here that the governor der. He had claimed a fair share has an appointment for every day of Jefferson's vote, and only manin February. He goes first to aged to get four out of one hundred Marengo county. The people want and twenty-one. The gentleman him in Bibb and Marshall, and it is from Bibb stands about as much likely that he will be needed in show of being sent to congress by Shelby before the March winds be- the intelligent people of the ninth district as he does of being president. If he can get any office down in Bibb that will ease his insatiate appetite for public notoriety he had better take it. Outside, where they judge men by their ability and fitness, he is decidedly not in it. It is fortunate for him that he will not be sent to congress. Were he to go, the presure would be too much for his narrow mind, and he would be a wreck in a few days. However, he is safe, as he will not have fellowing enough to give him recog-

> EVERYTHING points to a decided victory for Jones. Butler county has been swung around and will be voted solidly for the governor. This was one of Kolb's counties in 1890, and conceeded to him again. The Governor went down there and talked to the people and won the county to himself. Wherever he goes and carries on an active yet conservative campaign, the victory is his. He has made a good governor, and there is no reason why he should be retired until his second term is out. Kolb does not win favor with any of his lines of attack upon the party action of two years ago. There is no doubt that he was defeated then by a combination, but ever produced. Mr. Kolb will

THE senate committee on privi cal atmosphere. After this meet- leges and elections have reported ing the dailies can correct their list in favor of Call in the Florida elec

THE EULLOCK county committee have met and formulated a plan for selecting the delegates to the sevitself over the fact that some morteral conventions. Wherein the Baptist divine, is dead. State committee ordered the vote In the present ago there has been The Journal neither knows nor for State officers in 1890 as a basis but three, Beecher, Spargeon and of beat representation Bullock Talmage, who attained to great readopts the vote of 1888 as their nown in the church. The first of basis. It is a well known fact that We published figures showing that all the strong Kolb counties did not years ago; now Spurgeon has gone poll full votes in 1800, through left to hold the banner of the Cross envy to the nomince for governor, high above the din of battle. These and now they come up and ignore men are of the few immortal ones the adoption of the State committee's basis because it fails to give their choice a sufficiency of votes to infinitely above and beyond matter, insure his nomination. In the face the world has known no grander of all this Mr. Kolb has the cheek to assert publicly that he would not have accepted the nemination in ful championship. They are gone, this facility and fortunately has the 1890 under any circumstances as but in their words alone their lives did Mr. Jones. There is not one are still bright and tresh, and he man in fifty that heard Mr. Kolb who is with us in the flesh, can not utter these words who believes it. His motto has been to take all he long but he, too, must fade from could get, and he never gives un poorth and leave it entirely bereft of anything he gets until the Supreme the place which these three alone Court compels him to.

It is reported that some of the persons use certain property to raise following of Rev. S. M. Adams are as we mused over social cigars and money which they do not need in circulating petitions down in Bibb thought on the problems of life .pacity. In doing this they add to congressionial race and run for Pro- would the world be." I replied, the business of their town and bate Judge of that county. If he off we searched as diligently for cuss abstract business propositions thing for him to stand for constable would have the same charity for with the Chronicle. The Journal in Randolph beat, and leave the other." It is too confirmed a habit question of where the capital came by men of larger caliber. The for death to close the chapter ere from has nothing to do with it. The Parson is looked for in the Third we look for the beautiful lines. Chronicle is requested to come up Party convention on the 22d of this the dead prove that we could

WE regretted to see Sam. H. Gist, a brother newspaper man, and less being in the community, "he he is warned to look out for the his family leave Centreville Tuesday, and know as well as himself weman who said of the devil, the is why he left. Sam run the Bibb the soul of perseverance." When the JEFFERSON county held her con-Blade in this county for nearly a heart is full of charity the world is gressional primary on last Satur- dozen years, a portion of the time full of beauty. Try it, and you will day and James E. Hawkins carried in Centreville, and it was here find it so.

and morals than we were.

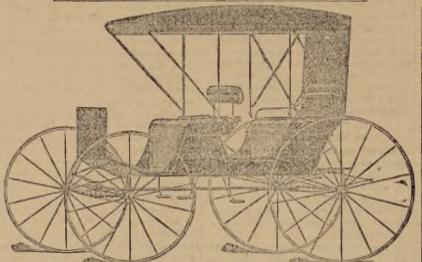

GOSSIP OF THE CRITIC.

one of the world's truly great men. over the river, and only Talmage is who live in history and in fame.-Great in intellect, in eloquence, in power, in all that places the mind achievement. Humanity has seen no greater philanthropy, society no better guide, religion no more faithcomplain if the Master calls him soon. Hope will have him stay

A friend said to me the other day order to increase their business caasking him to withdraw from the to the dead, how much better Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms. It is unnecessary, however, to dis-did in Jefferson it would be a nice that which lies in the grave, we has published the figures, and the more important offices to be filled we have fallen into, that of waiting have found it in life. Let us take for our guidance the example of the SAYS-If you are Interested in was a good whistler," or of the old

> Ir seems that there is no use for We feel grateful to Brother Con- a State Executive Committee of nelley for his sympathy. We are the democratic party in Alabama. now in our new home, and we shall All sorts of schemes are being laid ever have a warm place in our by the wishy-washy to foist their breast for the good people of Cen- favorites into office regardless of treville and Bibb county, and hope party law or party precedent. We that the Express will be more suc- have great confidence in the true cessful in teaching them democracy blues, and believe all will be well in

THE ALABAMA (PREMIUM NO. 14) FREE,

This handsome Carriage is only one of the many Vehicles which THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY is offering its customers for 1892.

Special Premiums for Men, Women, Boys and Girls.
THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER produced the Champion Crops reported in the State last year. Write for Circulars and Prices. ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY.

MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA

Brick Store, Montgomery Avenue.

Prescriptions Carefully Compounded at All Hours by an Experienced Druggist. WITCH STORY AND ADDRESS OF THE OWNER, THE OW

Col. Sheffield's weak-kneed politics doubtless stay in the race until the to follow off after his kind. And convention, but he should after Patrenage of All Who are in Need of Goods in My Line, Which are Offered at the Lowest Possible Margines.

R. SCOTT, Proprietor.

Danking House

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA. Receive Deposits.

Negotiate Loans.

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York Louisville and Birmingham at regular rates equipment by the larger cities.

We transact a general banking business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

The New York Store.

Oalera. Ale.

DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, BOOTS, SHOES, GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS.

CLOTHING & HATS.

And if you ever Buy

Hose, Helf-Hose, Silk Ties Scerfs, Ric., Etc.,

Please Listen to Us just 20 Minutes. We are overstocked, and in order to Reduce Stock before we take invoice on February 1st, we will sell you any Dry

We have a Large Stock to dispose of and when you hear the Prices you will be astonished how such goods can be sold so low. Listen:

Cotton Checks 41-2 to 5 cents; Nice Cashmere Dress Goods 1934 cents per vard; Same at 22 1-2; a Finer Goods at 27 1-2; All Woor Ladies Cloth fifty inches wide only 37 1-2 cents, former price 65; Ladies Fast Black Hose 7 1-2 cents per pair; a better goods for 12 1-2 cents; a Fine Hose for 17 1-2 cents, city price 40. cents; Salt 6; cents per sack; Fine Shoes $1 25 to $2 50; Good Shoes 1 00 per

Come and see us. We have too much to mention all in this paper. Come at once. We guarantee all prices named, and a child will get as low prices as as older person. No favorites, but one price to all, Come and see us and you will find we mean business. We want to

Reduce the Stock,

before taking Invoice, and if Prices can do it

THEY MUST BE CUT INTO

A. C. WADE &

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION.

Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, -12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

1. It is the best of all weekly newspapers.

List invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.

the farmer's family, bringing each week 6. Bill Arp, Plunkett, and Uncle Recheer to the fireside and happiness to mus and a host of other special writers the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to the household.

3. It covers the news of the whole world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thorough news servica from every important news center in the world.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone is worth many times its subscription price to every farmer. This department is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasure to every family, and the name of muss and a host of other special writers are engaged by the year, and their inimitable sketches appear each week.

7. It is the People's Friend, and is the sturdy champion of the agricultural interests of the south.

8. It pays more money for its special features and for ibs news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers of the south, and much more than any weekly newspaper in America.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One Dollar ser year, each paper at the price of a postage stamp. Think of it! Every time a hen lays an egg she pays for one issue of the greatest weekly newspapers in the world.

ure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information.

THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Gg.

E. T. V. & G. R. R. No. 1, To Selma, 4:40 p. m. 2:04 a. m. 2, From Selma,

ALABAMA MINERAL.

4:35 p. m. 10:25 a. m. No. 85, Arrives at 86, Departs at

AT THE CHURCHES. PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m. of her son Andrew of this place.

The New Drug Store sells all kinds

METHODIST-Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

Paptist Church—Rev. J. G. Lowrey, pastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday achool at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7:00 p. m, every Thursday.

The New Drug Store sells a cake of soap and gives you a hand mirror.

Several of our people attended Baptist Church-Rev. J. G. Lowrey

CUMBERIAND PRESENTERIAN—J. C Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3.

Services Sunday at New Salerh, and Oscar Wagner, mans on Emery Bros.' but roe street.

The small boys of Calera were made pleasant one day this week by the appearance on the streets of an Italian, music and a mimic bear.

Ocala lime per bb

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

The next best thing possible to insurance against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of Calera.

Read and possible to insurance against that H. C. Reynolds, of our county will soon build and stock a large business house in that mining town.

Capt. R. E. O'Brien and family

Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the stoams of the financial world caunot touch them; where the assessor cannot to the property of the stoams of the stoams." tax them; where they are safe for your tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old type should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extend from a company with the Design T.

The Journal returns thanks of tract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-Witt Talmage.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

RICHARD K. FOX. Square. New York City.

Happy Hoosiers.

ing arising from from Kidney and Liver trouble." John Leslie, farmer the Express and Courier, are still severe for his tender constitution and he Liver trouble." John Leshe, farmer and stockman, of same place, says:

"Find Electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medicine, made me feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner hardware merchant, same town says:

Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found now strongth good appetite.

The Express and Courier, are still severe for his tender constitution and he was hurriedly taken to the genial sunshing county of Butler, where "under his own vine and fig-tree" he promised by the people will join you after awhile.

During our short visit to Centreville last Saturday, we were placed under renewed obligations to Mr.

The Express and Courier, are still severe for his tender constitution and he was hurriedly taken to the genial sunshing county of Butler, where "under his own vine and fig-tree" he promised to grow and regain his robust proportions, but too sad to relate, a man from the city of Montgomery of immense proportions stepped on his fail body, and, atthough Doctors Sheffold of Montgomery were have not Kolb's onen letter, because we have not

A Wonder Worker.

of Burlington, Ohio, states that he era, Tuesday morning on way to had been under the care of two prom-his fathers, near Askly, in reply to all over the state, and who expected to ment until he was not able to get Thomas, was dying. around. They pronounced his case to be Consumption and incurable. He was persuaded to try Dr. King's been on the move this week. He New Discovery for Consumption, without resting. He found, before he had used half of a dollar bottle, that he was much better; he continued to house town. use it and is to-day enjoying good health. If you have any Throat, passed through our town twice this Lnng or Chest Trouble try it We guarantee satisfaction.

Spesimen Cases.

troubled with Neuralgia and Rheumatism, his stomache was disordered, his Liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. in the South. He is a thorough-Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured bred English setter, and were he body to dictate to us how we should Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill.,had a running sore on his leg of eight years' show for a seat in the United States any political party and any attempt tric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Balve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawra, O., given his usual evening's arlowance our order.

To the next 10 each solid silver in violation of every principle of our order.

To the next 10 each solid Gold our order.

To the next 10 each solid Gold our order.

To the next 10 each solid Gold our order.

To the next 10 each solid Gold our order. had five large Fever sores on his leg, of food in Calera, and at 6 o'clock doctors said he was incurable. One next morning he was in Centreville, Bucklens Arnica salve cured him en eled the entire distance in the night published by the executive committee of

EXCURSION RATES TO NEW

TOWN TOPICS.

The Thomas Cat is the name of a new paper in Hot Springs, Ark. "What's in a name?"

The New Drug Store sells fine tobacco

10:19 p. m. Married in Six Mile, on Tuesday of last week, Mr. W. F. Thompson and Mrs. Roxie Cottingham.

The New Drug Store sells fancy sta-

The Advertiser offers some cash premiums, as may be seen by their notice in another column.

carefully at all nours.

of Brierfield, is visiting the family

The New Drug Store sells all kinds of

The beautiful weather of the past two weeks has put our people to thinking about working gardens.

services Sunday at New Salem, and Oscar Wagner, manager of masons,

The Courier, of Blockton, informs

Capt. R. E. O'Brien and family, of Needmore, have moved to Calera, where they will reside for the fu-We welcome them to our

The editor of the JOURNAL was the brick. off on a two days' business to Bir-

Mr. Sam H. Gist and family, for soft rays of the departing sun were kisgood people of Calera in getting little Kolb Boom breathed his last. Is the only illustrated paper in the fixed up for living in their new up there.

for favors.

Mr Frank Huffman, a young man bellville, Ky., passed through Cola telegram that his father, M. C.

Judge Campbell, of the News has dawned his new suit and nobby hat himself and took a trip to the Court third party:

S. D. Logan, of Centreville, week going to and from Montgom ery, in attendance on the Supreme Court. Mr. Logan said to one of our citizens that he believed Bibb S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was would go for Jones. If Jones can called authority of the National Farmers' Alliance is for that sole purpose. We did not allow that body to dictate to us how we should vote nor to commit or bind us by recommendation or otherwise to any political party and any attempt to do so is without authority and is given his usual evening's aflowance of food in Calera, and at 6 o'clock next morning he was in Centravilla. carry Bibb, he can carry the State. bottle Electric Bitters and one box a distance of 28 miles, having travtime over a rough road.

Talladega Reporter. The decision of the State Committee doing away with ORLEANS.

On account of Mardi Gras the East Tenn., Va. & Ga. R'y will sell excursion tickets from all points on the line to New Orleans at one fair for the round trip. Ticket will be sold Feb., 15th to 29th inclusive, good to return until March 15th, 1892.

The State Committee doing away with the prorate system will greatly facilitate the selection of candidates and weaken materially the power of the sorchead to complain. As it is the fairest of any way of selecting delegates it is expected to meet with general favor through in all probability the action of the committee which, to say the least, was very foolish, will not be of a modifying nature to that class which, cannot realize that the research and dependent of the Alliance. The two organizations are entirely separate, the Peoples party being outside of and dependent of the Alliance. The two organizations are entirely separate, the Peoples party being outside of and dependent of the Alliance. The two organizations are entirely separate, the Peoples party being outside of and dependent of the Alliance. The two organizations are entirely separate, the Peoples party being outside of and dependent of the Alliance. The two organizations are entirely separate, the Peoples party being outside of and dependent of the Alliance. The two organizations are entirely separate, the Peoples party being outside of and dependent of the Alliance. The two organizations are entirely separate, the Peoples party being outside of and dependent of the Alliance. The two organizations are entirely separate, the Peoples party being outside of and dependent of the Alliance. The two organizations are entirely separate, the Peoples party being outside of and dependent of the Alliance. The two organizations are entirely separate, the Peoples party being outside of and dependent of the Alliance. The two organizations are entirely separate, the Peoples party being outside of and dependent of the Alliance. The two organizations are entirely separate, the Peoples party being outside of and d

THE SHELBY AHEAD.

TEST OF SHELBY LIME MADE IN FLORIDA. Mr. J. D. Hardy, president of the Calera Lime Company, has returned from a trip through Florida, in the interest of his company. While in Jacksonville he had a test made of the Shelby Lime. The following result is announced in the Times-Union, of Jacksonville.

made on the Emery Bros.' building on Monroe street, Jacksonville, Janthen worked over and tempered with sufficient sand to make all the mortar the same richness and to proper condition for laying brick, The following is the actual test on face or single brick wall:

Ocala lime...1.400 Brick bbl. lime Ladd's lime...1.674 " " " Chewaela lime 1,890 " " " Shelby lime...3,108 " " "

The above test was made by J. on Emery Bros.' building on Mon-

The same lime will lay brick on any sized wall from 12 inches and

Ocala lime per bbl..... 800 Ladd lime per bbl.....1,000 Chewacla lime per bbl....1,100 Shelby lime per bbl.....1,600

The Alabama Coal Company is the agent for the sale of the Shelby lime in Florida and South Georgia.

IN MEMORIAM.

As the bright evening of January 30 was drawing to a close, and while the the kindness shown them by the sing the shies a sweet good night, poor

The subject of this sketch, though so Mailed to any address in the United day morning. He was seen by a shout the 20th of December he took an Journal reporter, and informed him that local relities are red hot in critical the still of him that local relities are red hot. him that local politics are red hot in spite of the skill of his great physician, Doctor Reuben, and his wet nurses Miss Eliza J. Gist, two doors west of (Messrs. Talliaferro, Altman, Lca and the Calera Shoe Factory, has long expe- Bowman) he came near passing away. Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength, good appetite found new strength, good appetite strength, good appetite found new were summoned by telegraph, and all that art and science could do was done, lean upon him for support have the prayers of their faithful

WHAT does this mean if it does Montgomery and Tuesday he dressed made to force the Alliance into a entitled to your support.

> HUBBARD, Mo., Feb. 1. 1892. To the members of the Farmers and Laborers Union of Missouri: Brothers:-Be on your guard. Do not allow yourselves to be committed or compromised or entangled politically. The meeting that is to on or be held in St. Louis, Mo., on the TOBEKA Ka., Feb., 3.—The official organ of the Farmers Alliance in this state the order, this week contains statements authorized by the executive committee, showing the distinction between the People's party and the Farmers' Alliance.

until March 15th, 1892.

Through Pullman Sleepers leave Selma daily at 7:00 p. m., arrive New Orleans 7:00 a. m. without change. For further information call on any Ticket Agent of the Co. Or apply to E. W. Wrenn, G. P. & T. A. Knoxville, Tenn. L. A. Bell, A. G. P. A. Selma, Ala.

Selma, Ala.

will not be of a modifying nature to that class which cannot realize that the resolution has no weight whatever in the action of a county convention. It is none of the State Committee's business how the people select their delegates. It is to be hoped the counties over the State will go along as they please and not make a bng-a-boo out of it. While it is unquestionably the fair way it is not lay nor is it binding. adopt strict party measures as such with-in Alliance meetings proper, without the liability of forfeiting their charter. We

PRESS PARAGRAPHS.

Greensboro Watchman: Editor West, of the Russellville Southern Idea, is a straight Democrat; "all wool and a yard wide," while his father is a Republican, and a candidate for Probate Judge of Franklin county.

Midland City Clipper: With Jones, Oates and many other such true and Democrats as these in the different pubfnion, of Jacksonville.

"Below will be found a test ade on the Emery Bros." building many building to do so. Give us the "oats" and "corn" and let the "cobs" pass by, as we do not need them in Midland City.

uary 27, 1892, giving number of brick laid by one barrel of each of the limes named, each lime being arefully at all nours.

Mrs. Gallaway, an esteemed lady

Mrs. Gallaway, an esteemed lady who has been faithful to every trust re-posed in him, with a man who is being smirched by his own record on file in the office he asplres to.

> Hamilton Times: We have heard some of the leading Alliance men of this county say that if Kolb was nominated they would not vote for him. Well, really it would be a tough dish to tackle, but there is no cause for alarm. This sippery old fowl will never be served to Alabama Democrats in but one way and that will be after it has been well smothered, feathers and all. It can then be taken without sauce or ceremony-back to Barbour and buried deep down in the political grave now being orepared for it.

Advertiser: Kolb started out claiming 60 counties of the 66. He has picked the three he felt surest of. He hasn't carried a one of them. The last loss is a former stronghold. The question naturally occurs, if he can't carry Butler, what can be carry? Governor Jones what can he carry? Governor Jones has again proven himself the leader for the hour. His superior as a campaigner has never been seen in Alabama. As a stumper before the people, he makes unprecedented conquests. He is bound to win. He is not going to be but. The Calera, Ala. guarantees this lime to lay 1,600 brick to the barrel of lime when the mortar is properly prepared and economy used in laying the brick.

J. D. HARDY,

Pres. Calera Lime Co. Calera.

Win. He is not going to be beat. The bulk of the brains, virtue and will of the State are with him. With such a leader, how can such forces fail? It is impossible. Kolb will be beat far worse this year than in 1890. In fact, isn't he already beat? Can he ever recover from from his failures so far? Who will fight with him or for him?

Carrellton.

Carrollton Alabamian: When Kolb abandoned the charge of fraud in the last State Convention, which he did through his champion, Col. Taliaferro, in the Jefferfon campaign, he then gave up all just claim, as a loyal Democrat, for his opposition to Governor Jones.

Jacksonville Republican: It has been given out by delegates who attended, that the District Alliance Convention of Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United day marning. He was seen by a should always be left. free to vote for any Democratic candidate they may prefer. Anything else is un-

Clayton Courier: The great work before the Democracy of the country this year is to elect a Democratic President. And the indications now are that from Wm. Timmons, postmaster of Idarience in Dress Making, and solicits patronage in her line from the ladies of Cahas done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from from Kidney and ing arising from from Kidney and in the Caller Shoe Factory, has long experience in Dress Making, and solicits patronage in her line from the ladies of Cahas done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from from Kidney and in the Caller Robe Factory, has long experience in Dress Making, and solicits patronage in her line from Florida to Washington, the Democracy will be united as one man in support of their line from the ladies of Cahas done more for me than all other ladies of Cahas done more for me than all other ladies of Cahas done more for me

Roanoke Herald: Capt. Kolb is out in Linden Reporter: As will be seen by the notice of his appointments, Gov. Rev. John M. Thomas, of Campbut he never rallied from the effects of this week. The Governor is known perturbatile, Ky., passed through Coltant ponderous foot, and died as related that ponderous foot, and died as related to but few of our people, and it above. The mourners who are scattered all over the state, and who expected to accord to him that welcome that should be given a faithful public servant. The people of Marengo, well known for their good sense and patriotic devotion, can-not fail to see in Gov. Jones a man whose record is as spotless as the noon-day's sun. If he has made you a good Coughs and Colds and at that time Monday morning and hied away to not mean that an effort will be officer, under Democratic custom he is on or before March 31, 1832, our simple Bible question: "Where in the Bible is first found the word "DLIGENT," we will give the following rewards in the order named:— 200.00 Ring

"SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES!"

To the next 100 each Handsome
Photograph Album
To the next 200 each Handsome
Gold Pen and Holder
To the next 200 each $2.50 Cash

CONDITIONS.

ch competitor must find the word in Bible—not in captions of chapters, foot arginal notes, and with his answer to question he must send enclosed $1.00 one year's subscription to The Weekly ertiser, otherwise the answer will not be recorded.

This contest is open for old and young.
Every letter is recorded and numbered—there can be no mistakes. Send money by postal note, money order or registered letter.
We pay no attention to answers without subscription to The Advertiser.

The Advertiser is by far the best news and literary paper published in the South, and gives its subscribers sixteen pages a week, eight on Tuesday and eight on Friday, making it almost equal to a daily paper. To Alabamians in other States it is like a letter from home twice a week. To read it is to

Don't delay until too late to get one of the big rewards. Reference: Any Business House in Mont-

ADVERTISER, Montgomery, Ala.

The Calera Journal,

A Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

The Journal will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of he state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at every point in the county.

«JOB PRINTING»

Quickly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

Commercial Printing a Specialty and Legal

THE JOURNAL will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets wil be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work

Realized on an investment of

Mr. W. F. Eltzroth, an esteemed school teacher in the town of Morrow, Ohio, states his case so clearly that no comment is necessary, further than to say to those run down and out of health,

Co and Do Likewise

"I feel that I must add my name to the list of those who feel grateful for benefit derived from using Hood's Sarsaparilla. It has been worth $100 a bottle to me in the following manner, viz.: I have been teaching school for 3 years. Last fall I became worn out, and had no appetite, couldn't sleep at night, and became so debilitated that it was impossible to perform my duty as a teacher. I

Wrote My Resignation

to take effect in two weeks, but I was persuaded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. Within a week I was so teaching. I have used two bottles and feel like a new man and have over $200 clear from $2 speut for Hood's Sarsaparilla." W. F. Eltzroth.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best blood purifier, the best strength builder, the best nerve helper. Give it a trial. Hood's Pills are the best family cathartic.

ADVICE TO WOMEN

If you would protect yourself from Painful, Profuse, Scanty, Suppressed or Irregular Menstruation you must use

BRADFIELD'S FEMALE REGULATOR

CARTERSVILLE, April 28, 1889.
This will certify that two members of my immediate family, after having suffered for years from Meastrust Irregularity, being treated without benefit by physicians, were at length completely oured by one bottle of Bradileid's Female Regulator. Its effect is truly wonderful. J. W. STLANGE.

Book to "WOMAN" mailed FREE, which contains valuable information on all female diseases. BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO., FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

"German Syrup"

Just a bad cold, and a hacking cough. We all suffer that way some-How to get rid of them is the study. Listen-"I am a Ranchman and Stock Raiser. My life is rough and exposed. I meet all weathers in the Colorado mountains. I sometimes take colds. Often they are severe. I have used German Syrup five years for these. A few doses will cure them at any stage. The last one I had was stopped in 24 hours. It is infallible." James A. Lee, Jefferson, Col.

HOW TO MAKE MONEY

A PROFITABLE BUSINESS ON A LIMITED CAPITAL

apen to any enterprising party in every town and village in the United States in which there is no newsdealer. For particulars address THE AMERICAN NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK.

CIVEN AWAY! to our customers of 1892. If you are interested in flowers send for our CATALOQUE of the grandest novelties and effered. IT WILL PAY YOU, write now ROBT. SCOTT & SON, Philadelphia, Pa. KING COTTON

Buy or sell your Cotton on JONES 5-Ton Cotton Scale. NOT CHEAPEST BUT BEST. For terms address JONES OF BINGHAMTON, BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

deserves as a season Reasons why YOU SHOULD ORDER YOUR

T.W.WOOD & SONS RICHMOND, VA.

GARDEN SEEDS.

Our GRASS, CLOVER,

NO RISK

INSENDING MONEY through the mats, and we arrival of all orders filled by us.

ague, which is the raced. Mailed free, Sep T.W. WOOD & SONS Scodamon, SICHECAR, Vo. WEALTH IN ORCHIDS.

The Importation of These Aristocrats o the Flower World.

Very few realize the amount of money invested in the orchids, the aristocrats of the flowery world, and though they have been attracting widespread interest for the past dozen years, the general public may not be acquainted with the fact that millions of dollars are involved in the magnificent collections of these plants. Cargoes of bulbs and roots from all parts of the world are annually imported, which are readily disposed to the flower-loving public for sums ranging from $1 up to the thousands. One rare bulb from the forests of Mexico, Brazil or India will frequently sell for the price of a grand diamond ring, and occasionally a small fortune is represented by half a dozen poor-looking bulbs that a street boy would kick aside with his foot if found in his way. The great floriculturists of this country and Europe employ orchid hunters to explore the woods and jungles of every known country for some rare specimen of these plants, and thousands of dollars go annually to pay the expenses of these trips into unknown lands. Danger, death and sickness of every conceivable kind threaten the hunters, but despite these they penetrate to the most dangerous wilds to find their

The species of orchids now number between 6,000 and 7,000, about half of which have been brought into cultivation, and they are recognized by the best botanists about 334 genera. The great number of these species occur in the tropics, but many species grow in cool temperature, and a very few in the frigid zones. Many exotic species are cultivated, and they are among the most desirable plants for horticulturists.

Not many can explain what an orchid is, for they show almost every conceivable variation in form and color, and marking of the flowers, and the habits of the plants are almost as diverse. Some define them as air plants, but the larger portion are not; some define them as parasitic plants, but very few specimens are parasites, others know them by their bulb-like roots, and yet many of them do not have such roots, while still others suppose that they are peculiar to tropical climates, but many are natives of Canada. Many species of orchids are leafless, while others have numerous thick and stiff leaves. Numbers of them live on the trunks of trees in their native tropical forests and obtain nourishment from the air. Some live upon decaying matter, while many others are parasites, drawing their nourishment from live plants. In our Northern woods some of the species live upon the roots of

A theft has just been brought home to a man by means of an egg. Some days ago M. Douet, pottery manufacturer, living in the Rue Goudon, Paris, was disagreeably surprised on returning from the theater with his family to find that his house had been ransacked, almost all the furniture destroyed and a sum 6,000f. in gold and notes stolen. The next morning he put M. Siadoux, Commissary of Police, in possession of these facts, who thereupon proceeded to the spot and opened an inquiry. In the course of his search he found a broken egg, from which the white only appeared to en sucked. He brought circumstance to the notice of M. Douet, who then remembered that a carter named Delbars whom he had dismissed for dirty habits, was accustomed to cat eggs in that way. They arrested him along with his brother. When questioned as to how they had spent their time on the night of the robbery, they were embarrassed, and finally confessed that they had broken into M. Douet's house for motives of revenge.

THE RIPANS TABULES regulate the stomach, liver and bowels, purify the blood, are please

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

No Chemicals are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strenath of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one centa cup. It is delicious, nour-ishing, strengthening, EASILY progester, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as for persons in health. Sold by Grocers everywhere. W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

FROM THE "PACIFIC JOURNAL." "A great invention has been made by Dr. Tutt. That eminent chemist has produced instantaneously and is perfectly harmless." In Brompton oratory Thursday. Ad-Price, $1. Office, 39 & 41 Park Place, N. Y. mission to the oratory was by ticket

FARMERS PLUCKED.

"PROTECTION" COMPELS THEM TO PAY MORE FOR THEIR AGRICULTURAL IM-PLEMENTS THAN IS PAID TO AMERI-CAN MANUFACTURERS IN FOREIGN leaders on the subject.

That the American farmer, who is compelled by the tariff to contribute so large a part of his yearly earnings to the support of the protected industries, should find himself actually discriminated against when he attempts to buy from those industries and made to pay higher prices for their products than other customers is such an abuse of protection that the defenders of that system have always felt called upon to meet it with something more than their usual energy. They not only deny the charge, but revile those who venture to make it. When, therefore, during the House debate on the McKinley bill, Mr. Fithian, of Illinois, and other members presented what seemed conclusive proof that makers of agricultural implements in the United States frequently sold them to our own farmers at a higher price than they asked from their competitors, the farmers of other countries, the charge was met by all manner of vigorous and vehement denials and counter statements. and the wires were kept hot transmitting to Washington the virtuous indignation of suspected parties.

The very last words uttered by Major McKinley in behalf of his bill were reenforced by a carefully prepared statement of the American Tariff League, which he adopted as his own and incorporated into remarks, and "which," he declared, "entirely disposes of the whole charge." This statement was made up by securing the denials of selected manufacturers of farming implements, on the theory of defence adopted by the thief when confronted by witnesses that saw him steal the sheep, who declared his ability to produce five times as many witnesses who did not see him steal it. Some of the witnesses called on to testify by the League did not confine themselves to the statement of facts, but, as usual, went off into abuse of the other side. Thus Mr. Walter A. Wood, President of the Mower and Reaper Manufacturing Company, ventured to add to his denial as "There is no country in the world that buys any kind of agricultural machinery as cheaply as the Americans buy such machinery; and it is against a member of Congress's intelligence and integrity to get up in Congress and make a statement in conflict with this fact. He ought to be sent home and to school or to the workhouse for doing it.'

And the American Tariff League, elated by such crushing rejoiners, triumphantly declared that "the charge that the American farmers pay more for their implements and machinery than the foreign farmers has been shown to be false." And Major McKinley adopted and echoed the assertion.

But fortunately for Mr. Fithian and his associates they are not obliged to go "home" or to "school" or to the "work house," for tariff reform is no longer left to the defence of politicians and college professors. Many of our most sagacious manufacturers are now among its champions, and they supply us with facts not heretofore always accessible. Among the most intelligent of them is Mr. A. B. Farquhar of York, Penn., one of the largest manufacturers of agricultural implements in the country, who has recently published a val "Economic and Industrial Delusions." which deals many heavy and direct blows at both the theory and workings of the tariff. In this volume are blended, in an instructive manner, the teachings of reason and the lessons of experience; a familiarity with economic literature and the exact knowledge of a successful and extensive manufacturer and exporter. Mr. Farquhar says: "It is quite true that our firm sells implements and machinery through Mexico, South America and Africa at prices from five to ten per cent. less than they are sold for in this country," and adds that they send on an average one-half of their manufactures abroad. Mr. Farquhar sums up the whole case when he says that "the manu. facturer who is able to export his goods can have no use for protection except to enable him to extort more money from home purchasers than he is able to get from those abroad."

The evidence was overwhelming and conclusive enough, notwithstanding the denials of Mr. Walter A. Wood and others, before Mr. Farquhar spoke, but his statements set the matter forever at rest and show that Major McKinley has been once again the victim of his own credulity when he declared that the paper of the Tariff League "entirely disposed of the whole charge" made by Mr. Fithian and other defenders of the American farmer in the House .- St. Louis Republic.

A Broken Rail.

The north-bound Texas express on the Iron Mountain, due in St. Louis at 7 this morning, was wrecked a mile south of Desoto, Miss., at 7:30 Friday morning. The wreck was caused by a broken rail. The ladies' coach left the track, and the sleeping car was thrown several feet and turned over on its side, slighly injuring two passengers and three trainmen. W. Mc-Gregor, of Flint, Texas, was badly bruised and cut about the head and face. F. R. Nichols, of Greely, Col., left side bruised and left hand badly cut by a window pane. The sleeping car conductor was bruised and hurt about the head.

Entered by Ticket.

The funeral services over the remains of Cardinal Manning were held in Brompton oratory Thursday. Ad-BONS, WAMMINGTON, D. C. & CINCINNATI. O A Case of Nerves.

The Republican organ of this city has wrought itself into a distressed and distressing state of mind. It is tremulous with apprehension lest the Democratic party abandon its warfare upon the McKinley system of protection. And it is daily writing grieved and frantic

Our neighbor may quiet its nerves.

The Democratic party has no more notion of abandoning its policy of hostility to the McKinley tariff than President Harrison has of resigning his office. It means this year to secure the repeal of every line of the McKinley law which can be in any wise repealed with a packed Republican Senate to oppose. It means to repeal the whole abominable thing and to substitute a just, equitable and constitutional law in its stead, as soon as the manifest will of the people shall find expression in a Democratic Senate and a Democratic Executive, an event which will not be so long delayed that the Tribune may not patiently wait Democracy represents the practical good sense of the people. It is always opportunist in action, though uncompromising in its insistence on principle. It declines to waste its strenght in futile endeavors. It prefers to accomplish practical results.

It will this year force the repeal of the most oppressive clauses of the McKinley law, or force the Republican party to answer to the people at the polls for its refusal to permit the relief. In November it will elect a Democratic President, and, the majority of the people in the majority of the States being Democrats, it will come into control of the Senate also as soon as the slow expiry of terms shall permit.

Then the Tribune will find the party's determination to sweep McKinleyism forever from the statute book to be quite as fresh and lively as that journal could possibly desire.—New York World.

Blaine or Harrison?

The dissatisfied element, in a party having control of Government, is generally exceedingly boisterous and vindictive. It looks around for some eminent man as its leader, and there are generally "eminent men" who are willing to avail themselves of this feeling of dissatisfaction.

The Republican party at this time is divided into two elements, the Harrison element and the anti-Harrison element. Mr. Blaine is generally recognized as having more of what is called "magnetism" than any other Republican leader, and the anti-Harrison men are rallying around his standard. They have labored persistently for twelve months to convince the people that the Harrison forces were utterly demoralized, that the President had no following anywhere, and that the mere mention of Blaine's name was sufficient!in any gathering to scatter the Harrison forces.

The Chicago Herald calls attention to the significance of the defeat of Mr. Foraker in this connection, saying:

"The defeat of Foraker in Ohio may justly be regarded, owing to the circumstances surrounding it, as, in an impor-tant sense, a rebuke of that insanely emotional display of fraud and froth which is, perhaps, correctly denominated a Blaine sentiment. Those who fail to see behind John Sherman's victory the distinct and positive triumph of the head of the National Administration over the fuss and fury of the Blaine movement have not learned aright the political lesson taught by the action of the Republicans in the Ohio Legislature."

There has recently been in Indiana a strong contest against the Harrison administration. The point of attack was the State Committee, which is was proposed to organize in the interest of Mr. Blaine. The returns are just in, with the result that ten of the new members of the committee are supporters of Mr. Harrison. The old committee stood seven to six in favor of Harrison.

It would seem therefore that while the Blaine men are doing) the shouting, the Harrison men are getting in their work. -Courier-Journal.

An III-Fated Family.

A singular fatality seems to have followed the family of Jacob Barnhart, a prosperous farmer residing three miles south of Alliance, Ohio. Some years ago Louis, the eldest son, jokingly pointed a gun at his little sister, not knowing it was loaded, and pulled the trigger. The gun was discharged, blowing the child's head to atoms. Last summer, Alvanus, another son, while plowing corn, was struck by lightning and instantly killed. When found the clothing was completely burned from his body and his charred and blackened remains presented a spectacle sickening to behold. His horse was also killed, while the plow-handles were twisted and turned by the electric current. Friday morning, Preston, the youngest son, aged 17 years, started to school, but concluded to play truant, and boarded a Cleveland & Pittsburg freight train. When just within the city limits of Alliance he fell between the cars and was ground to pieces, his remains being scattered along the track for a considerable distance. Another member of this ill-fated family has been a helpless cripple from its birth.

Flour For Ireland.

Twenty car loads of flour, milled at the factory of Koexler Bros., St. Louis, arrived at New Orleans, Friday, by the Illinois Central road. This is the first lot of a consignment of 125 cars of this staple which is bound for Galway, Ireland. It will go by the steamer Plucy from New Orleans.

For Public Buildings.

Representative Bankhead, of Alabama, (h irman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, says that bills for new buildings and improvements, to the amount of $27,000,-000, is already before the Committee.

On December 19th, I was confined to my room with the Grippe. The Treasurer of the "Commercial Advertiser" recommend. ed that I should try a bottle of "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral," as it had cured him of the same complaint. I sent for a hottle, and in two days I was able to resume my business, and am now entirely cured.

La Grippe.

As I took no other remedy, I can but give all the credit to the "Cherry Pectoral," which I gratefully recommend as a speedy specific for this disease.

Yours very truly,

F. T. HARRISON. 29 Park Row, New York, N. Y.

A male swan is a cob, a female one a hen. The term "cygnet" is applicable to the bird during the first year of its life only, a "gray bird" being the proper term for it until the maturity of a white swan is attained. Catarrh Can't be Cured

With local applications, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you have to take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and uncous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is no quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

F. J. Cheney & Co., Props., Toledo, O. Sold by druggists, price 75c.

The Only One Ever Printed. CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 8 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing cach week, from The Dr. Harior Medicine Co. This house piaces a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, BEAUTI-FUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FIRE.

There are things other than turkeys that ose their heads when they get full.

For impure of thin Blood, Weakness, Malaria Neuragia, Indigestion, and Biliousness, take Brown's iron Bitters—it gives strength, making old persons feel young—and young persons strong; cleasant to take.

There is a marked difference between roasted and raw chestnuts.

FITE stopped free F.A. ALLES GREAT MERVE RESTORMS. No fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline, 931 Arch St. Phila., Pa.

If you want to part with a good name, get nto politics, it will do the rest.

For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and Stomach disorders, use Brown's Iron Bitters. The Best Tonic, it rebuilds the system, cleans the Blood and strengthens the muscles. A splendid tonic for weak and debilitated persons. The duty of a torchlight parade is to throw some light on the political situation.

COUGES AND HOARSENESS.—The irritation which induces coughing immediately relieved by use of "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold only in boxes. BEECHAM'S PILLS enjoy the largest sale of any proprietary medicine in the world. Made only in St. Helens, England.

If there is any loose corn about the barn garl the turkey is sure to gobble it.

ONE ENIOYS Both the method and results when

Syrup of Figs is taken; it is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts | logue. gently yet promptly on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and cures habitual constipation. Syrup of Figs is the only remedy of its kind ever produced, pleasing to the taste and acceptable to the stomach, prompt in its action and truly beneficial in its effects, prepared only from the most healthy and agreeable substances, its many excellent qualities commend it to all and have made it the most popular remedy known.

Syrup of Figs is for sale in 50c and $1 bottles by all leading druggists. Any reliable druggist who may not have it on hand will procure it promptly for any one who wishes to try it. Do not accept any substitute.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. 8AN FRANCISCO, CAL. LOUISVILLE, KY. NEW YORK, N.V.

rells how. 50c. a year. FREE Send for sample. Dr. J. H. DYE, Editor, Burtalo,

Am. N. U. - No 5. 1892.

Made well —the weak, nervous or ailing woman who takes Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It's a medicine that's guaranteed to help her. It's an invigorating, restorative tonic, soothing cordial and bracing nervineand a certain cure for all the functional derangements, painful disorders or chronic weaknesses that affect women. For ulcerations, displacements, bearing-down sensations, everything that's known as a "fe-male complaint," it's an unfailing remedy. It's a peculiar one, too. Peculiar in composition, peculiar in its cures, and peculiar in the way it's sold. It's guaranteed to give satisfaction, in every case, or the money is refunded. You pay only

It's the big, old-fashioned pill that makes the most disturbancebut it's one of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets that does the most good. Mild and gentle, but thorough and effective-the smallest, cheapest and casiest to take. They cleanse and regulate the liver, stomach and for the good you get.

Kennedy's MedicalDiscovery

Takes hold in this order:

Bowels. Liver, Kidneys. Inside Skin. Outside Skin.

Driving everything before it that ought to be out. You know whether you need it or not. Sold by every druggist, and manufactured by

DONALD KENNEDY, ROXBURY, MASS.

What Piano? Musically, it is of immense importance what one you buy. Its life will be many years; years that will make or mar your musical life. Then don't make a choice that you will regret all these years.

In the Ivers and Pond you not only get a first-class piano; you get all you pay for.

We send on approval, at our risk and expense, or direct you to a dealer who can supply you. Write for Cata-

Ivers & Pond

Piano Company, Boston.

RELIEVES all Stomach Distress REMOVES Nausea, Sense of Fullness, Congestion, Pain. REVIVES FAILING ENERGY. RESTORES Normal Circulation, and WARMS TO TOE TIPS.

OR. HARTER MEDICINE DO. Ct. LONIS. MO. PECAN MAKE MONEY for you by safe investments in the pros-perous State of Washington. Write us. GAMWELL & WARNER, Investment Bunkers, Fairhaven, Wash.

THE HAYES DOUBLE CYLINDER FORCE PUMPS. Guaranteed to be the best on earth. Sent on 30 days 'trial. Write for circulars to Hayes Pump & Planter Co., Galva, III. PATENTS W. T. Fitzgerald, Washington, D. C. 40-page book free.

$65 A MONTH for 8 Bright Young Men or Ladies in each county. Address P. W. ZIEGLER CO., Phila., Pa.

VOL. I.

CALERA, ALA., FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1892.

NO. 16.

To a Southern Girl.

Would match the Southern skies When Southern skies are bluest;

Will always take its part Where Southern hearts are truest.

Bright pearls, The gems of Southern girls, Her winning smile discloses;

Her cheeks. When admiration speaks,

Wear only Southern roses.

By nature and by choice,

E'en those who know her slightest As soft as Southern wind

When Southern winds are lightest.

Her laugh, As light as wine or chaff,

Breaks clear, at witty sallies, As brooks Run bubbling through the nooks Of all her Southern valleys.

Such youth, With all its charms forsooth,-Alas, too well I know it !-

A song of love and fame, Sung by some Southern poet.

In future years, maybe, These verses may discover,

May read this little rhyme

Sung by a Northern lover. -[James G. Burnett, in the Century.

The Young Man's Mistake.

BY HELEN FOREST GRAVES.

"Oh, but you'll be sure to make your fortune, Jason," said Annie Dayrell, enthusiastically.

"I shall make a try for it at all events," said Jason Trowbridge, rather conceitedly, adjusting the lavender silk necktie that the dainty fingers of his betrothed had stitched for him.

He was a tall, handsome young man, with curly brown hair, a pink and white complexion, and an exquisite little shadow of a mustache on his upper lip; the only son of a widowed mother, and the Apollo of the village mythology. Such young fellows are very apt to be a little spoiled, and sometimes more than a little.

"I wish I could go to the city," said Annie, discontentedly. In her mind's eye, pretty Annie Dayrell saw her daisy-like loveliness eclipsed by the sparkle and style of city belles. She remembered how, in all the novels she had read, the wealthy merchants' beautiful daughters invariably fell in love with the courageous young aspirants for fortune. And what woman could be blamed for falling in love with Jason Trowbridge? Already Annie felt the envenomed dart of jealousy tearing at her heart.

"Jason will take you there one day. my dear," said Mrs. Trowbridge, complacently. "It isn't every young man that enters life under auspices like those of our Jason. But then, you see, the head of the firm used to be a college mate of my poor dear husband."

"Mr. Alwayne?" said Annie. "Yes, Mr. Alwayne. The firm is Alwayne & Alford."

Annie listened in reverential silence to these items of information, which she heard at least a score of times before; but then it was such a privilege to be allowed to come and help pack Jason's trunks and mark his cuffs and collars, and follow him from room to room, like a patient, adoring little girl, as she was, that she would scarcely have found the multiplication table itself tedious.

So Jason went to seek his fortune, like him of the Golden Fleece, nobody knows how many centuries ago.

It was quite true, as his mother had said, that his debut on the grand stage of the world was surrounded with more favorable circumstances than that of many young men of his age and qualifications.

Mrs. Trowbridge, anxious that her only child should succeed in life, had written a long letter to Mr. Alwayne recalling to his memory the gay young collegian of thirty years ago, and begging his interest, and Mr. Alwayne had responded with a brief, brusque note, which people told the widow was characteristic of the rich mer-

"Send the young fellow on," it said; "I am willing to try what mettle he is made of.'

That was rather a slender foundation whereon to build, but it was fault of mine if he doesn't take a fancy to me."

Thus he meditated as he elbowed his get his ticket. At the same moment lead. he felt a hand laid lightly on his arm, and he was addressed by a feeble-looking old man in a butternut colored suit and a knotted cane.

"Would you please get my ticket for me, sir? I am not so spry as some of these travellers, and I believe our time is limited."

"Get your ticket yourself!" sharply flashed back Jason Trowbridge, aggravated especially by some rough boot being placed just then on his tight patent leather boot. "I've no more time to fool away than you have."

And he caught at the slip of paper pushed toward him by the official, and rushed madly toward the station door, nearly upsetting the old man in his hot haste.

"Every man for himself and the what's-his-name take the hindmost!' said Mr. Jason Trowbridge to himself as he seated himself in the cars, panting and breathless. "That's my motto! A fellow that expects to get his own advantage. along in the world, must expect to push!"

And he unfolded a newspaper and began to read.

Gradually the journey drew to a close; the cars dashed across Spuyten Duyvil Creek, and Jason Trowbridge felt himself breathing the electrically charged atmosphere of New York.

He seated himself in a hack. "Drive to No. - Fifth avenue," said he, loftily thinking to himself that it was always best to make a favorable first impression. "Yes, yes!" answered the hackman grinning; he knew a green country youth when he saw him, spite of the assumed familiarity with city manners that sat so awkardly on the traveler.

"Directly, sir; but here's another passenger -"I object!" said Jason, indignantly, as he caught sight of the obnoxious butternut-colored suit at the door, "I won't be jammed in with other passengers-I'll have the hack to myself." "Werry well, sir," said the disappointed driver, slamming the carriagedoor to. "You'll have to get some other trap, old gen'leman. My fare, he's very genteel and exclusive!" And away he rattled over the pave-

The journey was a very brief oneso brief, in fact, that Mr. Trowbridge would have rebelled against the demanded fare of five dollars, had it not been for the false shame which taught him that it was not "the thing to dispute with a hackman." So he paid it, little as he felt able to afford the unnecessary outlay, and hesitatingly ascended the brown-stone steps which led to the stately residence of the head of the great mercantile firm of Alwayne & Alford.

"Yes, Mr. Alwayne is in." At least so said the colored man in a white apron, who admitted him, and indicated a chair in the hall wherein to wait, while he carried in the card

"As if I were a book agent or a peddler, selling soaps or china cements!" Jason said, indignantly, to

Presently the colored man came

"Will you please walk in de library, sah?" he said; and Jason Trowbridge followed the sable guide across a wide, softly-carpeted corridor into a large room, lined with books, and furnished in black walnut and polished green leather.

looking as much like a farmer as a merchant, and there to our heroe's dismay in one of the easy chairs sat the identical butternut-coated individual. "How do you do, Mr. Trowbridge?" said the great merchant prince, brusquely nodding; "glad to see you, for the sake of old acquaintanceship with your father. This is my father,' inclining his head toward the old man, who was resting his chin on the knotted stick. The elder smiled. "I have met the young man before," said he, shrewdly.

"Eh! where."

"At the Albany depot, where he reenough for Mrs. Trowbridge and fused to aid me in getting a ticket, Annie Dayrell-nay, even for Jason and at the station in this city, where he declined to allow me to share a and especially the missionaries,

"He's an eccentric fellow," reasoned hack with him. I dare say it was all the young man, "with lots of money | right enough. Old age cannot always and no son of his own; it shall be no expect courteous recognition from youth."

"Ah!" Mr. Alwayne knitted his heavy brows, and Jason felt as if his way through the crowd at Albany to blood were all turning to red-hot

> "I-I didn't know," he began, stammering and stuttering awkwardly enough. "If I had supposed that it was Mr. Alwayne's father ---"

"Circumstances would have altered cases, eh?" said the merchant dryly. "I regret, young sir, that I have no more time at my disposal just now. If you will send me your address, in a day or two I'll see what can be done for you."

And Jason Trowbridge found himself being bowed politely out of the Fifth avenue mansion, while a dark presentiment took possession of his soul that the star of his destiny was somehow being overclouded.

"Why couldn't I have had the common sense to treat the old codger civilly?" he asked himself, despairinglv. "It would have been so easy."

"It is always easy to be civil;" but Mr. Jason Trowbridge had found out this important fact a little too late for Three days afterward he received a note from Mr. Alwayne, stating that he had no situation vacant, which would be appropriate to Mr. Trowbridge. And although no allusion was made to the old gentleman in the butternut-colored suit, Jason Trowbridge knew what it all meant.

He had made a mistake at the outset, which is rather different from making one's fortune, as all the world knows. -[New York Weekly.

Remarkable Ruins in Arizona.

Antiquarians are very much interested in the discovery of an aboriginal fort in the valley of the Gila, about ninety miles below Phoenix, Ariz. The discovery was made by some miners who became lost in the desert. It is the largest and most peculiar structure found in the valley-The ruins lie about four and one-half miles back from the Gila River, and cover about a mile square. In the centre is the fort still in a remarkable state of preservation. It covers an area of about six acres, and is built in a very peculiar way. The first table is about twenty feet in height and is made of dirt, with a wall of boulders laid in cement around the outside. On top of this, and of the same height, though only half the size otherwise, is the second table, walled up as the first. On this is a smaller one of the same height, and on top of that is the fort proper, constructed of stone. The edges of the tower tables were used as gardens, and around the walls are hundreds of boulders brought from the river, doubtless for the purpose of casting down on the heads of a foe. In the top fort are many skeletons and human bones, and in all probability the place was besieged and the people died of starvation. A ditch four and one-half miles in length runs by the base of this structure and brought water from the Gila. It is well defined and about thirty feet in width, though no water runs through it .- [Boston Transcript.

A Chinese Governor.

Tshang Yao, the Governor of the Province of Shantung, who died recently, was one of the highest dignitaries of the Celestial Empire. He had a highly adventurous career. Born in lowly position, he was obliged to flee in his youth on account of having murdered the tormentor of an old man. He became a robber and soon stood at the head of all the There stood a short stout man, brigands who made the province of province was threatened, the Governor issued a proclamation in which he promised the hand of his daughter to the man who would save the town from the enemy. At the head of 500 bandits, Tshang beat off the attack of the rebels, and led home on the next day, as a reward for his bravery, the almond-eyed beauty. Then he made rapid progress. He was not able to read or write, but was of great integrity, and died poor as he was born. He was called by his people, on account of his charity, Tshang, "the blue sky." It is said, however that he was not always just toward Europeans,

WINGED WANDERERS

Where the Birds Go to Pass the Winter Months.

The Curious Instincts of the Feathered Songsters.

In the course of the last fifty years a considerable number of European song birds have been turned loose in the woods and gardens of the New World, but, with rare exceptions, they all disappear before the end of the second winter. Only four out of fifty English larks brought to Maryland in 1879 were seen the next spring, and no nightingale has as yet managed to survive an American blizzard.

The failure of those experiments may, however, be due to the circumstance that the assisted immigrants were taken to the wrong side of the Rocky mountains. Like the Gasgon farmer who hoped to find the climate of Southern France in Southern Michigan, they owed their ruin to a misapplication of geographical facts. A trip of 600 miles will carry a British bird to an almost winterless zone.

The migratory birds of the Eastern states have a curious habit of following established routes of travel. Countless thousands of water birds, for instance, cross the Mexican border near the mouth of the Rio Grande, probably to avoid the broad sand wastes that skirt the upper river valley. Farther east there is a brackish estuary almost devoid of islands, so that the lagoons of the delta afford the only convenient resting place for legions of swamp-loving wanderers. A similar bird trap is found in a low gap of the Sierra Nevada, near the eastern border of Plumas county. The feathered inhabitants of Colorado and Nevada could reach the tropics only by a 2000 mile trip across barren table-lands, without water and wood: so some of them have found it the best plan to follow Horace Greeley's advice and enjoy the comforts of a protracted Indiam summer by going

A few species of Eastern wood birds come to grief in trying to pass the winter in the southern Alleghanies. Robins, for instance, flock by thousands to the hill country of eastern Alabama, where they flit about the woods in quest of cedar berries, and are killed in such numbers that in the course of years they will become as scarce as the traveling pigeons of the Mississippi valley. Some of our shy woodbirds avoid human habitations in their wanderings, but the wisest go where gunpowder is dear and pass the winter in the swamp forests of Yucatan or even farther south, in the pathless woods of Guiana and Eastern Brazil. A Belgian nobleman once managed to catch 200 storks and labelled every one of them with a piece of pasteboard giving the address of the experimenter and requesting to inform him where the bird had been caught or killed during the winter season, These curious passports were attached in a conspicuous manner to the neck or legs of the birds, and one of them returned next spring with a message to the effect that he had been caught in a meadow near Sidi Belbez, in Western Algeria. Two years after another of the original tickets came back by mail, with a note stating that the winged messenger had been shot at Fort George, near the mouth of the Cranes, storks and wild geese fly fast enough to make the trip from Northern Europe to Africa in a week, but most of them take a midway rest north of the Mediterranean. The reed Hunan unsafe. When, during the swamps of the Guadiana river, in rebellion, the chief town of the Southern Spain, are all alive with migratory birds in November, and the water fowl of Northern Russia winter on the shores of the Caspian, where snowstorms may occur now and then, but where water-birds are, on the whole, much better off than on the desert coasts further south.—[San Francisco Chronicle.

Artificial Rain.

Professor Edwin J. Houston has made public the results of his investigations on the subject of producing artificial rain. He states that there are meteorological conditions that robably frequently exist in certain latitudes in which heavy rains mucht be artificially produced by mid-air disturbances, when, without such disturbances, no rainfall would occur. Should for example, a layer of warm, moist air exist between the earth's surface and a higher layer of cold, moist air, separated by a comparatively thin layer of air, and should such conditions exist as to maintain the two layers separate, then the breaking or piercing of the intermediate separating layer might permit such an uprush of the warmer air through the opening that the liberation of its stored up energy through the condensation of its moisture would result in the production of an extended area of low barometer. In other words, the artificial rupture of the separating layer would result in the formation of a true storm centre and a heavy rainfall of considerable dimensions. Professor Houston formulates the following conclusions concerning the artificial production of rain: First, that rain can never be made to fall at will by midair explosions on any part of the earth surface, irrespective of the climatic conditions there existing; second, that during certain meteorological conditions mid-air explosions may result in rainfall over extended areas; third, that the liberation of energy necessery for such rainfalls is due not to mid-air explosions but to the energy stored up in the moist air from which the rain is derived; fourth, that the meteorological conditions which must exist for the successfull action of mid-air explosions would probably in most, though not all, cases themselves result in a natural production of rain; fifth, that a comparatively high difference of electric potential between different parts of the air, or between the air and the earth, is possibly favorable when taken in connection with other meteorological conditions for artificial rain-making; sixth, that an undirected mid-air explosion is not as likely to produce rain as an explosion in which the main tendency of the energy liberated is to cause a general uprush of the air .- [Chicago News.

Snakes That Eat Eggs.

Dr. Buckland mentions that the teeth of serpents are not always found in their mouths. There is a snake in Africa that lives upon the eggs of birds | singer big prices, they do not conceal which he purloins from the nests. It has no teeth in its mouth, but they are developed in its belly, being formed in a very curious manner. They are not true teeth, but certain little bones, parts of the vertebræ, are made to serve a like purpose, one projecting from the center of each vertebra. The ends of these bones pass through the wall of the stomach, being covered with enamel like real teeth, so that on looking into the stomach a row of what looks exactly like teeth is seen at its back part. The eggs then swallowed by the snake goes down into the stomach and is broken against the teeth by the pressure of the abdominal walls. Being thus brokon the contents of the egg cannot escape, as would have been the case if it had been proken in the mouth.

It is not generally known that the remarkable Australian mammal known as the ornithorynchus, which lays eggs and has a duck's bill and webbed feet, possesses a poison apparatus much like that of a snake. The male of this animal has a gland on the back part of the thigh, communicating by means of a duct with a sharp spur, very like a cock's spur. This spur is perforated like the cobra's tooth, and the poisonous secretion of the gland is thus transmitted into the wound made by the spur.-[Washington Star.

Highest Railroad in the World. "Did you know that Chili is about completing the highest railroad in the world?" said D. V. McCormick, a civil engineer, who has traveled extensively on the vast coast of South America, now at the Windsor. "This is the Transandean Railway, which crosses the Andes at Cumbra Pass, where there will be a tunnel a little over three miles in length at an elevation of 10,450 feet above sea level. The pass itself is nearly 3000 feet higher and is situated four miles and a half south of Aconcagua. It is expected that in point of engineering skill and perfect roadbed the Transandean Railway will be the finest road in the world. It runs from Buenos Ayres to Valparaiso."-[New York

But Man Grows Old.

Mycarel Clay

An old man stood in a thoughtful way To watch a group of children play Beneath the bended boughs of trees That echoed soft the passing breeze. Long years ago in just such way He'd passed his school-free hours at play; But now his blood runs slow and cold. For things change not, but man grows old-

The ashes of his golden hair Clung round his temples white and spare, His cheek was lean, his eyes were dim. But that old past comes back to him; And as he paused he seemed to see Round, boyish faces bright with glee. But now his blood runs slow and cold, For things change not, but man grows old.

The old scenes waken thoughts that pain, Of life swift spent for little gain: Of steps that to false music swung, Of angry words on heedless tongue; And then-a flash of man's small worth. His little span of life on earth. E'en now his blood ran slow and cold. For things change not, but man grows old. -[Madge Merton.

HUMOROUS

The smallest boy frequently gets the biggest spanking.

A slow match-The courtship of a bashful young man.

Bashful young men ought to practice sparking with dumb-belles. Many people who never saw a fire escape have seen one break out. It is well for the small man to practise until he knows how to apologize gracefully. Patient-Say, doctor, what do you do for a headache? Doctor-Nothing, it does for me. If some men knew as much as they talked there would not be any sale for the encyclopædias. "There's a great art," says Mickey Dolan, "in knowin' what not to know whin yez don't want to know it." Pennover-It was a case of love at first sight. Prettiwitt-I thought he couldn't have got a real good look at

She-Her father is an undertaker in Chicago, isn't he? He-Yes. She told me she was the daughter of a

How much easier it is to hear the whisperings of another's conscience than to hear the loudest appeals of

Although managers pay a popular the fact that they want her services for a song.

Smart Child--Mamma, what are the teeth of the wintry blast for ? Selfpossessed mother-To make a cold anap, my child.

Mr. Hogan (after hammering on the door for five minutes)-Is it dead or alive ye are? Mr. Grogan-Nayther; I'm shlapin'. Next to the man whose joke falls, flat on his audience the most miserable is the one who feels obliged to laugh at a chestnut. Ballard-What's good for a cold.

doctor? Dr. Blank-Well, a plentiful stock of pocket handkerchiefs is about as good as anything. It must make the passengers doubly sick to have a lot of train robbers cover them with weapons and tell them to throw up their hands. Magistrate (to prisoner)-Have you any remarks to make? Prisoner

(a barber)-Yes, Your Worship Your hair wants cutting! "There! that explains where my clothes-lines went to," exclaimed an Iowa woman, as she found her husband hanging in the stable." Patient-Doctor, I fancy, somehowa I've got a touch of the gout. Doctor

-Fancy, my dear sir! If you had, you wouldn't fancy-you'd know. Everybody can believe in the quality of men whose circumstances are good enough to prevent him from running against the meaner of them. Young Crimsonback-What kind of a mattress is that I sleep on? Boarding-house mistress-It was bought for a hair mattress, and a good one, too. Well, it must be getting baldheaded. "It was all very well for the poet to talk about a perfect 'woman, nobly planned," said Mr. Arreers, sadly, .. but the trouble is that it takes such a lot of money to carry out the plan." "What was the most successful funeral you ever saw?" "Well, I think the best-attended one was that of a man who had spent most of his life practicing the cornet with his windows THE CALERA JOURNAL. FRANK W. GIST, ED/TOR. CALERA, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 11.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Deans as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic par-

We are authorized to aunounce Wm. R. A. Milner as a candidate for the cf-flee of Circuit Clerk of Sheiby county.

I hereby announce myself a candidate ocratic and conservative party. JOHN A. CAMPBELL.

in the 4th districs.

FAYETTE county holds its county convention tomorrow. The candidates are all hopeful news continue to come in.

days notice as recommended by the possibly get thereon, state committee.

Standard, is making a great fuss suit it and its readers, but it don't placed very Blast would like to see him placed BRO. CULBRETH, of the Marion Standard, is making a great fuss suit it and its readers, but it don't pleasantly by many a boy and girl on the supreme beach of the state.

over the usury laws of the state. Suit us, and the question at is—who first began the development of the supreme beach of the state. The Calhoun bar is a unit for him. He wants backers to pay private sue does not warrant such a their intellect there, and these are we understand, and he has hosts of to the farmers at the same figures likely to ensue on both sides. on security of growing crops and other perishable collateral.

WONDER if the petition circulated in Bibb ty Dave and Jim Brown had anything to do with Brother them, but we must be pardoned for room. Bibb county will miss him, Adam's withdrawal? Will it put utterly ignoring such vents of but the heart and mind of each of Adams for propage judge, Dave for the legislature and Jim for circuit

SEVERAL candidates are announced for various offices who tee of Shelby county has been callseem to have forgotten that the ed to meet on the fifth of March, could be secured. JOURNAL is in Shelby county. We At that time some important busiwould gently remind them that the ness will be transacted. JOURNAL, is here for purposes of that The committee will decide whethcolumns would possibly secure them a convention, and upon its action some recognition which they would will probably depend much as to not otherwise obtain. A hint to harmonizing the party. Not knowthe wise is sumcient.

It is reported that Kolb and his lieutenants are down in Marengo this week, mud-slinging after the same old style. Gov. Jones is there too, but he is engaged in expound- primary elections, but as a matter ing sound and conservative democratic doctrine; and that large audiences are listening to him and that which they think best, and becoming convinced of the fact that democrats should and will acquiesce Thos. G. Jones is the man to support for the next governor.

silk umbrella and $2 to the republi- before any action is taken. In fillcan who opposes Kolb for governor. ing their places care should be ex-Fix up two ambrellas and $4, Bro. ercised in selecting others, and the Kellar-one for W. E. Brinkerhoff, best men possible should be chosen. of Calera, and the other for W Much depends upon the work of W. McCollum, of Brierfield, both committees, and especially so in a for Jones, not because he is a re- county where there is so much of publican, but from the fact they discord as in ours. can't get a respectable republican Let every member of the comgovernor, and they want to vote for mittee attend the meeting on the the best democrat in the field. fifth of March prepared to use his-They know what a good democrat influence for the best interests of is when they see him.

EDITOR CONNELLEY of the Express published at Centreville, Bibb coun | MR. S. M. ADAMS didn't stay in ty, is making complaints that the it long. He says in a card dated county officers send to Marshall & February 3, and published in the Bruce, of Nashville, for their legal Age-Herald of the 5th: "Please blanks, and threatens to remember allow me space to thank my friends them at the polls on the first Mon- for their support thus far in the day in August. It won't de, congressional race, and to say that Frank, you must publish compli- I am no longer a candidate. Pamentary notices of their organiza- pers in the ninth congressional distions and those in authority, work trict please copy." The alliance twenty-four hours a day-seven president said in a public speech in days in the week-help build their Centreville two years ago that be schools and live on the wind, all for was wrong," and that he was sconthe privilege of publishing a paper tinually repenting for his misdoings in the county. We tried it too and shortcomings." We are of the years, and told you how it was, but opinion that the reverend gentleyou wouldn't take warning. We men has pade no mistake this time, held on till you got started, now but should return thanks for the inyou will held the fert.

WE JUMP THE GAME.

The Chronicle will pardon us for

The Journal started out by ofrubject to the action of the democratic not being alle to compete with, county convention. sought to ridicule.

nounced as a candidate for congress considered as belonging only to will do it wisely and well. such journals as the Figaro, of Paris, or the Mascotte, of New Orleans. The Journal must be excused from pets of Calera society slipped away continuing in a controversy in to Birmingham the other night to ure in saying a good word for Judge which there is so little of sensible see the Little Tycocn. They did James B. Head, of Birmingham, News from Marengo is encourary which there is so little of sensible not see it. It wasn't there. These who is seeking a position on the two dainty youths essayed to return supreme bench of Alabama. ageing to the friends of Gov. Jones, youd the pales of decency. To con- on a freight train, but when within for a convention to March 8, in or- so widely differs from our ideas of to prove it yet. der that the people may have 30 friendly discussion that we cannot of this week.

COMMITTEE MEETING.

The democratic executive commit-sort, and an announcement in its er it will call a primary election or ing the general feeling of the democrats in Shelby the Journal is not prepared to say which would best tend to promote harmony. As a matter of principle we do not favor of policy are sometimes expedient. We believe the committee will do in its judgement.

As the chairman and some of the members of the committee are can-THE North Alabamian offers a didates, they will no doubt resign the democratic party.

glerious defeat he has missed

GOSSIP OF THE CRITIC.

the little controversy which has gre from the walks of men there sprung up between us. It is quite went out the bright light of a minds, real genius, one can go to fering some reasons why the court no better place than to the supreme to the action of the democratic county frightened and begun wildly to at- ence, the men who sit thereon can tack the morals of our little town easily give scope to every faculty intellect and character. Secure in We are authorized to announce John S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of and its business capacity, things that did not have any bearing upon that did not have any bearing upon the folds of the judicial cloak, they can hand down their opinions, which didate for Associate Justice of the the question at issue. In reply becom weighty particles of a counthe Journal published a business try's common law, without fear or favor, and to their construction of more safely entrusted the rights of friends may be justly proud of. county subject to the action of the dem- has replied directly to any argu- the death angel to this seculusive good man. He would ably fill a po-We do not think the Chronicle the statutes. With every visit of ment of the Journal, but has pre-man and good is taken. In this We reput list an ectorial comment ferred to emit a class of invective instance it will rest with Governor JOHN F. Buans, of Dallas, is an- squibbs which have long since been Jones to fill the vacant place. He not come to Calera, and will put the Professor and his excellent wife them in a tangible and readable very kindly, and wish them a long room, Bibb county win miss him, spleen as was contained in its issue his former students will be monuments to his usefulness.

Two of the called and pampered

in Bibb county, have a Jones and a bowing ourselves gracefully out of the Supreme Kolb club, and now they call for a Court, is dead: With his depart-straight, out demogratic club in the straight out democratic club in the direct interest of the local issues, We are authorized to announce G. B | welcome to the honors left in the christian life, his demise will be a and peace and harmony of county loss to the public. Seeking for no-politics, regardless of differences as ble characters, sublime lives, great to choice between candidates for state or county offices. Blocton is We are authorized to announce D. R. house should be at Calera, at which bench to find them. Freed from the largest beat in Bibb, and it is Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject the Chronicle became seemingly the encumbrance of political influ- hoped that this move will have a > Supreme Court. Judge Head's record as the presiding officer of justice and equity may be much the Jefferson court is such as his the people than to those who frame He is an able jurist, a learned and upon his record and fitness from the Anniston Hot Elast, which does but simple justice to the man.

FOR SUPREME JUDGE.

The Hot Blast takes great pleas-and to lovers of the democratic partinue in such a line of combat would about fourteen miles of home they the state, and has fought his way ty in the state. May the good place us at a decided disadvantage, were discovered by the hard-heart-up to where he is unaided and single ed conductor, who forcibly ejected handed. He started in life with no In order to answer the Chronicle's ed concident, and the top of a box car. rich relative lawyer to help shove them from the top of a box car. The democratic executive comsquibbs we should have to get down mittee of Bibb has extended its call upon a level with its style, which home, but they have not been able carved his way by industry and

Judge Head is made of the kind of I am glad to see that Fref. R. H. material that good judges are com-We have no desire to criticise the Pratt has added the military fear posed of. He is perfectly fearless Chronicle's editorial style. It may ture to his academy at Six Mile. and incorruptible, and the Hot individuals 10 per cent and loan it breach of editorial courtesy as is now scattered throughout the state. personal friends among our people. In the old days there were no grey cloths and brass buttons, but it is can to have him elevated to the po-> the presidency. Count the Hill crgans in this portion of the moral viney rd on the fingers of one-balf of one of your And if you ever Buy hands, and see if this is not so.

Hot Flast: The Hot Blast is of the firm

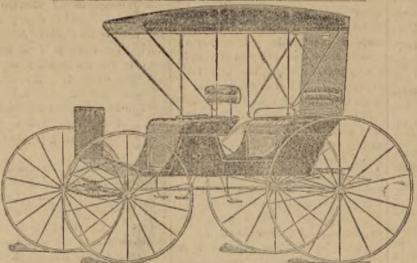

the foremost advocates of the state.

If the Chronicle has any good an improvement, and we are all sition he seeks, and which he adorns reasons why the court house should glad to see it. We all remember so well.—Annisten Hot Blast.

Tuscaloosa Times: Not a ringle paper in the land that at heart favors the demand of the people for a reform of the that Cleveland is the strongest Advertiser: The Mebile bar has recommended Mr. Harry Pillans for the vacancy on the supreme benefit. The soft throughout the country. * He is the strongest living man'in New England and the Northwest where it is necessary and the Northwest where it is necessary

THE ALABAMA (PREMIUM NO. 14) FREE.

This handsome Carriage is only one of the many Vehicles which THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY is offering its customers for 1892.

Special Fremiums for Men, Women, Boys and Girls.

THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER produced the Champion Crops reported in the State last year. Write for Circulars and Prices ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY, MONTGOMERY, ALABAM.

Brick Store, Montgomery Avenue.

CIGARS AND TOBACCOS.

Prescriptions Carefully Compounded at All Hours by an Experienced Druggist.

Experienced Druggist.

Having Just Opened a Drug Business in Calera, I Desire to Solicit the Patronage of All Who are in Need of Goods in My

Lite Which are Offered at the churches, support the ministers and was "always doing something that | Having Just Opened a Drug | Business in Calera, I Desire to Solicit the Live. Which are Offered at the Lowest Possible Margines.

Banking House

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA. JUDGE JAMES R. HEAD, of Bir- Receive Deposits.

Negotiate Loans

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York Louisville and Birmingham at regular rates equipment by the larger cities. We transact a general banking business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

Fire and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

He is one of the purest men in Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

The New York Store.

Calera, Ala.

SAYS-If you are Interested in

DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, BOOTS, SHOES, GENTS' HURNISHING GOODS. CLOTHING & HATS.

Hose, Helf-Hose, Silk Ties Scarfs, Etc., Stc.,

Please Listen to Us just 20 Minutes. We are overstocked, and in order to Reduce Stock before we take invoice on February 1st, we will sell you any Div

We have a Large Stock to dispose of and when you hear the Prices you will be astonished how such goods can be sold so low. Listen

Cotton Checks 41-2 to 5 cents; Nice Cashmere Dress Goods 19% cents per vards, same at 221-2; a Finer Goods at 271-2; All Woo Ladies Cloth fifty inches wide only 371-2 cents, former price 65; Ladies Fast Black Hose 74-2 cents per pair; a better goods for 121-2 cents; a Fine Hose for 171-2 cents, city price 40 cents; Salt 6, cents per sack; Fine Shoes $1.25 to $2.50; Good Shows 1.60 per

Come and see us. We have too much to mention all in this paper. Come at once. We guarantee all prices named, and a child will get as low prices as as older person. No favorites, but one price to all. Come and see us and, you will find we mean business. We want to

Reduce the Stock,

before taking Invoice, and if Prices can do it

THEY MUST BE CUT INTO

C. WADE & CO.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION.

Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

1. It is the best of all weekly newspapers.
2. It is invaluable to the narmer and the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to the household.
3. It covers the news of the whole world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thoroughout the south.
4. It is the People's Flagnd, and is the sturdy champion of the agricultural interests of the south.
5. It pays note money for its special news center in the world.

S. It pays more money for its special

4. Its Agricultural Department alone features and for its news service than is worth many times its subscription any other four of the weekly newspapers

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality,

Lil eral terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONTLITUTION, Atlanta, Gg.,

4:36 a. m. No. 1, To Selma, 4:40 p. m. 2:04 a. m. 2, From Selma, 10:40 p. m.

ALABAMA MINERAL. Mo. 85, Arrives at "85, Departs at 4:35 p. m. 10:25 a. m.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge-R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk-W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff-W. R. Carter Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. H. Kidd. County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland.

Huston. County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners-John E. T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

ATTHE CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th Sundays in each menth, morning and School at 9:30 a. m.

METHODIST-Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

Baptist Church-Rev. J. G. Lowrey, nastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.80 am. Prayer speeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

Comberland Presbyterian—J. C Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunlav school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother and next day. Friday evening at 3.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensa-ticnal and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX Seguare. New York City. Franklin Square.

A Wonder Worker.

Mr Frank Huffman, a young man ei Burlington, Ohio, states that he had been under the care of two prominent physicians, and used the treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case in future. to be Consumption and incurable. He was persuaded to try Dr. King's had used half of a dollar bottle, that ting done on short notice. he was much better; he continued to use it and is to-day enjoying good health. If you have any Throat, guarantee satisfaction.

EXCURSION RATES TO NEW OKLALAND.

sfon tickets from all points on the line to New Orleans at one fair for the round trip. Ticket will be sold Feb.

Selma daily at 7:00 p. m., arrive New Orleans 7:00 a. m. without change. For further information call on any

B. W. Wrenn, G. P. & T. A. Knoxville, Tega. L. A. Bell, A. G. P. A. Selma, Ala,

SPECIAL RATES TO MOBILE.

From Feb. 25th to 29th inclusive, From Feb. 25th to 29th inclusive, the East Tenn., Va. & Ga. R'y will be readership of the ladership of the l sed excursion tickets from all points mended. If you should need the on the line to Mebile at one fare for services of a physician you may safe-please answer these questions? We the round trip account Mardi Gras, ly call him in. tickets will be limited good to return until March 15th 1892.

Through Pullman sleepers on reguties if desired, on application to B. W. Wrenn, G. P. & T. A.

Knoxville, Tenn. L. A. Bell, A. G. P. A.

Selma. Ala.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

The next best thing possible to insura policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

amount of life insurance, where the stoams of the financial world cannot proving property and paying for touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old see should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do Witt Talmage.

HUGH T. CAFFEY,

PraYSICIAN & SURGEON mittee.

CALERA, ALA. (eb)12-1y.

TOWN TOPICS.

Calera is threatened with a coal

The New Drug Store sells fine tobacco and cigars.

Several familes are changing residences in town this week.

The New Drug Store sells fancy sta-Mrs. M. Allen, of Jemison, was in town today. The New Drug Store fills prescription carefully at all hours.

home near Shelby Springs.

The town of Calera has been rereal estate transfer during the week.

week, most of the cases of grip having disappeared.

Mr. Frank Palmer and family Superintendent of Education-T. N. have been visiting friends and relatives near Randolph the past week.

Miss Beil Lowery, daughter of Calara's popular Baptist minister, has been quite sick for several days the sympathy of his friends

Mr. Ben Killingsworth was ordained as ruling elder in the Cumnight; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath berland Presbyterian church last

> Mr. Alex Nelson left on Wednesday for Birmingham, where he will To the members of the County Demospend some time in visiting his as much better.

The first quarterly conference for the Calera circuit will be hele with attendance. the church at this place tomorrow

There will be an oyster supper given by the Knights of Pythias on next Wednesday night for the benefit of the Lodge.

The JOURNAL force has turned out Beat 5-J. H. Gunn, G. B. Deans, J. P. an unusual amount of Job Printing this week, which accounts for the Beat 4-E. S. Lyman, Burr Nabors, A. paper being one day late.

Miss Lella Ward, of Six Mile. through Calera Saturday and Monday on her way to visit her mother.

Alabama Conference and the agent Beat 9-J. H. Weldon, G. W. Taylor, of the Methodist Orphanage, left with his family on Wednesday last for Talladora, where he will reside.

E. C. Lyde. for Talladega, where he will reside Beat 11-J. E. Adams, G. W. Dye, Hugh

Miss Eliza J. Gist, two doors west of the Calera Shoe Factory, has long expe-Beat 13-S. M. Bass, A. J. DeShazo, W New Discovery for Consumption, the Calera Shoe Factory, has long expe-Coughs and Colds and at that timt rience in Dross Making, and solicits patwas not able to walk across the stree range in her line from the ladies of Cawithout resting. He found, before he lera and vicity. Other sewing and cut-

Mr. D. R. McMillan has called the executive committee to meet in Lung or Chest Trouble try it We the court house on the 5th of March. After that date the battle cry will be "on to Shelby."

matter of bills for fuel burned.

The young folks had a very pleas- him their endorsement. 15th to 29th inclusive, good to return ant little dance at the hall last Friuntil March 15th, 1892. day night. Several couples were in Through Pullman sleepers leave attendance and the evening was for the friehdship of any man who will spent very enjoyably.

Ticket Agent of the Co. Or apply to the night of the 6th, and on his per- are perfectly indifferent. - Greenville Adson was found quite an array of burrglar's tools. His name was

> Dr. Hugh Caffey has his profes- living? sional card in this issue of the JOURNAL. The doctor is a new com-er to Calera, and comes well recom-Will some of the farmers who ar

B. J. Large and W. J. Martin, of Six Mile, were in Calera Saturday. har trains; extra Pullman service can The former was en route to Montbe provided for special excursion par- gomery, while the latter was up to perfect arrangements for publishing a school journal from Six Mile

It was with regret we learned of the death of Mr. M. C. Thomas, of Bibb county, on Monday of last week. Mr. Thomas was a good citiance against fire in the coming world is zen, and leaves several children and

A couple of the good housewives Read and profit by the following sound being vexed of a small swine, were "It is a duty you owe to yourself and an end to the small animal's liber-family to protect them with a reasonable ties by placing it in a close kennel. proving property, and paying for this notice.

will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. Decounty convertion or a county primage. county convention or a county primary. Voters can express their preferences to either member of the con-

G. R. Dean', Com.

HOUSE BURNED.

ACCIDENTAL FIRE AT 1:30 O'CLOCK.

About 1:30 today the dwelling on fire and was burned up in a few and being alone at the time came near being burned before he awoke. He ran out as quickly as possible Mr. Samuel Bristow and family and gave the alarm, but before any have moved from Calera to their one could get on the ground the flames were beyond control.

The furniture out of one room vived to the extent of at least one was saved, but the remainder of the household property was lost. Mr. The health of Calera is better this Black had no insurance, and could not give any estimate of the amount of his loss.

> The fire originated from the kitchen stove, and spread very rapidly.

> This is the second loss Mr. Black has sustained by fire, and he has

A CALL

FOR THE MEETING OF THE DEM-OCRATIC COUNTY ENECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

cratic Executive Committee:

You are hereby called to meet in the Henry Wilson, Esq., of Columbiana, Was in Calera a day or two 1892, at the hour of 12 o'clock, m.

this week. He reports J. L. Peters as much better.

There will be rusiness of given this meeting, and I sincerely urge upon every member of the committee to be presented in the committee to be prese ent. Try and let nothing prevent your

D. R. McMILLAN, Feb. 8, 1892.

The following are the members of the Executive Committee Beat 1-D. R. McMillan, J. S. DeLache,

Evander Morrison. Beat 2 Pearson, N. N. Mosteller, R

C. Ingram. Beat 5-W. H. Sturdevant, Jas. P. Doss,

John Harmon who is teaching at Pelham, passed Beat 6-J. E. Ruffin, R. J. Griffia, F. P. Dunham. Beat 7-1. W. Bailey, Jas, Mason, R. C

Rev. S. P. West, of the North Beat 8-E. S. Martin, J. S. Ferrell, E

Beat 12-Jno. Acton, John Caldwell, N.

Beat 14-T. H. Baxley, W. H. Falkner, W. A. B. Falkner.

Beat 17-W. C. Penson, Jason Powell,

PRESS PARAGRAPHS.

Greenville Advocate: Hold the good Walter Duran made a visit to Six of the party above all things and work Mile on Saturday last. As it was to her best interests. The best way to On account of Mardi Gras the East pleasant weather this time he will do this is to renominate Gov Jones, On account of Mardi Gras the East pleasant weather this time he will democratic usage gives him another term probably have no trouble in the so let him have it. He has made as good an executive as Alabama has had for many years and the people will give Expressing a preference may cause us day night. Several couples were in to loos a few friends but we do not care ent very enjoyably.

A burglar was captured here on take any offense, and for the others we Hamilton Times: Ix Kolb a farmer? Ed Reid, and he was placed in jail. Does he own so much as an acre of of farming land?

Has he ever followed the plow for a What has he ever done to entitle him pause for an answer.

ARCHITECTS & BUILDER C

TRADE MARKS. COPYRIGHTS for books, charts, maps, etc., quickly procured. Address MUNN & CO., Patent Solicitors.

Ben Jones was a capital fellow,
But he was so confoundedly sallow!
That his friends all feracok him.
E'en his sweet heart she shook him,
Which made poor Ben loudly bellow.
Now lich had a friend named McQueens
Who told him to take cMITIT'S BILE

BEANS.
And now he's as resy, as any pink pener And has married a woman of means. Bile Bears will dear the complexion and sweeten the breath, 25 c.per cond

THE STATE OF ALABAMA SHELBY COUNTY.

I will be present at the following times and places for the purpose of assessing the state and county Taxes house of Mr. John Black, sr., eaught for the year 1892, I will make only two rounds and tax payers are requested to meet me at these appoint-Mr. Black was sitting in the ments, and have with them a descriphouse dozing, when the fire began, tion of there tax assessable property. FIRST ROUND,

Aldrich,

Montevailo,

Feby.,

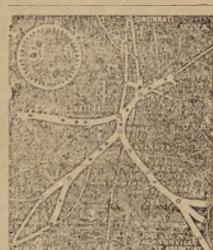

23

24

25

1	Carera		~
ı	Spring Creek	le .	2
ı	Shelby Ironwor	ks "	2
ı	Vandiver	44	2
1	Bold Springs	Meh	Is
l	High Land	16
ı	Helena	66	1
ı	Pelham	66
ŀ	Tylers	"	5
1	Elliottsville	44	1
l	Yellowleaf	66	,
l	Spearman	6.
ŀ	Columbiana	"	9 and 10
	Wilsonville	• 6	1
	Harpersville	٤.	1:
l	Vincent	66	1.
Probable or	SECONI	D ROUND.
	Gurnee	Meh	97
	Aldrich	44	2:
	Montevallo	66	23
	Calera	44	·).
l	Spring Creek	- 11	2
	Shelby Iron wo	čks"	26
	Vandiver	66	28
	Bold Springs	u	20
ı	High Land	"	30
	Helena	٤.	33
ı	Pelham	April	Ist
i	Tylers	.4	ls
	Elriottsville	4
	Yellowleaf	"	4
	Spearman	4.	į
	Columbiana	46	6 and 7
	Wilsonville	4.6	8
	Harpersville	166	5
	Vincent	141	- 11
		W. HK	DD

Tax Assessor Shelby county Ala.

Many a person is starving with a full table before them. Appetite gone! Ambition gone! Life a burden! I What is the matter? The Liver has ceased to do its proper work. The life channels are closed. Poisoness fluids are clogged. Folson thrown back into the blood, which should be thrown out. SMITH'SBILE BEANS will surely stimulate the liver lowness and bad breath will flee away.
Price, 25 cents per bottle. All druggists.

"SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES!"

following rewards in the order named
First Cash present in gold S
Second Cash present in gold Third Cash present in gold
Fourth Cash present in gold
Fourth Cash present in gold
Fifth Cash present in gold
Sixth Cash present in gold
Sixth Cash present in gold
Seventh Cash present in gold
Righth Cash present in gold
Ninth Breecn loading shot gun
Tenth Gent's Gold Watch
Eleventh Ladies' Gold Watch
Twellth One Farm Wagon
Thirteenth Road Cart
To the next 10 each Solid Silver
Watch
To the next 100 each Solid Gold To the next 100 each Solid Gold Ring Ring
To the next 100 each Handsome
Photograph Album
To the next 200 each Handsome
Gold Pen and Holder
To the next 200 each $2.50 Cash...... 800.00

CONDITIONS.

Each competitor must find the word in the Bible—not in captions of chapters, foot or marginal notes, and with his answer to the question he must send enclosed $1.00 for one year's subscription to The Weekly Advertiser, otherwise the answer will not be recorded.

This contest is open for old and young.
Every letter is recorded and numbered—there can be no mistakes. Send money by postal note, money order or registered letter. We pay no attention to answers without subscription to The Advertiser.

The Advertiser is by far the best news and literary paper published in the South, and gives its subscribers sixteen pages a week, eight on Tuesday and eight on Friday, making it almost equal to a daily paper. To Alabamians in other States it is like a letter from home twice a week. To read it is to love it.

Don't delay until too late to get one of the big rewards.
Reference: Any Business House in Montbig rewards. Reference: Any Business House .n Mont-

THE ADVERTISER, Montgomery, Ala.

The Calera Journal,

A Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of he state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solivit the patropage of those who desire this class of information, and

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at every point in the county.

Quickly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

and Legal Printing a Specialty Commercial

THE JOURNAL will be prepared to do all kin is of job work. Let er an I Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and P. mphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who here any work

Sarsaparilla

Mr. Frank I. Rickson, who holds a responsible po-sition on the Boston & Albany Railroad at Chatham, N. Y., writes as follows:

"When my baby boy was two years old he was covered from head to feet with salt rheum. It began to come out on him when he was two weeksold, and increased in spite of all that could be done.

We were Discouraged

The doctors said it would disappear when he was never years old. I happened to be taking Hood's Caren years old. I happened to be taking Hood's Carsaparilla myself and thought I would give it to the child. At that time he did not have a hair on his head, and it was covered with a crust. His sufferings were awful. In two weeks after giving bim Hood's Sarsaparilla the scabs began to fall off and in six weeks he was entirely cured of the sorcs. He is now the healthiest child we have. I know of two other cases in which did the same as for my boy. It is a great medicine."

Hood's Sarsaparilla

F. I. RICKSON, Pittefield, Mass.

HOOD'S PILLS cure habitual Constipation.

The loss of flesh is a trifle. You think you need not mind it.

But, if you go on losing for some time or lose a good deal in a short time, you are running down. Is that a trifle?

Get back to your healthy weight and generally you get back to health.

A book on CAREFUL LIV-ING will tell you what it is to get there, and when Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil is useful. Free.

Scott & Bowne, Chemists, 132 South 5th Avenue, New York. Your druggist keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil—all druggists everywhere do.

ADVICE TO WOMEN

If you would protect yourself from Painful, Profuse, Scanty, Suppressed or Irregular Menstruation you must use

BRADFIELD'S FEMALE REGULATOR

CARTERSVILLE, April 28, 1886.
This will certify that two members of my immediate family, after having suffered for years from Menstrus! Irregularity, being treated without benefit by physicians, were at length completely cured by one bottle of Bradfield's Founds Regulator. Its effect is truly wonderful. J. W. STRANGE.

Book to "WOMAN" mailed FREE, which contains valuable information on all female diseases. BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO., FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

"August Flower"

I had been troubled five months with Dyspepsia. I had a fullness after eating, and a heavy load in the pit of my stomach. Sometimes a deathly sickness would overtake me. I was working for Thomas McHenry, Druggist, Allegheny City, Pa., in whose employ I had been for for two weeks. I was relieved of all trouble. I can now eat things I dared not touch before. I have 'gained twenty pounds since my recovery. J. D. Cox, Allegheny, Pa. 3 and confidential worrying.

Morphine Pabit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio. The second secon SUCCESS IS ASSURED BEST SEEDS.

The fact that we sell more CLOVER, GRASS.

GARDEN SEEDS germinating powers. We D. IVER POSTPAID anywhere all Seeds at ounce and packet rates, and give 25 cts. worth extra packet Seeds for each $1.00 worth action. We allow have special

OUR INSTRUCTIVE CATALOGUE, & for cultivating all Farm and Garden Crops, mailed free, Send for it. Addres T.W.WOOD & SONS Seedsmon, RICHMOND, VA.

THE ARIZONA KICKER.

It Is a Foolish Man Who Tackles a Western Editor.

WANTED .- THE KICKER wants to engage a spirited and enterprising young man who is not afraid of work and is ambitious to build himself up, to act as a collector. We have about $600 standing out, and will furnish a mule and two revolvers as an outfit free of expense. The collector will be allowed to retain half of his collec-

We regard this as a splendid opening for some ambitious Eastern man who wants to work up in journalism. He will no doubt be shot at fifty times for every hundred dollars he collects, but if he's got the right sort of sand he'll pull through and come out on top of the heap,

After we've given him a dozen lessons on getting the drop, and he's had a couple of days' acquaintance with our mule, we'll back him to tackle any one of our non-paying subscribers outside of a rifle-pit. In case of death we guarantee a fair to medium | have to have your attention called to funeral. Apply at once.

At it Again.—As is well known to the readers of THE KICKER we have a ferent men who were mistaken in sizing us up for an editor without backbone. We did the fair thing in each and every case—sending for the Coroner—buying a coffin—turning out the boys in procession, and so on. The average cost has been $27 per funeral, and that's rich for this local-

Our contemporary, who has never shot a man, has been insanely jealous of our "plant" out on the sand-lots. and on two occasions before last night has been caught in the act of trying to steal some of the head-boards to start a graveyard of his own. At 10 o'clock last night we received word that he was out there again. We Ffe mounted our mule and rode out. had just commenced operations. He

WE RUN HIM SEVEN MILES. had his old mule hitched to the fence, and took the alarm and mounted before we got up. We run him seven miles, but his mule was the fastest and he got away.

We want to be neighborly as an editor, but we also want this old lop-shouldered, bow-legged hyena to whenever one of the members of the thoroughly understand that he has at suspected firm arrived in New York last made us tired, and that any further fooling around on his part will leave his milk-and-water old sheet without a head.

IT WAS A FAILURE.—We got a sly hint the other day that the postmaster of this town, whom we have had to shoot in three different places within a year, in order to expedite the mail service and prevent him from walking on us, had sent over to Tubac to get a man to do us up. The seven years. I used August Flower | routine of getting out one of the biggest and brightest weekly papers in America (subscription payable in advance) went on just the same, however, and we didn't do any private

HOLLERIN' FOR GORE.

All the forenoon vesterday heard some one hollering around the ing again informed that the judge streets for gore and upon inquiry learned that it was the man from Tubac. He was reported as being a much earlier than the dinner of the real, old-fashioned terror from Grizzly Mountain, with his toe-nails dyed ner,' replied the servant; his lordship red and his eyes shining like two campfires, and that he was also looking for us. We were never more calm or serene. We sent out to our gravedigger to excavate another hole, and wrote to Steve Williams, the undertaker, to varnish up a whitewood 2x6 $1.49 a pound. Miners hurried from and get the trimmings on.

It was about 4 o'clock in the afternoon when we finished our editorial labors for that day and started out for a saunter. Just as we turned into ite nothing of value has been discov-Sioux place the man from Tubac jumped out on us from a doorway and started in to secure our right ear as a relic. We sat up with him most of like the month of March. March is the night last night. One of the said to come in a lion and go out a bullets has been extracted, but the lamb, while the drummer comes in a three-foot stick. | Unless inflammation sets in he will very likely pull through. If he does he assures us that he will be a changed man.

He wouldn't exactly say that the postmaster gave him $50 to come over and humble our proud editorial spirit, but he said enough to satisfy us that we must run over to-morrow and have another pop at Mr. Wanamaker's man. He's getting too coltish again. -N. Y. World.

The Grand Canon of the Colorado.

I have spoken of the Grand Canon of the Colorado as a gorge in which all the other famous gorges could be lost. Some of you have ridden through the "Grand Canon of the Arkansas," on the Denver and Bio Grande railway in Colorado, and many more have seen the White Mountain Notch and the Franconia Notch, in New Hampshire. All three are very beautiful and noble; but if any one of them were duplicated in the wall of the Grand Canon of the Colorado, and you were looking from the opposite brink of that stupendous chasm, you would "those scratches" on the other side before you would notice them at all. If you were to take the tallest mountprivate graveyard with ten graves in it. The ten graves represent ten difaround its base two or three thousand Grand Canon of the Colorado, its granite top would not reach up to the dizzy crests of the cliffs which hem the awful bed of that great river. If you were on the stream, and New York's noble statue of Liberty Enlightening the World were upon the cliff, it would look to you like the tiniest of dolls; and if it were agross the canon from you, you would need a strong glass to see it at all!

The Grand Canon lies mainly in Arizona, though it touches also Utah, Nevada, and California. With its windings it is nearly seven hundred miles long; and in many places it is over a mile and a quarter deep. The width of this unparalleled chasm at the top is from eight to twenty miles; and looked down upon from above, a river larger than the Hudson, and five times as long, looks like a silver thread. The Yosemite and the Yellowstone, wonderful as they are in their precipices, -and the world outside of America cannot match those wondrous valleys, -are babies beside this peerless gorge. As Charles Dudley Warner has said: "There is nothing else on earth to approach it.' -St. Nicholas.

Some Clever Smuggling.

One of the most clever frauds ever prepetrated upon the Revenue was practised by a diamond-merchant in New York. For years he was known to be smuggli ug precious stones, but the Customs detectives could not catch him.

Every time he returned from Europe he was carefully searched, and it was even proved that he did not swallow his diamonds before going ashore, but never was anything found except a few inferior stones, and these he did not attempt to conceal. Traps were set to capture the wily old culprit, but without avail. upon a certain steamer, another memer of the firm or an agent took the same state-room upon its return trip.

It was further learned that he invariably took the entire state-room. so that he was alone upon the voyage. This led to the discovery of the fraud.

It appears that the importer, when on his way from Europe, would cut a small piece out of the flooring under the carpet of the state-room, and, after concealing the diamonds to be smuggled, would put back the flooring and replace the carpet. When he left the ship, he left the diamonds too in their place of concealment, and of course the detective never found any in his possession.

A few days afterwards, when the vessel was about to sail for Europe, the other member of the firm or its agent, having secured the state-room for the return trip, would go on board accompanied by his confederate. The latter would then remove the diamonds, and go ashore perfectly safe. There were no Customs officers on active duty when vessels were depart-

A Long Dinner. George the Fourth asked Dr. Gregory what was the longest sederunt after dinner that he had ever heard of on credible authority. The doctor answered: "The longest I know of was at the house of a learned Scottish judge, Lord Newton. A gentle-man called at his house, in York Place. Edinburgh, at a late hour, and was informed that his lordship was at dinner. Next day, the same gentleman called at an early hour, and, bewas at dinner, expressed surprise that the dinner of that day should be so day before. 'It is the very same dinhas not yet risen from the table."

A Slight Mistake.

The assay of some rock from a mine away. a short distance from Dayton, Wash., was $1.49 to a ton, but the news of the strike was that the value was Dayton and staked off claims, and considerable excitement was created before the actual fact could be believed. Besides limestone and graered.

THE modern drummer is not much other couldn't be reached with a lyin' and goes out a lyin'.

The Continents.

If some geologists are correct in their opinions, nature once accomplished the feat of making a Panama canal on a scale that would stagger the very imagination of M. de Lesseps. This great waterway between the oceans is supposed to have existed at the beginning of the Quaternary period, when the surface of the earth was just putting on the appearance that it yet retains. It was formed by the effects of some vast pressure which lifted North America high above the sea, while the West Indias and the Isthmus were correspondingly depressed. North and South America were thus separated by a broad arm of the sea, through which the equatorial current of the Atlantic flowed into the Pacific.

This current of warm water being thus diverted from its present course, the Gulf Stream hall no existence, and Europe lacked the warmth that it now derives from that source. A period of cold consequently prevailed in Northern Europe, and ice sheets were spread far over its surface. At the same time the great elevation of the continent of North America caused a lowering of its temperature, and it, too, suffered from an invasion of the ice. Afterwards, according to the theory, a reversal of these effects occurred, the continent sinking, while the isthmus and the islands rose, and during this change of level the crust of the globe was fissured or cracked along a line extending from Cuba across the Caribbean Sea and Mexico far out into the Pacific.

The line of this break is believed to be indicated by certain volcanic islands in the Pacific, by the great chain of the Mexican volcanoes, Colima, Jorullo, Toluca, Ixtaccihuati, Popocatepetl, Orizaba and Tuxtla, and by the celebrated Bartlett deep and other profound troughs in the bottom of the Caribbean Sea. Volcanoes naturally form along such fissures in the earth, where communication is most readily established with the interior of the globe.

Another scene of similar changes, also attended by a long break in the earth's crust, now marked by volcanoes, is the shallow sea which divides Alaska from Siberia.

It is no new idea that land once extended across the strait separating the northwestern extremity of America from Asia, but the subject has lately assumed fresh interest from the investigations of M. Emile Blancard, who asserts, with great confldence, that America and Asia were thus connected in quite recent times, recent, that is to say, according to the geological reckoning of time. He bases his conclusion on the striking resemblances between certain species of American animals and plants and those found in Asia. The likeness extends even to some remarkable flowers and insects. One cannot sufficiently admire a science which thus traces back for us -with many errors in detail, no doubt, but upon the whole with substantial accuracy—the history of our wonderful planet, and shows us how the slowly changing levels of its crust have united and divided the four quarters of the earth; have created broad, safe land-ways by which the living creatures that adorn the globe could migrate from hemisphere to hemisphere, and then again, as by a stroke, have severed the connected halves of the world; have directed the course of ocean currents, and have established and re-established the climates of continents.

The mind is broadened and the imagination both chastened and refreshed by such studies as these.

The "Cabby" Weakened.

Mr. Walter Besant tells the following story of a disputed cab fare: friend of mine drove from Picadilly to some place in the suburbs outside the radius. On getting down be tendered three shillings and sixpence for his fare—this was a little over the proper fare. The driver wanted five shill-The passenger refused. 'I'd like to tight you for it,' said the driver. 'The very thing!' cried my friend, who has never in his life but on a boxing glove, and was almost as ignorant as Mr. Pickwick even of the fighting attitude, 'The very thing!' Capital! We'll have the fight in the back garden, my brother will look on, hold the stakes, and see fair.' cabman got down slowly. 'I was pleased,' continued the narrator, 'to discover that he appeared almost as much afraid as I was myself, perhaps—if that was possible—even more. He followed into the back garden, where there was a lovely little bit of turf, quite large enough for practical purposes. I placed my five shillings in my brother's hands, took off my coat and waistcoat and rolled up my sleeves, all with an appearance of cheerful alacrity. "Now, my friend," I said, "I am ready as soon as you are." The anxiety of the moment was, I confess, very great. But it decreased as I watched the man's face express successively all the emotions of bounce, surprise, doubt, hesitation, and abject cowardice. "No," he said, "gimme the three-and six; I know your tricks, both of you. I've been done this way before." And so, grumbling and swearing, he drove Tallest Men.

The tallest men of West Europe are found in Catalonia, Spain, Normandy, France, Yorkshire, England, and the Ardennes districts of Belgium. In the United States the thirty-eighth parallel, ranging through Indiana and Northern Kentucky, is as decidedly the latitude of big men as the forty-second is that of the big cities. The tallest men of South America are found in the Western Provinces of the segentine Republic; of Asia, in Afghanistan and Rajpootana; of Africa, in the highlands of Abyssic a.

We offer One Hundred Dollars reward for any case of catarrh that cannot be cured by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. Cheney & Co., Props., Toledo, O.
We, the undersigned, have known F. J.
Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions, and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.

WEST & TRUAX, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo,

Walding, Kinnan & Marvin, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.
Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free. Price 75c, per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

The Only One Ever Printed.

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

There is a 3 in h display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Br. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a Crescent on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you nook, beautiful Lithographs of Samples free.

The roads of France are the most perfect

IF your Back Aches, or you are all worn out, good for nothing, it is general debility. Brown's from Bitters will cure you, make you strong, cleanse your liver, and give a good appetite—tones the nerves.

The population of the earth doubles itself in 260 years.

An Important Difference.

To make it apparent to thousands, who think themselves ill, that they are not a ffected with any disease, but that the system simply needs cleansing, is to bring comfort home to their hearts, as a costive condition is easily cured by using Syrup of Figs. Manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co.

Kerosene was first used for lighting pur-

FITS stopped free by Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. No Fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline. 931 Arch St., Phils., Pa.

The first newspaper advertisement appeared in 1652. Brown's Iron Bitters cures Dyspepsia, Malaria, Biliousness and General Debility. Gives Strength, aids Digestion, tones the nerves—creates appetite. The best tonic for Nursing Mothers, weak-women and children.

BERCHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous illness. Beecham's 121:s sell well because they cure. 25 cents a box.

The worst cases of female weakness readily yield to Dr. Swan's Fastiles. Samples free. Dr. Swan, Beaver Dam, Wis.

If afflicted with sore eyes use Dr.Isaas Thompson's Eye-water.Druggists sell at 25c.per bottle

COPYRIGHT. 1891

Hard to take —the big, old-fashioned pill. It's pretty hard to have to take it, too. You wouldn't, if you realized fully how it shocks and weakens the system.

Luckily, you don't have to take it. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are better. They're sensible. They do, mildly and gently, more than the ordinary pill, with all its disturbance. They regulate the liver, stomach and bowels, as well as thoroughly cleanse them. They're the original Little Liver Pills, purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, the smallest and the easiest to take. One little Pellet for a gentle laxative—three for a cathartic. Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels are promptly and permanently cured.

They're the cheapest, too, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned. You pay only for the good you get.

ria, Biliousness and General Debility. Gives Strength, aids Digestion, tones the nerves—creates appetite. The best tonic for Nursing Mothers, weak women and children. The sun yields 8,000,000 times the light of the moon. No Safer Remedy can be had for Coughs and Colds, or any trouble of the Throat, than "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Price 25 cts. Sold only in boxes. Beecham's Pills cure billous and nervous Piso's Remedy for Catarrh is the Resist to Use, and Cheapest.

AM. N. U. No. 6 1892.

Catarrh--Remove the Cause.

I was afflicted from infancy with Catarrh, and for ten years with eruptions on my face. I was attended by the best physicians, and used a number of Blood remedies with no permanent relief. MY LIFE BECAME A BURDEN TO ME, for my case was declared incurable. I saw S. S. S. advertised, and took eight bottles, which cured me entirely, and I feel like a new person.—Miss Josie Owen, Montpelier, Ohio.

I was the victim of the worst case of Catarrh that I ever heard of. I was entirely deaf in one ear, and all the inside of my nose, including part of the bone, sloughed off. No sort of treatment benefited me, and physicians said "I would never be any better." As a last resort I took Swift's Specific, and it entirely cured me and restored my hearing. I have been well for years, with no sign of return of the disease.—Mrs. Josephine Polhill, Due West, S. C. S. S. cures Catarrh, like it does other Blood diseases, by eliminating the poison which causes it. Treatise on Blood and Skin mailed free.

SWIFT SPECIFIC COMPANY, ATLANTA, GA.

ONLY TRUE safe, speedy cure. Returns eks, beautifies Complexion. where. All genuine goods bear Send us 2 cent stamp for 32-page

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo. Address THE RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY P. O. Box 671, New York.

DESCRIPTION OF THE CENT AND WIN SPESCASE Prince Temper Br. Bridgman, m BUN SHADOWS.

here never was success so nobly gained. Or victory so free from earthly dross, But, in the winning, someone had been pained

And someone suffered loss. There never was so wisely planned a feter

Or festal throng with hearts on pleasure

But some neglected one outside the gate Wept tears of discontent.

There never was a bridal morning, fair With Hope's blue skies and Love's unclouded sun

For two fond hearts, that did not bring despair

To some sad other one. -Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in the Cosmopolitan.

"HAT

ARD and stern | waken. were the tones of Mr. Orrin Halpine's voice as he called oute "Hat! Yo' lazy, shirmean b' layin' ladder leading to the little attic, he into his step-daughter's very ear, it is needless to state that his last query was entirely superfluous. Perhaps he thought so, too, for he did not wait for any reply, but turned and clumped out to the forlorn little lean-to, out by the big rocks, which he dignified by the name "stable," whence the sounds which presently issued informed the occupants of the house that he was venting some of his bad temper on his two unfortunate

Up in the little, stuffy attic a girl knelt, staring stonily out of the tiny window, through which the morning sun, rising over Redtop, had shot a blistering ray and wakened her, long before Orrin Halpine had called her. From the room below came the cross, whining voices of two or three of the little Halpines, quarrelling over the possession of a little, scrawny, blear-eyed kitten one of them had found at Gray's boardingcamp the day before. Several big blue-flies buzzed drowsily on the pane. From the stable came the sound of kicks and curses, and the plunging of frightened horses. Out by the hen-house, old Podge, one of Orrin Halpine's starvedlooking, miserable dogs, lay asleep. Two-year-old Bud toddled up and kicked him, as he had seen his father do, and for yelping, as Podge knew only too

The girl at the window in the attic drooped her head and groaned.

"Oh, God! I s'pose all ov 'em'll be like him. Pore mammy—pore, brokedown, tired mammy! Jes' t' think ef they all grows up brutes, like the'r pop! An' how kin it ever be helped, when dumb critters! Oh, God, I cyarn't stan' this no more! Please help us!"

Above the wrangling of the children and the clatter of breakfast dishes rose a tired, cracked, female voice: "Hattie! Hat-tee! Air yo' up?"

The girl at the window rose slowly to and went on as before. her feet, wiped her eyes, and clambered down the little ladder, near the foot of which stood the family wash-stand, consisting of a rude bench, on which stood a pail of water, with a gourd in it, and

"HAT" AT THE ATTIC WINDOW.

Hattie washed herself, wiped on the long roller-towel near by, deftly fastened up her long, thick, wavy hair, and bcgan to assist her mother in getting breakfast, without a word.

They did not look like mother and daughter, these two women. Mrs. Halpine, at seventeen, had been an uncommouth and unkempt, half-bleached hair an old woman before her time, worn with rheumatism and toil. She had never known anything better-only for a brief year, and that was so long ago that the memory was an indistinct one. Fred Barnett came to the mountains, all the way from Nashville, to fish, and hunt, and sketch, and pass a quiet summer. He came to Woodson's Gap, and met Tillie Parsons, and his six weeks' outing became twelve, and the twelve weeks became a year, for he and Tillie were married, and he stayed and worked the little mountain farm-stayed because his people had written to him that he need not come, except alone.

It was not the life for handsome, scholarly, luxury loving Fred Barnett, and one cool October night, after a day of restless wandering in the woods, he wrote a few letters, kissed his wife tenderly, and went to sleep, never to Tillie cried a good deal, but her heart did not break; and when the baby came, three months later, her sorrow only expressed itself in the wish that Fred might have been there to see the little one. Then, when big Orrin Halpine, who kin 'critter! had been so attentive to her sister Susie, What d'yeh suddenly asked her to marry him-prinmean b' layin' cipally because Susie had refused him, abed this hyar but Tillie did not know it—she contime o' day? Git sented, and for a while was just as happy up! D'ye heah as though Fred Barnett had never come me?"

As Orrin
Halpine's voice
might have hood almost before her mother noticed done duty as a fog-horn, and as, by it. Then—only a year gone by—a letter climbing a couple of steps of the rickety had come from Fred Barnett's mother a carefully worded epistle, saying that sould have shouted his morning greeting if Hattie would come to her, and leave everything in the old life, she would do well for her, and bring her up a lady, as became a daughter of the Barnetts.

Hattie read the letter, with throbbing heart and flushed cheeks. How often the dog ran away, terrified, but without | the poor child had dreamed and hoped a yelp. The Halpine dogs got kicked | for this very opportunity! To go to school—to learn, and see, and know the great world. And then-then-But "then" was too far in the future to come within the scope of her imagination, and she took the letter, in great glee, to her mother, not dreaming that Mrs. Halpine would be one whit less pleased than she herself was The elder woman read Mrs. Barnett's note, and, after the fashion they all sees and an' hears him, all th' time drunk, an' swearin', an' cussin', 'an 'busin' mammy, an' them, an' th' pore, dumb critters! Oh, God, I cyarn't stan' readily understood, for she crumpled the letter in her little clenched hand and threw it into the fire. Mrs. Hulpine protested, weakly, in spite of her own gladness, at first, but Hattie took up the burdens of her starved, lonely life

> After breakfast, which Orrin Halpine's ugly temper made more than usually unpleasant, Hattie took a pail and walked down to the spring, near the stage-road. It was cool and quiet down there, and at this time of day there was seldom any one passing, so Hattie, worn out with a night of wakefulness-for Orrin Halpine had come home drunk, and she feared for the consequences to her mother-sat down by the spring to rest and think.

The long, dreary, unhappy year that had gone by-had it brought anything to reward the sacrifice she had made? Would not her mother's life have been really more endurable without her? For she was the cause of much of the trouble between Halpine and her mother. And what good had her sacrifice done? Where would it all end? Her mother would miss her if she went away; but, she asked, a little bitterly, "How long?

These and other thoughts crowded into her mind, and a spirit of pure selfishness, she had never before felt, entered into them. Why should she, after all, throw away everything the world held for her for the sake of her weak, selfish mother and those little Halpine's? She never thought of them as being anything more to her than Orrin Halpine's children. Had she not rights as well as others? And—she had foolishly thrown away the only chance her life had held. No, there had been Sam Hollis. What would he not have done vinced that the bright yellow characters for her! But she had told him that she made the blanket very valuable. - Chicacould not care for him as he deserved, go Times. and he went away-to Louisville, it was said, but she did not know, for he sent no word, though she heard he was doing old, thin, faded, with a weak, tremulous was not quite sure, for she did not feel THE MIDWINTER HARVEST, ice left over from last year's supply, there certain that she could ever love himsuppose they should marry, and Sam, poor, sensative, loving fellow, should learn for certain that she did not care for him as he did for her? He had not believed it before. But Sam was gone, and it was not likely that she would ever see him again. Ever if he should come back, and asked her to be his wife, could she be wicked enough to accept him? And poor Hattie bowed her aching head on the cool stone and sobbed bitterly.

If he would only come back! She thought she would be kinder to him, an l monly pretty girl. As thirty-six, she was | they would be happy. Would they? She | pendons and gastropodous.

A tall young man, in "store clothes," came along the road, whistling softly. He saw the dejected figure by the spring, and his heart leaped.

"Hattie! is it jo', honey?"

"Sam! oh, Sain!" And then she was in his arms, and his kind, honest voice was whispering sweet, passionate words in her ear. He had tried to stay away, he said, but could not. He had to come back and see her once more; and—"Hattie,darlin',will yo' come now? I cyarn't git 'long, nohow, 'thout yeh.

Yo' mus' come, honey. I shan't go 'way an' leave yo' hyar. I'm doin' well, an' yo' knows I luv yeh, an'll be good t' yeh. Will yo' come, honey?"

The girl did not answer at once. There was a battle, and a hard one going on in that true little heart, and Hattie's better self was winning. Presently she choked back the sobs and looked tearfully up into the kind, brown eyes which gazed at her so longingly—and her battle was

"Sam! Sam? Ef yo' on'y knowed how hard it is fer me! But I cyarn't Sam. It'd be too wicked-for I hain't changed none. God knows I wish't I c'u'd go with yo', Sam-but I like yek too much fer t' make yeh mis'able all yo're life. No, don't-don't say anythin' mo'! [It on'y makes me feel wusser, an' kin do no good. Go, an' fergit it all, honey. Good-by-good-by."

The man understood, and did not speak. He only pressed the tired form closer, and kissed the—for once—unresisting lips again and again, turned suddenly and was gone.

Hattie, with burning eyes, watched the strong, manly form until it disappeared around the sharp bend in the road, just below. Then she took the pail and dragged herself back to the thorns, and crosses, and misery of the old life.—R. L. Ketchum, in Argonaut.

Wonderful Farm Products.

Some of the most wonderful farm products ever exhibited in this or any other State have been on exhibition in the windows of the Merchants' Bank of this city for several days, and will be shipped to Melbourne and Sydney, Australia, and Chicago.

These giant vegetables are grown near Dungeness, and will show to the world what the soil and climate of Western Washington will produce. Among the specimens were white star potatoes, weighing from three pounds to four and a half pounds each; late rose potatoes, each; poor man's friend potatoes, weighsix and a quarter pounds each; white elephant potatoes, weighing from three to four and a half pounds each; a turnip weighing twenty-five pounds and a beet weighing twenty-one pounds.

They were grown by John Alexander. M. Alexander, Hall Davis and John Dickenson on their farms in the northern part of this county, near Dungeness. They were sent to the Merchants' by William Church, manager of the Farmers' Mercantile Company. Some of the specimens were sent by C. F. Seal, to Chicago and Peoria, Ill., and Dayton, Ohio, to be put upon exhibition there. The rest will be sent by Captain Barneson to Melbourne and Sydney, Australia, for exhibition, to show the people of that distant island what America can produce in the way of large vegetables.

The farms from which these potatoes were taken yielded 600 bushels to the acre. Only the larger potatoes will be sent to market. The small ones are kept at home and used for food for cattle aud hogs. What are called small potatoes out here would be considered from average size to large in the East. Here anything under a pound is considered

On the same farms from which these giants were brought were grown cabbages weighing twenty-eight pounds each, and rutabagas, parsnips and carrots of such immense size that they will cause the people of the East to wonder when they see them, and will have a better effect upon homeseckers and will do more toward attracting them to this State than half a dozen real estate agents, for they can show conclusively what Washington can produce .- Jefferson (Washington) Leader.

Proud of His Blanket.

Lord Lamington, who recently visited the great Shan country north of Siam, describes one of the wild hill tribesmen who wore a red blanket on which appeared in gold-paper letters the word "Superior." The man was immensely proud of this ornamental feature of his garment. He knew nothing of the meaning of the mark, but he was fully con-

As far as known at the present time there are but nine words which end in "dous." They are: Tremendous, am ahibodous, hazardous, apodous, pteropo dous, cephaledous, gasteropodous, stu-

GATHERING AN ICE CROP ON THE HUDSON RIVER.

Twenty Thousand Men Engaged in Harvesting the Crop-Cutting and Delivering the Ice Crop.

The principal supply of ice used in this city comes from the mid channel of the Hudson in that section running northward from Marlboro and stretching eighty miles away to Coeymans. This section of the river yields an almost unlimited supply of ice when the winters are even moderately severe, but as only the ice in the middle of the river, where it is free from impurities, is cut this supply also is limited. The Knickerbocker cut all their Hudson River ice in this section of the river, harvesting about 1,250,000 tons a year. The ice harvesting is looked forward to by from 10,000 to 20,000 laborers every season with much interest, as many trades in cities are at a standstill during the cold snaps, and they find remunerative employment in these ice fields. The prices paid vary according to the skill or experience of the employe, but average about $2 a day. so that during the ice harvesting the Knickerbocker alone is disbursing between $30,000 to $40,000 a day in

In this stretch of eighty miles along the Hudson River the Knickerbocker Ice Company has about fifty ice storing houses with an ice storing capacity of from 7006 to 65,000 tons each with a total storing capacity of nearly 5,000, 000 tons of ice. It is in these ice houses that the ice for New York is stored the vear around.

In order to avert as far as possible, however, the danger arising from an open winter, the ice companies fill their louses as full as possible each winter, so as to have a good stock to carry over for the next year to meet such emergencies. So while only about 1,500,000 tons of ice are handled by the Knickerbocker every year for the market, yet the company endeavors to store up twice that quantity, to guard against the possible ice famine of the next winter. Some of the largest ice houses of the Knickerbocker Ice Company are 350 feet long, 200 feet wide and 38 feet high. The houses are whitewashed every few years so as to preserve them against decay, while the garret floor is filled with hay, which is strewn on the top layer of ice in the house.

Besides the 20,000 men employed in harvesting the ice crop, there are from 300 to 500 horses engaged in the work. Stables and houses for their accommodation are built along the river bank at convenient places, while blacksmith shops and repair shops are scattered for the shoeing of horses and repairing of harnesses and tools.

twelve inches thick. Twenty years ago hannened that the ice crop was all cut and safely harvested before New Year's Day. But the seasons have been growing later and later each year, so that now the ice is not expected to be of sufficient thickness until well on in January and even later. It takes several days of extremely cold weather to chill the water thoroughly, so that the ice in deep water is much longer in freezing than when the water is shallow.

The ice having attained the desired thickness, all hands are set to work with snow-plows to clean off the snow. After that the ice-scrapers and planes are sent over the field so as to plane off all the rough ice and frozen slush which may be on the surface. This done, the process of cutting is ready to begin.

First, a line at right angles with the river bank is marked across the stream to the opposite bank, or as far as the leep water goes. This line is run out with great care, for on it the regularity and evenness of cutting the whole field depends. Having made the line perfectly straight and at right angles, a skilled workman, with an ice-plow, makes a groove along the line across the river. The first trip of the plow cuts a groove in the ice about two inches deep, and it requires six trips of the plow across the line to cut through the ice. But the plow makes only five trips, or cuts only eight or ten inches, and be in another line about two feet from the first and running parallel to it, an outrigger on the plow guiding the plow on all subsequent trips on an exactly parallel course with the groove first cut. When the entire field is cut with these parallel groves to a depth of ten inches. or within two inches from the water, a similar process is gone through with at right angles with the first grooves, only, instead of running the groves two feet apart, they are now made nearly four feet apart, cutting the whole field into beautiful blocks of ice four feet long by two and from eight to sixteen inches thick, according to the severity of the winter.

The time now comes for breaking up the field of ice ior storing. Instead of breaking off each block of ice, however, as it is cut, the field is divided off into 'platoons of ice," forty eight feet long and twelve feet wide, each platoon containing seventy-two blocks of ice. These platoons are then floated toward the icehouses, where, as the end of the plateon touches the ice slide leading up to the roof of the icehouse, each block of ice is wedged off and hauled up the incline will be an unusually large amount of ice harvested this winter, and it is hoped that all the houses will be filled to their utmost capacity.

The delivery of ice in the city employs a small army of workmen all the year, the number being between 2000 and 3000 in all the companies. The ice is brought from the storehouses along the banks of the Hudson almost every day during the summer in barges. Knickerbocker Ice Company alone has sixty of these barges, the capacity of each averaging 900 tons, besides six double-ender steamers, with a capacity of 1500 tons each. These steamers were built at the time of the war for the Government for gunboats, to be employed in rivers where it was difficult for steamers to turn around. They are 233 feet long and have a beam of forty-two feet. They were known by such Indian names as the "Sassacus," etc. The barges are brought down the Hudson in fleets towed by powerful tug-boats, and are distributed to the various piers convenient to the ice wagons and the city deliveries. The Knickerbocker Ice Company alone has 600 wagons for the distribution of ice to retail and wholesale customers. These wagons, with all the harnesses of the horses, are made at the company's shops, where all the repairs and shoeing are also done. capacity of each cart is about two and a half tons .- New York Tribune.

Brick Tea.

This is the process of manufacture: The leaves and twigs, after being sundried, are put into a cloth and suspended over a boiler to be steamed. Meanwhile the mold is got ready, consisting of four short boards set up on end and securely fastened, with an internal space of about nine inches by three and a half inches. Within this cavity is placed a woven mat basket, and into this the softened leaves and twigs are dropped in small handfuls with a little rice water to cause the mass to adhere. As layer after layer is added, the stuff is compressed by powerful blows from an iron-shod rammer. Next the coarser twigs are dried and ground to powder and sprinkled over the other mass or between the layers, so as to become welded in. The flexible basket round the tea prevents the mass from taking too angular a shape, as sharp corners on the bricks would make them awkward to carry on the long journey they have to perform.

After the mold is filled and sufficiently compressed it is taken to pieces, and the cake, still within the mat, or basket, is taken again to the fire to be thoroughly dried. Then the ends of the mat are drawn together and closed up, and the pao, or cake, is ready for transport to Ta-chien-lu, where it undergoes further preparation. It should be mentioned that the cakes are weighed after being The ice is not usually cut until it is steamed, and are sold on that weight, although they lose about a third after bet was usual to have the ice attain this ing dried. At Ta-chien-lu they are cut thickness before Christmas, and it has into uniform sizes and repacked as chuan, or bricks.

The best kind of brick tea, such as is meant for the Russian market, is more carefully prepared. The choice leaves only are taken, and are spread in the sun until slightly withered. They are then rolled in the hand until they become moist with exulation, and pressed into small balls, which are left to ferment. When fermentation begins they are ready for the molds, and the process is pretty much as above described, but without the admixture of the twig dust. - Chambers's Journal.

Simple Interest Rules.

Four per cent.-Multiply the principal by the number of days to run, separate the right hand figure from the product and divide by 9.

Five per cent.-Multiply by number of days and divide by 72. Six per cent.—Multiply by number of days, separate right hand figure and Seven and three-tenths per cent. Multiply by number of days and double the amount so obtained. On $100 the interest is just two cents per day. Eight per cent.-Multiply number of days and divide by 45. Nine per cent .- Multiply by number of days, separate right hand figure and divide by 4.

Ten per cent .-- Multiply by number of days and divide by 36. Twelve per cent.-Multiply by number of days, separate right hand figure and divide by 3 .- Merchants' Review.

Memory's Impressions on the Brain. It is computed by leading physiologists that, since one-third of a second suffices to produce an impression on the brain, a man of 100 years of age must have collected on or in his brain matter 9,467,280,000 impressions. Or, again, take off one-third of the time for sleep, and we still find 6,311,520,000. This would give 3,155,760,000 separate waking impressions to the man who lives to the age of fifty years. Allowing an average weight of four pounds to the brain, deducting one-fourth for blood and vessels, and another fourth for external integument, it may be said that each grain of brain subtance contains not less than 205,542 traces or impressions of ideas. Of course these figures and calculations will need to be applied according to the temperament of the individuals to whom they are fitted, but they all point and into the house, where it is packed to one fact: Divine handiwork is grandly away for future use. As there is little shown in memory.—St. Louis Republic.

SELECT SIFTINGS.

Tomatoes were not cultivated seventy-

The cod bank of Newfoundland is six hundred miles long. Forty-eight different languages are said to be spoken in Mexico. Constantinople, Turkey, has been besieged twenty-eight times. Harry W. Wood, of Lansing, Mich., dislocated his shoulder while stretching himself. Caligula, the Roman Emperor, caused a poet to be thrown to the wild beasts of The Russian Government will lend the Central Famine Committee $25,000,- 000 without interest.

Bank notes in Austria-Hungary are printed on one side in German, and the other in Magyar for the benefit of the Hungarians.

The first vessel launched by the early American colonists - the Blessing of the Bay, launched in Massachusetts Bay, July 4, 1631.

Money loaned to Luke Hayden, of Torrington, in 1801, has just been paid into the Connecticut School Fund. Six times the amount of the original loan has been paid in interest.

The total area of bog land in Ireland is 2,830,000 acres, of which 1,254,000 is mountain bog, and the other is available for fuel. The average thickness of the peat is twelve feet. Since 1860 $12,000,000 has been expended in constructing 11,000 miles of canals and 11,000 miles of distributing ditches, which now furnish irrigation for 6,000,000 acres of land. A Chicago (III.) company that makes a specialty of supplying sermons so order for ministers says that it has the names of 1000 clergymen to whom these manu-factured pulpit discourses are regularly The term "tabby cat" is derived from Atab, a famous street in Bagdad, Arabia, inhabited by the manufacturers of silken stuffs called atabi, or taffety. This stuff is woven with waved markings of watered silk, resembling a "tabby" cat's Although bedridden for some months and believed to be unable to move hand or foot, Charles Hildebrand, of New Albany, Ind., on a recent week, when he found the house afire, "arose from his bed with alacrity and vacated the building." Living near the Tennessee city of Memphis are seven sisters whose names rhyme beautifully, but do not scan. The names are Nancy Emeline, Lucinda Caroline, Mary Haseltine, Jane Palestine, Lulu Paradine, Virgio Valentine, and Maudie Anna Adeline.

The new hospital at Antananarivo, the capital of Madagascar, was opened by the Queen of that island recently. It is sustained by the Society of Friends of Great Britain, under the superintendence of Dr. nurses from London are in constant attendance.

A Musical Well.

At Tacoma, Washington, is a well. The well is about 400 feet deep and furnishes good water. It also furnishes from some mysterious source a constant blast of air or gas. One day not long ago the owner collected all the wind nusical instruments he could-amounting to eight-from his neighbors and friends. He bored holes in the boards covering the well and at one aperture placed a cornet, at another a brass horn, at another a clarionet, then a fife, an immense tin horn about three yards long which he had made, a mouth organ and other instruments, up to the number mentioned. One after another they began to blow as he put them in. The hourse growl of the bass horn mingled with the clarion notes of the cornet and clarionet, etc. When all were going the din was terrible and there did not seem to be a good note sounded. The wind does not come up from the well in a steady blow, but in gusts of more or less force. - New Orleans Picayune.

Leave Leaves on the Lawn.

"Most people," says an artistic gardener, "rake off the leaves from their lawns and then to protect them smear them over with some vile compost. I can't understand why they prefer the rank flavored stuff to the beautifully variegated blanket of leaves nature provides for that very purpose. What is prettier than a wide stretch of the restless, fluttering things, and no better protection can be given the grass than they afford. Enough will decay in the course of the winter to enrich the soil sufficiently, and when raked off in the spring the la vn is a neat and clean as one can wish. Some argue that the leaves are so long falling that the beauty of the lawn is marred long before the protection is needed, but to this I answer that these early dropping should be raked off and preserved till cold weather, when they hould all be scattered over the lawn at once."-Chicago Herald.

Here's a Good Hair Tonic.

Here is a good hair tonic: Take seven parts of water to one of acetic acid (five ents' worth from the druggist's will last quite a while), mix well a. d rub well in ne scalp with some sort of brush every night. Of course it takes some time for the effect to become apparent, but in time it really does bring out the hair .- New

FRANK W. GIST,

CALERA, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 19.

AN OUNCEMENTS.

Deans as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic par-

We are authorized to announce D. R McMillan as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject

S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county and the action of the action of the democratic county and the action of th

We are authorized to announce Wm. R. A. Milner as a candidate for the office of Circuit Clerk of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic and conservative party.

John A. Campbell.

"SIXTY-SIX counties in the state, and sixty of them for Kolb" has not panned out very well so far.

Though Mr. Kolb has made a wonderful canvas, he is very far from election. In fact he gets faroffice a man who by every, test has been found competent and fit.

THE JOURNAL again calls attention to the candidacy of Hon. A. T. Goodwin for the State Senate from this district. There being no candidate from our own county, we into tightly clasped pocket books to the support of our people. El-

THE Magnet is a new candidate for public favor at Shelby, Ala. It mysterious way lead the world to is published by C. C. DuBose and God. In the thickest of the battle edited by H. C. Hornady. Shelby is a good town and ought to support a paper. The Magnet says it dier lays down she will conquer the will eschew politics, a very sensible conclusion to start on. We wish it success.

back from a visit to his former home in Bibb county, and we suspect by the short stay he made that everything political is not as harmonious as it ought to be. Wonder if the sudden death and burial of S. M. Adams and his following hasn't the two. It was a fitting sequel something to do with it.

Central Express, has at last found betrays a confidence in so cowardly out what was generally known in ery and honor even among thieves. Bibb county, that S. M. Adams is a James was a desperate bad man, demagogue of the most arrogant but he who shot him from behind type, whose greed for political pow- the mask of friendship was far beer is only equalled by his bigotry from behind that mask shoot, not and conceit. The Express has been with a leaden bullet nor at the supporting Mr. Adams for congress, heart, but with some poisonous or and also attempting to side with the destructive arrow at the character element in Bibb county who were Adam's followers. The great alliance dictators' attempt to hedge upon the probate judgeship afcharacter, and now that paper is House in Birmingham. The play telling him of it in real plain terms.

Here is our hand, Brother Connel
House in Birmingham. The play was "Skipped by the Light of the Moon," the funniest play on the road, and calculated to lighten for This is his style, you know; he is a O'Briens bully as well as a demagogue. All true men will rejoice at the political downfall of a man who, raised from Morgan I find the following senobscurity into prominence by his tence, which speaks volumes of the appeals to the baser prejudices of work: "My life here is devoted to human nature, has sought to rule or my duties in the senate, which ruin. When his political grave is would require forty-eight hours in quite ready for the reception of his each day to enable me to perform therein with his face downward, so that when they who died with him and for him are called forth, his venomous spirit will go the other way. Let his deeds be interred with him, and let the places where trod his feet in haughtiness be swept clean, that he may be remembered no the first of the south, and the superior of the south, whose service from every important and an ardent worker, the two greatest elements of marked success. Possessed of a strong and comprehensive mind, his close application to duty makes him the senate.

CIGARS AND TOBACCOS.

Senator Morgan is a close student and an ardent worker, the two greatest elements of marked success. Possessed of a strong and comprehensive mind, his close application to duty makes him the peer of any and the superior of most of his colleagues in the senate. He is never too busy, however, to drop a word of information and entered with him, that he may be remembered no the places where trod his feet in haughtiness be swept clean, that he may be remembered no the major of the south, and an ardent worker, the two greatest elements of marked success. Possessed of a strong and comprehensive mind, his close application to duty makes him the world.

CIGARS AND TOBACCOS.

Senator Morgan is a close student and an ardent worker, the two greatest elements of marked success. Possessed of a strong and comprehensive mind, his close application to duty makes him the world.

Senator Morgan is a close student and an ardent worker, the two greatest elements of marked success. Possessed of a strong and comprehensive mind, his close application to duty makes him the world.

Senator Morgan is a close student and an ardent worker, the two greatest elements of marked success. Possessed of a strong and of the south, and much more than any of the south and an ardent worker, the two greatest elements of marked success. Possessed of a strong of the south and an ardent worker, the two that he may be remembered no drop a word of information and enmore. We congratulate Bibb coun- couragement into the life of the ty upon his rapidly approaching young men of his acquaintance.
In them he sees portrayed the pos-

GOSSIP OF THE CRITIC.

is a candidate for the legislature We are authorized to announce G. B. this able young writer should care ments grand, the future glorious, step aside from his glorious field of literary effort to wrestle with politics, I can not imagine. But if he Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county the people of his county can do tigate truth or falsity of a charge this time father lost track of me. I well. He stands in the front rank of Alabama journalists, and his fuof time. Now, he wants to go to the legislature, a place in the state where the best men, such as he, can open to him brighter possibilities.

the other night and listened at the county seat at a place which is acexercises, I was made to muse on what the women of this country are doing for the Master in these little transacted in a hurry and without higher work than that of aiding in facilities alone make it the most safe and easy travil. I used it about ther away every day. The people evangelizing the world, and no desirable location in the county for two months before my expected time of Alabama will elect to this high sphere in which she can more fitly sphere in which she can more fitly labor. But while I cannot think the county seat. Calera wants the finement. Nothing occurred to protract she will ever be a success as an ac- court house and she is going to ask my convalescence, and I got about in tive missionary, it is a beautiful for it in an honest and open way, it a medicine that should be used by idea thas the can uphold the hands She wants it as a business propo- every expectant mother, for should they of men who are devoting their time and talent to converting the heathand talent to converting the heathen. She can do more in her line and not as a means of political adthan a man. She can reach further vantage. take pleasure in commending him and invent more ways to raise funds than a man. In all such fields she Will be paid for any case of rheumatism is excelling. Fair hands, so soft which cannot be cured by Dr. Drum-and tender, are building churches mond's Lightning Remedy. This offer more county will give him a solid and tender, are building churches, and tender, are building churches, is made in good faith by the proprietors and there is no reasonable excuse for and there is no reasonable excuse for schools of reform, erecting monu-ments, and she will yet in her own meets and she will yet in her own mysterious way lead the world to she will minister to the wounded and comfort the dying, and taking up the burden which the living solmost stubborn foe. Prophets foretold the conversion of earth's heathen races centuries ago, and the THE JOURNAL's fine setter is just future will see them fulfilled.

Bob Ford, who killed the noted outlaw, Jesse James, was killed himself the other day in a drunken row. In the cowardly manner in which he shot the notorious Jesse, he proved himself the worse man of that he should die as he did, by a bullet. There is no worse charac-EDITOR CONNELLEY, of the State ter in human nature than he who neath him. There are many who or the material interests. These are worse than Ford.

Through the courtesy of Manager O'Brien and the Age-Herald ter his defeat for congress opened the Critic attended last night a the eyes of the Express to his true performance at O'Brien's Opera road, and calculated to lighten for ley, given in sympathy and respect. the time almost any heart. Mr. We honor you for renouncing the O'Brien secures the best attraccause of a man whom you found un- tions which come south, and is worthy your support. We told you quite successful in his endeaver to what sort of a man he was long please his audiences. The present schedule of trains will put pleasure ago, but you were perhaps right in seekers from Calera into the city waiting for the proof. You have it, in ample time for the play. An and you are acting the part of a occasional visit to the opera, drama man in turning upon him. We or light comedy will serve to retrust, however that you will not be leive the pressure of business and worldly cares. In the good ones personally attacked by this consum- there is no harm to any one, and mate personification of self conceit. the bad ones do not appear at

In a private letter from Senator disappearance from a sphere in sibilities of his country's future, and which he was never fitted by intel- he is ever ready to assist and instruct those who will pause and listen; and if one ever listens to his grand ideas given in his simple yet My friend Francis Bartow Lloyd, exhaustive style, one will be anxbetter known now as Rufus Sanders, lous to listen again. Such as he are they who make a nation great from Montgomery county. Why and powerful, life noble, attain-

Something unusual has happened want to go to the legislature meeting at the courthouse to invesschool of literature, and has learned and then strain at one small gnat.

His reason was that when you get I mean to find him. illest afford to waste their time. Yet to Columbiana you take one more it might give him new ideas, and step and jump off. He was not a citizen of the county, but a promi-As I sat at the Missionary service ize the importance of having the publish this notice, and oblige sincerecessible and where business can be bands of women. Woman has no traveling so far. Calera's railroad money is always refunded where the remedy fails to cure. The price of a bottle is $5, and that is the cost of a cure. Drummond Medicine Co.. 48-50 Maiden Lane, New York. Agents wanted.

A REWARD OF $ 90.

HUGH T. CAFFEY, PHYSICIAN & SURGEON CALERA, ALA.

A LOST CHILD.

Talladega Reporter. I am trying to find my father. am told that his name is James Bailey, I have no recollection of him nor do I remember that ! ever looked eternity a peaceful rest from weary upon the face of a relative. My mother died fifteen years ago in Boone county. Shortly after my mother's down in Bibb, there is a call for a death I was adopted by a neighbor named Morgan. When I was 8 years old we moved to Nebraska, and at We are authorized to announce John will be honored by him. He is one Christians in it than Bibb had hon- but was basely led by interested party self-made men. He came from a est men." Strange that people to believe that I had died. I have only secluded corner of earth into the will swallow so many large eamels recently learned that the Morgans are not my parents. They are nothing to me; I nothing to them. The thought ture can only be checked by the hand rience said the other day that the I believe my father is living somecourt house ought to be at Calera. where in this wide world and if he is. merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

You can assist me if you will, but I can offer no reward at present save my gratitude and blessing. If you are unable to give me any informanent business man. These all real-tion regarding father, please help to RETA BAILEY.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES.

Sir-I made use of your Philotoken

Any merchant or druggist can procure Risley's Philotoken for $1 a bottle. CHARLES F. RISLEY, Wholesale Druggist, 62 Cortlandt St., New York.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

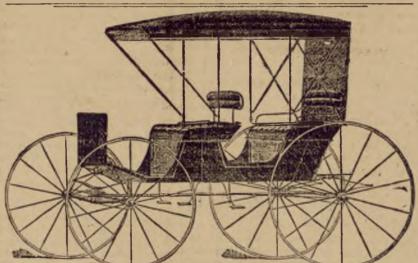

The next best thing possible to insurance against fire in the coming world is a policy against the in the conting world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of Calera.

Read and profit by the following sound connsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel: 'It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the storms of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old sge should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-

Parties who have been receiving the JOURNAL and have not sent in their subscription must do so at once or they will

THE ALABAMA (PREMIUM NO. 14) FREE.

This handsome Carriage is only one of the many Vehicles which THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY is offering its customers for 1892.

Special Premiums for Men, Women, Boys and Girls.

THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER produced the Champion Crops reported in the State last year. Write for Circulars and Prices ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY. MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA

Brick Store, Montgomery Avenue.

PATENT MEDICINES,

Lowest Possible Margines.

A. R. SCOTT, Proprietor.

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA: ALABAMA no better than to honor him. They by the Express that "hell had more understand he endeavored to find me Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans

A GENTLEMAN who has had experience said the other day that the living someience said the other day that the living so Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York

and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

The New York Store.

Calera, Ala..

SAYS-If you are Interested in

DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, BOOTS, SHOES, GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS, CLOTHING & H TS,

And if you ever Buy

Hose, Half-Hose, Silk Ties Scarfs, Etc., Etc.,

Please Listen to Us just 20 Minutes. We are overstocked, and in order Reduce Stock before we take invoice on February 1st, we will sell you any Dry Goods in our House astonished how such goods can be sold so low. Listen:

Cotton Checks 41-2 to 5 cents; Nice Cashmere Dress Goods 19% cents per vard; Same at 221-2; a Finer Goods at 271-2; All Wool Ladies Cloth fifty inches wide only 371-2 cents, former price 65; Ladies Fast Black Hose 71-2 cents per pair; a better goods for 121-2 cents; a Fine Hose for 171-2 cents, city price 40 cents; Salt 65 cents per sack; Fine Shoes $1 25 to $250; Good Shoes 1 00 per

Come and see us. We have too much to mention all in this paper. Come at once. We guarantee all prices named, and a child will get as low prices as aa older person. No favorites, but one price to all. Come and see us and you will find we mean business. We want to Reduce the Stock.

before taking Invoice, and if Prices can do it

THEY MUST BE CUT INTO

A. C. WADE & CO.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION.

Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT. 1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these departments, is a household word

1. It is the best of all weekly newspapers.

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to the household.

3. It covers the news of the whole world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thorough news service from every important news center in the world.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone features and for its news service the survive than the south.

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.

3. It covers the news of the whole world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thoroughout the south.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone features and for its newspapers.

3. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone features and for its newspapers.

4. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.

5. Bill Arp, Plunkett, and Uncle Remus and a host of other special writers are engaged by the year, and their inimitable sketches appear each week.

7. It is the People's Friend, and is interest of the south.

8. It pays more money for its special features and for its newspapers.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

4	LUC 181	TETTE OF 1	ABILAN	J1115.
No. 1, 8	outh E	Bound,		4:53	a. m.
3,	14	"			p. m.
9,	66	66			a. m.
" 2, N	orth F	Bound,		10:19	44
 4	4.6	44		10:05
10,	4.4	66		7:15	p. m.
			D 12
	E. 3	. v. & G	. 160 16.

No. 1, To Selma, 4:40 p. m. From Selma, 10:40 p. m.

ALABAMA MINERAL. 4:35 p. m. No. 85, Arrives at 10:25 a. m. 86, Departs at

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter

Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-Tax Collector-E. F. Vest.

Tax Assessor-W. H. Kidd. County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland. Superintendent of Education-T. N.

County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. Dyeev, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

AT THE CHURCHES.

PRESENTERIAN—Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m.

METHODIST-Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

Baptist Church-Rev. J. G. Lowrey rastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN—J. C Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy.

Franklin Square.

A Wonder Worker.

Mr Frank Huffman, a young man of Burlington, Ohio, states that he had been under the care of two promment physicians, and used their treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case to be Consumption and incurable.

Miss Leila Hill, of Birmingham, is visiting friends in Calera this week.

Miss Leila while living here

Couchs and Colds and at that tint Coughs and Colds and at that timt was not able to walk across the stree without resting. He found, before he had used half of a dollar bottle, that For Sale—Several wood pumps had used half of a dollar bottle, that he was much better; he continued to use it and is to-day enjoying good health. If you have any Throat, Louis Trouble try it We Louis Holder Holder Holder Louis Holder Hold

REE Bible LE COMPETITION proceeds netted a good profit.

"SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES!"

To the 623 persons answering correctly on or before March 31, 1892, our simple Bible question: "Where in the Bible is first found the word "DILIGENT." we will give the following rewards in the order named:— First Cash present in gold $1,500.60 often.

Diener in Bottom
Third Cash present in gold 1	,000.00
Fourth Cash present in gold	750.00
Fifth Cash present in gold	500.00
SixthCash present in gold	200.00
	100.00
Seventh Cash present in gold
EighthCash present in gold	100.00
Ninth Breech loading shot gun.	100.00
Tenth Gent's Gold Watch	100.00
Eleventh Ladies' Gold Watch	100.00
Twelfth One Farm Wagon	75.00
Thirteenth Road Cart	25.00
To the next 10 each Solid Silver	20.00
Watch	200.00
To the next 100 each Solid Gold
Ring	500.00
To the next 100 each Handsome
Photograph Album	800.00
To the next 200 each Handsome
Gold Pen and Holder	500.00
To the next 200 each $2.50 Cash	500.00
A COMPLETIONS	-4 -
CONDITIONS.

Advertiser, otherwise the answer will not be recorded.
This contest is open for old and young.
Every letter is recorded and numbered—there can be no mistakes. Send money by postal note, money order or registered letter. We pay no attention to answers without subscription to The Advertiser.
The Advertiser is by far the best news and literary paper published in the South, and gives its subscribers sixteen pages a week, eight on Tuesday and eight on Friday, making it almost equal to a daily paper. To Alabamians in other States it is like a letter from home twice a week. To read it is to love it.

Don't delay until too late to get one of the big rewards.

Dig rewards.
Reference: Any Business House in Montgomery.

THE ADVERTISER. Montgomery, Ala.

EXCURSION RATES TO NEW ORLEANS.

On account of Mardi Gras the East Tenn., Va. & Ga. R'y will sell, excursion tickets from all points on the line to New Orleans at one fair for the round trip. Ticket will be sold Feb., and am pleased without measure. All who have seen it say it would be cheap at $40."

Selma daily at 7:00 p. m., arrive New Orleans 7:00 a. m. without change. For further information call on any Ticket Agent of the Co. Or apply to B. W. Wrenn, G. P. & T. A.

Knoxville, Tenn. L. A. Bell, A. G. P. A. Selma, Ala,

TOWN TOPICS.

S. A. Curry was in town one day

The New Drug Store fills prescription carefully at all hours.

Friday was truly the saddest day of the seven.

The New Drug Store sells fancy sta

E. S. Lyman, of Montevallo, was in town Tuesday.

The New Drug Store sells all kinds of

Mr. J. H. Reid, of Longview, was in town Tuesday. The New Drug Store sells fine tobacco

The lime kiln at this place will and Miss Earl Anchors. be in full blast after this week.

The New Drug Store sells a cake of soap and gives you a hand mirror.

Deputy Sheriff Grant was in town one or two days this week.

Mr. Deans says that he has the votes if they are allowed to be cast. What say the others.

Miss Estelle Pratt, of Six Mile, passed through Monday on her re turn from a visit to Shelby.

Mr. Burl Holcombe had several negroes arrested Sunday on the charge of kidnapping.

M. F. Garder, the popular Bibb county drummer, with Leinkauf & Strauss, of Mobile, was in town this

It is with regret we learn that the wife of Mr. J. M. Reynolds, of Montevallo is quite sick with pneu-The young bloods composing the base ball team were cleaning their grounds, preparatory to the opening up of the coming season. Quarterly conference of the Calethe Methodist church at this place last Saturday night. Mr. Frank Fitch was a passenger on the E. T. & V. train Tuesday.

ra and Helena charge was held in

Mr. Fitch is well known in this section as a successful business man.

Editor Campbell, of the News, who is a candidate for probate judge RICHARD K. FOX. is a hustler. He is still nunting Square. New York City. the country, and says he is finding is a hustler. He is still hunting

> Miss Eliza J. Gist, two doors west of the Calera Shoe Factory, has long experience in Dress Making, and solicits patronage in her line from the ladies of Ca- and C. N. Pritchard. lera and vicity. Other sewing and cut-made many friends who are pleased

FOR SALE—Several wood pumps, a set

The Knights of Pythias gave an oyster supper on Wednesday night at the Vanderbilt Hotel. A good crowd was in attendance, and the Mr. Goldman, with Goetter, Weil & Co., Montgomery, is always a welcome visitor in Calera. He plays the piano for the young ladies, and they like to have him come up

Mr. H. C. Moss has opened up at his old stand on Montgomery Avenue, Messrs. Aldrge Bros. having removed to the store formerly occupied by M. B. Fields. The latter has gone out business.

Col. John P. West says he has his seat selected in the House of Representatives for the coming session. He has not yet announced, but says he has one hundred solicitations and one thousand waiting to followed with a paper on Missionavote for him. The Colonel is one ry Work. of the boys and can hold his own in a joke.

man passed through Calera who were well sung. said he had walked all the way from Kansas City, Mo., and was not complaining of being tired. He dollars. said he would soon make it to his destination-Mobile-and there he would rest up for a few days.

ONE DOLLAR WEEKLY

Buys a good gold watch by our club system. Our 14-karat gold-filled cases are warranted for 20 years. Fine Elgin or Waltham movement, stem wind and set. Lady's or gent's size. Equal to any $50 watch. To secure agents where we have none, we sell one of the hunting case watches for the club price, $28, and send C. O. D. by express with privilege of

C. O. D. by express with privilege of examination before paying for same.

Our agent at Durham, N. C., writes:

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how you can furnish such works for the money."

One good reliable agent wanted for each place. Write for particulars.

EMPIRE WATCH CO., New York.

A CALL TO COL. WEST.

If Col. John P. West will allow the use of his name for the legislature he will receive the support of MANY VOTERS.

SHELBY TEACHERS INSTITUTE.

At Sterrett, Alabama, March 11 and 12, 1892.

PROGRAMME.

1-Song.

FRIDAY, 9 A. M.

2-Enrollment of members.

3-Address of Welcome by Prof. E. O. Dawson.

4-Response by Superintendent T. A. Huston.

5-"The Man in the Teacher," by Prof. C. W. Seals. 6-"Necessity of Teachers being Refined," by Miss Mollie Oden. 7-"Relation of the Home to the School,"by Prof. J. H. Bradshaw

AFTERNOON SESSION, 1:30 P. M.

2-"Elements of the True Teacher," by Prof. Savage.

3—"Geography of Alabama," by

4-"Aids for development of Memory," by Miss L. A. McGibbony and Prof. J. W. Leonard. 5-"What Rights have Pupils in School," by Prof. W. T. Kendrick. 6-"Does the State of Alabama lend the Aid to Public Schools she lend the Aid to Public Schools she ought, and to what Extent could she Aid." by Prof. J. W. Kinnett E. C. Lyde. she Aid," by Prof. J. W. Kinnett and Prof. Barker.

7-Relation Common Schools have to the Republic," by Prof. R. H. Gulledge and C. L. Barber.

8—Song. 9-"Benefits arising from uni-form series of Text Books," by Profs. J. H. Hammond and G.

10-"How can we make the Institute of most Value to Teachers," by

EVENING SESSION, 7:30 P. M.

1-Song.

2-"Compulsory Education," by the Institute. (All Prepare.) 3-Declamation, by Prof. B. E.

4-Opening of the Question Box. 5-Recitation, by Miss Ruby

-"Are many Hours in the Schoolroom beneficial to Pupils," by the Institute.

SATURDAY, 8:30 A. M

2-"What are the most Import ant Duties for our Common Schools," by Profs. Geo. S. Lewis

3-Class Drill in English Grammar, by Prof. J. W. Ellenburgh. 4-Declamation, by Prof. T. H.

5—Class Drill in Physiology and Hygiene, by Prof. W. W. Wilson. 6-Song.

7-Influence of Vocal Music on Pupils, by Miss Carrie Cooper and tion of their tax assessable property. Prof. J. W. Ellenburgh. 8-"Necessity of Teachers becoming better acquainted," Prof. C. C. Evans. MISSIONARY SERVICE.

BY THE LADIES OF THE CUMBERLAND

Last Friday night the Woman's Missionary Society of the Cumberland Church gave an interesting service for the benefit of the society. The exercises consisted of songs, readings and recitations, all appropriate to the occasion.

The meeting was opened with prayer by J. G. Lowery and followed by a responsive scripture lesson by the class of Mrs. Wingo. Rev. J. C. Arnett delivered a very interesting address on the history of "womans mission work."

Mrs. Minnie Hardy read a paper on the advantages of Christian evangelization, and Mrs. Bridges

These were interspersed with recitations by the children on appropriate subjects. The songs were select-On Thursday evening a young ed with a view to the service and

> A collection of free will offerings was taken, which amounted to five

This is the first effort of this society to raise money by a public gathering, and was comparatively successful. The ladies of the place are invited to join the society and aid the good work. The dues are only ten cents per month.

OLD DR. DRUMMOND.

After years of patient study and experiment has given to the world a pre-paration which is absolute and perma-nent cure for every kind of Rheumatism. Ask your druggist for it. The price is $5 but it is a large bottle and will cure you, or the money will be refunded. If you are offered something else, write direct and we will send you a bottle by Express prepaid, Drummond Madison Co., 48-50 Maiden Lane. Agents Wanted.

The Democratic committee of Beat No.3 would be glad to hear expressions from the Democratic voters of the Beat as to their preferences for a county convention or a county prima ry. Voters can express their preferences to either member of the com-

JNO. P. WEST,)
G. P. DEANS, > Com.
J. H. GUNN.

A CALL

COMMITTEE.

To the members of the County Democratic Executive Committee:

You are hereby called to meet in the Court House in Columbiana, Ala., on Saturday, the 5th day of March, 1892, at the hour of 12 o'clock, m.

There will be business of great importance to the party to come before this meeting, and I sincerely urge upon every member of the committee to be present. Try and let nothing prevent your a

D. R. McMILLAN, Feb. 8, 1892. Chairman.

The following are the members of the Executive Committee: Beat 1-D. R. McMillan, J. S. DeLache, Beat 2-H. Pearson, N. N. Mosteller, R. F. Sturdevant. Beat 3-J. H. Gunn, G. B. Deans, J. P.

Beat 4-E. S. Lyman, Burr Nabors, A. C. Ingram.
Beat 5—W. H. Sturdevant, Jas. P. Doss, John Harmon. Beat 6-J. E. Ruffin, R. J. Griffin, F. P.

Duuham. Beat 7-1. W. Bailey, Jas, Mason, R. C. Wilson. Beat 8-E. S. Martin, J. S. Ferrell, E.

O. Dawson. Beat 9-J. H. Weldon, G. W. Taylor, Beat 11-J. E. Adams, G. W. Dye, Hugh

Beat 12-Jno. Acton, John Caldwell, N. Beat 13-S. M. Bass, A. J. DeShazo, W. H. Lee. Beat 14-T. H. Baxley, W. H. Falkner, Beat 16-A. M. Posey, S. J. Thompson,

J. H. Cooper.
Beat 17—W. C. Denson, Jason Powell, W. S. Cross.

SIX MILE ACADEMY.

ED. CHILTON VIEW:—In order to protect a noble and worthy institution of long standing against false reports please give this space.

Dame Rumor says that the Six Mile Male and Female Academy is ruined on account of Prof. Douglass' resignation, and that he has carried away a number and that he has carried away a number of its former pupils.

This is false. Prof. Douglass was an intermediate teacher, and has resigned, but the school is in no way injured. The services of a very able young man has been secured, and the institution is in a flourishing condition, as one naturally suspects when he knows it is under the direct management of so bold and eneragetic a man as Capt. Pratt. With best wishes, I am. Respectfully,
W. J. Martin.

THE STATE OF ALABAMA SHELBY COUNTY.

I will be present at the following times and places for the purpose of assessing the state and county Taxes for the year 1892, I will make only two rounds and tax payers are requested to meet me at these appointments, and have with them a descrip-

FIRST ROUND,

Gurnee,

Feby.,

Aldrich,	46	23
Montevallo,	4	24
Calera		25
Spring Creek	60	26
Shelby Ironwe	orks,"	27
Vandiver	" "	29
Bold Springs	Meh	1st
High Land	46	2
Helena	"	3
Pelham	4	4
Tylers	"	4
Elliottsville,	66	15
Yellowleaf	"	7
Spearman	64	8
Columbiana	44	9 and 10
Wilsonville	- 6	11
Harpersville	4.	12
Vincent	46	14
SECO	ND ROUND.
Gurnee	Mch	21
Aldrich	"	22
Montevallo	"	23
Calera	"	24
Spring Creek	* 44	25
Shelby Iron w	vorks"	26
Vandiver	"	28
Bold Springs	"	29
High Land	64	30
Helena		31
Pelham	April	1st
Tylers	"	1st
Eluottsville	"	2
Yellowleaf	"	4
Spearman	44	5
Columbiana	46	6 and 7
Wilsonville	2.3	8
Harpersville	"	9

W. H. KIDD Tax Assessor Shelby county Ala.

11

SPECIAL RATES TO MOBILE.

Vincent

From Feb. 25th to 29th inclusive, the round trip account Mardi Gras, tickets will be limited good to return until March 15th 1892.

Through Pullman sleepers on regular trains; extra Pullman service can be provided for special excursion parties if desired, on application to B. W. Wrenn, G. P. & T. A.

Knoxville, Tenn. L. A. Bell, A. G. P. A. Selma. Ala.

FOR THE MEETING OF THE DEMOCRATIC COUNTY EXECUTIVE THE GALL TH

A Weekly Newspaper.

tution is in a me naturally is under the id and ener.
With best terror and impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at every point in the county.

every point in the county.

≪JOB PRINTING

Quickly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

Commercial and Logal Printing a Specialty

the East Tenn., Va. & Ga. R'y will seil excursion tickets from all points on the line to Mebile at one fare for in this line.

The Journal will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Nete Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work in this line.

Sarsaparilla

Mr. Frank I. Rickson, who holds a responsible povition on the Botton & Albany Railroad at Chatham, N. Y., writes as follows:

"When my baby boy was two years old he was severed from head to feet with salt rheam. It be-gan to cense out on him when he was two weeks old, and increased in spite of all that could be done.

We were Discouraged

The doctors said it would disappear when he was seven years old. I happened to be taking Hood's Saysaparille myself and thought I would give it to the child. At that time he did not have a hair sufferings were awful. In two weeks after giving him Hood's Sarsaparilla the scale began to fall off, and in six weeks he was entirely cured of the sores. He is now the healthiest child we have. I know of two other cases in which

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Gid the same as for my boy. It is a great medicine."
Y. I. ROUSON, Pittsfield, Mass.

HOOD'S PILLS cure habitual Constipation. The loss of flesh is a trifle.

You think you need not mind it. But, if you go on losing for some time or lose a good deal in a short time, you are running down. Is that a Get back to your healthy weight and generally you get back to health.

A book on CAREFUL LIV-ING will tell you what it is to get there, and when Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil is useful. Free.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, 132 South 5th Avenue, New York.

Your druggist keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver
eil—all druggists everywhere do.

ADVICE TO WOMEN

If you would protect yourself from Painful, Profuse, Scanty, Suppressed or Irregular Menstruation you must use

BRADFIELD'S FEMALE REGULATOR

CARTERSVILLE, April 26, 1886 This will certify that two members of my immediate family, after having suffered for years from Menstrual Irregularity, being treated without benefit by physicians, were at length completely cured by one bottle of Bradfield's Female Regulator. Its effect is truly wonderful. J. W. STRANGE. Book to "WOMAN" mailed FREE, which contains valuable information on all female diseases.

BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO.. FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

"August Flower"

with Dyspepsia. I had a fullness after eating, and a heavy load in the pit of my stomach. Sometimes a deathly sickness would overtake me. I was working for Thomas McHenry, Druggist, Allegheny City, Pa., in whose employ I had been for seven years. I used August Flower dared not touch before. I have gained twenty pounds since my recovery. J. D. Cox, Allegheny, Pa. @

Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio. SUCCESS IS ASSURED

BEST SEEDS.

CLOVER, GRASS,

Southern States, is most con-proof of our high grade Seeds sonable prices. Our

GARDEN SEEDS

OUR INSTRUCTIVE CATALOGUE, giving full information and directions for cultivating all Farm and Garden Crops, mailed free, Send for it. Address W.WOOD & SONS Seedsmen, RICHMOND, VA.

新春春春日秋日春春春日

ITS RECORD.

FROM JEFFERSON TO CLEVELAND THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY HAS BEEN CON-STANT IN ITS OPPOSITION TO PRO-TECTIVE TAXES.

From the time of Jefferson to Cleveland the party has been consistent in its opposition to protective taxes. The Declaration of Independence was the formulation of a demand for free trade.

The first Democratic platform adopted by the party called Republican to distinguish it from the Federalist, came from a Congressional caucus at Philadelphia in 1800, the year when Jefferson was first elected President. Its second resolution is as follows:

"Free commerce with all nations, political connection with none, and little or no diplomatic establishment."

In 1801, Jefferson, in his first annual message, declared: "Agriculture, manufactures, commerce and navigation, the four pillars of our prosperity, are most thriving when left free to individual enterprise." In our early history, when no nation feared our strength or regarded our rights, every reasonable effort was made to develop our resources in order to make us independent of all nations. This was done in some cases by small import duties, such as now would be considered ruinous. Jefferson, Madison Monroe ever manifested a disposition to encourage agriculture, manufacturers, commerce and navigation, as the means of increasing our war resources, but Jefferson was particular to say in 1805 that "the remaining revenue on the consumption of foreign articles is paid cheerfully by those who can afford to add foreign luxuries to domestic comforts." In 1806, referring to on luxuries." The war of 1812 caused an increase of duties, interrupted and destroyed foreign commerce and called for war tariffs.

certain duties, he insisted they be retained, "because they are levied chiefly

Then, as now, the beneficiaries of the war tariff were reluctant to surrender their war privileges, but, in 1829, Jackson insisted that revenue was the first consideration, and all interests should be equally favored. In his inangural he said: "With regard to a proper selection of the subjects of impost, with a view to revenue, it would seem to me that the spirit of equity, caution and compromise, in which the Constitution was formed, requires that the great interests of agriculture, commerce and manufactures should be equally favored, and that perhaps the only exception to this rule should consist in the peculiar encouragement of any product of either of them that may be found essential to our national independence."

In 1832, Jackson, in his veto of the Bank Bill, said that most of the difficulties surrounding the Government and most of the danger threatening the Union came from the abandonment of the legitimate objects of Government. "Many of our rich men," he said, "have not been content with equal protection, but have besought us to make them rich by acts of Congress."

In 1832, in his annual message, he insisted that Americans might be willing for a while to pay higher prices, in order to encourage the establishment of factories, but, at the same time he emphatically repudiated the idea that such a I had been troubled five months ith Dyspensia. I had a fall with the minds of but few of our states. The most they have anticipated is a temporary and generally incidental protection, which they maintain has the effect to reduce the price, by domestic compe-tition, below that of the foreign article."

Jackson, in his other State papers, was consistent in his opposition to all class legislation, denouncing every attempt to for two weeks. I was relieved of all | build up one interest at the expense of trouble. I can now eat things I another, insisted on relief of such necessaries of life as salt and coal from tariff taxation, and in his farewell address said: "The Government has no power to raise a revenue or impose taxes except for the purposes enumerated in the Constitu-

> The vigorous intellect of Jackson, his determined character, his broad sympathies with the people, left their impress on the Democratic party.

In 1840 the Democratic Convention met at Baltimore and adopted a platform declaring that "justice and sound policy forbid the Federal Government to foster one branch of industry to the detriment of another." and the fifth resolution was emphatic in the demand that "no more revenue ought to be raised than is required to defray the expenses of Gov-

In 1844 the fourth and fifth resolutions of 1840 were reaffirmed.

In 1848 the party platform declared that "the fruits of the great political triumph of 1844 have fulfilled the hopes of the Democracy of the Union in the noble impulse given to the cause of free trade by the repeal of the tariff of 1842, and the creation of the more equal, honest and productive tariff of 1846."

These principles were reaffirmed every four years until 1864.

Here is a record so simple, so direct, so consistent that no man need mistake it. From the beginning until now the Democratic party has been the opponent of the principles underlying the whole system of protection. On the other hand Hamilton, the Federal party, the Whig party, and now the Republican party, have been its advocates and defenders.

And so it will be through all time. Should the Democratic party abandon these principles, the people would abandon the Democratic party.--Courier-Journal.

An Empty Treasury.

A line of figures is sometimes more potent than a column of arguments. This fact is especially notable in the record of the Treasury Department for the month of January, which shows a great decrease in the amount of valuable cash on hand. The balance, which stood at $60,274,-

394 on September 1st, is now but $31,-368,459. If the customs receipts thad not advanced, the balance would have been only $28,000,000, of which little more than $15,000,000 is on deposit in National banks, $14,494,841 is in subsidiary silver, and $367,148 in minor coin and fractional currency. The aggregate receipts during January were-542,728, and the expenditures were $35, 663,522. The total receipts since July 1st have been $206,288,015, against wecelpts following July 1, 1890, of $255,-702,406. This is the heritage from a billion-dollar-tariff-making Congress ... A. merchant whose books showed such results would think himself among the breakers of bankruptcy.-New York

Promise and Fulfillment.

"Now what we want to do is toigo on and prosper."-Major McKinley at the banquet of the American Protective Tariff League, New York, April 29, 1891.

"Business failures in the "United States in 1891 numbered 12,394 por sixteen per cent. more than in 1890."_

Bradstreet's, January 2, 1892. It is never pretended by tariffereformers that the adoption of a tariff for revenue only will usher in a political millennium or of itself bring isteady, and universal business prosperity. All they claim is that it would lighten the burdens of taxation, make a fairer distribution of those burdens, release from taxation the materials of industry, and thereby increase the wages of labor and, the opportunities of employment; and that it would stimulate commerce, home, and foreign, thus opening, as well in our own as in foreign countries, larger markets for the products of labor and, especially for the disposition of that surplus that to-day fluds but a precarious and not always a paying demand.

Scarcely less important is it to dissolve the partnership between the moneyed power of the country and the Government, with all the demoralization in politics and business that inevitably grows out of it. These reforms accomplished, we have thrown open to all our people the fairest field for industry, thrift and enterprise yet offered in human history, where every individual can feel that he will enjoy for himself the fruits of his own labor and prudence, and that; his successin business life will be as nearly commensurate as human laws can. make it with what he really deserves.

But no law can guaranteera country or its individual inhabitants against the manifold evils that flow from their own errors and ignorance, or from forces that occasionally impair their prosperity, without being under the control or within range of their own foresight.

Not so with protection. It never hesitates to promise all the material or other blessings that mentare eager to secure, and especially to secure them without paying the price for them, by mere operation of statutory law. We are always justified in putting their promises and performances side by side, and Major McKinley furnishes us many opportunities for doing this. Here is another:

"I beg to say that the rates given on wool and woolens are assuredly protective. They will help every farmer in the country who owns sheep, and will enable manufacturers of woolen goods to better compete with their foreign rivals." -His speech in the House, September 27, 1890, on the Conference Report upon his bill.

"Manufacturers are mot-buying heavily unless large concessions are made in their favor. The year closed with prices on a much lower basis than in 1890."-Brad. treet's, January 2, 1892, ton Wool .- St Louis Republic.

Tariff Cost and Wages Cost.

While Republicans insists that "to protect American labor" the gross cost of the imports must be taxed from forty-five to 300 per cent., the census of 1890 shows, as did that of 1880, that a tariff of twenty-five cents on the dollar and under would cover the gross cost of all labor-would pay the entire wages expended—for goods of American manufacture. In the Belleville (Ill.) News-Democrat of recent date Mr. N. Niles gives this table from the census of 1890, covering 5402 manufacturing establishments in St. Louis:

Capital invested$120,759,817

per cent. of the capital, while the wage cost is about one-fifth, or twenty per cent., of the product.

The official State report on the manufactures of Massachusetts for 1890 shows that in that year the average net profits in all lines of manufacturing in Massachusetts was 22.34 per cent., while the average cost of labor in the product was 22.15 per cent. of the value (manufacturer's wholesale selling price) of the product.

A tariff of twenty-five per cent. of the wholesale price is what the favored corporations call "absolute free trade." Yet, as the Federal census and the Massachusetts census agree in showing, it is more than the entire cost of wages to these corporations, even after they have added in as labor cost the bountiful salaries drawn by stockholders as managers, secretaries and superintendents. To every dollar's worth of goods imported a Democratic tariff of twenty-five per cent. would add a tax of more than the American corporations pay as wages to turn out the goods they sell for a dollar. This is not an advantage, but a disadvantage, for whatever the tax adds to the selling price of the goods falls on labor in the long run, and the run is never very long either. But this is inevitable under any form of indirect taxation. The lower the tax the more prosperous the labor that pays is, and as all taxes are paid by labor at last every dollar they are reduced is a dollar of protection for labor.—St. Louis Republic.

Anecdote of the Prince of Wales.

It was in the autumn of '72, said my friend, that I was on my way home from Europe by one of the old Cunarders. We had a dreadful passage, and, being the only lady who was not seasick, I had the exclusive attention of most of the well passengers. Among them was a small boy, who was one of the plainest little mortals that I had ever beheld; redhaired and freckled, but with a bright, sharp little face, like a terrier. In the course of time he drifted into my vicinity and opened conversation. "Ever seen the Prince of Wales?" "Yes," I answered, "I have seen him." "Nice man, very. Nice in his own house. I like him very much." "Oh, don't talk that way, Jack!" I exclaimed. "That's silly."

"But I mean it," he persisted; "I know him. I've dined at his house." "How was that?"

"Well, you see, it was when we were travelin' in Italy. I was puttin' my head out of the car window, and I saw two boys puttin' their heads out, and I says, 'Hello!' and they said 'Hello!' back again, and I says, 'Come in here; there's lot of room,' and they said, 'No, we can't; but there's room in here, and when the train stops you come in here with us.' when the train stopped I asked pa, and he said I could go, and I got in their corriage. And I asked them what was their names, and one said, 'I'm Prince Albert Victor of Wales, and the other said, 'And I'm Prince George, his brother.'"

"And what did you do then?"

"Why, I says, 'Whee-ow, is that who you are? Well, I'm Jack Post, of New York.'

"They were real nice fellows, and we were having a splendid time when the cars stopped, and their pa got out of the next carriage and came to speak to us, and then my pa saw it was the Prince of Wales. So he got out himself and told him that he didn't know who they were or he wouldn't have let me go; and he was going to take me away, but the Prince of Wales said 'No;' he was glad to have his boys meet a little American boy, and he would be much obliged if he would let me stay all day. So I stayed. We played games, and their pa told me some first-rate stories, and when we had to change cars he took me back and asked my pa to let them know when I was in London, because he would like me to come to dinner with them. Pa said it was 'an opportunity,' so just as soon as I got back to London I wrote a note."

"What did you say?"

"Oh, I said, 'Dear Princes, I've come. I'm here at the Langham. I can come around just as soon as you want me.

"Well, it hadn't hardly had time to get there, when a gentleman came back with an invitation for me to come and take dinner with them in the middle of the next day. When I got there they were waiting at the window. It was an awful nice house. Their ma came in and shook hands, and we had dinner. Didn't think much of the things we had to eat. I'd have given 'em lots more if they'd come to take dinner with me in New York. But they treated me just fine, and their ma was an awful pretty Proportions of a Perfect Figure. The height of a person with a "perthe distance between the tips of the middle fingers of either hand, when the arms are fully extended.

Ten times the length of the hand, or seven and a half times the length of the foot, or five times the diameter of the chest, from one armpit to the other, should also give the height of the whole body.

The distance from the junction of the thighs to the ground should be exactly the same as from that point to the crown of the head, The knees should be exactly midway between the first-named point and the ground at the heel.

The distance from the elbow to the tip of the middle finger should be the same as from the elbow to the middle line of the breast.

From the top of the head to the level of the chin should be the same as from the level of the chin to that of the armpits, and from the heel to the toe.

Diving for Pearls. One of the largest pearl-fishing grounds in the world is the Gulf of California. The pearls are not generally regular in shape or very pure in color, but some are of large size, and many of the rare black pearls are found. The divers are Indians, and their equipment is of the simplest kind, consisting only of a basket hung around the neck, in which to collect the oysters, a knife to detach them from the rocks, and a stone with a cord attached. When a diver goes down he takes the cord between his toes, the weight of the stone carrying him at once to the bottom. He gathers oysters as long as his breath holds out, then rises to the surface, to descend again in fifteen minutes. Some of the divers are wonderfully expert, and can remain under water for as much as two minutes before rising to the surface. The mortality among them is fearful, for the Gulf of California is infested with huge sharks.

Population of Ohio.

The population of the State of Ohio under the present census is 3,672,316; in 1880 the population of the State was 3,198,062. These figures show an increase of 477,254, or 14.83 per cent.

Of the 88 counties in the State, 28 show decreases, most of them very slight. The remaining counties show increases varying greatly in number and per cent.

How's This?

How's This?

We offer One Hundred Dollars reward for any case of ontarrh that cannot be cured by taking Hail's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. Chenney & Co., Props., Toledo, O. We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Chang for the land that the carry out any obligations and handled by the carry out any obligations and by the land.

West & Truax, Wholosale Druggists, Toledo,

WALDING, KINNAN & MARVIN, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.

Hill Carrie as taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surface as the system. Testimonials sent free. Price 75c, per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a Crescent on the control of the make and publish Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, BEAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE. CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

The roads of France are the most perfect

Ir your Back Aches, or you are all worn out, good for nothing, it is general debility. Brown's Iron Bitters will cure you, make you atrong, cleanse your liver, and give a good appetite—tones the nerves.

The population of the earth doubles itself in 260 years.

An Important Difference.

To make it apparent to thousands, who think themselves ill, that they are not a ffected with any disease, but that the system simply needs cleansing, is to bring comfort home to their hearts, as a costive condition is easily cured by using Syrup of Figs. Manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co.

Kerosene was first used for lighting purposes in 1826,

FITS stopped free by Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. No Fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline. 881 Arch St., Phila., Pa. The first newspaper advertisement ap-

Brown's Iron Bitters cures Dyspepsia, Malaria, Biliousness and General Debility. Gives Strength, aids Digestion, tones the nerves— creates appetite. The best tonic for Nursing Mothers, weak women and children.

BERCHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous illness. Bercham's Pills sell well because they cure. 25 cents a box.

The worst cases of female weakness readily yield to Dr. Swan's Pastiles. Samples free. Dr. Swan, Beaver Dam, Wis.

COPYRIGHT 1891

Hard to take -the big, old-fashioned pill. It's pretty hard to have to take it, too. You wouldn't, if you realized fully how it shocks and weakens the system.

Luckily, you don't have to take it. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are better. They're sensible. They do, mildly and gently, more than the ordinary pill, with all its disturbance. They regulate the liver, stomach and bowels, as well as thoroughly cleanse them. They're the original Little Liver Pills, purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, the smallest and the easiest to take. One little Pellet for a gentle laxative-three for a cathartic. Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels are promptly and permanently cured.

They're the cheapest, too, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned. You pay only for the good you get.

Catarrh--Remove the Cause.

I was afflicted from infancy with Catarrh, and for ten years with eruptions on my face. I was attended by the best physicians, and used a number of Blood remedies with no permanent relief. MY LIFE BECAME A BURDEN TO ME, for my case was declared incurable. I saw S. S. S. advertised, and took eight bottles, which cured me entirely, and I feel like a new person.—Miss Josie Owen, Montpelier, Ohio.

I was the victim of the worst case of Catarrh that I ever heard of. I was entirely deaf in one ear, and all the inside of my nose, including part of the bone, sloughed off. No sort of treatment benefited me, and physicians said "I would never be any better." As a last resort I took Swift's Specific, and it entirely cured me and restored my hearing. I have been well for years, with no sign of return of the disease.—Mrs. Josephine Poliill, Due West, S. C. S. S. S. cures Catarrh, like it does other Blood diseases, by eliminating the poison which causes it. Treatise on Blood and Skin mailed free. SWIFT SPECIFIC COMPANY, ATLANTA, GA.

Sold by all dealers. Accept no substitute.

S CHEMICAL COMPANY

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Me.

ABBROOKS CONTRACTOR OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PRO

Total Prizes in Cash, $725

th your answer send 25c. postal nets.
In stamps, for one quarter's subscription if page atonthy Paper. Our Auril issue nouncethe result of the contest, wanames

OME CHEER, 41 Reckman St., N. Y. City

A SENTER mais 100 PER CENT and who 0743 CARE Prizes

VOL. I.

CALERA, ALA., FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1892.

NO. 18.

On an Old Song.

Little snatch of ancient song. What has made thee live so long? Flying on thy wings of rhyme Lightly down the depths of time, Telling nothing strange or rare, Scarce a thought or image there-Nothing but the old, old tale Of a helpless lover's wall; Offspring of an idle hour, Whence has come thy lasting power? By what turn of rythm or phrase. By what subtle, careless grace, Can thy music charm our ears After full three hundred years.

Little song, since thou were born, In the Reformation morn, How much great has passed away, Shattered or by slow decay! Stately piles in ruins crumbled, Lordly houses lost and humbled, Thrones and realms in darkness hurled Noble flags forever furled, Wisest schemes by statesmen spun, Time has seen them one by one Like the leaves of Autumn fall-A little song outlives them all. -[W. E. H. Leck, in the Academy.

A Country Doctor's Patient.

Tne summer of 1891 was the first gay season Glenham had ever known. The picturesque little town, nestled in one of the most beautiful regions of the Catskills, had been overlooked heretofore by all but a small contingent of summer boarders. But last season the old Griggs House, which overhung the village on the mountain side, having been thoroughly remodeled, was rechristened the Beau Se_ jour, and Glenham was extensively advertised as one of the most charming and healthful resorts about New York.

Among the earliest arrivals at the Beau Sejour was Mrs. Ainsleigh, a lovely young widow, who wore the most elegant toilettes Glenham had ever seen. But men were scarce at the Beau Sejour during July, and time hang heavy on Mrs. Ainsleigh's hands. She was suffering from a slight nervattack one afternoon when she sent for a physician—young Dr. Mowbray, wha had been graduated three yesrs before from the New York Polyclinic.

Tall and slender, with brilliant dark dves and a beautiful soft voice, Dr. Mowbray would have passed anvwhere for a handsome man. Mrs. Ainsleigh felt entirely relieved of her nervousness after a quarter of an hour's conversation with him, and did not think it necessary to have the prescription he left filled. He called the next afternoon to inquire for his patient, and found her suffering only from a slight headache. She was dressed in a ravishing gown of delicate lavender, and Mowbray thought her the most beautiful creature he had ever seen. After his third visit he felt himself to be desperately in love. He had known her a fortnight, when one morning, as his finger rested on her pulse, she startled him by saying:

"I overheard two old tabbies talking about you in the verandah yester-

Mowbray looked a her inquiringly. "They said that woman with the doll's face, who wears four gowns a day, had designs upon you. I wonder if they could have meant me," she added, with a look of innocent surprise as though the thought had just struck Mowbray blushed like a schoolboy. In his agitation he pressed her round, white wrist. She gently withdrew it. but as her hand slid through his, her fingers seemed to become entangled in his own, and before he knew it he had bent his lips to her hand.

"Do not be angry, for I love you," he stammered, aghast as his own effrontery. She was looking at him with an amused smile.

"I'm not angry to be loved by you but are you not doing a foolish

The next two weeks were idyllic ones for Mowbray. They walked together, drove and danced together; then the hotel began to fill up. Mrs. Ainsleigh had a whole train of admirers, and the young doctor was often miserably jealous. Sometimes he staved away from her a whole day;

once it was two days, and she gently reproached him "This is my harvest and I must work," he said, somewhat gloomily. "It is playtime with your other admircrs, but I must prepare for the take from her portemonnaic a roll of time when I will be married," and his crisp, fresh bank notes, which she eyes grew tender. "Married-you are going to marry?" she asked in surprise-"whom?" "Whom? Why you, my dearest, of course:"

"Me!-marry me? Oh, Robert!" "Why-why-what do you mean?" "What would you do with me?" Mowbray was too stupfied to an-

She regarded him with a compassionate smile. "Poor Robert-is it possible you can have been so serious? Don't look like that or I shall think our beautiful summer is going to be all spoiled."

She rose and went to her desk; then returning bent over his shoulder with a caressing gesture and put a paper into his hand.

"Look at that."

It was a dressmaker's bill and at the bottom four figures danced before Mowbray's eyes. He could not see what they were,

"Think of you marrying a woman with such tastes, at the outset of your career, Robert," she said regretfully. "There are more of these, but this woman is becoming troublesome. I shall have to refer her bill to Mr. Ainsleigh, and then I suppose there will be trouble; there generally is in such cases, but-"

"Mr. Ainsleigh!" gasped Mowbray, almost reeling from this second blow, "but-but-"

"Have I never spoken to you of Mr. Ainsleigh, Robert?" she asked innocently.

"You are-you are not a widow,

"Oh, dear, yes," she replied laughing softly. "Mr. Ainsleigh is my late husband's elder brother, and acts as a sort of guardian to me. He is very rich, and he thinks he wants to

"And you-are going to marry him?" asked Mowbray faintly.

"I cannot tell-I do not know. Ob, Robert! why did you speak of this hateful subject of marriage? I don't want to think of it. I was so happy just to know that you loved me. I find it so pleasant to be loved. Why must men begin to talk of marriage right away?"

Mowbray was sick at heart and miserable. He went away pursuaded that his happiness had been wrecked | the purpose. by a heartless woman. He resolved never to see her again. Two days later she had another nervons attack and sent for him.

week," she said, "and we shall probtime, Robert; we may never meet again and we are too fond of one another to quarrel."

protest; he was very unhappy but he came to see her every day.

Then Mr. Ainsleigh arrived. He was a tall, silent man, of about fifty. He met Robert pleasantly enough, and to the surprise of the young physician there was not the least change in the relations between himself and Mrs. Ainsleigh. They walked and rode together as before, and Mowbray was almost happy again. He felt as though he might win Helen yet, when one morning Mr. Ainsleigh followed him from the room and sent a cold chill to his heart by saving:

"Doctor, Mrs. Ainsleigh and I leave for Bar Harbor the day after tomorrow. Will you do me the favor to send your bill to the hotel in the

To refuse was impossible. What would Mr. Ainsleigh think of such an action from a stranger? Would it not arouse his suspicions and injure Helen? Yet how could he take money from her-his beloved! Still he was in great need of money; and if the bill was presented and paid it would serve him in good stead.

Mowbray went home and thought it all over. The result was that he penned the following document:

"Dr. Robert Mowbray presents his compliments to Mr. Herbert Ainsleigh, and, in accordance with his desire, incloses bill for services rendered Mrs. Ainsleigh:

To 55 consultations at house at $5.....$275 Medicines and sundries..... 25

Total....$300 The next afternoon she called at his office. The first thing she did was to laid on the table.

They conversed for a short time. without very profound emotion, on their coming separation. They wondered if they would ever meet again, cago Herald.

and prayed they might. Then a somewhat awkward silence fell between them. Mowbray was uncomfortably conscious of the presence of the bank notes on the table before him. He tried to murmur in his deenest, softest voice something particularly sad and loving, but the white cipher on a twenty-dollar bill, with its delicately interlacing green lines, seemed to stare at him like a great mocking eye. He glanced at Helen, and saw that she too was looking at the money with a significant expression. And suddenly he understood that she was thinking of her milliner's and dressmaker's

Then an idea occurred to him. He rose, and taking the money, counted out $150, which he put in his vest pocket, then taking the two hands of his inamorata, he kissed them passionately, and slipped the remaining bills in the opening of her glove, pressing her fingers over them.

"Dearest," he murmured, "we must part; my heart is well nigh broken at the thought, but we will love each other while we may, and that we may never forget the happy hours we have passed together. I wish that we may each preserve a souvenir which shall always recall them. Let us divide this money, and each purchase a keepsake-a jewel, which will remain to us forever a mute testimonial of our vanished happiness."

He had spoken with great feeling and was himself deeply affected; but Helen rose calmly, deliberately drew out the bank notes from her glove and returned them to her portemon-

And it was not until she had gone. without giving him a last good-bye kiss, that he realized she was furious at carring away only half the money. - New Orleans Times-Democrat.

London Truant Schools.

When a London Arab, otherwise a bad boy, declines to go to school he is caught and sent to join a regiment of truants at one of the various truant schools that have been established for Here he remains for as long a period as the manager deems desirable. If the boy behaves himself he is soon released on a liceuse. If he still de-"Mr. Ainsleigh is coming next clines to go to school he turns up at the truant school again as sure as eggs ably leave for Bar Harbor soon after- are eggs. When these little villians ward. Let us make the most of the are captured they are dirty and ragged. But soon all this is changed. Their hair is cut, they are put into a bath and a nice clean suit of clothes Poor Mowbray was too far gone to given them, consisting of a pair of corduroy trousers, a shirt, a blue serge blouse, a pair of socks and some stout boots. What a difference the bath and clothes make! The brute becomes a human being. And the brute seems to feel this as he gives himself a sort of a shake and walks off to join his fellow truants.

From 6 o'clock in the morning until 8 at night the boys are actively employed, with short intervals of rest. "You must keep them at it," says the governor. "It is part of the punitive discipline." Up, wash, dress, make beds, fold clothes, prayer, exercise, breakfast, school, drill, dinner, school, drill and so on. The housework of this large establishment is done by the boys. They help the cook with the dinner, and when the dinner is cooked they clean the kitchen. They give a hand to the laundress, starch, iron, and turn the mangle. There is wood chopping to be done, and many small household duties to perform, each of which teaches the boy the elements of law and order. which are of great aid to him later on in life.—[Brooklyn Citizen.

Precocious Intellectuality.

Remarkable cases of precocious intellectuality, preceding future power rather than weakness or early decay, were John Stuart Mill, who read Greek at three; and Macaulay, who read incessantly from the time he was three years old; but ordinary humanity is slower and should not be unduly hastened. It is tound to be undoubtedly the case that progress in learing is far more rapid in the great majority of children when they are left without any systematic attempt to teach them until the seventh year at least has I een reached. This rapidity will more than counterbalance any apparent tardiness in beginning, and there is much less chance of evil consequences .- [Chi-

The Venerable Doorkeeper of the United States Senate.

Some Stirring Episodes in His Long Official Career.

"How do the public men of today compare with those of half a century ago?" Captain Bassett, the venerable doorkeeper of the Senate, was asked.

the attitude of the people towards them has changed. Statesmen used to be regarded with greater reverence. Perhaps it is because there are more great men in this generation than there used to be. We never used to see such young men in the Senate as in these days. The Senator without a gray head was the notable exception. They used to be more careful of their remarks in debate than Senators are nowadays. Hot words meant a call out to Bladensburg in those times. I can recall several potitical duels. When Congressman Cilley was brought back from his famous meeting, I saw his body in a boarding-house, which stood where the Capitol grounds are. The days before the civil war were crowded with exciting events. I was one of the first to reach Charles Sumner's desk after he was assaulted. I helped to bind up his head, and I have a piece of the cane which was broken over his shoulders. I heard Jefferson Davis make his farewell speech in the Senate, and saw the Southerners withdraw. Many whom I remember as boys I have seen grow up to be prominent men. Senator Gorman often speaks of the days when I playfully boxed his ears. He is the only man who ever climbed up from a page's seat on the steps to a Senator's desk." "How many times have you turned back the hands of the Senate clock?" "I can't count the occasions," he replied, smiling at the allusion. "The clock has been stopped at the close of every session since 1844, and no one has ever done it but myself. Sometimes I have turned it back only a minute or two of time, and once I gave the Government an extra half hour to carry on its business."

"Are you ready to tell where Webster sat in the Senate?" the veteran doorkeeper was asked.

"Not yet. I am the only man who knows that. It is my secret. Perhaps I will tell it in my book. I have been taking notes all these years, and they will be published sometime in the future, if not while I am alive, then by my children. How would 'Sixty Years in the Senate' sound as the title of a book?" Captain Bassett asked

"Seventy years would sound even better." was suggested.

"Perhaps so," he said, "but all of us must go in time. I am a plain man and never injured my constitution by dissipation. Seventy-two years is a long life to look back over, and that number is behind me now."

They have been very easy years, too, despite the stirring scenes he has witnessed and shared in, if Capt. Bassett's placid face reflects the current of his life. - [Washington Post.

Little Tsui Yew Me.

The heiress of the Chinese Legation, Tsui Yew Me, is as much of a mystery in Washington as ever. She is now six months old and few people have yet been allowed to meet her When the nurses first took her out for an airing such crowds appeared that the Minister decided it was not advisable to take her out into the park in Dupont circle, and her airings had to be confined to the Legation lawn. It took several weeks to secure an audience with her and then it evidently was a serious matter to the Legation. Mr. Ho, the interpreter, was present when no less a personage than Minister Tsui appeared bearing Miss Me. Lady Tsui was assisted by her attendants to the drawing room door and toddled to a chair herself. The Tsuis have one son and Miss Me. The Minister is perfectly devoted to the little girl and wanted to know immediately if Miss Me wasn't a pretty baby, as pretty as American babies. She is pretty, with cunning almond eves and a regular button of a mouth. She is also well behaved, because she went to a stranger, stayed 15 min-

CAPTAIN BASSETT.

nament and a couple of bobbing red pompoms. Four flat coins are sewed along the front edge. "The men are much the same, but They express wishes for her lifelong health, wealth and prosperity, and were presented by friends when she was born. The drollest feature is > and tinkles with every move of the baby's little head. The name of Me signifies "beauty" and was given her because it is the Chinese name for America. She is the pride of the Legation as well as of Minister and Lady Tsui, and if it should happen that the Minister should be reappointed at the close of his term, which expires in December, 1892, Miss Me would be likely to be started on an American education. -[New York Recorder.

utes without a murmer and only objected when she was returned to hor father's arms. Her clothes are regular Chinese baby clothes, and over the various blue, red and vellow pieces was a heavily quilted wrapper of pink bound with green and shaped just like

Yum Yum's. All the time she wears a funny black silk cape with a hole cut out on the top of the crown. In the centre of the front is a brass ora little silver bell like a sleigh bell, that is sewed on she top of the cap

Origin of the Polynesians.

"I have a theory about the origin of the Polynesians," said Rev. Mr. Whitney, a missionary. "I believe they left the Indian Archipelago about the beginning of the Christian era. They settled in the numerous groups of islands in the South Pacific. Many writers have supposed that the language spoken by the Samoans is a branch of the Malay tongue. I don't believe that. I think the Samoan language is the root language, to which many additions have been made by the Malays. The Samoans have preserved the language in all the simplicity which characterized it when they brought it with them from the Indian Archipelgo. For years it was only a spoken language, but the missionaries have reduced it to writing. And the Samoan language is one of the most beautiful tongues in the world; it is even susceptible of finer shades of thought than can be given in the English language. The Samoans come from the Aryan race, and the women when young are exceedingly beautiful. They are a hardy race, the men being on an average 5 feet 10 inches in height. The Samoans and the Tongans of the Friendly Islands are the tallest races in the world. They have a light olive complexion and have keen faculities to acquire education."

What Patagonian Means.

Of course the term "Patagonian" is entirely unknown among the Indians, writes Fannie B. Ward in a letter from South America. Their true name, collectively and individually, is Tsonecas, and by it all the tribes call themselves. The word Pata-gones, meaning "duck-footed men," refers to their peculiar foot-gear. The lower limbs are encased in boots without soles, or rather long gaiters, made of guanaco skins, with the beautiful yellowish fur turned outward. The leg is covred all around from below the knee, the fur passing over the top of the foot and around the heel, leaving the toes sticking out. This trifling circumstance obtained the appellation by which a vast territory and all the people who inhabit it are known to the civilized world. The flaps or "uppers" of the gaiters extending loosely across the top of their feet, exaggerated in breadth by the long hair on the edges, give the wearers the appearance of having paws or "patas." When Magellan's men first saw these Indians they were unable to account for the peculiar appearance of their feet and the bright yellow fur upon their legs, and called them "duck-footed."

An Effectual Remedy.

He-There is a certain young lady deeply interested in me, and while I like her, you know, still I never could love her. I want to put an end to it without breaking the poor girl's heart. Can you suggest any plan?

She-Do you call there often? He-No, indeed. Not any oftener than I can possibly help.

She-Call oftener.- [Truth.

He (sentimentally)-Let us drop a tear for the poor blind man. She (practically) .- No, let's drop a dime.

Rain and Tears.

I wait the coming of a tardy train,

And while I wait the leaves of thought unfold. The day is dismal and the wind is cold;

The ceaseless patter of the drizzling rain, That drips and drops its dreary, sad re frain, Still chants the burden of a grief untold. And in the sky gray clouds of gloom are rolled Till they dissolve in tears to earth again. So in my heart, where summer used to be,

A wintry sky the sombre landscape blears. Has nature, then, imposed her mood on

And am I sad because she sad appears? Or, looking through my own grief, do I

The earth transfigured through the rain

-Wm, R. Sims, in New York World.

HUMOROUS.

Tomson-My wife and I never disagree. Johnson-Her word is law

When the sewing society want to "raise" a sum of money they begin by "talking it up."

A cornfield is one of the things that is often greatly shocked without the aid of electricity.

The principal difference between a lobster and a lobbyist is that you can make a lobster blush.

servant question simply because they won't help themselves. People who cannot afford to follow the fashion usually try to follow the Women suffer the afflictions of the people who do follow it. A friend is a man who points out the silver lining in your clouds to avoid lending you an umbrella. "I don't see why they call this a situation," said the horse-car driver, "with me a standin' all day long."

Teacher-What is the leading characteristic of a paradox? Dick Hicks -They never agree on the diagnosis. "It's a biting wind," said Slithers.

"Yes," replied Slathers, "I know i is. I was right in the teeth of the A young lady remarks: "Man pro-deal of encouragement to get him to Husband-Thank heaven I am not as other men. Wife-You are mistaken there. It is they who should be poses, but it sometimes takes a great mals. Even when killed and served as venison you will notice that it goes

Don't be too friendly with your prospective son-in-law. He may think you intend to live with him after he is

The advocate of anarchistic principles seems to think he has taken the truth out of a nutshell and put it in a Wife-What do you suppose baby is thinking about? Brute of a Husband-I s'pose he's thinking what to cry about tonight.

"I am very sorry for poor Mrs. Sophtie." "Why?" "She has so little to live for." "How is that?" "They say she lives only for her husband."

Wiggle-How long did von know your wife before you married her. Satupon? Satupon (mournfully)-I didn't know her at all until I married Lady-How nice it is to have a little brother as you have, Flossie. I suppose he always takes your part, doesn't he? Flossie-Yes'm, when the pie is passed.

"Do you call this a pint?" asked the model hired girl of the milkman. "Yes." "Well, it won't do. When this family wants condensed milk. it'll buy it at the grocery."

"Do you think that monkeys can be taught to talk?" he asked. "I never put the question that way," she replied. "I always wondered whether they could be taught not to."

A visitor who wanted his boots blackened said to his host on retiring: "I'll put my boots outside the door of my room;" to which the host naively replied: "All right; nobody will touch them."

A poor fellow who had failed at one thing and another at last took up the profession of submarine diving. It was perilous, he knew, but, as he expressed it, he "had to do something to keep his head above water."

FRANK W. GIST, CALERA, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 26.

AN GUNCEMENTS.

We are authorized to announce John S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of to the action of the democratic county

We are authorized to announce Wm. We are authorized to announce Wm.

R. A. Milner as a candidate for the office of Circuit Clerk of Shelby county, what disposition to make of theirs, subject to the action of the democratic no one has time to search for the ton? Reuben, you ought to call for account convention.

THE JOURNAL is frequently asked who are candidates for the various stantly in dread lest some one will that Kolb's statement in regard to offices in Shelby county, and the get hot under the collar and insist what he should have said about but try it as I have, they would never offices in Shelby county, and the get hot under the collar and insist what he should have said about but try it as I have, they would never again be without it at such times. I am inquires are invariably referred to on writing a verse or two of spring seating the Chilton, Lee and Shelby our announcement columns. We poetry. Ere it is too late, let me delegations is without foundation.

We advise you not to do it. It would Kells ought to make one statement do not know any one 1; running un- be cruel just at this time to impair less it is announced in the Journal. ones future by inflicting one with that he can prove A hint to the wise is sufficient.

Crowe and George W. White; pro- is very wrong. bate judge, J. B. Shivers; sheriff, King; tax collector, Phillips; tax

Up to the present there have been Cobb, Lapsley and Dowdell, than whom the state never produced more when the state never produced more able jurists. At present T. L. Bulare eminently fitted for the bench. The fifth is to be congratulated.

Saturday, but before he was through whom the Critic remembers as his and soon after he began his coarse voung man of excellent business cajokes, they all left the house in a pacity and experience. He is spendence was not surprised and the of his birth. The younger son, governor in joint debate. He said in kind remembrance of pleasknows that he could not hold his ant hours spent as their guest own against the truth and justice of the governer's claims, and in a personal debate he would soon go to the past week I find one which particularly interests me. It was that of Col. W. W. Quarles, of Selma, to be entirely out of the race.

Willard, president of the Women's worthy the honors of his people. be blamed for geting offended.

the Marion Standard, has the announcement of Dr. Graton B. Crowe to the office of representative of human delegates did not take stock in the new party. Two Ala-Perry county. Dr. Crowe is well bana delegates voted for and four known to many of the readers of against it. the Journal as a young man of fine ability and great promise, and the votes if they were allowed to be we in common with our readers, are cast," he meant that with a prima-delegates to congressional and sen- This, of course, is a matter for the atorial conventions. The committee to decide when it harmony prevails.

We are authorized to announce G. B. there were no society journals, nor nate by old and well posted political the great masses of the people, but in the sacred records, I am not claus claims two-fifths of the county his ambition to become a great political leader, he allowed his thirst for official leader, he allowed his thirst for official We are authorized to announce D. R. McMillan as a candidate for the office of the was unintentional. It does send up a solid delegation for him. Such men may flourish for a season, but Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county much consequence as to where their every victory won by the governor trusted triends and go down to their pothe day is the evil thereof." At county. Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject this late day half the men are so busy trying to find out where their

These warm days herald the approach of spring, and I am conso dire a calamity. I hope none will be so thoughtless as to thus THE primary election in Perry rashly ruin the pleasures of any. York has elected a selid Hill delegain the selection of the following lazy, or anyway you choose, but that state wants Hill for president. The progressive Life Insurance Agents of Calera.

assessor, Wallace; circuit clerk, R. of Dr. Oscar Whitfield, who lives man, we heartily endorse the plat-Alabama not one has a better sup- enjoy themselves. His wife needs an honest silver dollar ply of judicial timber than the fifth, no other commendation than that Up to the present there have been she is the daughter of Col. J. Newable jurists. At present T. D. Bul- spent by the friends of the lamented ger, Mac. A. Smith and N. D. Den- Colonel. Dying he left two daughson are candidates, either of whom ters and two sons, whose excellent traits of character as memorials to periment has given to the world a pre his training. Mr. Frank Fitch, a gentleman of remarkable cultureand Ask your druggist for it. THE Tuskaloosa Gazette says.

genius, married the other daughter, and his is a large bottle and will care you, ance meetings all over the state, and has or the money will be relanded. If you never lost an opportunity to impress there were a number of ladies out been spent in travel. They are "there were a number of ladies out been spent in travel. They are to hear Capt. Kolb speak at the back at the old home now resting. prepaid, Drummond Madison Co., 48- anecman and the friend of the farmer Academy of Music in this city last The eldest son, Charlton G. Smith, 50 Maiden Lane. Agents Wanted. clsssmate at the old Academy, is a body. The remainder of the audi- ing his time at present on the site public will draw its own conclusion as to the character of the speech."

Ezekiel M. Smith, is the only one absent. His mind turned toward the great deep, and he is away learn-Koin has refused to meet the ing to build ships. This much of a lowed by the governor to be shown Miss Ida Smith. Col. Quarles is up in his proper light. He is los one of Alabama's most prominent ing cast every day, and will soon young men. He is a graduate of the State University, an attorney of eminent ability, a statesman of Tur third party convention re- some experience in the last legislafused to endorse woman's suffrage, for solicitor in his circuit. Here and failed to give the prohibitionists is long life and happiness to the a proper showing. Miss Francis man who is true to his friends and Christian Temperance Union, now THE third party convention has says that her party will have a met and formulated a new political presidential ticket in the field. It organization. Their platform is is strange that the third party peo- about the same as has been promulple did not recognize her and her gated by the alliance, and all labor ; sister delegates, and she is not to organizations are invited to join the ranks. Doubtless they will have a Our Perry county contemporary, feeble effort to gain some footing.

gainst it. When Mr. Deans said —he had: we in common with our readers, are looking forward to the next general assembly for him to distinguish himself as one of the coming young men of the state.

The executive committee of Lee county met on the 23d, repealed a primary election to take place on the 3dy of April, for the purpose of selecting delegates to the state and publication of the item does not commit us to the support of a primary electing delegates to the support of a primary clercting delegates to the support of a primary clercting delegates to the state and publication are reasonable and primary described as a new incommittee of publication of the item does not commit us to the support of a primary electing delegates to the state and publication are reasonable as a possible to the purpose of a possible plant of the purpose of a possible pla committee call a convention to nom- primary elections unless they can be inate county officers and to select controlled by statutory regulations. tee has now complied with sugges- meets, and what the committee does !

I have been asked the question, who were the wives of Cain and Able? Owing to the fact that at that early day in the world's history there were no society journals, nor A special from Cuntersville dat ed the 23d inst. says, wenly two weeks until the mass meeting in this county. Gov. Jones should not fail to make several speech in this that early day in the world's history there were no society journals, nor world and well posted politi-Able to state. Excuse the for the governor, and by a good got the best of his judgement.

Wonder if Rueben will ask Mr wives are to come from, and the Guice to tell what he knows about Rubject to the action of the democratic county convention.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic not the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic not they will confer a favor by sending me their information.

Sir—I made use of your functional it, for you know Charlie Lane has ladies. If anyone knows, however, they will confer a favor by sending me their information.

Charlie may have he don't lie.

Now comes Mr. Russell and sa

THE state convention of New New York has the power to name | Chiera. | Read and profit by the following sound

OLD DR. DRUMMOND.

After years of patient study and ex paration which is absolute and permanent cure for every kind of Rheumatism and we will send you a hot le by Express better halves hailed from; it was possibly a case of 'sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." last state of such men is worse than the > Memphis Appeal-Avalanche: Some-thing seems to have struck the Hill-Brice-Gorman combination.

HUGH T. CAFFEY, PHYSICIAN & SURGEON CALERA, ALA.

> > IMPORTANT TO LADIES.

Sir-I made use of your Philotoken yours respectfully,
Mrs. ELIZABETH DIX.

delegations is without foundation.

Kolb ought to make one statement Risley's Philotoken for $1 a bottle.

CHALLES F. RISLEY, Wholesale Druggist, 62 Cortlandt St., New York.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

The rext best thing possible to insurwas held on the 23rd and resulted Just let the sunshine, stand in it, tion to the national convention ance against five in the coming world is enjoy it, feel good, or tender, or which makes it look very much like a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

Among the best and most hospit
the candidate, because her electoral counsel, every word of which smarts with a trusm like a sparkling jewel;

the candidate, because her electoral counsel, every word of which smarts with a trusm like a sparkling jewel;

the candidate, because her electoral counsel, every word of which smarts with a trusm like a sparkling jewel;

the candidate, because her electoral counsel, every word of which smarts with a trusm like a sparkling jewel; able families in Bibb county is that of Dr. Oscar Whitfield, who lives the we not fancy Mr. Hill as a family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the It is a duty you owe to yourself and Among all the judicial circuits in spairs no pains to make his guests which declares for tariff referred and lamity should you lies and where they some good, old reliable Company."— \mathbf{E}_{λ} tract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-> ton asked, how is it that Capt. Kolb haagazed to secure the strength he is anifesting in the present gubernatorial the and perma-of Rheumatism. Swered. For two years he has enjoyed. The price is to the privilege of private audience in allirersect ed, simply because he is an alliand gives the lie to all the charges o wrong doing that has been preferred and proved upon him. Hence, and very na-turally, he has falsely aroused a great deel of sympathy among strangers and alliancemen who did not know him and had no data or facts before them them

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA. Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans.

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York Louisville and Birmingham at regular rates equipped by the larger cities. We transact a general backing business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

The New York Store.

Calera, Ala.,

SAYS-If you are Interested in

DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, BOOTS, SHOES, GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS. CLOTHING & HATS.

And if you ever Buy

Hose, Half-Hose, Silk Ties Scarfs, Etc., Etc.,

Please Listen to Us just 20 Minutes. We are overstocked, and in order to Reduce Stock before we take invoice on February, 1st, we will sell you any Div Goods in our House

We have a Large Stock to dispose of and when you near the Trices you will be stonished how such goods can be sold so low. Listen':

Cotton Checks 41-2 to 5 cents; Nice Cashmere Dress Goods 1934 cents per vard : Same at 22 1-2; a Finer Goods at 27 1-2; All Wool Ladies Cloth lifty inches wide only 571-2 cents, former price 65; Ladies Fast Black Hose 71-2 cents per pair; a better goods for 121-2 cents; a Fine Hose for 171-2 cents, city price 40 cents; Salt 67 cents per sack; Fine Shoes $1 25 to $2 50; Good Shoes 1 00 per

Come and see us. We have too much to mention all in this paper. Come at once. We guarantee all prices named, and a child will get as low prices as a older person. No favorites, but one price to all. Come and see us and you will find we mean business. We want to

Reduce the Stock,

before taking Invoice, and if Prices can do it

THEY MUST BE CUT INTO

C. WADE & CO.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION.

Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, -12 Pages. REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT. 1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these de-thition at creat expense.

5. Its Woman'3 and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

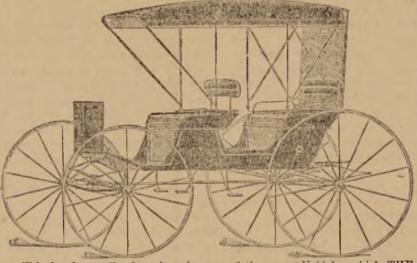

Of a postage stamp. Think of it! Every time a hen lays an egg she pays for one issue of the greatest weekly newspapers in the world.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality,

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

THE ALABAMA (PREMIUM NO. 14) FREE.

This handsome Carriage is only one of the many Vehicles which THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY is offering its customers for 1892. Special Premiums for Men, Women, Boys and Girls.

THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER produced the Champion Creps reported in the State last year.

Write for Circulars and Prices.

ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY, MONTE CONTROL ALABAMA

Brick Store, Montgomery Avenue.

judicial conventions. They will what is the best under existing circlect eight delegates at large. The cumstances, but we do not favor Patronage of All Who are in Keed of Goods in My Line Which are Offered at the Lowest l'ossible Margines tee has now complied with stages meets, and what the committee does tions of the state committee, and within the scope of its authority is

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

	Louis	VILLE &	NASHVILLE.
No. 1,	South	Bound,	4:53	a. m
3,	44	- 65		p. m
9	4.6	6.6	5:10	a. m
2.	North	Bound,	10:19	**
45 1	4.4	44	10:05	p. m
10,	6.6	66		p. m

E. T. V. & G. R. I

No. 1, To Selma, 4:40 p. m. 2:04 a. m. 2, From Selma, 10:40 p. m.

> ALABAMA MINERAL. Arrives at 4:35 p. m. 10:25 a. m. 86, Departs at

COUNTY OFFICERS. Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter

Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. II. Kidd. 1 County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland.

Superintendent of Education-T. N.

County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. Necy, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

AT THE CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m.

METHODIST-Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

Baptist Church-Rev. J. G. Lowrey, rastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

Cumberland Presbyterian—J. C Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a, m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensatriends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for Send five cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX New York City.

SPECIAL RATES TO MOBILE.

From Feb. 25th to 29th inclusive, the line to Mebile at one fare for not going to announce till after the mar, by Prof. J. W. Ellenburgh. the round trip account Mardi Gras. 5th of March. 4—Declamation, by Prof. T. H. the round trip account Mardi Gras, 5th of March. cickets will be limited good to return until March 15th 1892.

Through Pullman sleepers on regu-Jar trains; extra Pullman service can as provided for special excursion parties if desired, on application to B. W. Wrenn, G. P. & T. A.

Knoxville, Tenn. L. A. Bell, A. G. P. A.

Selma, Ala. The First Step.

Perhaps you are run down, can't anything to your satisfaction, and you. wonder what ails you. You should heed the warning, you are taking the first step into Nervous Prostration. You need a Nerve Tonic and in Electric Bitter's you will find the exact remedy for restoring your nervous system to it normal, healthy condition. Surprising result follow the use of his great Nerve Tonic and Altorative. Your appetite returns, good di gestion is restored, and the Liver and Kidneys resume healthy action. Try cannot buy. a bottle. Price 50c.

REE Bible

"SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES!" To the 623 persons answering correctly on or before March 31, 1892, our simple Bible question: "Where in the Bible is first found the word "DILIGENT." we will give the following rewards in the order named:—

First Cash present in gold	1,000.00
Second Cash present in gold 1	1,250.00
	1,000.00
FourthCash present in gold	750.00
Fifth Cash present in gold	500.00
Sixth Cash present in gold	200.00
Seventh Cash present in gold	100.00
Eighth Cash present in gold	100.00
Ninth Breech loading shot gun.	100.03
Tenth Gent's Gold Watch	100.00
Eleventh Ladles' Gold Watch	100.00
Twelfth One Farm Wagon	75.00
Thirteenth Road Cart	25.00
To the next 10 each Solid Silver
Watch	200.00
To the next 100 each Solid Gold	200.00
Ring	500.00
To the next 100 each Handsome	000.00
Photograph Album	800.00
to the next 200 each Handsome	000.00
Gold Pen and Holder	500.00
To the next 200 each $2 50 Cash	500.00

CONDITIONS.

Each competitor must find the word in the Bible—not in captions of chapters, foot or marginal notes, and with his answer to the question he must send enclosed $1.00 for one year's subscription to The Weekly Advertiser, otherwise the answer will not be recorded.

This contest is open for old and young. Every letter is recorded and numbered—there can be no mistakes. Send money by postal note, money order or registered letter. We pay no attention to answers without subscription to The Advertiser.

The Advertiser is by far the best news and literary paper published in the South, and gives its subscribers sixteen pages a week, eight on Tuesday and eight on Friday, making it almost equal to a daily paper. To Alshamians in other States it is like a letter from home twice a week. To read it is to love it.

Don't delay until too late to get one of the big rewards.

Reference: Any Business House .n Mont-big rewards.

Reference: Any Business House in Montgomery.

THE ADVERTISER, Montgomery, Ala.

TOWN TOPICS.

Mr. H. B Richards, of Selma, was in town a few hours this week. The New Drug Store fills prescription carefully at all nours. Several cases of measles are reported in town this week, but none have yet proved serious. The New Drug Store sells fancy sta

Mrs. A. J. Day, of Ashby, Bibb county, spent Monday in Calera, enroute to Montgomery.

The New Drug Store sells all kinds of Prof. C. W. Seals. medicines.

The Sabbath schools of this Refined," by Miss Mollie Oden. place, four in number, are all well attended.

The New Drug Store sells fine tobacco

County court has been in session at Columbiana this week, and of course Calera has been represented.

The New Drug Store sells a cake of soap and gives you a hand mirror.

Major J. G. Harris, State Superintendent of Education passed Memory," by Miss L. A. McGib- for the money through Monday enroute to Annis-

Col. J. B. Stanley, of Greenville, spent Sunday night in Calera, havspent Sunday night in Calera, having been delayed here by a late ought, and to what Extent could train.

One good reliable agent wanted for each place. Write for particulars.

EMPIRE WATCH CO., New York.

Parties who have been receiving the and Prof. Barker. Journal and have not sent in their sub-scription must do so at once or they will have to the Republic," by Prof. R. not receive it longer.

A very effective way to keep a town from growing is for its people to put on long faces and tell strangers that the town is dead.

Cadet Martin, of Six Mile Acad- Baine. emy, was in to see us a few minutes Thursday. He reports politics as red hot" down in Bibb.

Mr. A. R. Scott is having the walks nearing his new drug store much improved by a coat of slag and sand. Who will be next to do

Mas Eliza J. Gist, two doors west of Lee. the Calera Shoe Factory, has long expetional and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes ronage in her line from the ladies of Ca-Cooper. lera and yieity. Other sewing and cut-

> Men who are always crying out the Institute. that their town is dead are doing more towards killing it than twice their number who try to do something to make a living.

Col. West says he is not a candi- Schools," by Profs. Geo. S. Lewis the East Tenn.. Va. & Ga. R'y will date but that everybody is promis-sed excursion tickets from all points ing to vote for him. He says he is 3—Class Drill in E

> FOR SALE-Several wood pumps, a set Payne of pump tools and a set of carpenter's tools, which will be sold at reasonable Hygiene, by Prof. W. W. Wilson. prices. Cail on or address.
> LOUIS HOLDERMAN,

> Vanderbilt Hotel. There are four candidates an-Bibb county—three announce subject to action of convention and one is in to stay till the 1st Monday in August.
>
> Necessity of Teachers be coming better acquainted," by Prof. C. C. Evans.

The citizen of a town or commu cat, can't sleep, can't think can't do nity who refuses to encourage harmeny in schools and churches is doing more towards destroying the morals of the country than the man who opens a race track or a saloon.

> That mechanic who uses his spare moment in making home and family comfortable does more to build up a town than two rich merchants with heavy stocks of goods priced so high that the laboring people

Mr. Columbus Coe, who exchanged places with Mr. Jasper Holcomb tendance. last week, is making improvements on his house and lot. His garden is about ready for planting, and ye local has been promised a share of the earliest vegetables.

One of Calera's good ladies, on hearing that Bibb county had nine candidates for sheriff, suggested that it would be well to elect all of Beat 4-E. S. Lyman, Burr Nabors, A. them and give each one a good depthem and give each one a good dep-uty—and may be the lawless ele-leat 5—W. H. Sturdevant, Jas. P. Doss, ment could be kept under.

connected, do more towards impairBeat 8-E. S. Martin, J. S. Ferrell, E. ing the progress of their town than ten times their number who speak Beat 9-J. H. Weldon, G. W. Taylor, a word of encouragement to the unfortunate laborer who is trying to improve his humble home.

There was regular service at the Beat 12-Jno. Acton, John Caldwell, N. M. E. Church South at 11, a.m. and at 7.30, p. m., Sunday last. At 3. Beat 13-S. M. Bass, A. J. DeShazo, W. p.m., a Christain Endeavor Society was organized at the same church.

W. A. B. Falkner.

W. A. B. Falkner.

W. A. B. Falkner. not confined to any particular denomination, but composed of all denominations who will work to advance the great cause of Christ.

this part of the state as a faithful and there is no reasonable excuse for this part of the state as a faithful any one to suffer longer. Any ordinary and ardent worker in the Master's case will be cured by one bottle. In adcause, and many will regret to learn dition to the reward for difficult cases, that he is soon to leave Jemison for another field of labor. He has accepted a call to the churches of Tussiand that is the cost of a cure. Drummond Medicine Co.. 48-50 Maiden cumbia and Sheffield.

SHELBY TEACHERS INSTITUTE

At Sterrett, Alabama, March 11 and 12, 1892.

PROGRAMME.

FRIDAY, 9 A. M.

1-Song.

2—Enrollment of members. 3-Address of Welcome by Prof. E. O. Dawson.

4—Response by Superintendent T. A. Huston.

7-"Relation of the Home to the School,"by Prof. J. H. Bradshaw and Miss Earl Anchors. AFTERNOON SESSION, 1:30 P. M.

2-"Elements of the True Teacher," by Prof. Savage.

3—"Geography of Alabama," Misses Carrie and Ruby Cooper. 4-"Aids for development of bony and Prof. J. W. Leonard. School," by Prof. W. T. Kendrick. 6—"Does the State of Alabama at $40."

she Aid," by Prof. J. W. Kinnett 7—Relation Common Schools THE H. Gulledge and C. L. Barber.

8-Song. 9-"Benefits arising from uniform series of Text Books," Profs. J. H. Hammond and G. F.

tute of most Value to Teachers," by Prof. J. W. Ellenburgh.

EVENING SESSION, 7:30 P. M.

2-"Compulsory Education," by the Institute. (All Prepare.)

3—Declamation, by Prof. B. E. 4—Opening of the Question Box. 5—Recitation, by Miss Ruby

6-"Are many Hours in the Schoolroom beneficial to Pupils," by

SATURDAY, 8:30 A. M.

2-"What are the most Import ant Daties for our Common

3-Class Drill in English Gram-

7-Influence of Vocal Music on Pupils, by Miss Carrie Cooper and Prof. J. W. Ellenburgh.

A CALL

FOR THE MEETING OF THE DEM-OCRATIC COUNTY EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

To the members of the County Demo-cratic Executive Committee:

You are hereby called to meet in the Court House in Columbiana, Ala, on Saturday, the 5th day of March, 1892, at the hour of 12 o'clock, m.

There will be business of great importance to the party to come before this meeting, and I sincerely urge upon every member of the committee to be present. Try and let nothing prevent your at-

Feb. 8, 1892. Chairman.

The following are the members of the Beat 1-D. R. McMillan, J. S. DeLache, Evander Morrison. Beat 2-H. Pearson, N. N. Mosteller, R. F. Sturdevant. Beat 3-J. H. Gunn, G. B. Deans, J. P.

John Harmon.

Beat 6-J. E. Ruffin, R. J. Griffin, F. P. Men who find fault with every Duuham.

Bent 7-I. W. Bailey, Jas, Mason, R. C.

> Jno. Morrison. Beat 10-T. J. Martin, G. W. Thompson, Beat 11-J. E. Adams, G. W. Dye, Hugh

O. Dawson.

H. Lee. Beat 14-T. H. Baxley, W. H. Falkner,

J. H. Cooper.
Beat 17—W. C. Denson, Jason Powell,

W. S. Cross A REWARD OF $500.

Will be paid for any case of rheumatism Rev. A. E. Burns spent an hour or two in our sauctum last Thursday. Bro. Burns is well known in is made in good taith by the proprietors Lane, New York . Agents wanted.

was coming out of his room, corner of Water and Sylvan Streets, out of the darkness five shots were fired at him, one taking effect in the leg and another

Welch drew his pistol and commenced firing, but the unknown assassin had disappeared. Suspicion points to one Mr. Darby, of Columbiana. It seems that Welch was mixed up in a seduction case in Talladega 5—"The Man in the Teacher," by outcome of it- His wounds, while painful, are not serious. Welch is well thought of in Selma.

ONE DOLLAR WEEKLY

Buys a good gold watch by our club system. Our 14-karat gold-filled cases are warranted for 20 years. Fine Elgin or Waltham movement, stem wind and set. Lady's or gent's size. Equal to any $50 watch. To secure agents where we have none, we sell one of the hunting case watches for the club price, $28, and send C. O. D. by express with privilege of examination before paying for same.

Our agent at Durham, N. C., writes: "Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how you can furnish such works ony and Prof. J. W. Leonard. Our agent at Pennington, Texas, 5—"What Rights have Pupils in writes "Am in receipt of the watch and am pleased without measure. All

STATE OF ALABAMA SHELBY COUNTY.

I will be present at the following times and places for the purpose of by assessing the state and county Taxes for the year 1892, I will make only two rounds and tax payers are request-10-"How can we make the Instia ed to meet me at these appointments, and have with them a description of their tax assessable property.

Gurnee.

Aldrich.

Montevallo,

Calera		124.
Spring Creek	6	28
Shelby Ironwor	ks "	27
Vandiver		29
Bold Springs	Meh	1s
High Land	6.6	2
Helena	44	÷
Pelham	10	4
Tylers	- 0	4
Elliottsville	46	Į
Yellowleaf	11	7
Spearman	4.	8
Columbiana	- 01	9 and 10
Wilsonville		11
Harpersville	4.	15
Vincent		14
SECON1	ROUND.
Gurnee	Mch	21
Aldrich	64	22
Montevallo	66	6.8
Calera	66	24
Spring Creek	44	2:
Shelby Iron wo	rks"	20
Vandiver	64	28
Bold Springs	18	29
High Land	44	:00
Helena	14	31
Pelham	April	1st
Tylers	64	1st
Elijottsville	44	2
Yellowleaf	44	4
Spearman		Ę
Columbiana	16	6 and 7
Wilsonville	44	8
Harpersville	41	(
Vincent	64	11

W. H, KIDD Tax Assessor Shelby county Ala.

Selna, Ala., Feb. 25.—(Special.)—Tonight about 7 o'clock, as Mr. Yancey Welch, night engineer of the switch engine in the East Tennessee yards here, was coming out of his room.

A Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of he state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain the latest market quotations of miscalleneous reading of interest to all contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent

Quickly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

and Legal Printing a Specialty Commercial

THE JOURNAL will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards. Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

FRANK W. GIST.

CALERA, SATERDAY, MARCH 12.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

We are authorized to announce G. B. Deans as a candidate for the office of by some for a primary. Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic par-

We are authorized to announce D. R. McMillan as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject convention.

subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic and conservative party.

JOHN A. CAMPBELL.

This has been the week of the campaign as between the aspirants for governor, in Pike county

Kolb has at last denied the truthfulness of the reported Guice cotton transaction. Is Charlie Lane sat-democratic conventions it is plain- in prescribing the qualifications of to beat the republicans.

Up to Saturday last ten counties had acted in the gubernatorial contest and out of that num- made. If the Pitts faction are the ber there are three contests.

has a table giving the result of the and possess the necessary qualificacounties that have held primaries tions for participating in this conand conventions, which puts Kolb in vention. If there are any who did the lead.

It is strange to see the slates of so. True, that in waiting they may all the news coming through the same channel.

the Journal is written by its ed- fice.

county convention are elected, we not qualified make themselves so by can promise that county two good, their support of the ticket in the faithful and intelligent officers, in coming election. This done, and the persons of Nelson Fuller, nom- there will be no vestige of disrupince for representative, and Mike tion left. We will see how badly Hayes, nomince for probate judge. both sides want a settlement.

An interview with a prominent republican published elsewhere will show the necessity of harmonious itics. It imagines no one but it action on the part of the democrats. When the warning is openly and freely given no one can be mistaken say aught that it does not heartily in his duty. Democrats are expect- agree with it immediately gets on ed to heed this warning. Will they its ear, applies what it conceives to prove it.

the best interests of the party or a favorite candidate, it is unquestionably the duty of every democrat to would think its private ground instand by the party first, last and vaded if any other paper should say all the time. That is the kind of a word in defense of the democratdemocracy the Chronicle admires. and it is the genuine article. -Shelby Chronfele.

icle and Journan agrees, notwith- between a news item and an editostanding our contemporary inti- rial, it takes the publication of a mates that we have been converted fact for an expression of opinion. to the doctrine of evolution.

Brown, Luther Pratt and N. B. to be understood by those who want Stacks are the delegates to the to understand. We shall measure

IT IS A CONVENTION.

Entered at the Post Office in Calera as calling a convention did not sur-Second Class Matter. prise any one. It was generally understood that a convention was favored by most of the committee, though a vigorous effort was made to the action of the democratic county lies. All those who voted for Gov. use his influence to the election of We are authorized to announce John 8. Leeper as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county do so have no right there. The when we severed our connection We are authorized to announce Wm. same prescription would have ap- with the Bibb Blade we quit poli- committee of Dallas county has ad-R. A. Milner as a candidate for the of-tice of Circuit Clerk of Shelby county, tion that would have changed the inner the newspaper bus-I hereby announce myself a candidate primary, would have been to throw now for aspirants to office we get from that county would not be procomplaint on all sides.

county, and a desire has been ex- the Journal. pressed for a compromise. Democracy knows no compromise of its make a good chairman of the democratic jump at conclusions. principles or its rules. The com-mittee which met Saturday is the manuel, but a good chairman of a com-As THE different states hold their recognized head of the party, and ly shown that Cleveland is the man participants it but followed the par-

Upon this basis a settlement of the existing troubles can easily be democrats they claim to be, they THE Alliance Herald of last week voted the two tickets mentioned, not vote that way, it is but right that they wait until they have done the campaign made out by the four have to vote for some whom they do leading dailies in the state, each not favor, but they should be wilone having a different estimate, and ling to suffer this much for the mistake they made. One thing is certain-no settlement can be made WE admire the style of the which will give universal satisfac-Chronicle in calling the editor's tion or show respect to every indiname when referring to this paper. vidual preference. No duty is you see in the editorial columns of ed than that which brings a sacri-

The way is clear and easy. Let all who are qualified go into the Ir the nominees of the Bibb meetings, and let those who are

THE Chronicle imagines itself the sine qua non of Shelby county polknows anything or has the right to say anything. If anyone dares to be withering epithets, and makes THE gubernatorial contest is in itself ridiculous generally by its Pike this week, and the reports in- feeble attempts at sarcasm. The dicate that it is very warm. Solie. latest thing it imagined in one of itor Stallings is on Kolb's heels, its illucid intervals was that the telling the people some very un. JOURNAL had learned the art of evowholesome truths in his hearing, lution. We presume it means by Kolb says, "it's a lie," but don't this that we have shown signs of taking sides with the discordant element in this county. In this Where it is necessary to sacrifice this the wish is doubtless father to the thought, as the Chronicle ic party. There are two or three things wrong with the Chronicle. In this one sentiment the Chron- First, not knowing the difference Second, it has an idea that a paper is not democratic unless it makes a Bibb county held a convention clown of itself by berating and Tuesday to send delegates to the abusing its opponents. Third, it various conventions, and to nomilimagines that if a paper tries to nate a county ticket. The conven- keep within the bounds of common tion was declared irregularly called courtesy it is trying to pander to by the chairman of the committee, to public sentiment. Now, we but his decision was overruled. N. would like to give the brother a Fuller was nominated on the first few pointers. We shall publish the ballot for representative. Forty news, or as much of it as our space two ballots were had for p of ate will permit, good or bad, and what judge, when the convention ad- we publish is no criterion of our journed to Wednesday morning, and opinion. We shall express our M. Y. Hayes was nominated for opinion in a way at once courteous probate judge; S. M. Adams, J. M. and comprehensive, at least so as to be pure democratic principle, The call issued for a mass meet-

One of the candidates for con-There is some dissatisfaction ex gress in this district addresses a pressed among the people at this letter to CALERA JOURNAL, and sugaction, but the Journal does not gests that inasmuch as the junior see wherein the cause for complaint is supporting Grant that the senior Jones and Gen. Forney two years Dallas' candidate. By the senior tion that would have changed the iness as a "newspaper man," not as which he states there is no grounds the doors wide open to all who want- pay for-so, if the candidate wants rated, but that it was the intention given sufficient and just cause for they can be procured at ten cents every vote he was entitled to. It It is well known that there are announcement. But we have no will receive no further publication, two factions to the party in this management or editorial control of and those who are so ready to cry S. H. G.

Tuscaloosa Times: Senator Hill would

HUGH T. CAFFEY. PHYSICIAN & SURGEON CALERA, ALA.

and what anybody in general and ing of democrats in this county The action of the committee in the Chronicle in particular thinks gives evidence that there is some of those opinions is a matter of dissatisfaction at the action of the small consequence, except that we committee. No action can satisfy would like to be correctly inter- everybedy, but the committee's arrangements must be followed. We have not much faith in calls signed by nom deplumes. They do not bear the proper evidence of either authority or good faith. There is no doubt of the right or power of the and there can be no doubt of the duty of democrats to abide by the

THE secretary of the executive complexion of either convention or a "journalist." Whatever we do for the report that the delegation ed to participate. This would have the use of the Journal's columns, of the delegation to give Mr. Kolb a line for "puffs," or five dollars for is to be hoped now that the report out "fraud," "scheme," "clique," etc., etc., will not be so ready to > named, but a good chairman of a committee might make a very bad presidential candidate.

>
> A SMART MAN will not hobble around on cruthces when the can cure his Rheumatism with one bottle of Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy, costing only $5, but worth $100. Enterpring Druggists keep it, or it will be sent to any address on receipt of price, by the Drummond Medicine Co., 48-00. Maiden Lane, New York. Agents

CORBETT PREESE,

Harness Saddles,

DEALERS IN

HARDWARE & TINWARE, TRACON MARIE TO ALLE

That's right, brother, everything higher or more excellently perform- Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded Shells always on Hand.

118 19TH STREET, BIRMINCHAM.

THE ALABAMA (PREMIUM NO. 14) FREE.

This handsome Carriage is only one of the many Vehicles which THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY is offering its customers for 1892.

Special Premiums for Men, Women, Boys and Girls.

THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER produced the Champion Crops reported in the State last year.

Write for Circulars and Prices. ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY. MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA

Brick Store, Montgomery Avenue.

PATENT MEDICINES.

CIGARS AND TOBACCOS.

Prescriptions Carefully Compounded at All Hours by an Experienced Druggist.

Having Just Opened a Drug Business in Calera, I Desire to Solicit the Patronage of All Who are in Need of Goods in My Line, Which are Offered at the Lowest Possible Margines.

R. SCOTT, Proprietor. our opinions by what we conceive

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA: ALABAMA. committee to call the convention, Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans,

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York Louisville and Birmingham at regular rates cyarged by the larger cities.

We transact a general banking business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

The New York Store,

Calera, Ala.,

SAYS-If you are Interested in

DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, BOOTS, SHOES,

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS. CLOTHING & HATS.

And if you over Buy

Hose, Half-Hose, Silk Ties Scarfs, Etc., Etc.,

Please Listen to Us just 20 Minutes. We are overstocked, and in order to Reduce Stock before we take invoice on February 1st, we will sell you any Div Goods in our House

We have a Large Stock to dispose of and when you hear the Prices you will be astonished how such goods can be sold so low. Listen:

Cotton Checks 41-2 to 5 cents; Nice Cashmere Dress Goods 1924 cents per vard; Same at 221-2; a Finer Goods at 271-2; All Wool Ladies Cloth lifty inches wide only 371-2 cents, former price 65; Ladies Fast Black Hose 71-2 cents per pair; a better goods for 121-2 cents; a Fine Hose for 171-2 cents, city price 40 cents; Salt 6. cents per sack; Fine Shoes $1 25 to $2 50; Good Shoes 1 00 per

Come and see us. We have too much to mention all in this paper. Come at once. We guarantee all prices named, and a child will get as low prices as a4 older person. No favorites, but one price to all. Come and see us and you will find we mean business. We want to

Reduce the Stock,

before taking Invoice, and if Prices can do it

THEY MUST BE CUT INTO

A. C. WADE & CO.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION.

Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages. REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.

the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to the household.

3. It covers the news of the whole world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thorough news service from every important news center in the world.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone is worth many times its subscription price to every farmer. This department is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, whose service is retained by the Constitution at great exnense.

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasure to every family, and the name of service is newspaper in the world.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the pames of six of your

1. It is the best of all weekly newspapers.

2. It is invaluable to the sarmer and throughout the south.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

E. T. V. & G. R. R.

4:36 a. m. No. 1, To Selma, 4:40 p. m From Selma, 2:04 a. m. 10:40 p. m.

ALABAMA MINERAL. No. 85, Arrives at

4 86, Departs at COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter. Register in Chancery—D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. II. Kidd. 7 County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland

Superintendent of Education-T. N. County Solicitor-J. L. Peters.

County Commissioners—John E. yeey, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, Dyeey, T. B. D. C. Davis.

AT THE CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th School at 9:30 a. m.

METHODIST-Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

Baptist Church-Rev. J. G. Lowrey pastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m, every Thursday.

CUMBERLAND PRESRYTERIAN-J. C. Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sun-of Burlington, Ohio, states that he Her friends were glad to welcome had been under the care of two prominent physicians, and used their treatment until he was not able to get around. They pronounced his case are cold and windy, we see the ave-to be Consumption and incurable, rage 'Young American" has com-He was persuaded to try Dr. King's menced the popular summer games New Discovery for Consumption, of marbles and baseball. Coughs and Colds and at that timt was not able to walk across the stree! he was much better; he continued to use it and is to-day enjoying good beauth. If you have any Throat. use it and is to-day enjoying good health. If you have any Throat.

A Wonder Worker.

Lung or Chest Trouble try it We Yesterdays News h guarantee satisfaction.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

world containing all the latest sensa-tional and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes triends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX.
Franklin Square. New York City.

SPECIAL RATES TO MOBILE.

seil excursion tickets from all points for a "cross-roads town. on the line to Meb le at one fare for the round trip account Mardi Gras, tickets will be limited good to return J. D. Norman, accompanied by until March 15th 1892.

ties if desired, on application to B. W. Wrenn, G. P. & T. A.

Knoxville, Tenn.

L. A. Bell, A. G. P. A. Selma, Ala.

REE Bible GOMPETITION "SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES!"

To the 623 persons answering correctly on or before March 31, 1892, our simple Bible question: "Where in the Bible is first found the word "DILIGENT." we will give the following rewards in the order named:—

Watch
To the next 100 each Solid Gold
Ring
To the next 100 each Handsome
Photograph Album
To the next 200 each Handsome
Gold Pen and Holder
To the next 200 each $2.50 Cash

CONDITIONS.

Each competitor must find the word in the Bible—not in captions of chapters, foot or marginal notes, and with his answer to the question he must send enclosed $1.00 for one year's subscription to The Weekly Advertiser, otherwise the answer will not be recorded.

This contest is open for old and young.
Every letter is recorded and numbered—there can be no mistakes. Send money by postal note, money order or registered letter. We pay no attention to answers without subscription to The Advertiser.

The Advertiser is by far the best news and literary paper published in the South, and gives its subscribers sixteen pages a week, eight on Tuesday and eight on Friday, making it almost equal to a daily paper. To Alabamians in other States it is like a letter from home twice a week. To read it is to love it.

Don't delay until too late to get one of the big rewards.

big rewards. Reference: Any Business House in Mont-

THE ADVERTISER. Montgomery, Ala.

TOWN TOPICS.

Hon. Henry Wilson, of Columbiana, was in town Wednesday last. The New Drug Store fills prescription carefully at all hours.

Dr. Oates, of Leeds, is in Calera this week, the guest of Mr. James

The New Drug Store sells fancy sta Mrs. Parker who was accidentally shot last week, is improving and will soon be out again.

The New Drug Store sells fine tobacco and cigars.

Willie Campbell, son of the editor of the News, stopped off and spent the day Thursday.

The New Drug Store sells a cake of soap and gives you a hand mirror.

We regret to learn that Dr. Meredith, of Montevallo, has sold his property and will move to Texas.

Prof. Wilson! gave his students holiday Friday in order to attend the County Teachers' Institute.

Hon. D. R. McMillan, a popular candidate for probate judge, called to see us a few minutes yesterday.

We keep a notice standing that the editor went to Birmingham Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath week.

> When March came in so calmly, we expected that the usual bluster would soon come, and it did. Thursday was very unpleasant.

> We, unintentionally, omitted last to state that Mrs. Frank Palmer. of this place, was on a two weeks visit to her sister in Memphis.

> S. W. Price, of Centreville, has

Miss Lottie Duran, whe has been visiting relatives in Texas for sev-Mr Frank Huffman, a young man eral months, has returned home.

Notwithstanding the evenings

The good ladies of Calera found a had used half of a dollar bottle, that cinity and promptly came to their state, congressional, chancery, judicial he was much better; he continued to Yesterdays News has a call for a mass meeting to be held in Columbiania on the 2nd day of April at 12 o'clock, signed "Many Democrats the only illustrated paper in the who are for Jones, Unity and Har What does it mean?

> Mr. George Postelle, who was for several years in the railroad office at this place, spent a night here beat to select its delegates in such man-this week. George made many ner as it may deem best. friends while here and they are always glad to see him.

here, infoms us that he has within the past twelve months handled to those who voted the democratic ticket at the last state and federal elec-From Feb. 25th to 29th inclusive, 62,764 cars in the freight departthe East Tenn. Va. & Ga. Ry will ment. This is a very good showing at these elections, or either of them, Misses Ida and Mamie Brown, at-Through Pullman sleepers on regular trains; extra Pullman service can be provided for special excursion par- was also in the party, and the trip was quite a pleasant one.

> John S. Leeper, of Columbiana, a prominent candidate for probate judge, circulated among his Calera friends Tuesday evening. A ingrepresentation in the convention: JOURNAL man met him, and while in his company two other candidates for the same position came up and we left them talking about the action of the committee.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES.

Sir-I made use of your Philotoken with my last child, in order to procure a safe and easy travil. I used it about two months before my expected time, and I had a very quick and easy con-finement. Nothing occurred to protract my convalescence, and I got about in less time than was usual for me. I think it a medicine that should be used by every expectant mother, for should they but try it as I have, they would never again be without it at such times. I am

yours respectfully,
Mrs. ELIZABETH DIX. Any merchant or druggist can procure
Risley's Philotoken for $1 a bottle.
CHARLES F. RISLEY, Wholesale
Druggist, 62 Cortlandt St., New York.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

The next best thing possible to insur-ance against fire in the coming world is our borders. And in our efforts for the a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of

Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the storms of the financial world cannot storms of the financial world cannot ical faculty as being a safe and remarkatouch them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they is so speedy and miraculous that benefit will become your protection in your old sge should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Except of price by Drummond Medicine tract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-Witt Talmage.

IT IS A CONVENTION

MEETING OF THE SHELBY COUNTY EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The democratic executive committee met last Saturday in Columbiana, and decided by a large majority to hold a convention.

The following resolutions were adopted, and an address issued, which is given below:

Democratic Party of this county be called to meet at the Courthouse in Columbiana at 12 e'clock, noon, on Friday, the 3rd day of June next, for ed the action of the committee, he purpose of appointing delegates to the State Congressional. Chancery, Judicial and Senatorial Democratic Con-Assembly of this State Judge of Probate, Sheriff, Circuit Clerk, Tax Collector, Tax Assessor, Treasurer, Superintendent of Education and Coroer for each Commissioners district in

2. Resolved, That the Democrats of the respective beats of this County be requested to hold beat meetings in their respective beats on Saturday the republican voters in this county, 28th day of May next, for the purpose and with a divided democracy, we of selecting delegates to the county can win. I have always encouraged Convention and that each beat select the independent movement in this its delegates in such manner as it may county, because I knew that sooner see fit, and that such beat meetings or later they would widen the be held under the management of the Executive Committee respectively of the beats as members of this Commit-

The third resolution was a verbatim copy from the resolution of the State Executive Committe fixing the qualifications of voters.

4. Kesolved, That the different Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting been in town several days this week, the guest of the editor. Steve says the political outlook in Bibb is very grant votes east in the last election for Governor and one for every fraction thereof over ten, provided that every ugly. beat shall be entitled to two delegates.

ADDRESS OF THE COMMITTEE.

To the Democratic Voters of Shelby Coun-

Pursuant to a call by the chairman, the democratic executive committee of Shelby county met in Columbiana on Saturday, the 5th day of March, 1892, and called a convention of the democratic party to meet in this place at 12 o'clock, noon, on Friday, June 3, 1892, for the purpose of selecting delegates to the sessor, tax collector, treasurer, superintendent of education, coroner and a commissioner of each commissioner district, and for such other purposes as the convention may deem to be for the welfare and harmony of the democratic party in Shelby. He was present and took his

Your committee appointed Saturday, the 28th day of May next, as the time for holding the beat meetings to select delegates to the county convention, each

The eligibility to participate in beat meetings as presented by your committee, is in conformity to a resolution Mr. Bridges, the railroad agent adopted by our present state demohave heretofore habitually voted that ticket and intend to support it in the en-suing elections, and to those who have become voters since the last elections and those who will become voters by the next elections and intend to vote the every twenty democratic votes cast in the last election for governor, and for every fraction over ten, provided every beat shall be entitled to two delegates.

ì	9 - 01
	Beat 1, Columbiana,18
	Beat 2, Spring Creek, 3
	Beat 3, Calera, 6
	Beat 4. Monievallo,13
	Beat 5, Tyler's, 2
	Beat 6, Helena, 6
	Beat 7, Camp Branch, 8
	Beat 8, Yellow Leaf, 7
	Beat 9, Wilsonville,10
	Beat 10, Harpersville10
	Beat 11, Weldon, 4
	Beat 12, Highland, 2
	Beat 13, Bold Springs, 2
	Beat 14, Sterrett, 2
	Beat 16, Vincent, 5
	Beat 17, Pelham, 3
	Total,102
	This being the year in which federal state and county officers are none, I dare say, will fail to realize the importance of individual effort for suc-

Believing as democrats, that the best interests of our party is the best interests of our country, I would urge upon every democratic voter in Shelby county to labor with untiring energy for the maintainance and perpetuity of Jeffersonian democracy pure and simple throughout success of the principles, let our actions be characterized with fairness, firmness and fealty to our party.

J. R. WHITE,

Ch'n. Dem. Ex. Com., Shelby Co.

DR. DRUMMOND'S LIGHTNING

Remedy for Rheumatism has received the unqualified endorsement of the med-

SHELBY COUNTY REPUBLI-CANS

WILL HAVE A FULL TICKET IN THE FIELD.

A JOURNAL reporter met Mr. J D. Hardy, the leading republican in this county, the other day, and the conversation turned upon things political. Mr. Hardy talked freely of the condition in Shelby, and said Resolved, That a convention of the some things which every one claiming to be a democrat would do well to ponder. When asked how he view-

"As a matter of party policy I ventions and to nominate candidates admire it. Were my party in the for Representatives in in the General same position I should favor the same action, preferring to go down with colors flying rather than give an inch to the contestants. The ner of this county and a Commission- dissatisfaction which seems to exist I view with pleasure as it gives us a better showing. Yes, we will take advantage of it, by placing a full ticket it the field at the proper time. We have fourteen hundred breach until we could step into it with open efforts. I believe that time has come and we shall go into this canvass on our own merits and upon our own strength.

Speaking of the governorship, Mr. Hardy said:

"The action of the committee will beats of this county shall be entitled to give the county to Jones. I am glad of it. All things equal between them I would support Kolb, because I believe his candidacy tends to the disruption of the democratic party, but Gov. Jones is too much the better man.'

Mr. Hardy speaks confidently of the outlook for his party.

SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

COMMITTEE PROCREDINGS-CONVENTION TO

Pursuant to a call of the chairman, the demoratic executive committee of the seventh judicial circuit met at Talladega on Monday, February 29, 1892.

Present-T. S. Plowman, chairman, Talladega county; J. D. Truss, St. Clair; T. J. Burton, Cleburne; H. L. Stevenson, Calhoun. J. R. White of Shelby was elected to

Wednesday, June 15, 1892, at 10. a.m. is time, and Talladega the place selected for holding a convention to nominate a candidate for Judge of the seventh judicial circuit to be elected in August. The following is the number of votes to which each county is entitled in the convention: Calhoun, 16; Cleburne, 6; Clay, 8; Shelby, 14; St. Clair, 8; Talladega, 16. Each county to select its delegates in such manner as it may see fit.

T. S. PLOWMAN, Chairman. T. J. Burton, Sec.

PRESS PARAGRAPHS.

Blocton Courier: Wonder if S. M Adams was one of the two Alabama del-Adams was one of the two Alabama delegates to St. Louis convention who ignored the third party move? But we don't suppose he was, for the platform of that party objects to subsidizing or muzzling the press; and if he had swallowed it as he did the St. Louis Resolutions and the Ocala Platform, he could not have taken the stand he did on last Monday. And then Mr. Adams having Monday. And then Mr. Adams having advanced so rapidly from congress to probate judge, and on down to no candidate at all, perhaps he thought it best not to aspire to the presidency—at least till he again plows an ox, or jumps on a news-

Blocton Courier: The latest is that Burn-his-arm-off Adams is to be run over the convention and nominated for representative in the general assembly from this county. We suppose he wishes to go to the legislature in order to introduce a bill to silence the newspapers of the papers which oppose him.

A Tuscaloosa correspondent speaking of the candidates in that county produces this bit of doggerel:

They all claim to be the best men in the And swear they will forever by you stand But just wait till the excitement is over, And then their friendship you'll discever To be nothing a mass of pretension and

And a poor man will be no more than a dog in the street.

ONE DOLLAR WEEKLY

Buys a good gold watch by our club system. Our 14-karat gold-filled cases are warranted for 20 years. Fine Elgin or Waltham movement, stem wind and set. Lady's or gent's size. Equal to any $50 watch. To secure agents where we have none, we sell one of the hunting case watches for the club price, $28, and send C. O. D. by express with privilege of examination before paying for same.
Our agent at Durham, N. C., writes:
"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how you can furnish such works for the money,"

Our agent at Pennington, Texas, writes "Am in receipt of the watch and am pleased without measure. All who have seen it say it would be cheap

One good reliable agent wanted for each place. Write for particulars.

EMPIRE WATCH CO., New York

The Calera Journal,

Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of he state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the varynage of these who device this class of information, and

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at every point in the county.

Quikly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

and Legal Printing a Specialty Commercial

THE JOURNAL will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets wil be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

30 Years Of Suffering from

Humor Scrofula

You might think that a case of Scrofula of 30 years' duration would be very difficult to cure. And so it is, but Hood's Sarsaparilla is reasonably sure to cure every case if given a Fair, Thorough Trial

Mr. Clapp, an old resident of Eastondale, says: "I am now 83 years of age and for the past 80 years have suffered with running sores on one of my logs. A few years ago I had two of my toes amputated, physicians stating that I was suffering from gangrene and had but a Short Time to Live

Eight months ago, at the recommendation of a neighbor I began using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and have taken about a dozen bottles. When I began taking it nearly the whole lower part of my leg and foot was a running sore. Now the sore has almost completely healed and I can truthfully say that I am in better health than I have been for many years. I owe all my improvement to Hood's Sarsaparilla It is better than gold." GEORGE T. CLAPP, Easton-dale, Mass. Be sure to get Hood's.

HOOD'S PILLS Cure Billousness.

Shortens Labor, Lessens Pain, Endorsed by the Leading Physicians.

Book to "Mothers" mailed FREE. BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO. ATLANTA, GA.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

RELIEVES all Stomach Distress. REMOVES Nausee, Sense of Pulness, Concession, Pain.
REVIVES FAILING ENERGY. RESTORES Normal Circulation, and WARMS TO TOE TIPS.

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo.

ytakinga TABI LE af

POME STUDY, BOOK-KEEPING, Business Forms, Penmanship, Arthmetic, Short-hand, etc., Thosoughly Taught by MAIL. Circulars free Bryant's College, 457 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.

make 100 PER CENT and win $748 CASH Prizes my Counts, Belts, Brushes and Medicines. Territory. Dr. Bridgman, 373 B'way, N.Y.

Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. DR. J. STEPHENS, Lebanon, Ohio. AM. N. U. No. 8 1892

Beware of Cintments for Catari h That Cantain Mercury.

As mercury will surely destroy he sense of smell and completely derange i he whole system when entering it through the smu icous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from repuze hie physicians, as the damage they will deals ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hail's Catarrh Cure, manufact used by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contain two mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internal h, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

Sold by Druggists, price 75: per bottle.

Twenty-three hundred locon offices were built in the United States during 1891.

An Important Different 16.

To make it apparent to thous ands, who think themselves ill, that they are 1 tot a ffected with any disease, but that thus system simply needs cleansing, is to bring comfort home to their hearts, as a costive con idition is easily cured by using Syrup of Figs. Manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co.

The Baltimore and Ohio added 1000 mile of track to its system last year.

Brown's Iron Bitters cures Dyspepsia, Malaria, Billousness and General Detdity. Gives Strength, aids Bigestion, tones the nervescreates appetite. The best tonic for Nursing Mothers, weak women and childre a.

Nearly 5000 new books were published in he United States last year.

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD? These is a 3 inch display advertishment in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This bouse places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you by the Brautiful Lithographs of Samples Thes.

Mr. John C. Feriman, Albion, I'Ainois, writes on Jan. 16, 1891: "My wife has been a great sufferer from headaches for over 20 years, and your Bradycrotine is the ority medicine that has ever relieved her. I can get you all the recommendations you want from here, We take great pleasure in recommending it on all occasions."

Only citizens who can read and write are allowed to vote in Bolivia.

MALARIA cured and eradicated from the system by Browne's Iron Bitters, which enriches the blood, tones the nerves, aids digestion. Acts like a charm on persons in general ill health, giving new energy and strength.

During last year 192 persons were arrested in New York City for attempted suicide. THE THROAT. — "Brown's Bronchial Troches" act directly on the organs of the voice. They have an extraordinary effect in all disorders of the throat. FITS stopped free by Dr. Kune's Great Nerve Restorer. No the after first day's use. Marvelous cures. And $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline. 931 Arch Sk., Phila., Pa

For sick headache, dizziness or swimming in the head, pain in the back, body or rheumatism, take Beecham's PAlls._

The worst cases of female weskness readily yield to Dr. Swan's Pastiles. Samples free. Dr. Swan, Beaver Dam, Wisi

If afflicted with ore eyes use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye-water Druggins se Dat. Ec. per bottle of health—the woman who has faithfully used Dr. Pierce's Faworite Prescription. She feels well and she looks so. It's a medicine that makes her well, whether she's overworked and "run-down," or affacted with any of the distressing diseases and disorders peculiar to her sex.

derangements, and "female, complaints" of every kind, it's an unfailing remedy. And it's the only one, among medicines for women, that's guar-

all chronic weaknesses, functional anteed. If it doesn't give satisfaction, in any case, you have your money back.

Can anything else be "just as good?"

"They're about as bad as the disease!" Not all of them, though. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are pleasant—both when they're taken and when they act. They cure permanently Sick and Nervous Headaches, Biliousness, Costiveness, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

Beauty often depends on plumpness; so does comfort; so does health. If you get thin, there is something wrong, though you may feel no sign of it.

Thinness itself is a sign; sometimes the first sign; sometimes not.

The way to get back plumpness is by CAREFUL LIVING, which sometimes includes the use of Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil.

Let us send you—free—a little book which throws much light on all these subjects.

Scott & Bowne. Chemists, 13a South 5th Avenue, New York. Your druggist keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil—all druggists everywhere do. $1.

Cheapest Family Atlas KNOWN.

ONLY 25 CENTS. 191 Pages, 91 Full Page Maps. Colored Maps of each State and Territory is the United States. Also Maps of every Country in the United States. Also Maps of every Country in the World. The letter press gives the aquare miles of each State; time of actionest; population; chief clites; average temperature; salaries of officials and the principal postunisaters in the State; number of farms, with their productions and the value thereof, different manufactures and number of employes. 200., etc. Also the area of each Foreign Country form of government; population; principal products and their moasy value; amount of trade; religion; alize of army; miles of religion and telegraph; number of horeos, cattle, as weet manufactured and the second country in the country of the infermation that oal. Pear the terms

SECRETS OF 1888.

HOW THE GREAT BOODLE CAMPAIGN WAS RUN IN INDIANA-BENJAMIN HARRI-SON AS MANAGER-IN-CHIEF-DUD-LEY'S GREAT WORK.

The Indianapolis Sentinal says editorially: "We print this morning interviews with two prominent Republicans of Indiana in which certain secrets of the great boodle campaign of 1888 are exposed with much particularity. The Sentinel editorially vouches for the absolute authenticity of the reports of these interviews. Everything that is contained in these reports is precisely as stated by the gentlemen in question. Their statements are sufficiently startling. The Sentinel gives them precisely as they were made to its reporters. They speak for themselves, and do not call for extended comment. Are they true? Or have these gentlemen of unblemished reputation for integrity and veracity suddenly turned common liars?" The interviews follow:

There was in the city yesterday a young Republican lawyer from one of the strong Democratic counties of Southern Indiana who thinks Dadley is a saint when compared to President Harrison, Attorney-General Miller and Judge Woods. This young man is well known as a stalwart Republican in his own county and his voice has frequently been heard in State conventions. His name is withheld at his request because he is retained in a case which will soon be heard in Judge Woods's court.

"If Judge Woods derived his power from the people for a stated term instead of holding on for life by appointment by the President, so that there might be a chance to depose him from his arbitrary throne, many of the secrets of the last campaign would have leaked out long ago," said he. "But 'murder will out," and when Benjamin Harrison retires from the White House Dudley will stand better in the estimation of the public than the ex-President.

MILLER HANDLED THE MONEY.

"Dudley wrote the 'blocks-of-five' letter, it is true, but he never touched a dollar of the money raised to convert 'floaters' to Harrison. He mapped out the campaign and indicated where the money could be had. Can President Harrison and Attorney-General Miller say as much? Mr. Miller himself handed the allotment to the Representative from my county. I was present at the time. In one instance, I am told, there was a disagreement as to the amount a certain county should receive and Mr. Harrison settled the matter. I was not the Chairman of my county, nor did the Chairman have anything to do with the financial part of the campaign. The Harrison people did not trust him because of his Gresham proclivities. The Secretary of the Committee was an elder in his church—a man of the Harrison type on a small scalewho held family prayers and believed that it was his duty to his God and country to beat the Democratic party even by buying votes. Under Arthur's administration Senator Harrison had him appointed to a minor Federal office. He was willing to do anything for Harrison. He was the only member of the County Committee entrusted with the secrets of the campaign. I myself and two other outsiders, together with the Secretary, constituted what you might call a 'junta.' Dudley addressed all his correspondence to the Secretary. I saw every letter and telegram that Dudley sent to our county.

A DUDLEY SCHEME. "Dudley is a wonderful man. He State, said: would wire us information about some back townships, showing that he knew more about our county than we did. I learned afterward that Dudley had special agents traveling all over the State reporting to him, unknown to us. Some of these agents went from house to house as pedlers, others as stock buyers.

"Dudley never failed in an emergency. A few days before the 'blocks-of-five' letter was exposed we wired him that we could not get our prominent business men to contribute. The next morning we received a long telegram stating that 1500 Democratic repeaters from St. Louis were on their way to Indiana, and would be distributed all along the O. & M. R. R., and imploring us to raise money to put detectives on their track to prevent the outrage. Immediately, as per instruction of Dudley, we wired a list of business men to Mr. Miller, and before sundown every man on the list had received a telegram, signed by Mr. Harrison, asking him to attend a meeting at our committee-room that night. These men felt flattered at being personally recognized by Mr. Harrison. At the meeting I read the Dudley telegram and declaimed at some length upon the outrage that the wicked Democrats were going to perpetrate upon honest voters and tax-payers. Within fifteen minutes $1000 was subscribed by these indignant business men. Some of them were so worked up that they lost sleep that night, and from that time on to the closing of the polls we had no trouble to get any of them to neglect their business to drive out in the country fifteen miles to see some one they could influ-

"But, I repeat it, not a dollar used in the county came from Dudley. With the exception of the amount raised in the county, every dollar came from Messrs. Harrison and Miller."

"How about the 1500 repeaters?" "Of course they existed only in imagination, but the scare had the desired THE DEACON BURNED THE LETTER.

"Was there a 'blocks-of-five' letter received in your county?"
"Yes, the Secretary before referred to received one. When he was subpomaed before the Grand Jury to testify in this matter, he came to me for advice. came with him to Indianapolis. Two hours before he took the witness-stand, where he testified under oath he had never received one, he burned the letter upon my saving. I advised him to tall the truth about the matter, and having no letter in his possession, of course he could not swear that the letter he received was identical with the one in possession of one in the Denison, who told him that if the Grand Jury. However, just before going to the Federal Court, he met somehe testified he had received a 'blocks-offive' letter he would never receive an appointment from Mr. Harrison. He didn't get as big an office as he expected, but he has been well taken care of. "By the way, every man who received a 'blocks-of-five' letter is in office to-day, from Smiley N. Chambers down to Sam Kercheval. The latter came very near being left in the cold, for he was charged with having lost, through carelessness, his letter, and that it fell into the hands of a Democrat. But it appears that Sam cleared himself of the charge, for he now holds a fat place.

"There is one thing that is not generally known about this Dudley letter. it is a fact, however, that when the letter was published Judge Woods and Law Partner Miller advised General Harrison to come out in a card denouncing Dud-Mr. Harrison was very indignant at Dudley, and had made up his mind to publicly denounce him, when Stanton J. Peele, Attorney-General Michener and certain members of the slick six threatened to make trouble if Judge Woods's advice was followed. Harrison knew that Indiana could not be carried without money, and if he issued a proclamation against the Dudley letter the workers would have allowed the floaters to take care of themselves. This was explained to Harrison forcibly by Michener.

"After the election Messrs. Harrison and Miller tried to make a scapegoat of Dudley. They advised Judge Woods to deliver to the first Federal Grand Jury what is now known in history as the first charge. That's what made Dudley angry at the whole crowd. That charge was uncalled for, and even if Woods did take it back subsequently Dudley will never forgive him for it. Judge Woods thought that he would rehabilitate Harrison with a cloak of virtue by dragging Dudley before the Grand Jury. But this hypocritical trick of Harrison, Miller and Woods soon caused Harrison much worry. Dudley is a broader man and endowed with greater resources than the President, and he soon gave him to understand that in the end Harrison would come out of the ordeal the worse disfigured of the two. In other words, he had 'dynamite in his pockets.'

"The idea generally prevails that Dudley forced Judge Woods to deliver his second charge. This is not true. Benjamin Harrison himself caused Judge Woods to reverse his first charge. did so when he found out that Dudley intended to explode his dynamite.

"Judge Woods charged Dudley with a crime, but did not give him a chance to clear himself. Dudley despises the President and Judge Woods, and were it not for the fact that Dudley's pull in the Departments at Washington is worth $100,000 annually he would not allow Woods to be confirmed. I have it from reliable authority that Judge Woods would have been appointed on the Supreme bench had not Dudley interposed. Dudley will be vindicated, but not till after the next election. Then Harrison will leave the White House under a cloud."

HARRISON BULLDOZED.

Yesterday, in conversation with a Sentinel reporter, a well-known Gresham Republican, a man who is on the most intimate personal terms with the Judge and who occupies a prominent position in the legal and political circles of the

HARRISON ADVISED TO USE MONEY.

"The appointment of Judge Woods recalls certain events that to us, in Indiana, are especially interesting. It is a matter of common notoriety that the electoral vote of this State was secured for Harrison by the improper and corrupt use of money during the week immediately preceding and on the day of election. It is also well known that Mr. Harrison, in the Denison Hotel, counseled and advised with large numbers of Republican politicians from all over the State regarding the use of money at the election, and that he told them in so many words that it would be necessary to do this to save the electoral vote of Indiana. Workers were brought together by the hundred to hear these statements from the lips of the Republican candidate. All during the campaign of 1888 Benjumin Harrison counseled regarding the use of money at the election with men who afterward went out and brought, or superintended the buying of, votes. Morcover, Mr. Harrison, through his agents, supplied men with the money with which they made the purchases.

"The visit of Law Partner Miller and Russell Harrison to Chicago in quest of unds a few days before the Presidential election need not be recalled here. At he close of the campaign of 1888 there ere a number of men in Indiana who new enough of the doings of Benjamin farrison in that campaign to have Russell Harrison to Chicago in quest of funds a few days before the Presidential election need not be recalled here. At the close of the campaign of 1888 there were a number of men in Indiana who knew enough of the doings of Benjamin Harrison in that campaign to have secured his conviction, had he been indicted for conspiracy, the object of which was to corrupt and debauch the voters of Indiana, at an election of which a Representative in Congress was voted for, and further aiding, counseling and advising thereto.

"If Dudley had been indicted, facts would have been elicited that would have compelled the indictment of Benjamin Harrison, and the proof could have been brought much closer to him than to Dudley, independently of the evidence that the explosion of Dudley's dynamite would have furnished. The outlook to Benjamin Harrison immediately following his election was really most distressing. He comprehended the situation and realized that Dudley's dynamite was directed at him."

Ir may take nine tailors to make a man, but one can break him.

A spell of la grippe is not so had when it is spelled simply grip.

Routs Rheumatism.

Mr. CHARLES LAWRENCE, of Ashland, Neb., says that Swift's Specific cured him of SEVERE RHEUMATISM of which he had suffered for over six months, with vain efforts to get relief. He recommends it to all sufferers from Rheumatism.

After suffering untold agonies three years from Rheumatism, having had much treatment without relief, I decided to take Swift's Specific. Eight bottles and I wish other sufferers to know of the value of your great remedy for Rheumatism .-JOHN McDonald, McDonald's Mills, Ga. Send for free Treatise on the Blood and Skin.

CURED ME ENTIRELY-

SWIFT SPECIFIC COMPANY, ATLANTA, GA.

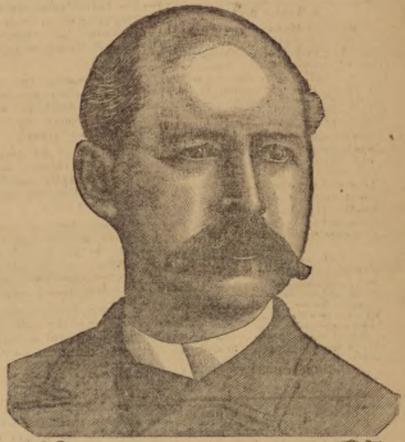

W.L.DOUGLAS

Is a fine Calf Shoe, made seamless, of the best leather produced in this country. There are no tacks or wax threads to hurt the feet, and is made as smooth inside as a hand-sewed shoe. It is as stylish, easy fitting and durable as custom-made shoes costing from $4.00 to $5.00.

3 SHOE

This shoe has been on sale throughout the United States over eight years, and has given excellent satisfaction, as the increasing sales show. We are now selling more shoes of this grade than any other manufacturer in the world. Try a pair—you cannot make a mistake. One trial will convince you that it is the Best Shoe in the World for the Price.

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTES. W. L. DOUGLAS FINE CALF HAND- | W. L. DOUGLAS $3.00, $2.50 and

W. L. DOUGLAS $2.50 POLICE CALF SHOE is made with three heavy soles, Extension Edge; it gives excellent satis-faction to those who want to keep their stylish and durable. feet dry and warm. If you want to walk with ease, buy this shoe. One pair will do for a year.

SEWED $4.00 and $5.00 SHOES for Gentlemen are very stylish and durable. Those who buy this grade get a bargain, as shoes of this quality are sold every day from $6.00 to $9.00.

W. L. DOUGLAS $3.00, $2.50 and $2.00 SHOES for Ladies are made of the best Dongola. They are very stylish, durable and splendid fitting. They meet the wants of all classes. Every lady who buys a pair of these shoes gets a bargain.

CAUTION.

w. L. DOUGLAS $2.50, $2.25 and $2.00 SHOES are excellent shoes for every day. Workingmen all wear them.

It is a duty you owe to yourself and your family during these hard times to get the most value for your money. You can economize in your foot-wear if you purchase W. L. Douglas Shoes, which, without question, represent a greater value for the money than any other make in the world, as thousands who have worn them will testify.

Dake in the World, as thousands who have worn then will testify.

Lacre is no dealer in your vicinity who keeps W. L. DOUGLAS SHOES, then send direct to the factory including advertised price. Shoes are sent to all parts of the country, postage free.

HOW TO ONDER BY MAIL. For Gentlemen's and Boys' Shoes, state size and width usually worn, whether Congress or Lace, Cap foe, Narrow Cap or Plain Medium French Toe is desired.

Ladies, state size and width usually worn, whether Opera or Common Sense Toe is desired.

Shoe Dealers and General Merchants of good credit can secure the exclusive agency for the W. L. DOUGLAS SHOES where I have no agent, and can be advertised in their local paper free, by applying at once. Be sure to send for Special List "D," containing full information. Sent free. W. L. DOUGLAS, Brockton, Mass.

My wife suffered with indigestion and dyspepsia for years. Life became a burden to her. Physicians failed to give relief. After reading one of your books, I purchased a bottle of August Flower. It worked like a charm. My wife received immediate relief after taking the first dose. She was completely curednow weighs 165 pounds, and can eat anything she desires without any deleterious results as was formerly the case. C. H. Dear, Prop'r Washington House, Washington, Va. @

Health Helper tellshow, 50c, a year, FREE Send for sample, Dr. J. H. DYE, Editor, Burlato, N. Y. [8] 新華新華京日本書館等華華 SUCCESS IS ASSURED The fact that we sell more CLOVER, GRASS, and FIELD SEEDS than any hou in the Southern States, is most convincing proof of our high grade Seed and reasonable prices. Our GARDEN SEEDS OUR INSTRUCTIVE CATALOGUE, giving full information and directions for cuitivating all Farm and Garden Crops, mailed free. Send for it. Address

T.W. WOOD & SONS

Scedamen, RICHEGRID, VA.

VOL. I.

CALERA, ALA., FRIDAY, MARCH 18, 1892.

NO. 21.

The Mastery of Love. Love was a stranger, Without lock or key He unlocked my bosom And took my heart from me. Now my heart is subject Everywhere I go. Be a gentle master, Love, To one who loves you so.

In a few days and weeks, In a few months or years, Love brought me sorrow, And the salt, salt tears. Oh, Love, come with laughter, Or, Love, come with woe, Deal but gently with the heart That leans upon you so.

The bee's wing is fragile, The lark's egg is small, That you took was little, But it was my all. Bear the captive where you will, To high estate or low. But be a gentle master, Love,

To one who loves you so.

[Dora Read Goodale, in Harper's Weekly.

THE SMUGGLERS.

On the French frontier, opposite Spain, stands the town of Querterac, like a watch-dog guarding the entrance to the valley, and on either side, the mountains which seem to have been gashed just here, continue their monotonous way as far as eye can reach.

Querterac is a very old town containing 6000 inhabitants; in former days it was fortified, isolated and difficult to approach.

Up in the neighboring mountains live a people whose reputation is as doubtful as their nationality—a much mixed race, ten times crossed with Gascons, Basques, Catalans and Bohemians-and their favorite occupation is highway robbery, or smuggling, to say the least. For this reason, as well as because of the situation of the town, the custom-house of Querterac is one of special importance. Frontier the people of the valley, and when guards keep continual watch over the narrow valley which forms the only passage between the two countries, there being nothing but lofty peaks and dangerous ravines for many leagues on either side.

Towards the middle of this century, a wind from Africa brought terror and desolation to Italy, Spain and France. Cholera!

The people were filled with consternation. In Querterac, which was one of the first to be attacked, nothing was to be seen but empty, deserted streets, and houses closed from top to bottom, as if in a state of siege. Those persons who succumbed to the plague received no help nor care, for Pity was the first to die.

If a beggar approached a farmhouse, he was greeted with a shower of stones or gun-shots, and the dogs were let loose upon him. Among the peasantry, fear was complicated with folly, and the people circulated absurd

"The cholera is not as bad as it seems," said they, "many persons believed to have died of it have in reality been poisoned by enemies-a mouthful of drugged water, a slice of bread sprinkled with arsenic-it does not take much to kill one." Then the people of the valley began to suspect the mountaineers of being responsible

"I hose vagabonds up there mean to kill us all," they cried.

Among the custom-house officials the pestilence found twenty victims in a few days' time, and those surviving, stricken with fear, neglected their duty of watching the frontier. One of them only stood to his post, an old sergeant named Valgenod. He was a born hunter, a customs-officer by nature, for he could scent a smuggler three hours in advance, and a bundle of contraband tobacco three leagues away would set him sneezing.

"It would be absurd for an old officer like me to die of the colic!" he declared, and night and day he made his rounds as usual, doubled the guards, took the place of those who were struck down by the general foe, and kept one eye unceasingly turned towards the mountains where the miscreants perched, hidden by their rocky homes. He knew them very well, and a hundred times he had fired on them, when they had been skulking about on dark nights. They could not get the best of him, although, perhaps, there was one he had to watch continually, a gray-beard named Meritas. He and Valgenod had had many a contest of wits together, perament and instinct just as Valge- and dismayed to find that pestilenee nod was a customs-officers; it was his still raged in the mountains, though vocation. It was impossible to surprise him, and he had invented so many tricks and strategems that he of the mountains he stored his merchandise, tobacco, silks, skins, spanish laces and spirits; and by little these goods were brought into France.

him-ah, but for him!" the smuggler speed towards the mountains leavused to say, longingly.

"That villain, Meritas! The day after my death, he is will bring the whole of Madrid into France!" was the officer's indignant exclamation. And the two men respected while they hated one another. The Bohemians had a fine opportunity to enrich themselves during the plague, for sheep, goats and cattle roam uncared for through the meadows, far from the barn yard, and at night they call to each other with long, sad lowing; instinctively, and would have followed anyone who called to them. In the death-stricken villages many houses were left open from the crane, the table set for the tune. mid-day meal just as the dread spectre had found it. Robbers would have nothing to do but to walk into these ownerless homes, and then with wellfilled sacks to return to their mountains in all safety; and what matter if some one ventured to interfere with them?-knives are sharp, and who would notice one more corpse among so many dead?

The mountaineers, however, did not stir from their lair. Why was this? Because they, too, were dying. It seemed, indeed, that they were carried off in greater numbers than the force of the pestilence was subsiding in Querterac, the "vagabonds me to it in the least." up there," continued obstinately to die and to be buried. People wondered and admired, for every evening | diers-for I cannot call them anything at dusk, three or four wagons followed by mourners came down to the cemetery. These miserable pagans treated their dead with religious respect, instead of casting them into the streams which rushed swiftly strated she said she had paid the bill. through the ravines! The spectators It was the loss of the teeth and the empty streets. One evening about twilight, Sergeant Valgenod, ever on the lookout, saw a wagon drawn by a brokenwinded mule coming towards the city gates. Behind it walked Meritas and a few of his tatterdemalions, singing psalms in their degenerate patois, while the long outline of a coffin could be seen on the wagon. Valgenod bills. drew himself up and saluted in military style as the funeral train approached, for the dead are always deserving of respect, whatever the living may have been, and as he passed the custom-house, old Meritas, his eyes red and his face pale, raised his great, gaunt arms towards heaven and garded me as if doubtful of my sanity. sobbed out:

"My wife, my wife!" and he lighted his pipe quickly and felt deeply touched.

A short time after a similar procession came down the mountain road; this time there were three coffins on the wagon, and Meritas walked behind. It was night and the lurid light of the torches carried by the attendants cast fantastic shadows upon the walls of the customs-building. The old smuggler tore his hair as he walked, and filled the air with his lamentations.

"My sons, my sons! Give me back my sons!" he cried, hoarsely, while Valgenod saluted three times, and the whole post bared their heads out of respect for the father's grief.

This was repeated every evening. Meritas, who was generally the chief mourner, lost by the epidemic not only his wife and sons, but also his daughters, nieces, nephews and cousins. His despair was so great that he had to be supported by his attendants, and one day he besought Valgenod to kill him and end his misery.

"His brain is turned-'tis no wonder," said the officer, who felt his former respect for his old enemy deepening into affection.

This lasted for three weeks, and the for Meritas was a smuggler by tem- people of Querterac were suprised enough .- [New York Press.

it had disappeared from the valley.

One evening three funeral wagons came across the bridge as usual, and was the acknowledged leader of the one of the mules having gone too near whole band. Away up in the clefts the edge, the wagon lurched from side to side, and the coffin was thrown out at the feet of Sergeant Valgenod. Immediately Meritas and the other mourners spread out their arms like "Confound that Valgenod-but for great wings and fled at full ing the officers to gaze thunderstruck, at the coffin, of which the lid had burst open, and instead of a corps there rolled out four bundles of merchandise carefully labelled.

"To arms!" cried Valgenod, "fire!" and the whole post went in pursuit of the smugglers. Too late, however, and when the other coffins were found on examination to contain the same cargo as the first, Sergeant Valgenod tore his hair in exasperation.

But the people of Querterac were in an ecstacy of joy when they learned they formed themselves into groups that not a single member of the mountain band had died of the plague. The dread visitor had passed away at last, but the smugglers had improved and deserted, the kettle still hanging the opportunity and made their for-

> Sergeant Valgenod gnashed his teeth in rage, and swore that the next arrival from the mountains would be searched, even if it were a skeleton ! -[From the French, in Epoch.

Other People's Privileges.

"The presumptuousness of some people is past endurance," remarked a lady recently in conversation. "I allowed my little girl to spend an afternoon with a friend, and when she returned her little ears had been pierced and a pair of earrings hung in them. I looked upon it as an unwarranted piece of impertinence, and the present of the rings did not reconcile "That reminds me," said another lady, "of my experience with medelse. I sent my little daughter out to walk with a friend who, because the child complained of a toothache, took her to a dentist and had two of her baby teeth pulled. When I remonran away when these wagons appeared, fact that anybody dare to meddle with and the mourners passed on through my privileges that I regretted. Who could forgive such stupidity?"

Another lady told her story:

"My father sent me a very fine hunting dog, which a friend offered to bring through puppyhood for me. I saw the dog occasionally and he was getting to be a beauty, when one day my friend walked in and handed me, with a very triumphant air, two $10 N. C., from 1881 until 1888, and on

"I sold Jasper,' she said, 'for l knew you would rather have the beryls and garnets have been found money than the dog.'

"I informed her, as soon as I could speak, that I wouldn't have taken a with him at any price, and she re-She was another of those well-meaning blunderers who arrogate to them-"Poor fellow," thought Valgenod, selves the rights of their friends."-[Detroit Free Press.

Uses of Paper.

There seems to be practically no limitation to the uses to which paper can be and is applied. To the long list of articles intended for personal use, and in the smaller details of construction of rolling stock, such as wheels, axles, etc., there has been added a more extensive application to the needs of every-day life by the building of a hotel constructed of this material. This novel residence, which has just been finished, and is situated in Hamburg, has been made entirely of paper boards, which, it is said, are of the hardness of wood, but possess an advantage over the latter material in that they are fire-proof, this desirable end being effected by impregnation with certain chemical solutions. - [Chicago Times.

The Way of the World. The spirits of youth are elastic and oon throw off the burden of grief. "I've nothing to live for now," sighed the young widow after the funeral; "my life is ended."

Two days later she refused to take the gown made for her by the dress. maker because it wasn't stylish

PRECIOUS STONES.

Enormous Capital is Invested in Their Production.

Little Mining for Gems in the United States.

From the customs import list, after deducting the approximate value of cut stones, other than diamonds, we find, says George F. Kunz in the Eugineering and Mining Journal, that import buty was paid on about $120,-000,000 worth of cut diamonds in the last 24 years, of which $90,000,000 worth were imported during the last 12 years. In 1868 $1,000,000 worth were imported and about $1,200,000 in 1867, but about $11,000,000 worth in 1888, and in 1889, about $13,000,-000, or 10 to 12 times as many as 20 years previous, showing the increase of wealth and the great popularity of the diamond among Americans, the previous figures representing the import prices, exclusive of mounting or dealers' profits, and no account taken of those smuggled.

The probable value of all the diamonds in the world is estimated at over one billion dollars. The entire diamond trade is carried on by 8000 dealers, with a total stock of not far from $350,000,000. These stones are prepared for market by perhaps 4500 cutters and polishers, principally in Amsterdam, Antwerp, Paris, the Jura Mountains and the United States. A limited amount of cutting is also done in England. About 200 men cut diamonds in the United States. The diamond-cutting industry is developing rapidly in this country. In New York there are sixteen firms engaged in cutting and recutting diamonds, and in Massachusetts there are three. Cutting has also been carried on at times in Penusylvania and Illinois, but has been discontinued.

Forty million carats of diamonds, weighing over nine tons, have been found in South Africa. In the rough their aggregate value was $250,000,-000, which is more than the entire diamond yield of the world during the past two centuries. Of the whole production perhaps 8 per cent. are of first water, 12 per cent. of the second, and 25 per cent. of the third, while the remaining 45 per cent. is known as Up to the present time there has been very little mining for precious stones in the United States, and this only at irregular intervals. It has been carried on during the past few vears at Paris, Me.; near Los Corrillos, N. M.; in Alexander county, the Missouri river, near Helena, Mont., since the beginning of 1890. True frequently as a by-product in the mining of mica, especially in Virginia and North Carolina. A very limited hundred dollars for him, or parted number of diamonds have been found in the United States. They are met with in well-defined districts of California, North Carolina, Georgia, and recently in Wisconsin, but up to the present time the discoveries have been rare and purely accidental. As to sapphires, none of the fine blue color have been found. The same fact is true of rubies of fine red color. The only locality which has been at all Ruby and Eldorado bars, on the Missouri river, 16 miles east of Helena, Mon. Here sapphires are found in glacial auriforous gravels while sluicing for gold, and until now have been considered only a by-product. The colors of the gems obtained, although beautiful and interesting, are not the standard blue or red shades popular with the public. The emerald has been mined to some extent at Stony Point, in Alexender county, N. C., and has also been obtained at two other places in the country. Turquoise, which was worked by the Aztecs before the advent of the Spaniards, and since then by the Pueblo Indians, and largely used by them for ornament and as an article of exchange, is now systematically mined near Los Cerillos, N. M.

> Agitator-I tell you this eight-hour day is going to do a lot of good to the mass of employed people. By the way, Sarah, is supper ready? Agitaup at 5.30 today.

Shooting an Alligator.

(C) Cuit Clerk

The oars were stopped, resting in the water; the skiff half turned, drifting in the sluggish tide; the long beam of the lantern, with its oval disk of dim light resting far out on the surface, swept slowly around over the waters looking for the two lost lights. Ten minutes or more thus passed, and suddenly the two lost sparks gleamed back in a new direction. A gentle, noiseless push on the port oar headed the skiff toward them again. "Doucement!" whispered Paul. His associate, still more gently, guided the boat to the left, till only one light shone from the obscure object in the water. This showed that he had got on its side, as was desired, because a forward shot always glances. Cautiously the silent oarsman again turned his craft to the right. Paul raised his long rifle ready to fire. The disk of the lantern on the water, contracting gradually, grew proportionately more brilliant. As it contracted the solitary light shining back on the water from its centre became larger and brighter, till at last the eye of the great saurian glittered as if he had the "Koh-i-noor" itself in his head. Slowly, silently, nearer the boat moved, till within ten yards of the reptile. The glow of the lantern flashed slong the barrel of the rifle for a few seconds; then came the ringing report. The light on the water instantly went out, and the glow of the lantern, now shining in a circle only a few feet in diameter over the place it disappeared, showed only a few foamy bubbles and little whirlpools. Thirty seconds passed in silence; then an immense dark form bounded from the depths below above the surface of the water, and, rolling over on its back, showed the broad, yellow-white body of an enormous alligator. The shuddering reptile remained otherwise motionless for a few minutes; then spasmodically stretching and stiffening its ugly legs and feet, and leaning half its length in the air, fell back again, beating the water with its tail in blows sounding as loud as the report of the weapon which had slain him. "Moi tue li," muttered Paul in an accent of quiet triumph. His associate, after a few exclamations of more voluable admiration, rolled another cigarette, and quietly turned his boat off in search of other game. In a few hours of this hunting five alligators were shot .- The Century.

Rhymeless Words.

There are in the English language a number of words which have always been the despair of would-be poets who desire to put their fanciful or romantic or pathetic ideas into rhyme. When a poet writes with that sublime | ply. disregard of rhyme and meter which characterizes Walt Whitman he is not me how to spell costume. I'm writtroubled with the limitation of making the end of one line resemble in sound the end of another, but rhyme has -Yes. He-C-o-s-t, cost. She-Yes. about it something so attractive to the | He-T-o, to. She-Well? He-M-e, ordinary ear, at least in English, that | me_$200, as yet unpaid. She_You're it will probably continue to be in use always. Among the Latin poets of the classical age, on the contrary, a say, but she uses very singular exrhyme was deemed a blemish, and we pressions." "She does?" "Yes; yescan imagine Horace or Virgil or Mar- lerday, for instance, she spoke of a tial struggling as hard to avoid a rhyme as some of our poets have to do to find one.

Some of the rhymeless words in prolific is the placer ground between English will occur to any one at once. sical." "Must, ch? Well, I've been A word, for instance, like "cusp" carries its own condemnation for rhyming uses, for the sound is an unusual one, and it is no wonder that it has not been duplicated. "Culm" is another obviously hopeless word, and "gult" is still another. There are, in all, nineteen words which have been declared unrhymable by competent authority, no less a rhymester than Tom Hood, and the list is as follows: Bilge, chimney, coif, crimson, culm, cusp, fugue, gulf, have, microcosm, mouth, oblige, orange, rhomb, scarce, scarf, silver, widow and window .-[San Francisco Chronicle.

A Remarkable Flower.

A wonderful flower has been discovered on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec which changes its colors at different periods during the day. In the morning it is white, when the sun is at its zenith it is red and at night it is blue. The red, white and blue flower grows on a tree about the size of a of marbles, but have all the taste and tor's Wife-No, my eight hours was guava tree, and only at noon does it the characteristics of the cultivated give out any perfume.

Saved. Her heart is the court of love Wherein I am being tried; I ask the powers above That she may become my bride. Her "no" to me will be death-Ah, ended is all the strife, For "yes" with a smile she saith; The verdict is thus "for life!" -[Edgar A. Elliston, in Munsey's Magazine.

HUMOROUS.

A slow match- The courtship of a bashful young man.

"Something that should be looked into"-a microscope.

Egotism is a failing which is invariably possessed by the other fellow.

He-There is a good deal to be said in favor of cremation. She (shivering)-Yes, indeed. It's so clean and nice and-warm.

Creditor (angrily) -Do you expect me to call many times for this account? Debtor (blandly)-I do, but I hope you won't.

Penelope-Do you see that handsome fellow by the piano? I rejected him once. Perdita-That's nothing. I rejected him twice.

Even Washington's greceful carriage didn't make as lasting impression on history as the hack he took at his father's cherry tree.

Marriage seems never so much a failure to a man as when something goes wrong at home that he can't possibly blame on his wife.

dear! You would do me a favor by sending away your cook.""Impossible, viscount; it's my mother." Caller-Where's your father, bub.

"The dinner is abominable, my

Is he in or out? Bub-Both. Caller, How can that be? Bub-Easy enough. He's in debt and out er business. See? Teacher-Do you know the difference between right and wrong? Boy _Naw. If you were to take your brother's cake from him, what would you do. Eat it up. The Hostess-Let me introduce you to Mr. Rimer, the famous poet, Mr. Dossit. You must be acquainted with his beautiful poems. Mr. Doss:: (retired)-Oh, yes; I've wrapped up tons of butter in 'em!

Dr. Emdee: You must stop going out with the boys or you will break down your constitution. Joblots: No danger; the later I am out the night before the tougher I feel in the morn-

"What will you do if you are elected?" asked the deputation of voters delegated to ascertain the ground whereon the candidate stood. "Great Scott! What shall I do if I'm not elected!" grouned the candidate to himself before he made an audible re-

She (at her desk) - Dear, please tell ing to mother about my lovely new gown. He-Well, are you ready? She

"She may be well educated, as you musical concert." "Wasn't that correct?" "Certainly not. It wasn't necessary to say musical in speaking of a concert. A concert must be muat some that were not."

How glad I am that leap year's come, Oh, future bright and sunny! For every single girl I know Has stacks and stacks of money.

The Home of the Potato.

The world owes Chile a debt of gratitude which will never be paid, for that country is agreed by botanists to be the native home of the white, or round, commonly called the "Irish," potato. On the western slopes of the Chilean Andes the potato plant still grows wild in a form so similar to that of the cultivated variety as to be casily recognizable. The cultivation of the plant spread into Peru and New Granada about the time of the Euroyean conquest, and into Virginia and North Carolina in the latter half of the sixteenth century, about the same time that it was taken to Europe. The wild potato, however, grows only in Chile. The tubers are about the size varieties .- [Globe-Democrat,

We are authorized to announce G. B.

We are authorized to announce D. R. McMillan as a candidate for the office of

We are authorized to announce John S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

I hereby announce myself a cardidate to the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic and conservative par'y.

John A. Campbell.

THE Chromole is entirely mistaken when it intimates that we know any of the third party plans. Mr. Longshore did not visit the office occupied by the News and JOURNAL. nor did we think of him when we wrote our criticism of the call for a not until their names appear at the bottom of it. We were discussing now is that it has narrowed down a nation's welfare in the promulgation of policies and measures, they would soon forget the petty differences and peace would mark their united efforts toward a grander achievement.

Now that the CALERA JOURNAL has Now that the CIERRY Solevate has come out squarely on the side of organized democracy in this county, the Chronicle desires to extend to it the hand of fellowship. In doing so, however, we are frank in our statement that every man representation who votes every man representation who votes thus discussed with her a serious many democrats looked upon the Journal at the state tieket. The many logical and that what has appeared in these columns regarding that paper's political arounded has not been written either the medice or envy, but with the hope that our contemporary would deciare himself positively upon the situation in this county. In the last issue of that paper its editor writes himself down on the side of true democracy, and we have valiently for his friends and accept. side of true democracy, and we have taken our meat axe out and whetted it for the third party schemers. Here's our Mr. Journand.

magnanimity as it was in its uncalled for attacks. Why, bless trip through the south in the before the Chronicle was born to the | the public mind. We are sorry for the man; editorial it will see that we only we have seen nothing to discuss in complaint at the action of the com- last week. Well, it was moun Doans as a candidate for the office of some way expressed that desire to thing which we gossip about, Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic partie the dury of the committee to accede structions of the state committe in clse when it struck America ed from the convention who would They were married a little over tw not also have been excluded from years ago, and they five in Mour a primary. The cause for dissatisfaction is then traced to the qualifi- shine in an already of these who are dissatisfied is in second but yesterday Pitts wing of the party. A few we used to console each

Governor Jones received in this county 2015 votes, and that num-like all other young parents McMillan candidate for representabut few over half the democratic the little one know that he first so that the figures show as many of gether astonish the world pate in the convention as of the who vote an independent county vinced a jazy of the most stubborn E ticket of privelege of working with men. It was a compliment to her the party, but the party law gives intellectual attainments that

Mr. Hill has made an exte editor of this paper was engaged in It is noticeable that in his speeches fighting the battles of straight he talked of Hill, and was conspicdemocracy and putting forth his uous for his failure to discuss the best efforts against independentism great questions which are acitating liow the methods change with polities, with pen and toungue try- the circumstances of the hour. A ing to spread the doctrine of | arty | year or two ago the papers would loyalty, and had already learned have eagerly taken notice of every that men could be better coaxed move made by the republicans. A had begue its fiery career. In al- graph about the meeting of the re-

The Chronicle offers its hand. We been sitting coolly behind a little If the Chronicle will reread our first play square, and when the game is ple seem divided we feel it a priv- very forcibly says: 5When a canerats of the necessity of abiding is defeated, his democracy is tested. that action. In doing this we do If he says, d am for the nominee, join us in presenting the truth to down as a wolf in sheep's clothing. Shelby county democrats in a cool He was with us but not of us. De-

Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county committee had the best of authority grippe, but what might be more away with a stalle, but heard The committee followed the in ability in its line. Like everything

Strict justice would deprive men presenting to his lady love an ar- STATE OF ALZBAMA) Probate Court

mittee in calling a convention. Had me to treat them so, but it tre- sat on as if weary of his learned the party desired a primary and in some way expressed that desire to obtain the same that there is nothing discourse. Finally, as a vanquishcustom in the democratic party, packed away in one of stringer and your head has vinced. Simpleson that he was to Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject custom in the democratic party, refrigerators, and your head has vinced. Simpleton that he was to to the action of the democratic county and we accord to the members of the We are authorized to amounce Wm. R. A. Milner as a candidate for the office of Circuit Clerk of Shelly county, they did not, but when that action was regular we have no right or decree to leak to he a may be taken by storm or else by a recent acquisition to the category seign of patient devotion, but never

> Adams in his speech on last Monday Written in the best companies. e knew that, and the only thing

He knew it too, Tom, but his aded followers have puffed him antil he was so full of vanity and Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms. onecit that he would not admit it. It may be that the small vote he become a candidate for probate judge had something to do with it.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES

Sir—I made use of your Philotoken th my last child, in order to procure a safe and easy travil. I used it about two menths before my expected time, and I had a very quick and easy confinement. Nothing occurred to protract my convalescence, and I got about in less the athen was usual for me. I think less tin e than was usual for me. I think it a medicine that should be used by every expectant in their in should be used by the try it as I have, they would rever gein be without it at such times. I am yours respectfully.
Mrs. ELIZABETH DIX.

Any merchant or druggist can procure Risley's Philotoken for $1 a botto. CHARLES F. RISLEY, Wholesale Dengrist, Cortlandt St., New York.

FINAL SETTLEMENT NOTICE. SHELBY COUNTY. Marcir 14, Estate of Waliam Ozley, deceased.

This day came John W. Ozley, as ministrator of the estate of William ley, deceased, and illed his account. inal settlement of the same. It is or lered that the 11th day of April, 1800 appointed a day for making such set-

R. W. Cosn, Induce of Probate

HARDWARE & TINWARE.

AGON WARRANGE

Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded Shells always on Hand.

418 19TH STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

Store, Montgomery Avenue.

CIGARS AND TOBACCOS.

Prescription Carefully Compounded at All Hours by an not think it expedient to make a he's alright. If he gets his back Having Just Op and a Drug Business in Calera, I Desire to Solicit the Patronage of All Who are in Need of Goods in My

Lowest Possible Margines.

Banking House of W. O. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA. Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans

man who reasoning. He forgot that she was the grippe a weman and, therefore, not to be We transact a general banking business, such as that of any incorporated we want to be well as the stransact and the grippe and would be pleased to open accounts with Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York Her heart bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

an not perfection," at an full life and life insurance

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

the defersor primary The New York Store.

Calera, Ala.,

SA YE -If you are Interested in

DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, BOOTS, SHOES, GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS.

CLOTHING & HATS.

And if you ever Buy

Hose, Half-Hose, Silk Ties Searis, Sto., Mic.,

Please Listen to Us just 20 Minutes. We are overstocked, and in order to thement, at which time all parties in interest can appear and comest the same. Reduce Stock before we take invoice on February 1st, we will sell you any D y

We have a Large Stock to dispose of and when you hear the Prices you will be astonished how such goods can be sold so low. Listen:

Cotton Checks 4 1-2 to 5 cents; Nice Cashmere Dress Goods 193, cents per vard; Same at 22 1-2; a Finer Goods at 27 1-2; All Wood Ladies Cloth fifty Inches wide only 37 1-2 cents, former price 65; Ladies Fast Black Plose 7 1-2 cents per pair; a batter goods for 12 1-2 cents; a Fine Hose for 17 1-2 cents, city price 40 cents; Salt 65 cents per sack; Fine Shoes $1 25 to $2 50; Good Shoes 1 00 per

Come and see us. We have too much to mention all in this paper. Come at once. We guarantee all prices named, and a child will get as low prices as an older person. No favorites, but one price to all. Come and see us and you will find we mean business. We want to Reduce the Stock.

before taking Invoice, and if Prices can do it

THEY MUST BE CUT INTO

A. C. WADE & CO.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION.

Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages. REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these de-

the farmer's laintly, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to
the household.

3. It covers the news of the whole world, having its correspondents scattered over the g obe, and having a thorough news service from every important interests of the south.

S. It was more money for its special ough news service from every important interests of the south.

news center in the world.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone is worth many times its subscription any other four of the weekly news papers price to every farmer. This department of the south, and much more than any is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

Dollar ser year, each paper at the price of a postage stamp. Think of it! Every time a ben lays an existence of the south.

So It pays more money for its special features and for its news service than any other four of the weekly news papers.

Dollar ser year, each paper at the price of a postage stamp. Think of it! Every time a ben lays an existence of the south.

papers.

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.

the farmer's family, bringing each week

6. Bill Arp, Plunkett, and Uncle Re-

tution at great expense
5. Its Woman's and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

Of a postage stamp. Think of it! Every time a hen lays an egg she pays for one issue of the greatest weekly newspaure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents: and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

E. T. V. & G. R. R

No. 1, To Selma,

ALABAMA MINERAL No. 85. Arrives at

86, Departs at

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter. Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-

VIax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. H. Kidd. County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland.

County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. veev, B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson,

D. C. Davis. AT THE CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th Sundays in each menth, merning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m.

METHODIST-Services on the second bath school at 9 : 0.

Baptist Church-Rev. J. G. Lowrey, pastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. in. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

* Cumeriand Preserventan—J. C. Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother beyond friends.

County, was in town the first part moved by the Liver and Kidneys, but these organs get out of order—fail to do this week visiting his brother, Col. Jno. B. Randall. Mr. Randall was reared in this county, and during his visit met many of his boyhood friends.

There are a thoesand remedies for the Liver and Kidneys, but these organs get out of order—fail to do this week visiting his brother, their work, and the result is rheumatism. There are a thoesand remedies for the Liver and Kidneys, but these organs get out of order—fail to do this week visiting his brother, their work, and the result is rheumatism. There are a thoesand remedies for the Liver and Kidneys, but these organs get out of order—fail to do their work, and the result is rheumatism. There are a thoesand remedies for the Liver and Kidneys, but these organs get out of order—fail to do their work, and the result is rheumatism. There are a thoesand remedies for the Liver and Kidneys, but these organs get out of order—fail to do their work, and the result is rheumatism. There are a thoesand remedies for the Liver and Kidneys, but these organs get out of order—fail to do their work, and the result is rheumatism. Friday evening at 3.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Farber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes triends wherever it goes.

And the town town of a cure, and every who is having an argument with the rheumatism will feel fully repaid by the first dose. Drummond Medicine Co., 48-50 Maiden Dane, New York. Agents wanted.

Mr. Walter Duran borrowed Andaloosa Times: As to the charges

ance against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

will do this and more: therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in kind as to report the proceedings. act from a sermon by the Rev. T. De- Capt. O'Brien tells a good one on

Many a person is starying with a full table before them. Appetite gone! Ambition gone! Life a burden!! What is as you keep them on bread and water? The Liver has cased to do its proper work. The fife channes are closed. Poisonous fluids are thrown back into the blood, which should be thrown out. SMITHES BLE BEANS will surely stimulate the liver to do its work well, and headache, sallowness and bad breath will decaway. They ought to join the alfiance and learn how to "stick."

"The Liver has cased to do its proper work. The fife channes are closed. Poisonous fluids are three square meals in succession as they get three square meals in succession that the earth was theirs and the fulness that the earth was theirs and the fulness for the money," Our agent at Pennington, Texas, thereof. Quite the way to feel, too, under the circumstances.

Marion Standard: The question of bread and meat with a bridge across the lowness and bad breath will decaway.

"THE QUEEN'S" PRIZE PROBLEM.

Mr. A and Mr. B have to cut down.

and the second section of the hamou
First Cash present in gold $1	,500.00
Second Cash present in gold 1
Third Cash present in gold 1	00.000,1
Fourth Cash present in gold	750.00
Fifth Cash present in gold	500.00
Sixth Cash present in gold	200.00
Seventh Cash present in gold	100.00
Eighth Cash present in gold	100.00
Ninth Breech loading shot gun.	100.00
TenthGent's Gold Watch	100.00
Eleventh Ladies' Gold Watch	100.00
Twelfth One Farm Wagon	75.00
Thirteenth Road Cart	25.00
To the next 10 each Solid Silver
Watch	200.00
To the next 100 each Solid Gold
Ring	500.00
To the next 100 each Handsome
Photograph Album	800.00
the next 200 each Handsome
Gold Pen and Holder.	500.00
To the next 200 each $2.50 Cash	500.00

CONDITIONS.

't delay until too late to get one of the Reference: Any Business House in Mont-

THE ADVERTISER, Montgomery, Ala.

TOWN TOPICS.

A notice of final settlement of the 4:53 a. m. appears in this issue.

Circuit court will convene in this 5:10 a. m. 10:19 " county next Monday. This will be the last session for Judge Box, un-

Brother Campbell, of the News, 4:36 a.m. went to Birmingham Wednesday to 4:40 p. m. see and hear Senator Hill.

J. L. Peters, Esq., of Columbiana, was in town Wednesday even-

10:25 a.m., Mr. Jno. F. Burns, a popular trict, who lives in Dallars, was in

> M. F. Gardner, the popular "man on the road" from the wholesale establishment of Leinkauff & Strauss, of Mobile, was in Calera Thursday.

Mrs. Frank Palmer hast returned Superintendent of Education-T. N. from a pleasant visit to Memphis. She was accompanied by her sister, who will pend some time in the!

> The weather for the past few days has been very cold and disagreeable. It is feared that fruit has been seriously injured if not en-

No other of the churches have een heard from in regard to a coland third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Powling, pastor. Sab-lection for the cemetery fence. Surely they are not going to fail to respond in this matter. Let us county, was in town the first part

The burning of a brush heap on The burning of a brush heap on Monday night called out the town.

Dr. Scott claims that he was shot

Mailed to any address in the United swallow-tailed coat of small di-tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old ege should you live. A life insurance tice is given to save the trouble of

Mr. A and Mr. B have to out down a A this mighty tree alone to slay, is ixty minutes—standard time. Beneath B's blow, the bulk subtime goes to the ground in half time. The question now we ask of thee is, how long 'twill take to cut this tree if both begin—one on ach side—and thus their labor to di

The Queen will give an elegant Mason and Risch or Steinway Fine Toned Upright Piano to the first person answering Gold Watch for the second correct answer; a China Dinner Set for 3rd correct answer; an elegant Silk Dress Pattern for the fourth correct answer, and many other valuable prizes. Valuable special prizes will be given for the First Correct Auswer from Each State. Each person answering must enclose fifteen U. S. two cent stamps for The Canadian Queen Palop, the latest and most popular piece of fifty cent copyrighted music issued Queen, which already is the largest of any publication in Casada. By sending today you may secure a valuance prize. Address The Canadian Queen, "X," To-

Marion Standard: There is but very little interest manifested at this time in Perry county in the gubernatorial contest in the state. Since the excitement of the county election has passed off, our people have generally quit talking poli-

Clditon View: Verbena has organized a Jones club of sixty members. If the club will appoint a committee to make and pullish appointments for the governor to address the voters of Chilon county, and induce him to come here and make a canvass, it will be doing the pest p ditical work ever undertaken in estate of William Ozlev, deceased, appears in this issue.

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON

of which are well patronized in the way of membership. A list of the officers of each are given below:

A. F. A. M. A. F. A. M.
J. D. Hardy, W. M.
J. R. Pratt, S. W.
W. H. H. Whatley, J. D.
W. W. Wilson, S. D.
F. M. Blake, J. D.
T. C. McKibbon, Sec.
John Black, Treas.
A. M., Sanders, Tyler.
Meets second and fourth Saturday ights in each month.

K. OF P.

T. C. McKibbon, C. C.
J. B. Randall, V. C.
G. J. Wright, P.
J. F. Palmer, M. A.
W. E. Brinkerhoff, M. E.
L. G. Privett, K. R. S. & M. F.
Elbert McOlinton, I. G.
A. R. Scott, O. G.

Meets second and fourth Friday nights

K. & L. OF H. L. G. Privett, P. Mrs. G. B. Finley, V. P. Mrs. M. Hardy, C. W. C. Hazard, Guide. Richard Francis, Guardian. Meets every Thursday night.

K. OF H.

G. B. Finley, D. J. D. Hardy, V. D. J. H. Duran, A. D. J. B. Randall, F. R. J. A. Campbell, R.

M. W. Jones, C.
Meets 1st and 4th Thursday nights.

THE POISONOUS ACIDS

Mr. Henry Randall, of Dallas In the blood should be taken up and re moved by the Liver and Kidneys, but these organs get out of order—fail to do their work, and the result is rheumatism.

friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FON.

Franklin Square.

New York City.

The next best thing possible to insurance against fire in the coming world is a policy against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which this week. He reports Centreville after the convention and allowed his a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of Calera.

Read and profit by the following sound Read and profit by the following sound against death in this life, which smarts the convention and above improving some, and the profit up pie up successful competitor the usual second term, without a protest from hunself, he could have entered the field in 1894 with every prospect of success but he has invited certain defeat by his imposite and every prospect of success but he has invited certain defeat by his impolite and unjust attacks upon the last state convention, and the great democratic party of Alabama does feel called upon to mol-"It is a daty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the soams of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor caunot interest in a certain little pasture, interest in a certain little pasture, in the soam of th insted and elected. As he is given an opportunity to speak and the people to near and think the opposition gradually weakens. In the outset we thought that of Perry county farmers, more than the question of who will be the next President.—Marion Standaad.

By Rheumatism, or any of the muscles has grandson, and pleaded the baby act near that organ, it is like tampering with as an excuse for his broad-shouldered an electric wire, for death may come at a moment. If life is worth $5, go to the druggist and get Dr. Drummond's Light- Eufaula Times: One Medicine Co., 48-50 Maiden Lane, New York, and they will send you a large bottle by prepaid express. It is not as quick as electricity, but it will save your life if you take it in time Agents

Evergreen Star. Hill is not the man, and as sure as the democrats do not throw him overboard he will be a Jon th the State last year. Write for Circulars and Prices

ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY,

THE ALABAMA (PREMIUM NO. 14) FREE.

ADDRESS OF THE COMMITTEE.

Calera has four secret fraternities, all To the Democratic Voters of Shelby Coun-

Pursuant to a call by the chairman, the democratic executive committee of Shelby county met in Columbiana on Saturday, the 5th day of March, 1892, and called a convention of the democratic party to meet in this place at 12 o'clock, party to meet in this place at 12 o'clock, noon, on Friday, June 3, 1892, for the purpose of selecting delegates to the state, congressional, chancery, judicial and senatorial democratic conventions, and to nominate candidates for representative in the general assembly, judge of probate, sheriff, circuit clerk, tax assessor, tax collector, treasurer, supering sessor, tax collector, treasurer, superintendent of education, coroner and a conmissioner of each commissioner district, and for such other purposes as the con-vention may deem to be for the welfare

Your committee appointed Saturday, the 28th day of May next, as the time for holding the beat meetings to select delegates to the county convention, each beat to select its delegates in such man ner as it may deem best.

The eligibility to participate in beat meetings as presented by your commit-tee, is in conformity to a resolution adopted by our present state demo-cratic executive committee and is confin-ed to those who voted the democratic ticket at the last state and federal elections, to those who, having failed to vote at these elections, or either of them, have heretofore habitually voted that ticket and intend to support it in the ensuing elections, and to those who have saing elections, and to those who have become voters since the last elections and those who will become voters by the next elections and intend to vote the democratic ticket. The basis of representation adopted by your committee for the several beats is one delegate for every twenty democratic votes cash in the last election for government and for the last election for governor, and for every fraction over ten, provided every beat shall be entitled to two delegates.

	he con	inty	will be	entit	led to	o the	fol	lor
l	ng rep	res	entation	in th	G ((0)	avent	ion	:
	Beat	1,	Columb	oiana,				18
	Beat		Spring
	Beat	3,	Calera,					6
	Beat	4	Monier	allo,.				13
	Bent	5,	Tyler's
	Reat	(5,	Helena,	,				6
	Beat	6,	Camp 1		h,			8
	Beat		Yellow	Leat,				7
	Beat	. ,	Wilson
	Beat	,	Harper	sville
	Beat	11,	Weldon					1
	Beat	- /	Highlan	ıd,				2
	Eeat	13,	Bold Sp	prings	i,			2
	Beat	14,	Sterrett					2
	Beat		Vincent					5
	Beat	17,	Pelham	,				3
	F15	4 - 1					-
	1.0	tal,					}	UZ

cess of the principles we advocate.

our borders. And in our efforts for the success of the principles, let our actions be characterized and fealty to our party.

J. R. White,

Ch'n. Dem. Ex. Com., Shelby Co.

ONE DOLLAR WEEKLY

warranted for 20 years. Fine Kom was the stronger in Covington county, but the sentiment in favor of Jones seems to be growing rapidity.

Waltham movement, stem wind and set. Lady's or gent's size. Equal to any $50 watch. To secure agents where we have none, we sell one of the hunting case the lime manufacturers of Shelby Shelby Chronicle: There were some watches for the club price, $28, and send

One good raliable agent wanted for each place. Write for particulars.

EMPIRE WATCH CO., New York

Huntsville Mercury: We never lost WHEN THE HEART IS AFFECTED respect for James G. Blain until he turn-

Eufaula Times: One hundred and one

MARIE WILL FREE.

The Calera Journal,

A Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of he state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at

Quikly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

and Legal Printing a Specialty Commercial

THE JOHN II, will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

Mr. George W. Hammond

Gettysburg

Cured by Hood's

Sarsaparilla

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.: "I was in the Army of the Potomac, and at Gettys burg was struck in the ankle by a minnie ball, which discharged and went home. After 8 years My Wound Broke Open afresh. Dr. Pease amputated an inch of the bone and it healed. Four years later it once more opened, and for eight years HOW I SUFFERED! I do not believe it possible for a human being to suffer worse agony. During this time I had to go on crutches, being unable to wear a wooden leg Thenever possible I relieved my sufferings by taking opiate, but when I was obliged to go without it. I suffered fearfully and thought I SHOULD GO CRAZY. I tried every thing I could get with my limited means. Physicians said I would never be any better. Finally my Blood Became Poisoned and it broke out all over my face and on some parts of my body so that my face is all covered with scars now. One day I read of Hood's Sarsaparilla bought a bottle and began taking it. A week or two later, my wife in dressing my leg, sald it seemed to be improving, and after taking Hood's Sarsaparilla a few months, thank God (and I say it reverently), the sores all over my body had healed, and now, four years later, have never shown any signs of reappearing." GEO. M. HAMMOND, 219 Magnolia Street, Syracuse, N. Y.

Col. C. A. Weaver Commander of Root Post, G. A. R., himself a one-armed veteran, fully confirms Mr. Hammond's statement, and J. L. Belden, the pharmacist, also endorses Hood's Pills cure Sick Headache.

CHILD BIRTH · · · · · · MADE EASY!

" Mothers' Friend" is a scientifically prepared Liniment, every ingredient of recognized value and in constant use by the medical profession. These ingredients are combined in a manner hitherto unknown

WILL DO all that is claimed for it AND MORE. It Shortens Labor. Lessens Pain, Diminishes Danger to Life of Mother and Child. Book to "Mothers" mailed FREE, containing valuable information and voluntary testimonials.

Sent by express on receipt of price $1.50 per bottle BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO., Atlanta, Ga. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Mr. Albert Hartley of Hudson, N. C., was taken with Pneumonia. His brother had just died from it. When he found his doctor could not rally him he took one bottle of German Syrup and came out sound and well. Mr. S. B. Gardiner, Clerk with Druggist J. E. Barr, Aurora, Texas, prevented a bad attack of pneumonia by taking German Syrup in time. He was in the business and knew the danger. He used the great remedy-Boschee's German Syrup—for lung diseases.

Kennedy's MedicalDiscovery

Takes hold in this order:

Bowels. Liver, Kidneys, Inside Skin, Outside Skin.

LOADER

Driving everything before it that ought to be out. You know whether you need it or not. Sold by every druggist, and manufactured by

DONALD KENNEDY. ROXBURY, MASS.

[9]

000000000 KEYSTONE | Loads a ton in 5 minutes. Saves time, work, men, hay. Strong, durable, light draft, Send for description.

KEYSTONE M'F'G CO.

Sterling, III.

THE ROBBER TARIFF

A VICIOUS DOCTRINE LEADING TO COR-RUPTION, FAVORITISM AND INJUS-TICE-TRENCHANT WORDS BY NEW YORK'S GOVERNOR.

During the course of his speech before a Democratic host in New York City Governor David B. Hill said:

Nothing has occurred since last fall to change the attitude of the people upon the tariff question. The McKinley bill has not ruined the country nor has it benefited it. It has imposed additional burdens upon the people for the benefit of favored interests. It has created no new markets of any appreciable value. It has not raised the wages of a single laboring man. It is objectionable because among other things it proceeds upon the theory of the right to tax the people for private as well as public purposes. It is based upon the idea that it is the province of the Government to turn the channels of private trade into directions where it would not naturally flow. It assumes that this is a paternal Government and that its functions are best exercised when it interferes with the natural laws of trade and attempts to control and direct them. It fittingly illustrates smashed the bone. My leg was amputated in the a vicious doctrine which leads to corticled hospital, and after a long time it healed. I was ruption, favoritism and injustice—to the ruption, favoritism and injustice-to the detriment of the masses of the country.

You know what the position of the Democratic party is upon this question. It has been made plain to every student of political economy in the lard. Mr. Platt's candidate for Governor in two of his recent harrangues-some of his remarks being too undignified and trifling to be characterized as political adresseshas stated that the Democratic platform is "silent" upon the tariff question. This must be regarded either as an exhibition of ignorance or mendacity. prefer to assume that he has not read the platform, because it is difficult to believe that a candidate of any party for the high office of Governor would deliberately misrepresent the platform of an adversary. He cannot well be relieved or excused from the charge of misrepresentation upon the plea that he was only pettifogging the point. What is the actual truth? The Democratic platform refers to the tariff and most of the other National questions by an express reaffirmation of the Democratic National platforms of 1884 and 1888, and it is admitted that those platforms elaborately and fully express the sentiments of our party upon the tariff issue. This course, not infrequently adopted by political parties, has the effect, legally, morally and practically, as though those two recent National platforms had been incorporated word for word and line for line in the present State platform. Mr. Fassett ought to have known this fact. Possibly he did know it and intended to create a false impression. But whether he intended to deceive the people or not, it being clear that the tariff issue has not been evaded or ignored, but that it is a live and practical issue in this election, some discussion of it is pertinent at this time. Our National platform declares that "from the foundation of this Government taxes collected at the custom house have been the chief source of Federal revenue. Such they must continue to be." This express declaration precludes the ides that all custom house duties are proposed to be abolished, and that the revenues of the Government are to be raised by direct taxation. It effectually disposes of the bugbear of contemplated free trade.

ROBBERY DISGUISED AS TAXATION.

But we insist that no more revenues shall be raised than are necessary for the support of the Government economically administered. The true and principal purpose of every tariff bill should be the raising of revenue, and not the discouragement or prohibition of imports for the benefit of favorite interests. We differ with our Republican friends as to the true and proper functions of the Government. It is an elementary, vital, and irreconcilable difference. It is based upon different notions of government. It is a respectful and honest difference. We firmly adhere to the general doctrine laid down by the United States Supreme Court, in the Topeka bond case, in which the Court said: "To lay with one hand the power of the Government on the property of the citizens, and with the other bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and to build up private fortunes, is none the less robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation. This is not legislation; it is a decree under legislative forms. Nor is it taxation. Beyond a cavil there can be no lawful taxation which is not laid for public purposes."

COPARTNERSHIP WITH PRIVATE INTER-ESTS.

This is the Democratic theory of government, concisely and accurately stated. We are willing to concede that the Mc-Kinley bill fairly represents the other idea and is based upon the opposite doctrine. If it ss proper exercise of the power of taxation to impose tariff duties without regard to the revenues to be derived therefrom; if it is just and equitable to build up one class of industries at the expense of others; if the Government may with propriety enter into a virtual copartnership with private interests for their direct encouragement and protection; if it is the true province and direct purpose of a tariff bill to prohibit importations or to discourage them in order to prevent fair and legitimate competition; if it is right to foster monopolies and attempt to create ficticious and ephemeral prosperity; if it is not wrong to legislate for the selfish interests of a few, to the detriment of the great body of the people, then we are willing to concede that the McKinley bill is the perfection of wisdom, and truly illustrates the wonderful and beneficent prin-ples of Republican "protection."

THE TARIFF QUESTION NOT SETTLED.

Our opponents, notwithstanding the the sublime assurance to assert that the tariff question is settled. I tell them no question can be regarded as settled in this country until it has been rightly settled. They will discover that the agitation will continue until justice is done and that all their efforts to prevent it will prove unavailing. The question is here to stay. Its discussion is demanded on every hand. It cannot be postponed until 1892.

We not only object to the vicious principles which underlie the McKinley bill, but we protest against its details and especially against its unjust discrimina-

THE FARCE OF THE FREE LIST. They tell us that their bill ought to be palatable to the people because the "free list" has been greatly enlarged. They blow hot and they blow cold at the same moment. They cry out against free trade in one breath, and then in the next breath claim credit for extending the provisions for free trade to numerous articles not heretofore exempted from tariff duties. This is an admission that a tariff is a tax, and that an abolition of tariff taxes inures ordinarily to the benefit of the consumer. The people are, of course, thankful for small favors, but will naturally inquire why the list is not made larger, and why their burdens were increased by increased duties upon other articles not placed upon the free list. McKinlevites cannot claim credit on both sides. If the abolition or reduction of duties is a relief to the consumers, then an increase of duties is an additional burden imposed upon them. It is true that the free list has been enlarged under the McKinley bill, and it is equally true that the tariff has been largely increased upon other articles.

I read an article in a Republican newspaper recently showing that the Mc-Kinley bill had reduced the tariff on lumber $1 a thousand, and contending that the reduction was of great benefit to the poor man-to builders, householders and workingmen generally who desired to construct their own homesand urging these classes to vote the Republican ticket. My answer to this claim is that while the reduction is acceptable so far as it goes our contention is that it did not go far enough—that it ought to have removed the duty from lumber entirely, as the Mills bill did, and then there would have been a still greater benefit to the people; and because the Republican leaders repudiated the Mills bill the people ought to repudiate them. The enlargement of the free list by the addition of numerous articles was for a purpose. It was intended to give the appearance of affording great relief to the people and to withdraw their attention from the increased duties on other articles. Many of the articles upon the free list are of that nature that it does not make any material difference to anybody whether they are free or not, but they help swell the list, which accomplishes the object desired.

HOW THE POOR MAN FARES.

Let us examine the schedule of articles which are taxed and see how the poor man or the man of moderate means is affected. The poor man's pipe is taxed. His umbrella is taxed 55 per cent. His gloves and mittens are taxed. His oatmeal is taxed one cent a pound. Cornmeal is taxed 20 cents a bushel. His brooms and brushes are taxed 40 per cent. ad valorem. The coke which he may burn is taxed 20 per cent. His carpets are taxed 50 per cent. His wool hat is taxed 30 per cent. and over. ckings, drawers and shirts are taxed. His vinegar is taxed 71 cents a gallon. His starch is taxed at 2 cents a pound. His potatoes are taxed 25 cents a bushel. His garden seeds are taxed 20 per cent. His eggs are taxed 5 cents a dozen. His rice is taxed 2 cents a pound. His sall is taxed. His pocket-knife is heavily taxed. His soaps are heavily taxed. His horses are taxed at $30 apiece.

THE TAX ON FOOD. Is it any wonder that three Republican Senators voted against the bill upon the ground that it was against the interests of the people? But they say that the people in 1888 voted in favor of this kind of legislation. I have already shown that the popular vote was against any such system. Besides the McKinley bill had not been framed in 1888, and the Republican party went before the country on the provisions of the Senate tariff bill. Since that Senate bill was framed our opponents have become bolder, and have made great progress in their policy of extortion and imposition. Let me furnish you a few samples. Eggs were free under the old law, free under the Mills bills, free under the Senate bill, yet are taxed five cents a dozen under the McKinley bill. Potatoes were taxed fifteen cents a bushel under the old law, the same under the Mills bill, the same under the Senate bill, but increased to twenty-five cents under this bill. Hops were taxed eight cents a pound under the old law, eight cents under the Mills bill, ten cents under the Senate bill, but increased to fifteen cents under this bill.

Barley malt was taxed 20 cents a bushel under the old law, the same under the Mills bill, the same under the Senate bill, but increased to 45 cents under this McKinley law. Maccaroui was free under the old law, free under the Mills bill, free under the Senate bill, yet it is taxed two cents a pound under this law. Oats were taxed 10 cents a bushel under old law, the same under the Mills bill, the same under the Senate bill, but increased to 15 cents under the McKintey bill. Beans were taxed 10 cents a bushel under the old law, were free under the Mills bill, and were 10 cents under the Senate bill, but increased to 40 cents under this bill.

IT DISCRIMINATES AGAINST THE POOR.

In short every consumer is more or less injuriously affected by the McKinley bill. It has heavily taxed nearly every article of wear, many agricultural implements, your building materials and your household furniture. What is worse, its burdens fall particularty upon popular uprising of last fall, not only re- the poor. The poor man's woolens are fuse to repeal the McKinley bill but have | made to pay 30 per cent. more, while the rich man's broadcloth pays only 10 per cent. more. The duty on sealskins sacques is reduced 10 per cent., while that on silk-plush sacques, which the poor woman wears, is increased 60 per cent. The duty on the worsted shawls which the farmer's or laborer's wife wears is raised from 62 to 80 per cent. and on woolen shawls the increase varies from 16 to 30 per cent. On women's and children's cheap dress goods, the increase is nearly 100 per cent., while on the higher-priced goods the increase is much less. The tax on flannels is increased at least 50 per cent. The increase on ready-made clothing is from 54 to 80 per cent. The increase on hosiery is from 40 to 60 per cent. On cheap blankets the increase is over 100 per cent. On the cheapest woolen hats the increase is 111 per cent. On cutlery the duty imposed is equivalent to over 100 per cent. On milk pans, tin pails, tin cans, coffee pots; kettles, cups and other articles of tinware the increase is enormous.

IT'S A LOBBY MEASURE.

But why enumerate further? Sufficient has been exhibited to show that the whole bill, while nominally framed by Congress, was, in fact, prepared by the third house-by that large body of selfish hangers-on who thronged the corridors of the Capitol and importuned their representatives to aid their own special and private interests at the expense of the people. The bill was passed to fulfil the pledges and to redeem the obligations to monopolists entered into by the Republican party in the campaign of

FREE SUGAR WITH A STRING.

But they say they have given the country free sugar. Yes, they have with a string to it or a burden attached to it. They have made sugar of a certain grade free, but they have provided for a bounty to be paid to sugar manufacturer which will amount to about $7,520,000 a year, which the Government must pay from its revenues that it collects on other articles. They shout in our ears the boon of free sugar, but they omit to tell us of the burden which they have imposed upon us to secure it. When you buy a suit of clothes, what do you gain if the clothier throws in a vest, provided he charges you a double price for the pants? What avail is free sugar if you are required to increase the duty on other articles in order to raise the moneys necessary to pay the bounties? The people understand the sugar situation better than the Republican party think they do. The people want substantial, not fictitious, relief; they want low taxes, not coupled with high bounties; they want the lowest taxation consistent with the actual needs of the Government.

The truth is that our opponents have forfeited the confidence of the country by the passage of the McKinley bill. The people demand its repeal. They protest against its unnecessary burdens. They insist upon freer commerce and wider markets. These are their demands, and they will accept nothing less.

A Strike in New Orleans.

A strike of longshoremen is on at New Orleans and 2,000 men are out of work. The demand is an hour's pay for fractional parts of an hour. The ship agents have decided to stand by the stevedores, giving them the time needed to secure new hands for the unloading of the vessels. A number of new laborers have been obtained and it is proposed to put them to work. Trouble with the longshore-His blankets are heavily taxed. His men is anticipated, and the mayor has been asked for protection.

Carried Their Point-

A telegram from Omaha, Neb., says: The Union Pacific conductors and brakemen have won a substantial victory. The two grievance committees had another consultation with General Superintendent Dickinson. As a result the Union Pacific has agreed to grant the demand that over time be computed by the rules that govern in the case of engineers and firemen.

Mission - Dre all SOLDIERSI Missisched. 2 fee for increase. 20 years ex-perience. Write for Laws. A.W. McCobmicu. Sons. Washington, D. C. & Cincinnati, O.

KING COTTON Buy or sell your Cotton on JONES

5-Ton Cotton Scale.
NOT CHEAPEST BUT BEST.
For terms address
JONES OF BINGHAMTON,
BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

Reasons why YOU SHOULD ORDER YOUR T.W.WOOD & SONS RICHMOND, VA.

GARDEN SEEDS. est novolties, as we DELIVEL POSTPAID unywhere all Garde Seeds at pucket and ounce rates, au give 25 cts. worth extra pkt. Seeds fe each $1.00 worth ordered. We also hav special low rates on Seeds in bulk.

Our GRASS, CLOVER, and Field Seed trade is the largest in the Southern States—most convincing proof of our high-grade Seeds and rea-sonable prices.

NO RISK

IN SENDING MONEY through the mails, and we guarantee the safe arrival of all orders filled by us.

Il formation and cultural directions il Farm and Garden Crops is given in New Catalogue, which is the most in-New Catalogue, which is the

T.W. WOOD & SONS Scodsmen, RICHMOND, Va.

We offir One Hundred Dollars reward for any case of catarrh that cannot be cured by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure.
F. J. CHENEY & Co., Props., Toledo, O.
We, the undersigned, have known F. J.
Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions, and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.
West & Truax, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo,

WALDING, KINNAN & MARVIN, Wholesale

Druggists, Toledo, O.
Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free. Price 75c, per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

The Only One Ever Printed.

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, BEAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE.

"Life has been a burden to me for the past 50 years on account of great suffering from very severe and frequent headaches. Bradycroting has done wonders for me. I am now a new man, and shall proclaim the merits of your medicine to all I can reach." George ! Fowler, Attorney-at-Law, Palatka, Fla. Fifty cents at drug stores.

If any love is blind, it is a mother's love for her only sou.

For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and Stomach disorders, use Brown's fron Bitters. The Best Tonic, it rebuilds the system, cleans the Biood and strengthens the muscles. A splendid tonic for weak and debilitated persons.

Taking a gentleman's arm, and vice versa,

FITS stopped free by Dr. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORRE. No Fits after first day's use. Maryelous cures. Treatise and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline, 331 Arch St., Phila., Pa.

loxes. Price 25 cents. The latest feminine fancy is steaming the

A SLIGHT COLD, if neglected, often attacks the lungs. BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES give sure and immediate relief. Sold only in cheeks for the complexion For impure of thin Blood, Weakness, Malaria Neuragia, Indigestion, and Biliousness, take Brown's Iron Bitters—it gives strength, making old persons feel young—and young persons strong: pleasant to take.

For every foot of stature a man should weigh twenty-six pounds.

BEECHAM'S PILLS have been in popular use In Europe for 50 years and are a safe, sure and gentle remedy. 15 cents a hox.

ONE ENJOYS

Both the method and results when Syrup of Figs is taken; it is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and cures habitual constipation. Syrup of Figs is the only remedy of its kind ever produced, pleasing to the taste and acceptable to the stomach, prompt in its action and truly beneficial in its effects, prepared only from the most healthy and agreeable substances, its many excellent qualities commend it to all and have made it the most popular remedy known.

Syrup of Figs is for sale in 50c and $1 bottles by all leading druggists. Any reliable druggist who may not have it on hand will procure it promptly for any one who wishes to try it. Do not accept any substitute.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. LOUISVILLE, KY. NEW YORK, N.Y.

Ladies in each county. Address. & CO., Phila., Pa.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

ishing, strengthening, EASILY DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as for persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

There's nothing left of Catarri, when you use Dr. Sage's

Catarrh Remedy. With the poison-ous, irritating snuffs and strong, caustio solutions, a good deal is left. They may, perhaps, stop it for a time, but there's danger of driving it to the lungs. They work

But Dr. Sage's Remedy cures it, no matter how bad the case, or of how long standing. Not only Catarrh itself, but Catarrhal Headache,

Cold in the Head - everything catarrhal in its nature. The worst cases yield to its mild, soothing,

cleansing and healing properties.

So will yours. You may not believe it, but the proprietors of Dr.

Sage's Remedy do.
And to prove it they make you

If they can't cure you, they'll pay you $500 in cash. It's a business proposition from a responsible

But do you think they'd make

ONLY TRUE

Will purify BLOOD, regulate KIDNEYS, remove LIVER

affering from complaints pe-uliar to their sex, using it, find safe, speedy cure. Returns ceks, beautities Complexion.

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

from which the excess of oil
has been removed,
Is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals

strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, nomical, costing less than one centa cup. It is delicious, nour-and is therefore far more eco everywhere. All genuine goods bear cent. ' Send us 2 cent stamp for 32-page

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

it if they, and you, couldn't depend upon their medicine?

on false principles.

this offer:

house.

If you want any Piano the first step is to send your address for our Catalogue. A safe step and costs but a cent.

WE TELL YOU what dealer can supply you, or we ship piano on approval ourselves, no risk to you.

OUR BARGAINS AND SECOND-HANDS offer facilities interesting to many. Drop us a line.

Ivers & Pond Piano Co., BOSTON MASS

VOL. I.

CALERA, ALA., FRIDAY, APRIL 1, 1892.

NO. 23.

Are the Children at Home? Each day when the glow of sunset Fades in the western sky, And the wee ones tired of playing, Go tripping lightly by,

I steal away from my husband, Asleep in his easy chair, And watch from the open doorway Their faces fresh and fatr.

Alone in the dear old homestead That once was full of life, Ringing with girlish laughter, Echoing boyish strife, We two are waiting together; And oft, as the shadows come, With tremulous voice he calls rie,

"It is night! are the children home?"

"Yes, love!" I answer him gently, "They're all home long ago;" And I sing, in my quivering treble, A song so soft and low, Till the old man drops to slumber, With his head upon his hand, And I tell to myself the number Home in a better land.

Home, where never a sorrow Shall dim their eyes with tears! Where the smile of God is on them Through all the Summer years! I know! Yet my arms are empty That fondly folden seven, And the mother heart within me Is almost starved for heaven. Sometimes in the dusk of evening. I only shut my eyes,

And the children are all about me, A vision from the skies: The babes whose dimpled fingers Lost the way to my breast, And the beautiful ones-the angels, Passed to the world of the blest. With never a cloud upon them,

I see their radiant brows: My boys that I gave to freedom-The red sword sealed their vows In a tangled Southern forest, Twain brothers, bold and brave, They fell; and the flag they died for, Thank God! floats over their grave. A breath, and the vision is lifted Away on the wings of light, And again we two are together, All alone in the night. They tell me his mind is failing, But I smile at the idle fears; He is only back with the children, In the dear and peaceful years. And still the summer sunset Fades away in the west. And the wee ones, tired of playing,

Go trooping home to rest,
My husband calls from his corner, 'Say, love! have the children come?" And I answer, with eyes uplifted, "Yes, dear! they are all at home!"

Great-Grandmamma's Ouilt,

Nanny and Grammie sat by the big fireplace in the hall having afternoon tea. The firelight danced and gleamed | the cedar chest went too, on top of on the polished floor, the dark oaken thereon, and the curious old tapestries ers and cousins-with lilacs and white at the doorways. It shone in old ribbons and wedding favors, so that Wolf's eyes until he blinked, growled everybody should know I was a bride! and dragged his big, clumsy body away from the blaze.

in her black velvet dress and deep lace collar, and shone on her hair, turning it into a mass of spun gold.

hair put smoothly back, her gray Quaker dress with its soft folds of white at the throat and wrists, and the dainty Sevres cup in her tiny, wrinkled

Nan and Grammie were both very fond of this fire, which was never me to see. allowed to go out, and of the big old andirons and the dusky oaken hall.

They always took their tea here when the rest were away and usually Nan had a basket of cones by her to throw into the dancing flames.

But today she was sitting with her brown eyes at the queer blue portiere covering one of the low doors.

"Grammie," she said presently-Nan always called this grandma "Grammie," because, as she explained it, it was not her very grandma but her great-grandma- "that is a very curious curtain at the music room door. Did it come from England with the other tapestries?"

"No, dear," said Grammie, "I made that."

"You, Grammie, you yourself! Why how could you? Tell me all mie, do," and Nan drew her footstool cold room, on that hard couch. I bow on Grammie's knee.

Grammie put down her teacup, smoothed out her dress with a medi- was foolish in me, but I couldn't help tative, far-away look in her eyes, and it. That board seemed to hurt me. then she said: "It is a long story, dear, the story of that quilt, for quilt granddaughter, was ill for so long, it is, To tell it is to tell you all my she had a fancy to be moved down

"Yes. I spun the cotton and wool the quilt. She would lie there for GREAT TRAVELLERS. Girls in my day," said Grammie, sensewed, pieced quilts and spun linen trousseau to take to her husband.

hold outfit, but it was finished and life. laid away many years before I was ready to use it. When I was a mite of a girl I spun winter evenings and long summer afternoons until I had enough wool and cotton to make it. Then the wool was dyed a dark blue, to make the foundation, while the cotton with which I traced in the figures was left white.

"Father set me up a loom in the long eastern room—the very room your mamma uses now for a breakfast room-and I commenced to weave my

"I chose the rose pattern; you see, Nanny, all those white figures are roses, or rosebuds or rose leaves, and first of all I wove in the upper corners the words which you see in all four

> THE ROSE-|-ESON HIT 1820-|-0781 ANNE CARTER-|-BELEVO BINA

> 4 ****** *****************

"Then I commenced to weave in good earnest. Two years I wove on that quilt, a little at a time, until it was finished. I can almost see myself now," and Grammie looked absently into the fire. "A curious little figure, not any larger than you, Nan, bending over the loom, my feet scarcely touching the floor from my high seat, dressed in a big flowered chintz dress down to my heels, a bag of the same hanging from my belt for my thimble and handkerchief, a white bertha around my neck like this I wear now and a little mob cap on my head.

"Well, at last it was finished and laid away in a cedar chest, with sprigs of lavender in the folds to keep it smelling sweet.

"When I was married and went to the neighboring village to live the litfather's big coach. How they decked walls, the suits of armor hanging that coach out-those rogues of broth-

"The quilt was unpacked and laid on my spare bed, and a very dressy It flickered over quaint little Nan, appearance it gave the room, so I

"Many distinguished people slept under that quilt. The Governor of It rested softly on Grammie, lean- the state slept there often, noted mining back in her big chair, her white isters who came to preach were entertained at our house and slept there, and once our President rested for a night beneath its folds.

"When my first baby was bornyour Great-Aunt Lou, my dear-they wrapped her in it and brought her for

"When Tom was killed, poor Tom, my oldest boy, he was thrown from his horse-you remember, Nanny?they brought him home and laid him on that bed. There is a big rent down on one edge, made by his spur. Poor Tom! He was a wild lad, but he was head in her hands, staring with big | my favorite. He loved and obeyed his mother always," and Grammie wiped a tear furtively from her eye, while Nanny pressed nearer for sym-

Grammie recovered herself and went on: "Your grandfather, too, lay on that quilt after he was dead. It used to be the New England custom, dear, to lay dead people on a board with only a sheet over them and the Bible under their heads. That was the way they laid your poor grandfather out-your great-grandfather, my husband. But I couldn't bear to bout it. Make it a long story, Gram- think of him lying up there in that nearer to the fire and placed one el- slipped up when they were all busy and lifted him until I could put the blanket under him. They all said it

> "Then when your Aunt Sue, my here by this fireplace.

.Oh, I should like that above all "Right there in the corner they things," cried Nan. "Go on, do. Is made her a low bed and covered it is really a quilt—that lovely thing?" | with pine boughs and over them laid [Truth.

for it, and wove the quilt all myself. hours looking into the fire and listening to the wild tales of her old Indian tentiously, "were brought up to work. nurse. I always thought that sickness Why, at your age, Nanny, I could decided Sue's life. You know that an bake and knit and sew, and I had al- old Indian woman came to the house ready commenced to weave this quilt. and offered to cure her, when every-All through a young girl's life she one else had given her up to die. She did cure her, too. Sue was so gratesheets, so that she might have a fitting ful that it seemed as if she must sacrifice something for the Indian race, "This quilt was part of my house- and in the end she sacrificed her own

"You know how she went among them, taught and lived with them, and was killed during an Indian uprising -not by them, but by a stray shot from a white man's rifle.

"After a bit the quilt was deemed old-fashioned and banished to the garret, where your mother found it a few years ago and dragged it forth to use as a portiere, declaring it was as pretty as any of her costly foreign tapestries. Your sister Alice stood before it when she was married. She said Ned proposed to her in front of it, just as she was going through the music room door. You see, Nanny, the old quilt has played quite a part in the family happenings." "Is that all?" said Nan. "Then it didn't have anything to do with the War of the Roses?" "Why, bless you, child, no," said Grammie, "it was not woven until years afterward. But it was woven quite a time ago-72 years come Spring, Nanny; 72 years ago."-New York Recorder.

The Trade Rats of Arizona.

A miner near the Senator recently had a rather singular experience with trade rats, known also as mountain rats. As the nights were cold the miner took his ore sack to replenish his rather hard bed. Having neglected to come to town for several weeks, his supply of beans had given out, and he had come down to a diet of straight bacon. Considerably out of humor, he started in to pull his bed to pieces one morning, and in removing the sacks was agreeably surprised to find three pounds of beans, with a little coffee mixed, which the trade rats had brought from the Senator and stored in his hed.

The rats are native Americans and very different from their imported Norway cousins. They are called trade rats because they generally leave some article in exchange for what they take

The miner states that he never killed a trade rate; that these rodents habitually steal from one cabin and carry their plunder into an adjoining one; that on one occasion he spilled a couple of quarts of corn on the floor of his cabin, and the next morning found the rats had stored away every grain of it in a pair of saddle bags hanging upon the wall.

He also states that the rats have thick caudal appendages, about three inches in length, which they keep constantly throwing up and down, striking the floor with each downward movement with the regular, measured stroke of a musical professor marking time. They carry off plugs of tobacco, tooth brushes, combs and brushes, in fact, anything which they can managa to move. - [Prescott (Arizona) Courier.

Not a Disqualification.

In the first session of the Superior Court, on Tuesday, while Judge Sherman listened to the various excuses of men who did not want to serve on the jury, Lawyer Samuel Hoar told a neat little story of his father, Judge Ebenezer Rockwood Hoar.

"One of the jurors whom father had impanelled," said the lawyer, "once came to him with the request that father excuse him from serving. "Why do you wish to be excused?"

he was asked. "Because, your Honor, I am deaf

"'That will not make the slightest difference,' replied the Judge. 'The grand jury hears evidence only on one side of the case." -[Boston Herald.

A Change of Tune.

Mrs. Grump (nee Sweetly)-I declare, John, if you don't get me a new sealskin this winter I shall freeze to

Mr. Grump-Bah! Just average up your system by thinking of the hot summer days long ago when you took ice cream to keep from melting .-

Mexican Hidalgos Care Nothing for Expense.

The Comical Notion of a Rich Mexican Miner.

Reau Campbell of the Mexican Central railroad and "Doc" Bamford were comparing notes about travellers from the land of the Montezumas at the Grand Pacific yesterday. "I tell you they're the greatest travellers in the world," said Reau Campbell, who is the author of a pleasing romance, entitled "A Trip Through Mexico," "and they care nothing for money. If a rich Mexican is travelling alone he takes a section in a sleeping car. If his wife is with him they take the drawing room if they can get it, and when there is a party of five or six they just charter a sleeping car all for themselves, Not long since, a rich hidalgo came up here. In the party were himself, his wife, two children who were not charged fare, his brotherin-law and three servants. He had a sleeping-car chartered for his private use all the way from the City of Mexico to New York. To have the car hauled by the railroads he had to buy fifteen first-class tickets from Mexico to New York, although there were but six persons in his party. Besides this, he had to pay $35 a day for the use of the car. Then he had a cook and a butler on the car, and had a big stock of delicacies for use en route. When he came to me he said he would stay over two or three weeks, I told him he need not keep the sleeping-car standing in the railroad yard all that time at an expense of $35 a day. He could save that amount by giving up the car and taking another when he resumed his trip. He replied that he liked that car and guessed he would keep it. And so he did, paying $35 a day for it for two weeks. Then he changed his mind about his trip, threw away his fifteen tickets to New York and bought fifteen more to New Orleans. Monte Cristo isn't in it with marked Clerk Bamford. "When I was at the Burnett House in Cincinnati, one of these same chaps came there on his way to Europe, where he and his family intended to remain five years. The party comprised the old man himself, his wife, eight children, twelve servants, a physician and a priest. There was a servant for each of the children, two for the lady and two for the head of the family. They couldn't get anything good enough for them. They rented the entire parlor floor of the Burnett House and had special service, table and cuisine. They had two carriages made to order at enormous cost to take to Europe with them, and they bought four splendid horses to use with the carriages. They bought a piano to take with them and chartered a special train to take them to New York They came from New Orleans to Cincinnati on the steamboat Guiding Star, then the finest craft plying the Mississippi and Ohio. The captain told me that at New Orleans the Mexican tried to arrange it so that the boat would carry no passengers but himself and party. To provide for both physical and spiritual ills the family doctor and the family confessor were taken with the party. I have seen royalty of almost all degrees on its travels, but I never saw anything to equal that Mexican in utter disregard those Mexican hidalgos."

"That's so," corroboratingly re-

"Sometimes these same Mexicans are quite comical in their ideas of modern travel," said Reau Campbell, again taking up the story. "In what one might call the 'back countries' of Mexico the mode of travel is exceedingly primitive. The only method of transportation is by diligence or clumsy stage, with no conveniences. There are no hotels and travellers must provide for themselves with mattresses, blankets, plates and other things pretty much as steerage passengers on a steamer do. One day one of these rural wayfarers, a miner whose income was possibly $3000 a day, but who had never been far away from home before, came into my office at Mexico, fresh from the mountains, and bought a ticket to New York. He had with him his bed whole paraphernalia of a traveller by diligence. I explained to him as well as I could the workings of a sleepingcar, but he insisted on taking his bed on the car with him. I was told afterwards that when he discovered the luxuries of sleeping-cars and hotels he threw his impediment off the car and enjoyed himself with the newfound pleasures like a child with a new toy. He wanted to buy the whole business and take it back to the mines with him. - Chicago Post.

Caracax (1)

The Gatling Gun.

In 1861 Dr. Robert Gatling of Indiana invented the first machine gun. Though the attention of the government was forcibly drawn to the doctor's new invention during the civil war, the official test of the gun did not take place until some years afterward. After the mitrailleuse had become an acknowledged failure in the Franco-Prussian war it was, toward the end of that struggle, replaced by the Gatling gun, but too late.

The mechanism of the gun under discussion is as simple as it is ingennous. The gun consists of from six to ten rifled barrels, each of them having a corresponding lock. Both barrels and locks revolve round a central shaft, which projects beyond the muzzles and also extends behind the breeches of the barrels. The breeches and muzzles are firmly screwed into disks. . Besides the revolving motion the locks have forward and backward motion of their own. The former places the cartridges in the barrels and closes the breeches before firing, while by the latter movement the empty cartridge cases are extracted from the breech. The loading and firing of the gun are done by turning the handle from left to right.

The arrangements of the mechanism are such as to permit continual firing. A hopper is fastened on the top of the gun and receives the cartridge from a feeding case. From this hopper each cartridge drops into the breech block and is automatically put into the proper place before it revolves; then a hammer is drawn back, also by an automatic device, and when the cartridge reaches the lowest point of revolution the hammer is released and explodes it. From this it will be what he would do if he were a easily understood that the rapidity of woman, and every woman tells of firing depends solely on the rapid ac- things she would not do if she were a tion of the man turning the handle. If man. the gunner is well trained as many as 1200 shots can be fired in one min_ ute. - Chicago Herald.

Some Words on Opals.

The fields in which the Australian opals are found are situated in Queensland. The stone is found in shallow alluvial deposits. In many cases the gems are found so surrounded by the matrix as to render them almost valueless. However, some experts have placed the Australian opal above the Hungarian and Mexican product, but this is contested by admirers of the

Up to nearly a century ago the opal was venerated as a stone of good omen and vested with the powers to banish evil spirits, inspire pure thoughts and induce good dreams. A few years ago Queen Victoria began to bring this gem into fashion again. All the gifts of jewelry that she has bestowed on her favorites have contained opals in some shape or other. She has rightly insisted that they bring no more bad luck to those wearing them than any other jewel.

The largest opal known is in the Imperial Cabinet of Vienna. This gem is five inches long and two and one-half inches wide, and is considered priceless.-[Jewelers' Circular.

Sample of French Thrift.

At Paris recently some curious revelations have come out as to those mysterious dealers in edibles who sell various collections of articles of food. technically known as bijoux. These enterprising dealers collect the fragments of fish and game from the cooks of clubs and restaurant-keepers. Then they, with infinite trouble, "arrange" the various kinds, shape them, cut them into neat pieces, garnish them and set them out on clean plates for sale. Many a so-called rentier is glad to get a good dinner at a nominal price. - [Chicago Post.

A poet says that a baby is "a new of a yellowish tint are less likely to wave on the ocean of life." "A fresh cause their possessors trouble, expense and bedding, cooking utensils and the squall" would express the idea better, and pain .- [Chicago Times.

What Shall We Do? When we are growing up And parents we don't please When, whichever way we twist and turn We always raise a breeze, When our elders on us frown And burden us with thrashings, And make us fairly squirm with shame 'Neath swift and sure tongue lashings-The question's on us forced, It makes us all-fired blue,

As we ask and ask and ask ourselves Oh, what shall we do? Then, after we are grown, And have to buck our way Through thick and thin as best we can,

We seldom get fair play. Backs broader than are ours Are shoving us aside, We're pulled behind, trod on before, With nary chance to hide.

'Tain't right for us to spend Our lives in such a stew, It makes us cry and cry and cry Oh, what shall we do? -[Browne Perriman, in Yankee Blade.

HUMOROUS.

The "Bored of Education"-The

The buzz saw has what might be termed an unapproachable manner.

What kind of robbery is not dangerous? A safe robbery, of course.

When an Irish baby is in the cradle, you can't compose it with a sham-"So dark and yet so light," as the man said when he looked at his new

There's many a man who would run away if he did not have to take himself along.

No man can lift himself by his boot tops, but he can easily pull himself down by his chin. Why is X the most unfortunate of letters? Because it is always in a fix and never out of perplexity. Brown-How's your baby's health, Newpop? Sound, eh? Newpop-Yes,

I sometimes think he's all sound. Winebiddle—I'll make Jaysmith bite the dust, that I will! Gildersleeve-He can't; he's lost his front teeth.

Mr. Hamm-How did the audiences strike you out west this time, Mr. Fatter? Mr. Fatter-Same old way -with eggs. Every man in the world is telling

Tom-Jack is continually getting caught out in a rain storm. Will-Yes, poor fellow, he reads and follows the weather forecasts in the daily

He (admiringly)—And did you make that mat yourself? She-Yes, I did it all myself, with the exception of a little help I received from my six younger sisters. The Shopper (in china and queensware store, to salesman) - You don't break these sets, I presume? The Salesman-No 'm; but our errand boy does sometimes.

Featherstone-I wonder where those trousers are that I ordered? Ringway -Why, I thought that you couldn't afford any more clothes! Featherstone—I couldn't. But I got a new tailor.

"Of course," said the critic, "I have taken the worse side in criticising your poems. But they have, nevertheless, their good side, too." "And that is--" "The side of the paper that's not written on."

Old Curious (to shoemaker) - What is the first thing you do when you begin to make a pair of shoes? Shoemaker-Well, the first thing I use is the last. Old Curious is taken from the shop to the insane asylum.

Struggling Minister-There was a stranger in church today. Wife-What did he look like? I did not see him. Then how did you know there was a stranger among the congregation? I found a dollar among the

That riches have wings all philosophers say, And the wisdom would seem of the best, For he who seeks ease as he goes in life's

With riches must feather his nest.

Color of Teeth.

Teeth of brilliant whiteness have their compensating defects_that color usually going with teeth that are soft and particularly liable to decay. Those

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

We are authorized to announce G. B.

We are authorized to announce D. R.

We are authorized to announce John S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

ocratic and conservative party JOHN A. CAMPBELL.

party, but it failed.

THEChronicle did not reach Cale ra this week, the fault, doubtless, of the mail service. From a copy papers always leaves room for invasions from a common enemy.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Daily Evening News from Blount county, whose signature is "Alliance Democrat", wants Mr. Turpin, the ac- professed followers toward that end. rather amusing. It takes money to knowledged alliance candidate for The law is on the side of the con- run professional baseball, and we congress in the minth district, to vention already, and in politics law say whether or not he favors the is equity and right. Ocala platform. Another from Hale county, over the signature of b cound the call for a republican Fine games, no doubt, will be wit-"Bob," in the Age-Herald, asks county convention, from which it nessed at so small a salary Mr. Turpin the same question, and further, who he favors for governor. This places the candidate in an awkward condition, as he is dependent upon the alliance if he does, and is likely to lose its support.

The family for the favors, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary.

The family family family fine games, no doubt, will be witnessed at so smail a salary. likely to lose its support.

Bibb county was in our office this towards preparing for the national week, and reports the political sit- campaign. But we are inclined to uation down there as deplorable. think the democratic party is in the party is The Adams, Kolo & Co. manipulat- very good condition to let a local re- Fra Diavale, Rob Roy, and others ed the county convention, and put publican ticket win. The duty of who had to plunder old stage coach- Mr. Elliott, our efficient bailiff, for his to a large majority of the white grievances should be laid aside for the advantage the steam cars give to their successors. But then in democrats. And since the conven- the sake of united effort in demo- those days they stele away protty tion they have called a mass-meet- eratic ranks. Unless this is done girls; while the present is confined ing to take action for a more accep- we may find ourselves confronted to financial effort. Like everybody table ticket and for delegates to the various conventions that will voice republicans. We feel like com-sue of that paper is a table giving the majorities of the two opposing candidates for governor. It foots up the Jones column 122½ to Kolb's 68½, when really the figures called for when really the figures called for 111½. This would have been the correct footing but for the fact that Colbert's 5 votes were placed and counted twice for Jones. Taking 5 from 111½ would leave 106½, and 68½ which the Advertiser gives in the fact that the post of duty. Let the race den Lane, New York. Agents wanted be made between the two parties on lines of political principle, the discussion of which will be of great benefit to many of our people. In this campaign those who are not strict partisans will be known as the above problem correctly; in elegant traitors to their political faith. 68] which the Advertiser gives in traitors to their political faith. the same table to Kolb, taken from 1061 leaves a majority of 38 for The grand jury report, published for the fourth correct answer, and many to be found anywhere in modern or present system of working them and an pleased with all measure. An ancient history. To this massive will admit. The best reads in this section are bad enough. Upon the who have seen it say it would be cheap at $42."

One good reliable agent wanted for each place. Write for particulars case.

EMITAL WATCH CO New York

THE News of last week charges! EDITOR. that eighty per cent of the members of the McMillan committee have in the past voted for independent can-Deans as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic par- not affect the authority which they private character. McMillan as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby country, subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

or merit, but of party law, and the very contemptible. How many time is come when that law must be to the action of the democratic country convention. We are authorized to announce Win. a lack of it, except for one side or selves. R. A. Milner as a candidate for the of-fice of Circuit Clerk of Shelby county, be no compromise. It is useless to again appeal to the state conven- which pervades the neighborhood, I I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the demiis desired it can be reached by quiet pasted over the columns, and the An effort was made to draw the submission to the party law. There following are some of the things 1 alliance of Walker into the Third is no use in talking over the rights noticed: of the "dear people." It is not a question of right, but of personal individual interest; and this must be set aside for the good of the party. If it is always to be a comparable for efficer there are a superble for efficer there are a superble for efficer the superble for efficient the su seen elsewhere we learn that our neighbor declines to continue the down the party lines and let the have not tired of it. I believe we learn that our down the party lines and let the have not tired of it. I believe we learn that our the large heat of its sufficient for the safe keeping of neighbor declines to continue the discussion with the Journal. A very sensible conclusion, as a con troversy between two democratic discussion with the Journal. A very sensible conclusion, as a con troversy between two democratic discussion of victories for principle, the party law must be considered and perhaps some the fashious, and perhaps some well fed and receive proper attention in other respects. obeyed. Pure democracy cares but of their styles would be bearable. little for the men who catch the pub-

In our advertising columns will publicans at keeping up their organ-An intelligent gentleman from upon the present call as only a step and find the burden very heavy.

Mill to the United States Senate comes the thought, an inspiring one too, that the democratic party is getting its best men in that body. Furthermore, they are the very best in the country. The republicans have beasted of having the brains of the country in the Senate, and for years, the boast was not an idla. one. But they have lost Edmunds, tion for the purchase of a safe is a Buys a good gold watch by our c'ub sys-Conkling, Evarts, Ingalls, Blaine, good one. Every county should tem. Our 14 karat gold-lifted cases are warranted for 0 years. Fine Elsin or Waltham movement, stom wind and set. The democrats have added Carlisle, funds, a precaution that is quite as Lady's or gent sale. Pulmer, Hill, Vilas to Vest, Gor-necessary as to have secure bonds. mon, Daniels, Cordon and Morgan. Some minor repairs to court house wateres for the club price. 32% and send G. O. D. by express with privilege of than contweigh the numerical masshould be attended to at once.

The superior ability of these more and jail seem to be needed, and than contweigh the numerical masshould be attended to at once.

Our agent at Ducham, N. C., writes: "Our jew-lets have confessed they don't jority of republicans, and the Unit- That the reads are in a fair condi- know how you can lurnish such works ed States Senate withal, contains a tion means, we presume, that they for the money,' concentration of brains equal to that are in as good condition as the writes. "An in receipt of the watch to be found anywhere in modern or present system of working them and an pleased with at measure. All

GOSSIP OF THE CRITIC.

1 am a gossip and a critic, butnot one or those who meddle withother didates. As we do not know the people's business or parade fancied defects in other people's character. We, the grand jury, empannelle records of the gentlemen composing There is no one half so contemptithe committee, we have naught to the say in answer to the charge. But the affairs of others, and fenses which came to our knowledge, and hold. It is not a question of record comes from some petty spite, or most of which are for misdemeanors. or merit, but of party law, and the from inborn officiousness, it is alike slightest instance is to endanger mark was only called forth in a genture the best interest of white supremative way and not by anything I ey. There is no way to bring about harmony in this county, if there be a lack of it except for one side or

Owing to the extreme quietude

Alabama Politics." An exceed- Rej

lic favor, so long as they are hon-A game in which est; but she does look closely to the there is a lot of hard work, a great deal of quarrelling, several broken perpetuity of her principles, and lingers, but withal a heap of lun. expects the zealous efforts of all her The idea of a southern league i have few cities with population enough to support it. One paper boasts of the excellence of the team, and says it will only cest > for those members who try to give their constituents value received. dition.

yet. The spirits of Claud Duval, Fra Diavale, Rob Roy, and others

We also desire to extend our thanks to

GRAND JURY REPORT.

SPRING TERM-FIFTY-SIX INDICTMENTS.

We, the grand jury, empannelled, sworn and charged at this term of the have returned indictments in all cases chich the testimony public interest au-

We have examined the books of the county officers, and find them in proper form and nearly kept. We have also of David Edwards, a justice in beat 9, insufficient on account of the weath of one of the bondsmen and the removal another out of the county. We thereforerecommend that he be required to give new bond.

We have examined the accounts, etc., decision would give no better satisfaction than the first. If harmony is desired it can be reached by quiet is desired it can be reached by quiet is desired it can be reached by quiet is desired. The paper to see what is agitating the public mind at present. My even money on hand, and find same to correspond to the public mind at present. pond with accounts which we hereto at-we have carefully examined the books of the county Superintendent of educa-tion, and find them neatly and correctly other respects.

We find the cook room of the jailor's house is joined to main building in such a way as to convey the water onto the main building, which is causing considerable damage. We respectfully recommend that the commissioner's court look into the master.

We have examined the condition of the court house and find the Ereplace in the probate judge's office needs repairalso, that plastern g is off in some

We have also examined into the condition of the poor house, and find same nearly kept and the paupers well cared for in every way. We find four of the paupers sick, and would respectfully rec-ommend that the commissioners make a

We especially desire to thank your given us when we were empannelled.

We also desire to return our thanks to our solicitor, Mr. J. T. Martin, for his indispensible services and kind attention out a ticket that is not acceptable democrats is plain. All personal es. must grow grum with envy at the advantage the steam cars give to their successors. But then in R. A. O'HARA, Forem in vew remedy that is being put up in New republicans. We feel like conting the voters of the wishes of the voters of the county.

THERE IS GREAT EXCITEMENT

The wishes of the voters of the county fines with county fines with the county fines and very successful to a grade of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every part of the farmer's failed to convey the blood to every direct.

The remove the obstruction with their sold in that there has a filed to convey the blood to every direct.

The remove the obstruction with their sold in the table sailed to the farmer's failed to convey the failed to the farmer's failed to the farmer's failed to the farmer's fa

"SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES!"

To the 623 persons answering correctly on or before March 31, 1892, our simple Bible question: "Where in the Bible is first found the word "DILIGENT," we will give the following rewards in the order named:—

Each competitor must find the word in the Bible—not in captions of chapters, foot or marginal notes, and with his answer to the question he must send enclosed $1.00 for one year's subscription to The Weekly Advertiser, otherwise the answer will not be recorded.

Advertiser, otherwise the answer will not be recorded.

This contest is open for old and young.

Every letter is recorded and numbered—there can be no mistakes. Send money by postal note, money order or registered letter. We pay no attention to answers without subscription to The Advertiser.

The Advertiser is by far the best news and literary paper published in the South, and gives its subscribers sixteen pages a week, eight on Tuesday and eight on Friday, making it almost equal to a daily paper. To Alabamians in other States it is like a letter from home twice a week. To read it is to love it.

love it.

Don't delay until too late to get one of the eference: Any Business House .n Mont-

THE ADVERTISER, Montgomery, Ala.

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff &.Co.,

CALERA: ALABAMA. Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York Louisville and Birmingham at regular rates charged by the larger cities.

We transpet a general hanking business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with

Fire and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

he be furnished with a good safe to be Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

Brick Store, Montgomery Avenue.

PATENT MEDICINES, TOILET ARTICLES.

CIGARS AND TOBACCOS.

Prescriptions Carefully Compounded at All Hours by an Experienced Druggist.

zation, and some will doubtless look They must feel rather lonesome, honor for the clear and explicit charge Having Just Opened a Drug Business in Calera, I Desire to Solicit the Patronage of All Who are in Need of Goods in My Line, Which are Offered at the Lowest Possible Margines.

R. SCOTT, Proprietor.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION.

Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages. REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

ure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

8. It pays more money for its special 4. Its Agricultural Department alone features and for its news service than is worth many times its subscription any other four of the weekly newspapers price to every larmer. This department of the south, and much more than any price to every farmer. This department of the south, and much more than any weekly newspaper in America.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

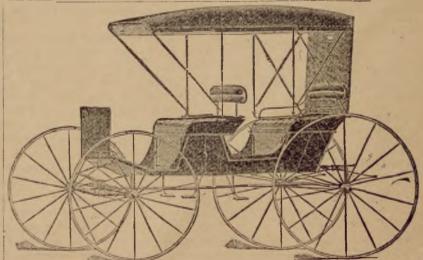

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasements are a source of infinite pleasements.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality,

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

THE ALABAMA (PREMIUM NO. 14) FREE.

This handsome Carriage is only one of the many Vehicles which THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY is offering its customers for 1892. Special Premiums for Men, Women, Boys and Girls.
THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER produced the Champion Crops reported in the State last year. Write for Circulars and Prices. ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY, MONTEGOMERY, ALABAMA.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE. No. 1, South Bound, 4:53 a.m. North Bound, 10:05 p.m.

E. T. V. & G. R. R.

No. 1, To Selma, 2:04 a. m. From Selma, 10:40 p. m.

ALABAMA MINERAL. No. 85, Arrives at 86, Departs at COUNTY OFFICERS. Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter.

Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. H. Kidd.

County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland. Superintendent of Education-T. N. County Solicitor-J. L. Peters.

County Commissioners—John E. Dycey, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

AT THE CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m.

METHODIST-Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, paster. Sabbath school at 9:30.

Baptist Church-Rev. J. G. Lowrey, pastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

Cumberland Pressyterian—J. C. Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensafriends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy. RICHARD K. FOX.

Franklin Square.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

The next best thing possible to insurance against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of

Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

amount of life insurance, where the stours of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your samily should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old ge should you live. A life insurance will do this and more: therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-

LOCAL LODGES.

Calera has four secret fraternities, al of which are well patronized in the way of membership. A list of the officers of each are given below:

A. F. A. M. J. D. Hardy, W. M.
J. R. Pratt. S. W.
W. H. H. Whatley, J. D.
W. W. Wilson, S. D.
F. M. Blake, J. D.
T. C. McKibbon, Sec. John Black, Treas. A. M. Sanders, Tyler.
Meets second and fourth Saturday rights in each month.

T. C. McKibbon, C. C. J. H. Rancall, V. C. G. J. Wright, P.
J. F. Palmer, M. A.
W. E. Brinkerhoff, M. E.
L. G. Privett, K. R. S. & M. F.
Elbert McClinton, I. G.
A. R. Scott, O. G.

Mrs. G. B. Finley, V. P. Mrs. M. Hardy, C. J. Black, Sec. S. Stein, Treas. W. C. Hazard, Guide. Richard Francis, Guardian. Hen.y Sanders, Sen. Maets every Thursday night

Meets every Thursday night. K. OF H. G. B. Finley, D.
J. D. Hardy, V. D.
J. H. Duran, A. D.
J. B. Randall, F. R. J. A. Campbell, R. S. Stein, Treasurer, M. W. Jones, C.

FINAL SETTLEMENT NOTICE.

Meets 1st and 4th Thursday nights.

SHELBY COUNTY.)

if they think proper. 10mch3t

TOWN TOPICS.

Yesterday was all fools day. Who

Since the continued rains of last 4:4! p. m. week the people are busy in their garden.

The repair hands of the L. & N. 7:15 p. m. road have been working on the 'Y

Spring has opened, and with it the popular national game "playing" for keeps.'

Ex-Governor Thomas H. Watts, 10 25 a. m. at court this week.

> spent Thursday night in Calera en route to Six Mile.

> The call for the Jones mass-meeting moved several Kolb men to the court house today.

> On Thursday morning Mr. Cross, of Pelham, was in Calera on the hunt of a stolen horse.

The principle excitement of Calera this week was the mass-meeting that convenes to day.

Saturday night was the stormiest of the month; though, we have heard of no damage being done.

Mr. Evans, of the Chronicle, gave menced by Dr. Scott continues. Holcombe and Moss are the next to take up the good work. Quite a crowd attended a minstrel performance at the Hall Monday night, and the young folks had an impromptu dance after the show.

Mr. J. C. Musgrove, of Blount county, was in the city this morn-He has been down in the cotsiaple.

Mrs. S. H. McCauley, of Montevallo, was in the city Monday. business this season.

On a little run down to Montethe Journal found that place exceedingly quiet. Busidess men are has a well selected library, and we volume until the selection of good books will be full and complete.

A little son of Mr. W. L. McCauley had his leg broken Tuesday from "It is a duty you owe to yourself and a fall. He was playing on a car-family to protect them with a reasonable penter's horse, which overfurned penter's horse, which overturned, throwing him to the ground. He is resting very easily.

> Mr. W. W. McCollum, of Brierfield, was in Calera Tuesday, and spent a short time in the JOURNAL

When the political excitement in the county and state subsides and the people get down to business, we hope to make our local column more interesting. In fact, it is our aim to make the Journal strictly a local paper.

Mr. L. M. Latham, of Montevallo, was in to see us Saturday last, on his way home from Mobile, where he has been attending Medical College. He finished the course, and is now a full-fledged M. D. The young doctor has not decided where he will locate. The Journal wishes him a successful career in his chosen profession.

Mr. J. L. Vandiver, of Bear Creek Beat, was in the city this morning. From him we learn that his beat will vote overwhelmingly for moving the court house to Calera Though they are farthest away from Meets second and fourth Friday nights us they find it easier to reach this place. Mr. Vandiver is one of Shelby's staunch republicans, but on local questions expresses some sound opinions.

> Ye local met a sad looking boy on the street Tuesday. He said, ·I had fifteen when I commenced. A little further on ye local saw a bright twelve year old sitting on the grassy walk, and as he approached heard .him exclaim, "Fourteen ahead!" The thought naturally arose that the two kids had been playing keeps, and kid number two had won from number one fourteen marbles.

The advertisement of Mrs. S. H. McCauley, Montevallo's milliner, STATE OF ALABAMA) Probate Court will be found in this issue. Mrs. March 14, McCauley has established a fine 1892. Estate of William Ozley, deceased.
This day came John W. Ozley, as administrator of the estate of William Ozley, deceased, and filed his accounts, vouchers, evidences and statement for a final settlement of the same. It is ordered that the 11th day of April, 1892, he appointed a day for making such settlement, at which time all parties in interest can appear and contest the same late. trade, which is daily increasing by terest can appear and contest the same hats. Our lady readers are assured of satisfaction, and are invited Judge of Probate. | ed of satisfaction to call upon her.

ADDRESS OF THE COMMITTEE.

To the Democratic Voters of Shelby Coun-

Pursuant to a call by the chairman, the democratic executive committee of Shel by county met in Columbiana on Saturday, the 5th day of March, 1892, and called a convention of the democratic party to meet in this place at 12 o'clock, noon, on Friday, June 3, 1892, for the purpose of selecting delegates to the state, congressional, chancery, judicial and senatorial democratic conventions, and to nominate candidates for representative in the general assembly, of probate, sheriff, circuit clerk, tax as-sessor, tax collector, treasurer, superintendent of education, coroner and a comof Montgomery, was in attendance missioner of each commissioner district, and for such other purposes as the convention may deem to be for the welfare Miss Lella Ward, of Pelham, and harmony of the democratic party in our county.

Your committee appointed Saturday, the 28th day of May next, as the time for holding the beat meetings to select delegates to the county convention, each beat to select its delegates in such man ner as it may deem best.

The eligibility to participate in beat meetings as presented by your committee, is in conformity to a resolution adopted by our present state demo-cratic executive committee and is confined to those who voted the democratic ticket at the last state and federal elec-tions, to those who, having failed to vote at these elections, or either of them, have heretofore habitually voted that ticket and intend to support it in the en-suing elections, and to those who have become voters since the last elections and those who will become voters by the every twenty democratic votes cast in the last election for governor, and for every fraction over ten, provided every beat shall be entitled to two delegates. Upon that basis the different beats in the county will be entitled to the follow

ng repi	esentation in the convention:
Beat	1, Columbiana,18
Beat	2, Spring Creek, 3
Beat	3, Calera, 6
Beat	4. Monievallo,
Beat	5, Tyler's, 2
Beat	6, Helena, 6

Beat 8, Yellow Leaf, 7 Beat 9, Wilsonville, 10 Beat 10, Harpersville, 10 Beat 13, Bold Springs, Beat 14, Sterrett, Beat 16, Vincent, Beat 17, Pelham,

This being the year in which federal state and county officers are elected, none, I dare say, will fail to realize the importance of individual effort for success of the principles we advocate.

Believing as democrats, that the best interests of our party is the best interests of our country, I would urge upon every democratic voter in Shelby county to la-bor with untiring energy for the main-tainance and perpetuity of Jeffersonian democracy, pure and simple, throughout our borders. And in our efforts for the success of the principles, let our actions be characterized with fairness, firmness and fealty to our party.

J. R. White

Ch'n. Dem. Ex. Com., Shelby Co.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES

Sir—I made use of your Philotoken with my last child, in order to procure a sale and easy travil. I used it about two months before my expected time, and I had a very quick and easy confinement. Nothing occurred to protract convalescence, and I got about ess time than was usual for me. I think t a medicine that should be used every expectant mother, for should they but try it as I have, they would never again be without it at such times. I am

HUGH T. CAFFEY,

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON CALERA, ALA.

feb12-1y.

SOMETHING NICE FREE.

ton counties buying up the fleecy REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION

Is hereby called to meet in the Court House in Columbiana, Ala. at 11:30 a. m., on April 21, 1892, for the purpose of selecting delegates tional and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can extensive trade in the millinery afford to be without it. It always makes business this season.

Mrs. McCauley is arranging for an extensive trade in the millinery can Conventions, and to nominate candidates for Representative in the afford to be without it. It always makes business this season. can Conventions, and to nominate candidates for Representative in the General Assembly, Judge of Probate, Sheriff, Circuit Clerk, Tax Assessor, Tax Collector, Treasurer, Superintendent of Education, Coroner vallo Thursday a representative of and a Commissioner for each Commissioner's District and for such other business as may be deemed necessary for the success of the Republican Party. All qualified voters in Shelby County, regardless of past party preparing, however, for the coming affiliation, are invited to participate. No proscription because of affiliating with the Democratic Party in the past. It is recommended by the Chairman that the Republicans in each beat meet in their respective The Methodist Sunday school now beats on Wednesday, the 13th of April, at such time and place as the beat committeeman may select, and select delegates to the county conhope it will be able to add volume to vention. The different beats in the county will be entitled to the fol lowing representation in the convention:

Beat 1, Columbiana and Shelby
Beat 2, Spring Creek
Beat 3, Calera
Beat 4, Montevallo, Aldrich, Gurnee.
Beat 5, Tyler's
Beat 6, Helena
Beat 7, Longview or Camp Branch
Beat 8, Yellow Leaf
Beat 9, Wilsonville
Beat 10, Harpersville
Beat 11, Weldon
Beat 12, Highland
Beat 13, Bold Springs,
Beat 14, Sterrett or Vandiver
Beat 16. Vincent
Beat 17, Pelham,
	-
m . 1	-

In view of the uncertain position of the Democratic Pary on all the questions affecting the masses of our people, namely: the Tariff, Silver, and Finance, your chairman recommends that every Republican in Shel by county shall constitute himself a committee of one to organize the Republicans of his beat for active work, Let us meet the oppressors of of the common people in every beat in the county, advocating the cause of right from now until the polls close next August, and the people will Chairman Republican County Committee.

Calera, March 27, 1892.

--FINE MILLINERY--

Mrs. S. H. McCauley's.

NEAR THE DEPOT,

Montevallo, Ala. A Splendid Line of Trimmed and Untrimmed Hats in the Latest Styles, and at Reasonable Prices.

handkerchiefs & Hosiery. Saturday Sales at $1

Harness Saddles,

HARDWARE & TINWARE.

WAGON MATERIALL.

Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded Shells always on Hand.

118 19TH STREET, BIRMINCHAM.

The Calera Journal,

A Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of he state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain the latest market quotations of miscellaneous reading of interest to all contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at

Quikly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

Commercial Printing a Specialty

The Journal will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work of the Fall River Police, In highly gratified with Hood's Sarsaparilla. He was badly run down, had no appetite, what he did eat caused distress and he felt

Frank W Gist. Proprietor.

Tired all the Time

bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla effected a marrelous change. The distress in the stomach is entirely gone, he feels like a new man and can eat any thing with old-time relish. For all of which he thanks and cordidally recommends Hood's Sarsa-

March The blood should be thoroughly purified and the system be given strength to withstand the debilitating effect of the changing season. For this purpose Mood's Sarsaparilla possesses peculiar medicinal powers and it is the Best Spring Medicine The following, just received, demonsterful blood-purifying powers: C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

"Gentlemen: I have had salt rheum for a numbar of years, and for the past year one of my legs, from the knee down, has been broken out very badly. I took blood medicine for a long time with no good results, and was at one time obliged to Walk With Crutches I finally concluded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken one bottle the improvement was so marked that I continued until I had taken three bottles, and am now better than I have been in years. The Inflammation has all left my leg and it is entirely healed. I have had such benefit from Hood's Sarsaparilla that I concluded to write this voluntary statement."

F. J. TEMPLE, Ridgeway, Mich. Hood's Pills cure all Liver Ills.

[11]

ADVICE TO WOMEN

If you would protect yourself from Painful, Profuse, Scanty, Suppressed or Irregular Menstruation you must use

BRADFIELD'S FEMALE REGULATOR

CARTERSVILLE, April 28, 1886.
This will certify that two members of my inmediate family, after having suffered for years from Menstrual Irregularity, being treated without benefit by physicians. were at length completely cured by one bottle of Brudfield's Female Regulator. In effect is truly wonderful. J. W. STRANGE. Book to "WOMAN" mailed FREE, which contains valuable information on all female diseases.

BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO., ATLANTA, CA. FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

"German Syrup"

Justice of the Peace, George Wilkinson, of Lowville, Murray Co., Minn., makes a deposition concerning a severe cold. Listen to it. "In the Spring of 1888, through exposure I contracted a very severe cold that settled on my lungs. This was accompanied by excessive night sweats. One bottle of Boschee's German Syrup broke up the cold, night sweats, and all and left me in a good, healthy condition. I can give German Syrup my most earnest commendation."

Cheapest Family Atlas KNOWN. 191 Pages, 91 Full Page Maps.

Colored Maps of each State and Territory in the United States. Also Maps of every Country in the World. The letter press gives the square miles of each State; time of settlement; population; chief cities; average temperature; salaries of officials and the principal postmeasters in the State; number of farms, with their productions and the value thereof; different manufactures and number of employes are, etc. Also the area of each Foreign Country form of government; population; principal products and their money value, amount of trade; religion: size of army; miles of railroad and telegraph; number of horses, cattle, sheep, and a vast amount of

KING COTTON Buy or sell your Cotton on JONES 5-Ton Cotton Scale. NOT CHEAPEST BUT BEST. For terms address ein Eione Due all SOLDIERS d disabled. Effector increme. Egyests ex-perience. Write for Laws. A.W. MCCOMMER BE. WASSINGTON, D. C. & CINCINNATI, O.
JONES OF BINGHAMTON, BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 put to 20 da s. No pay till cured.

HARD ON THE POOR.

THE TARIFF HELPS TO MAKE THE POOR LABORER POORER AND THE RIGH MANUFACTURER RICHER-THE OB-JECT OF PROTECTION.

A tariff, writes S. E. Moffett in the San Francisco Examiner, is a system of taxes levied upon goods brought into a country from abroad. In this country at the present time the tariff is generally treated as a device for forcing our people to buy American goods instead of foreign ones. But before considering it in this light it will be well to examine it in its original aspect as a tax. The idea of raising money by import duties is exceedingly ancient. The Athenians levied a tax of 2 per cent. on all foreign merchandise entering their territory. The Romans had import and export duties of 21 per cent. How the modern word tariff commemorates the name of that fine old Moorish economist, Tarifibn Malek, who used to blackmail all the vessels sailing past his stronghold on the Straits of Gibraltar, is too well known to need repetition. The Venetians in the Middle Ages had discriminating duties and navigation laws almost as ingeniously meddlesome as our own. The modern world has refined and extended the mediæval and ancient examples.

As a tax the tariff has always been a favorite device of Governments, especially of such as were not sure of their popularity. It is easily collected, it is indirect and attacks the final payer in disguise. The merchant who first pays it does not object greatly, for he simply makes the price of his goods enough higher to cover the duty and a profit on the capital advanced in meeting it. The retailer passes the tax with another profit to the consumer. When the last victim, unable to shift his burden upon any one else, has paid two or three prices for his goods, he may possibly grumble at the extortion of the merchants, but it does not usually occur to him to blame the Government or to consider his high prices in the light of a tax. From the point of view of the rulers, therefore, a tariff affords an ideal means of raising money. But how is it with the people? The tariff as a tax is not equal. It is well enough for the rich, but hard on the poor. A direct tax, honestly assessed, falls on men in proportion to their wealth. A tax on consumption falls-almost as heavily on the poor man as on the rich one. A laborer earning $50 a month may spend $200 a year on clothes for himself and family, and of this at least $80 represents the tariff tax. A rich bachelor with an income of a million dollars a year may get along with $500 worth of clothes, of which the tariff duties represent about $200. The laborer's contribution to the tariff may amount to 20 per cent of his total income, the millionaire's may not exceed a quarter of one per cent. of his. The tariff may thus absorb the whole of the poor man's little margin for saving, keep him forever living from hand to mouth, and leave him with no prospect for his old age. The rich man's surplus is scarcely touched by such taxation, and he can go on adding to his wealth from year to year.

We may assume, therefore, that a tariff considered merely as a tax is not a good thing. If we are looking at it solely in that light all would agree that it should be kept as low as possible. In other words, if we could not think of of any better way of raising money, we should keep the duties strictly within the limits required to supply "the needs of the Government economically administered." We should not be looking for ways of spending our surplus revenues, but when we found a surplus we should promptly reduce the taxes. That there are several million people who favor just the opposite course, and who wish to see the taxes raised whether the money be needed or not, is due to another view of the tariff-not as a tax, but as a device for compelling people to buy home-made instead of foreign-made goods. It is in this aspect that the tariff is now a political issue in the United

The way in which the duties are supposed to "protect" American industries s by raising the price of foreign merchandise and thereby enabling American producers to charge more for their goods. The early protectionists in this country believed that a few years of this nursing of home industries would be enough. They thought that protection was necessary to enable our manufacturers to get on their feet. They had much to say of "infant industries," and they said that they would welcome free trade as soon as we had accumulated enough capital and skilled labor to enable us to fight on fair terms. But all these ideas have been outgrown. The infant industries have become giant monopolies. What we have to consider now is, not whether we shall give protection for a few years to struggling young industries, but whether we shall adopt it as a permanent

One thing more remaines to be mentioned before completing this chapter of definitions. Protectionists often deny that their object is to increase the price of American goods. They say that they expect, by stimulating home competition, to bring prices even below the foreign When they are asked what in that case would be the objection to removing the duties, they say that but for the tariff the foreigner could pour his until he had closed up all the American factories, after which he could make up his losses by charging monopoly prices. But whether that argument ever had any substance or not it has none now. No establishments in the world are better able to carry on a temporary war of rates than our own. Nowhere are there such masses of capital that can be so ruthlessly handled for such an end. The English steelmaker who should try to freeze out Mr. Carnegie by selling goods at a loss would be an object of sympathy. He would find that a game that two could play at, and while he was dumping his surplus on the American market somebody else's surplus would be demoralizing the home market of England. Moreover the development of trusts has taught our manufacturers how to furl their sails in stormy weather and wait till the clouds roll by. Temporary stoppages of work for the sake of raising prices are everyday incidents of business. Therefore, to make the protectionist assumption true it would not be sufficient for the foreigner to close our factories temporarily. He would have to keep tuem closed. To do this he would have to sell permanently at a loss a thing which, even a person as malignant as the foreign manufacture is popularly supposed to be would hesitate about doing. We come back then, to ordinary business competition. Our protective tariff is based on the theory that foreigners can produce things and sell them more cheaply than Americans can and it aims to equalize the difference by increasing the cost of foreign goods to the consumer and so enabling the American producer to get higher prices for his own than he otherwise could. That is the sole object of protection.

Protection is kuining Farmers.

Professor N. S. Shaler, a member of the Massachusetts State Board of Agriculture, says in the New England Almanac:

Our envilization rests upon agriculture. To it every strong State must look, not only for daily bread, but, in large measure, for men who are to uphold society. We have won and maintained our institutions in peace and war by the aid of the sturdy citizens who were born and bred upon the farms; therefore, it is the first duty of our legislators to take care that the laws do not endanger the prosperity of those who till the soil.

The present condition of agriculture n New England shows clearly that the protective tariff is harmful to the inerests of the farmer. Thirty years ago this part of the United States contained thousands of small farms which are now abandoned. In every neighborhood we see the deserted homesteads falling in ruins and their fields returning to forests. The traveler, in these districts, feels that some great plague has fallen upon the Thus in the towns of Tisbury and Chilmark, in Dukes County, Massachusetts, more than three-fifths of the farmsteads of thirty years ago are now deserted. On one tract of 1200 acres, where formerly stood twenty-two farm houses, only eight remain, and the greater part of the fields has grown up in brushwood. Several of the New England States have been led to the extraordinary measure of making a census of their abandoned farms with the hope that foreigners might be induced to buy them. Although these lists are imperfect, in that they take account only of those places where the houses and fields are still fit for use, the results are startling. They show that the small farmer is rapidly being driven from the land, which, for centuries, maintained his forefathers in prosperity. The census of 1890 shows a loss of population in 930 rural towns in New England.

One reason why the small farmers have been driven to abandon their fields is found in the fact that the protective tariff greatly increases the expense of their households. In a family of five persons engaged in farming, and living with strict economy, at least $350 has to be spent for clothing, household utensils, farming tools and the materials which are used in repairing and building fences. On the average more than $50 of this sum is due to the protective tariff. This tax is great enough to make a lifeand-death difference in the struggle of a nan who has to depend for his success a his own strength, and the natural resources of a small tract of ordinary New dag and land. With that amount of noney on the right side of his account, he can subsist his family and put by comething for his old age. Without it he must fail.

When the system of the protective tariff was begun the farmers were promised that the manufactories which it would induce would afford them a higher priced market for the products of their ields. This theory has proved to be utterly in error; except in the case of market gardens near the great cities, which are owned by men of capital and tilled by hired labor, no part of our agriculture has had any considerable advantage from the establishment of factories in New England. It is now made clear by experience, as it is evident from reason, that the price of our soil products is determined by the market rates of European countries where our surplus is The notion of the advantages of a home market is shown by the facts to be fall cious. Instead of being a oless-mign Stepping.

A well-known firm of opticians in London manufacture specially constructed spectacles to be worn by horses. The object is to promote high stepping." Horse spectacles, we learn, are made of stiff leather, quite inclosing the eyes of the horse, and the glasses employed are deep concave and large in size. The effect is to give the ground in front of the horse the effect of being raised; the animal, therefore, steps high, thinking he is going up hill or has to step over an obstruction in front of him. If the system is persevered with when the animal is young the effect is said to be marvelous. Many horses, it is goods into this country at less than cost alleged, could be materially improved by a visit to the optician, and it is recommended that the sight of all horses should be tested. This particularly applies to valuable hunters, which are found optically unfit for their work, when a little artificial assistance would make them as useful as ever. Apart from this consideration, many vices, it is believed, might be cured by means of eye-glasses. The cause of shying is as a rule, short sight.

THE Sims-Edison torpedo has been tested at Portsmouth, England, before many European powers, and it are treat satisfaction of a lie-a-bed sovereign.

INTERIOR OF THE EARTH.

What Is to Happen at Some Remote Fu. ture Date. One of the most interesting questions relating to the earth, considered as a planet, is that of its interior contitution. Observations made in deep mines and borings indicate that the temperature increases as we go downward at the average rate of 1 degree Fahr. for every fifty-five feet of descent, so that if this rate of increase continued the temperature at the depth of a mile would be more than 100 degrees higher than at the surface, and, at the depth of forty miles would be so high that everything, including the metals, would be in a fluid condition. This view of the condition of the earth's interior has been adopted by many, who hold that the crust of the earth on which we dwell is like a shell surrounding the molten interior. But calculations based upon the tidal effects that the attraction of the sun and moon would have upon a globe with a liquid interior have led Sir William Thompson and others to assert that such a condition is impossible, and the interior of the earth must be solid and exceedingly rigid to its very center. To the objections that the phenomena of volcanoes contradict the assumption of a solid interior, it is replied that unquestionably the heat is very great deep beneath the surface, and that reservoirs of molten rock exist under volcanic districts, but that taking the earth's interior as a whole the pressure is so great that the tendency to liquefaction caused by the heat is overbalanced thereby. The open one. According to the nebular "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Price 25 hypothesis, which assumes that the cents. Sold only in boxes. whole question, however, is yet an bodies of the solar system once existed in a nebulous form, and by gradual condensation and loss of heat have attained their present condition, it is probable that the earth is still slowly cooling off, and that, as we see it, it represents an intermediate stage between the hot vaporous globe of a planet like Jupiter and the cold and barren moon. If we accept this theory—and it is yearly gaining strength—then the habitable period in the earth's career appears to be but one chapter in its varied history. When it was yet molten and vaporous it could not support life, but it shed light like a star. Now it possesses a cool and solid crust on which innumerable tribes and species of animal and vegetable life swarm and flourish. Anon it will become cold and inert, its waters and its atmosphere retreating into its interior, and with them the life that depends upon their presence will disappear. This possible cause of the cessation of the lifesupporting energies of the earth, it will be observed, is independent of the withdrawal of the light and heat of the sun, an ultimate catastrophe to which we have heretofore referred. -Prof. Garrett P. Serviss, in the Youthful Replies.

One of our school commissioners inspected a down-town public school the other day and examined several Commissioner-Now, I will ask you to tell me the parts of speech of some words you have just read. What part of speech is "Mary Ann!"

Little Girl-Noun, sir. "What kind of a noun?"

'Common noun.

"Pray, why do you call 'Mary Ann' a common noun?

"Because there are so many Mary Anns, sir.'

Chautauquan.

The Commissioner smiled and observed to the teacher that the answer ought to pass. On another occasion the Commissioner inquired: say that all the rivers flow into the sea. Why, then, does not the sea become too full and overflow with all the waters from all the rivers?" The youth addressed eagerly replied: "Because the fishes drink the water, sir."

Chance for Inventors.

"No two children wear out clothes just alike," a father said. "Take, for example, my seven boys. I have to get knee pads for Cyrus, coppertoed shoes for Lucius and Darius, elbow protectors for Jonas, re-enforced trousers for Rufus, and stockings with double toes, heels, and knees for Cephas and Alpheus. Some of the inventions for protecting children's cloths against wear are deciding to the small farmer the tariff is a edly useful. and they have been very curse waich stealthily works for his ruin. profitable to the inventor, but a far larger fortune awaits the man who shall discover how to make children's clothing indestructible throughout. I'nls women to away with the necessity of providing a special equipment for each child, and it would also meet the requirements of that vast army of children who wear out their clothes, not in spots, but all over."

The Bankers' Assistant,

The bankers' assistant is a small Indiarubber thimble, open at both ends, however, which is put on the second finger of the right hand, and greatly facilitates the counting and sorting of coupons, cheques, and other documents, and turning over leaves of books rapidly and accurately without soiling or creasing the paper. It entirely does away with the use of the damp pad, and is very useful in the counting house.

A Kingly Sluggard.

In the household book of the reign of Edward II., it is stated that he ordered to be paid to sir Nicholas de Beck, Sir Humphrey de Littlebury, and Sir Thomas de Latimer, the sum of twenty pounds (then a very large sum indeed) "for dragging the King out of bed on Easter morning." It must have been a most difficult duty to merit such a reward at the hands

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Gure, and actuary by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from lodrops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer $100 for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address Charles of the System of the Charles of the System.

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD? These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, BEAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE.

It has not been a very prosperous season for the winter resorts.

LADIES needing a tonic, or children who want building up, should take Brown's Iron Bitters. It is pleasant to take, cures Malaria, Indigestion, Bilioueness and Liver Complaints, makes the Blood rich and pure.

Italy produced 3,500,000 boxes of oranges and lemons last year.

"I have in my emp' ya man who has been a victim of periodic in the story years, has tried all kinds of treatment and I have tried various remedies on him.

Bradycrotine helps him more than anything a r did." O. D. Kingsley, M.D., White Plains, R. Y. 50 cts

The Famous Hot Springs of Arkansas, "The Carlsbad of America." Solid through trains from St. Louis. Elegant Hotels. Sub-ilme Mountain Scenery. An all year round Health and Pleasure Resort. W. E. Hoyt, G. E. P. Agent, 391 Broadway, N. Y.

FITS stopped free by Dr. Kline's Great Nerve Restorer. No Fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise' and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline. 931 Arch St... Phila... Pa.

FOR THROAT DISEASES, COUGHS, COLDS,

Many people in Hungary have died from starvation.

MANY persons are broken down from over-work or household cares. Brown's Iron Bit-ters rebuilds the system, aids digestion, re-moves excess of bile, and cures malaria. A spendid tonic for women and children.

The world is producing 1,000,000 pounds of BEFCHAM'S PILLS cure sick headache, disordered liver and act like magic on the vital organs. For eale by all druggists.

The endowment of the Chicago University now amounts to $4,000,000.

ONE ENJOYS

Both the method and results when Syrup of Figs is taken; it is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and cures habitual constipation. Syrup of Figs is the only remedy of its kind ever produced, pleasing to the taste and acceptable to the stomach, prompt in its action and truly beneficial in its effects, prepared only from the most healthy and agreeable substances, its many excellent qualities commend it to all and have made it the most popular remedy known.

Syrup of Figs is for sale in 50c and $1 bottles by all leading druggists. Any reliable druggist who may not have it on hand will procure it promptly for any one who wishes to try it. Do not accept any substitute.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. LOUISVILLE, KY. NEW YORK, N.Y.

Kennedy's MedicalDiscovery

Takes hold in this order:

Bowels. Liver. Kidneys, Inside Skin, Outside Skin. Driving everything before it that ought to be out.

You know whether you need it or not. Sold by every druggist, and manufactured by

DONALD KENNEDY, ROXBURY, MASS.

KANSAS FARMS and Mortgages are all right. cood prices. Farms for sale at bargains. List free, CHAS. R. WOOLLEY, Osborne, Kan,

A needy woman -the one who's overworked, nervous, and debilitated. What she needs is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It's made exactly to fit her case—an invigorating, restorative tonic, and a soothing and strengthening nervine, giving tone and vigor to the whole system. But it isn't a mere stimulant. It's a legitimate medicine, that an experienced physician has carefully pre-peculiar to the sex, are corrected and cured by it. And because it's a certain remedy, it can be made a guaranteed one. If it fails to give satisfaction, in any case, you have your money back.

pared, for woman's ailments. All the functional derangements, chronio weaknesses, and painful disorders

The best pill costs less than anv other. Costs less, but does thore. They're smaller, too, and easier to take. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the best pills. They regulate perfectly the liver, stomach, and bowels.

AM. N. U. -No. 11 1892

0000000000 If you have Malaria, Plles, Sick Head-ache, Costive Bowels, Dumh Ague or if your food does not assimilate, will cure these troubles. Dose small. Price, 25c. Olice, 39 Park Place, N. Y.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878. W. BAKER & CO.'S

as well as for persons in health. Sold by Grocers everywhere. W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

RELIEVES all Stomach Distress. REMOVES Nausea, Sense of Fullness, REVIVES FAILING ENERGY. RESTORES Normal Circulation, and Warms to Toe Tips.

OR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo.

Which Piano? Decide that after trying the IVERS & POND. You can try them; we'll tell you what dealer can show them to you, or we'll send on approval at our own expense. Write for in-

Ivers & Pond Piano Company, Boston.

$65 A MONTH for 8 Bright Young Men or Ladies in each county. Address P. W. ZIEGLER & CO., Phila., Pa. PATENTS Washington, D. C. 40-puge book free

A Woman's Temple. Unconsciously a woman builds A temple in this world below, And day by day a stone is lait Of little things that come and go. So it doth slowly rise above The tide of years, until its dome Has reached the glory clouds of heaven, A world within itself, a home-She wisely builds upon the rock, Far more eternal than the years, The pavement is of solid truth, Untouched, unworn by falling tears.

The walls are innocence and grace, Fair virtue makes them high and strong, Within they shine with purity, Resound with muse and sacred song; The gates are pearls of truth and love,

Whence issue forth bright gleams of light, Each stone a little sacrifice, And kept in place by truth and right. The pillars are of gentle acts, That bear the weight of golden beams

Of life, and bound by cords of love,

And braced by faith's undying streams. Each nail a heart-beat set in place, Each blow her very centre shook; The steps are trials, stepping stones Where patience climbs with upward look, The throne, her grand eternal soul,

Her king, the one she loves best; The altar where sweet incense rise. Does hold her greatest and her best. So day by day a stone is laid, Until the white-capped dome Is hid among the clouds,

And she has reached her heavenly home. -[N. B. Fowles, in Inter Ocean.

HIS UNLUCKY PLANET

BY CLARA GREEN.

fault," Charley Cleve said. "Whose else should it be? But I'm disinherited, all the same. I've no more chance of coming into that fertile farm land than-than yonder Italian organgrinder, who is turning the crank so peseveringly under deaf Squire Homer's back kitchen window."

"Oh, Charley," said Bess, clasping her hands dispairingly together.

"I didn't expect much else," went on Mr. Cleve, in a rollick ing, light hearted sort of way. "I was born under an unlucky star, Saturn, or Mars, or some one of those planets that never bring a fellow any good. You can't expect a star to reverse its order on my account, can you?"

"But, Charley-"

"Just wait until you hear the full account of my atrocities. I wasn't so much to blame for treading on the cat -any one might have done that. I don't think she laid that up against me. And when I broke down the old cherrywood chair that had belonged to her grandfather_that was a mere question of weight. And I mended It for her, too. But when the broiled ham for breakfast had such a queer taste to it-and I had to confess that I had been smoking up the chimney where it hung-"

"How was I to know that she made a storehouse of the back-room chimney? Folks in Philadelphia don't do that sort of thing. And she wouldn't tolerate tobacco in any shape—she let me know that, at the very outset! The next thing I did was to upset her whole churning of cream. It hung half way down the well, don't you see, and when I came home, famished with thirst, and jerked the bucket down-well, the first thing I heard was Cousin Sarepta screaming like mad. 'Is it buiglars?' said I, seizing my blackthorn stick, 'or is it fire?' And I had plunged into the house, and put my foot-literally, not metaphori cally-into the old lady's baking of custard pies, that she had set on the cellar floor to cool, before she could make me understand. But the last straw that broke the camel's back was the old gray goose."

"Oh, Charley!"

"The old gray goose,' Charley! Surely, nothing has happened to that!"

Mr. Cleve shook his head. "The very worst has happened," said he, "I've shot it!"

"On, Charley !" The young man laughed bitterly, and spouted the lines: "'Why look'st thou so? With my cross-I shot the albatross!

Yes, I did. Out wild-duck hunting in the marshes. I thought it was rather a mammoth specimen, when I leveled the trigger; and when Don brought it to me my heart sank to the very soles of my boots. I had half an idea of burying the creature out among said she. the salt grasses, and saying never a they never lie outright. So I brought | with the leaves all right, and the cover it home with the string of wild birds. 'I'm very sorry, Cousin Sarepta,' said I, 'but I've shot your old goose. I'll replace it with the finest pair to be had in Salt Inlet.' 'Replace it!' says she; and then, to be sure, there was a scene. She set a good deal of store by that old gray goose, you know."

"Yes, I know," said Bessie, resignedly. "It was nearly twenty years old. She raised it herself, in a basket by the kitchen-fire, and it ate corn daily out of her own hand. She wouldn't have taken twenty dollars for that old goose. No, nor fifty, I do believe."

"So," added Charley, with a particularly expressive shrug of the shoulders, "she has turned me out of doors. She called me a loafer and a shiftless ne'er-do-weel, and I dare say she was right. I couldn't contradict her, so I didn't try. She recommended me to go about my business; so I did. And here I am. I've telegraphed to Philadelphia for the taxidermist. That was all I could do. Do you suppose, Bess, your father would take me to board for eight days? I've just eight days left of my vacation, and there'll be such a lot of questions asked if I came home in advance of time. I wouldn't advise you to have a word to say to me. I dare say I shall set fire to the house, or poison the family, or shoot some-"Oh, Yes, I know it's all my own body by mistake. What can be expected of a fellow that was born under an unlucky planet?"

Bess Warden laughed cheerily.

"Father will risk it, I am sure," said she. "We haven't a great deal of spare room, but mother will make you up a eot-bed in the room with the boys, and if you can put up with our plain way of living-"

He stopped her mouth with a kiss. "You are an angel, Bess!" said he. The kindly Warden family did their best to console old Miss Sarepta Smith's discarded relation, and to make the last portion of his vacation a trifle pleasanter than the first had been. But Doctor Warden shook his frost-white head.

"I don't like long engagements," said be. "And Bess can't marry a man on any twelve dollars a week."

"But, father, Charley will do better in time."

"If it pleases the unlucky planet," interpolated Charley.

"Well, wait until the better times always It & To I come."

"Oh, we don't mind waiting!" cried "Speak for yourself, if you please," murmured Charlev.

"We've a lifetime before us," asseverated Bess; "and, in the meantime, Charley, we'll go out duck shooting tomorrow, and I'll row you through the Silver Channels to the best ground on all the coast."

On the night before Mr. Cleve's ime was up, the lovers, talking to each other late in the autumnal starstarlight on the porch, saw a red glow in the sky above the privet hedge. "It's a bonfire," said Charley.

"It's Miss Sarepta Smith's house!" shrieked Bess. "Help! Help! Fire! Water! Oh, why don't somebody

"Call your father and the boys!" said Charley, flinging off his coat. I'll jump the fence and take the short cut. She's all alone in the house, poor thing."

At Salt Inlet they had neither steam fire engines nor patent extinguishers. By the time the volunteer company had dragged the rickety old engine and hose-cart out of their shed, and hoisted them up the hill, the ancient house where Sarepta Smith had been born was in ruins; and the old woman herself, carried in a big chair over to the Warden house, was lamenting that she, too, had not gone also. "Seems like I couldn't live nowhere else," said she. "And I'm an old woman-a very old woman."

Bess Warden gave up her own room to Miss Sarepa. Every one did what he could to make her comfortable, but the only sign she evinced of pleasure was when Charlie Cleve brought in the old gray goose, stiffly mounted on an imitation of mossy ground. Her dim eyes lighted up. "I am glad you saved that, Charles,"

"I found it among a heap of other word. But that would have been a things," said Charley, "and I thought eneaking sort of a dodge. The Cleves you'd like to have it. See, here are de plenty of shabby things, but your spectacles, too, and the old Bible, only a little charred!"

Miss Sarepta looked feebly from one relic to another.

"I'm glad," said she, "very glad. It was thoughtful of you, Charles. I'm sorry I called you them names. I take 'em all back."

"Oh, never mind the names," said Charley. "At all events, you can't lay this fire to me!"

"No," said Sarepta, "it was the mice playin' on the closet shelf where I kept the matches. I'd laid up to set a trap, but I forgot. And I should ha' been burned in my bed, if it hadn't been for you, Charles. I allays dreaded a death by fire!"

Old Miss Sarepta lay very quietly for a day or two, with the gray goose folding its wings at her bed head, and the Bible and spectacles on a stand beside her pillow.

"Charles shall have the gray goose," said she, one evening. "It'll help furnish his house. And it'll show I don't bear no malice on account of his shootin' it. And the specks and the Bible Bess must keep. An old Bible brings every one luck!"

She died before daybreak. If there was any will-and Miss Sarepta was always believed to be a well-to-do, businesslike woman-it was destroyed in the flames. The old place-threeand-forty acres-went to a cousin nearer of kin than Charley Cleve.

"My unlucky planet again," said Charley, with a grimace. "Well, never mind, Bess; it's only waiting a little longer. We've got a Bible and a pair of spectacles, after all."

"And a stuffed gray goose," said

"Oh, hang the goose!" said Charley. "It's neither useful nor ornamental. Let's shy it out into the orchard," and he seized it by one leg. "Oh, stop, Charley!" cried thrifty Bess. "Let's save the feathers for a pillow."

"They're full of arsenic and such "All the better for keeping out moths," retorted Bess. "I'll pack them into a bag, and - Oh, Charlie, what is this?" A piece of the old gray goose's epidermis had come off with the first handful of feathers. Underneath it was something like dull-green paper, packed in layers.

"Hello!" said Charley. "Whythey're bills! They're-money! Look here! Am I dreaming?"

It was true. The old gray goose was stuffed full of new crisp greenbacks. Sarepta Smith's eccentricities had not ceased with her death. !There had been method in her words when she gave Charley Cleve this memorial of his own blunder, as a peace offer-

"Five hundred dollars!" said he. "I say, Bess, isn't it almost enough to get married upon? We'll do it very quietly, you know."

"Don't talk nonsense, Charley." "But look in the old Bible, Bess. Who knows what may be hidden

Nothing was hidden there. Apparently Miss Sarepta had confined her savings bank idea to the old gray

Charley Cleve considered deeply.

"Five hundred dollars won't go very far in the city," said he; "and in the I am looking straight ahead. I doubt Trust Company, where I'm clerking it, a fellow may grub away for 20 years without any chance of promo- when that gun will be turned upon us; tion. I'll cut city life, Bess, if you say so, and invest this money in the first payment on a little fruit farm out here at Salt Inlet."

Bess's face lighted up. "Close to my old home!" she cried. 'Oh, Charley, I do 'say so!'"

And 10 years after their wedding. village lots, the thriving young farmer looked at his wife with a smile.

"It all comes of the old gray goose, Bess," said he.

"The unlucky planet was a lucky one after all," laughed Bess .- The Men who are seeking an opening, and waiting for something to turn up, might try the old-fashioned way of putting their hands to the plough to open and turn up the soil.

The benediction arouses awakened slope.

CHARGING A GUN.

Company "G" Wins a Page in the Records of War.

Sensations of a Soldier at the Cannon's Mouth.

Our brigade is being held in reserve and is, protected by the lay of the ground from the enemy's fire. Shell and round shot have screamed and whizzed over our heads, and the "ping!" of bullets has been as constant as if bees were swarming about us. Here and there a man has gone down or been touched in a way to make him scream out, but the loss has been trifling. The real fighting is all on our right. Those men down there in the flame and smoke are nearer would have greeted my eyes. I death than we are, but they have the reckle-s of the fact. Here we stand out of fifty-six! Over a third of our in lines waiting - faces growing a little paler all the time - men trying to jest and joke to conceal their real feelings.

"Scream! Shriek! Crash!"

It's a rifle shell bursting just beyond us, and it comes from a new direction. The enemy has quietly planted a gun on the bush-covered ridge in a way to enfilade the right of our brigade. "Boom! Shriek! Death!"

That shot was better-better for the enemy, because fragments of the shell wounded three men. The brigadier-general and his staff are alive to the situation. An order comes to our colonel.

A minute later we got the order from our captain:

"Attention, Company G! Right dress! Shoulder-arms! Left face! Forward-march!"

What have we been detached from the regiment for? We move out by the flank along the line of an old fence for a few rods and come to a "halt!" and "right face!" We can now see the gun on the ridge. It has fired again and again, and every shell is striking men down.

"Company G, we are going to charge that gun and take it!" shouts our little captain from the head of the

There are 56 men of us all told-a little better than half a company. The captain does not call for volunteers; he does not announce that cowards can step three paces to the rear. He would not insult men who were with Oaks, Malvern Hill and elsewhere.

How far is it to the gun? Not over half a mile-perhaps not that far. It up a second slope, in which rocks out. a family. crop and bushes grow here and there. "Scream! Scream! Scream!

They are working the gun as if its fire was to decide the fate of the battle. Those we have left behind are watching us, and will be our critics. If we succeed, those who return alive will be heroes until some other Press. forlorn hope eclipses our record. If we fail-!

"Forward-guide right!"

We are making an easy start. We step out at "common time," every elbow touching the man on the right, and there is a tremendous cheer from the brigade as we go down the slope. if any man in that line even giimpsed to the right or left. I am wondering so, doubtless, is every other man.

Our alignment is perfect until we reach the swale. Then it is broken as we meet the tall, dry grass and weeds and the scrubby bushes.

"Halt! Right dress!"

It's our little captain re-forming the line as for a parade. Three day, when the great railway vein had | thousand men are watching usthrobbed through their land, and the cheering and applauding. We shall "little fruit farm" was cut up into lose him. He will be made a major

"Forward—guide center!"

We are ascending a slope. Our line was never more steady on the parade ground. The man on my right chuckles to himself; the one on my left is struggling to repress the cheer rising in his throat. Exultation has replaced all other feeling.

"O-o-o-o! Scream! Shrick! Swish!" The artillery men have caught sight of us at last and that shell just cleared our heads and exploded on the other charge!" shouts our little captain, and now we cheer and cheer and charge.

"Double-quick - guide center - bed.

Another shell-but it missed us. Bullets from revolvers sing about us -a mighty cheer comes to onr ears from the brigade left behind-and now we drive into the smoke around the gun. It had infantry supportperhaps a company—and the gunners fought us hand to hand. There was hurrahing-cursing-yells of pain and screams of agony-blows with the saber and thrusts with the bayonet, and when we awoke from the nightmare the gun was ours and a regiment was moving up to hold the position we had won.

I did not look back as we moved down past the support to rejoin our own regiment in reserve. There was no need to. I knew the sight which waited for the roll-call after we had excitement of action to make them returned. Nineteen dead and wounded command left on that spot!

But we were cheered-hundreds shook our hands-Company "G" had won for itself a page in the records of war. - Detroit Free Press.

A Wall of Crushed Human Flesh.

One of the most appalling mine disasters which have occurred in the United States of late years happened just about a year ago in H. C. Frick & Co.'s mammoth mine, near Mount Pleasant, Penn. An explosion of gas and fire damp killed 107 men in less than that number of seconds. The victims were literally blown to pieces. Heads were found a hundred feet from the bodies that had borne them in life. A mass of wreckage, in which were indiscriminately mingled the corpses of men and mules, was packed against the side of the fatal heading so completely that it was with the greatest difficulty that the human bodies were extricated and removed. This awful wall of crushed flesh had been compressed by the force of the explosion until it was almost as solid as the coal itself. There was hardly a cottage in the hamlet that did not shelter mourners. At least six women went violently insane over the loss of their loved ones. Two women, widowed by the accident, attacked Superintendent Keighley near the entrance to the mine and nearly killed him with

In March, 1890, a naked lamp on the cap of a mule driver fred a "blower" of gas in a South Wilkesbarre (Penn.) him at Williamsburg, Yorktown, Fair colliery. The timbers of the mine caught fire from the gas. Eight men perished. They were slowly strangled to death by smoke or roasted by the is down a rough slope—across a swale flames. Every man left a widow and

The disaster in the Lane silver mine at Angelo, near San Andreas, Cal., in 1889 gained sadness from the fact that it came just before Christmas. Sixteen men were crushed to death by falling rock. Three of them left wives and children .- [New York

Making Medicine Palatable.

The Paris hospitals have a practice which may with profit be commended to the physicians and nurses of this country. Some years ago a leading physician of Paris, noting the strenuous objections entertained by many patients of the hospitals to taking medicine because of its noxious taste, conceived the idea that medicine should be administered in the food of the patients. He began a series of experiments to ascertain whether the taste of drugs might not be so disguised with food as to render them, if not palatable, at least less objectionable. The oils, such as cod-liver oil, castor oil and the like, he concealed in soups, and invented a peculiar bread known as the chalybeate bread, for the purpose of administering iron tonic, which many persons object strongly to taking on account of its taste. Every ounce of this bread contains one grain of the lactate of iron, and the quantity of iron tonic which a patient would take in the course of one day'r meals would be quite sufficient for all medical purposes. The idea is not a bad one for our doctors to follow, for a patient with a weak or squeamish stomach is often put to no little inconvenience or suffering by the abomniable taste of some necessary medicines. - Globe-Democrat.

Guild's Signa.

Two low whistles, quaint and clear, That was the signal the engineer-That was the siznal that Guild, 'tis said, Gave so his wife at Providence, As through the sleeping town, and thence

Out in the night, On to the light. Down past the farms, lying white, he sped.

As a husband's greeting, scant, no doubt, Yet to the woman looking out, Watching and waiting, no serenade,

Love-song or midnight roundelay Said what that whistle seemed to say: "To my trust true,

So love to you! Working or waiting, good night!" it said.

Brisk young bagmen, tourists fine, Old commuters along the line, Brakemen and porters glanced ahead, Smiled as the signal, sharp, intense,

Pierced through the shadows of Providence-"Nothing amiss-Nothing!-it is Only Guild calling his wife," they said Summer and winter the old refrain Rang o'er the billows of ripening grain,

Pierced through the budding boughs o'er

Flew down the track when the red sheaves Like living coals from the engine spurned;

Sang as it flew: "To our trust true, First of all, duty! Good night!" it said. And then, one night, it was heard no more From Stonington over Rhode Island shore:

And the folk in Providence smiled and As they turned in their beds: "The engineer Has once forgotten his midnight cheer." One only knew

To his trust true, Guild lay under his engine, dead.

-[Bret Harte.

HUMOROUS.

A man's deeds live after him. So do his mortgages. Coasting is delightful sport for boys but it has its drawbacks. Jealousy will create heart burn and so will too many buck wheat cakes. "Real clevaw fellaw, Baggs is, real clevaw fellaw." "But what is he clever at?" "Why, at being so dooced clevaw, don't chew knaw." Greenland has no cats. How thankful the Greenlanders should be. Imagine cats in a country where the nights are six months long!

what he would do if he were a woman and every woman tells of things she would not do if she were a man. Doctor-Did you have much of a chill? Fair Patient-It seemed so.

Every man in the world is telling

Patient-No; they were in my dress-Schoolmaster-Scientists tell us the moon is inhabited. George (from the bottom of the class) -Then where do the people go when there's only

Doctor-Did your teeth chatter. Fair

A placard posted through a country town once announced the opening of the Theatre-Royal "under the management of Miss--, newly-decorated and painted."

Foreigner-I was in your Congress once when the scene was noisier than that in a stable. American-That must have been when the "neighs" were being counted!

A man never realizes how much waiting can be done in an hour until he waits on the sidewalk for some one who has stepped into a house "just for a minute."

First Boy (threateningly) - Just wait till I ketch yer arter school. Second Boy (advancing defiantly)-Why don't ye take me now? First Boy (backing off)-Me mind is on me les-

A professor in the medical department of Columbia College asked one of the more advanced students: "What is the name of the teeth that a human being gets last?" "Falso teeth, of course."

She-But why do you say I don't care for you any more? He-Oh! I know I'm nothing more to you. Only the other day that puppy died and you had it stuffed. Would you do as much for me?

Miss Molly McGinnis-Yes, tobogganing is all very well, but you don't know whether you will come back alive or dead. Gus de Smith-Eryou've always come back alive, I suppose, Miss Mollie?

Brown-Say, Jones, when you come in late at night don't you always wake your wife? Jones (promptly) -- Never. Brown (surprised) -- Jee-Better late than never-Going to hosaphat! How no you manage it? Jones (with a sigh)—I don't have tou

FRANK W. GIST. EDITOR Entered at the Post Office in Calera as Second Class Matter.

CALERA, SETTERDAY, APRIL 9.

& NNOUNCEMENTS.

Deans as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, sub-ject to the action of the democratic par-

McMillan as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county and there was no action other than

We are authorized to announce John

We are authorized to announce Wm. R. A Milner as a candidate for the office of Circuit Clerk of Shelly county,

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic and conservative party.

John A. Campbell.

THE last "jump of the cat" was the biggest leap of the season.

Jones physic seems to be good for eats, judging from the way that one jumped over in Barbour.

Florence hotel.

CAMPAIGN news from Saturday to tion of the committee. Monday night reads this way: Seven counties speak and add sixtytwo votes to the Jones column and saying that their failure to draw ful grandeur, will do more to con .00 to Kolb.

to talk before the mass meeting, votes from "all factions."

had caught it at it," disagrees with superior numbers and better judgelate editorials in the News calling ment. the Chronicle Ananias.

It is reported on the streets of Calera that Editor Dubose has quit the Presbyterians and joined the Campbellites. Clarence says its a joke. Rather heavy joking, young man.

seem to be in any hurry about answering those questions from Hale and Blount counties on the Ocala platform.

followers will meet him in Birming-ham on the 30th of May they will sels of democracy in this county? overwhelming that his four dele-sels of democracy in this county? have an opportunity of seeing him All those who are for "Jones, Unity The handwriting is on the wall, start on that "trip to the moon" he and Harmony" in this county will and Kolb's doom is sealed. told them about two years ago at cast their influence with the legal Centreville.

meeting to "preserve the party," but if necessary let him "go to the devil." The democratic party was organized to save men and not to damn them. Stick to the principles of democracy Judge, and you proposition is plainer, no solution gentleman, as an able and impartial further the nest interest of the party, will be saved.

THE Birmingham News, in speaking of Adams' convention, con- day at Clayton, and respectfully cludes an article with this sentence: dedicate it to the disaffected ele-"It will be decidedly interesting to ment in Shelby. It needs no comknow just what Mr. Adams pro- ment. Read it, and you will see poses to do." Just watch him, Bro. your duty. Rhodes, and see if he don't start off on that "trip to the moon."

news items received this week, is face," is an utterance of one of the tion of Labor Unions and Alliance-ton Autauga, where, in addition to sending up a solid delegation of the restrict in favoring the adoption of the restrict in favoring the restri tion for Jones, the county almost olutions. Yet the gentleman want-unanimously endorsed one former olutions of strengthing the party in this county almost olutions. Yet the gentleman wantunanimously endorsed over former ed to reconsider the vote that adoptcontemporary and friend W. W. Wilkerson for re-election to the office of Probate judge.

TWENTY EIGHT counties out of the supremacy and precedent.

THE MASS MEETING.

The mass meeting held at Columbiana on Saturday last was a failure. We make this assertion from a calm and unbiased stand point of diction, a wealth of reason, a flow

It was called presumably for the purpose of offering a protest against the action of the committee, and to take steps toward securing harmo-We are authorized to announce D. R. ny. It failed in each purpose. The endorsement of the Pitts committee. S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county ple. As such a body it was a complete failure. The number present and participating was very small, subject to the action of the democratic and came with no authority to speak The products of his mighty brain, for any but themsevels.

One view of it will convince any reasonable man that its action is not worthy of any sort of conside- own denial of immortal existence; authority and put themselves unration. The most liberal estimate and you have only to read his utof those voting places the number at thirty. When the committee met there were thirty-six members present, so that leaving any semblance of authority out of the question, the former was It won't work Parson. The good the nearer a representative it the shadow of perfection that democrats of Birmingham saw you body of citizens and democrats. only remains in eternity. Such some speaking and much resonant with that Third Party fellow at the It was a feeble protest, and a feeble effort to concentrate a supposed can but impress one as being antidissatisfied faction against the ac-even a larger body than acted in

But failing in their primary object they make a free will offering to the

The question then arises, will that end the fight, or will the Pitts elecampaign? If the latter, where is gives a large majority against him, IF Rev. S. M. Adams' deluded to be found the final adjustment and in Jackson the majority was so organization, for the issues between one side standing for Jones and organized democracy, the other for Kolb and personal preferment. No from Gov. Jone's speech last Satur-

"Ir God Almighty should do any thing that the people considered wrong, they had a right to rise in Amone other gratifying election their might and hurl it back in his amend them, but was ruled out of rection.

is the parson.

GOSSIP OF THE CRITIC.

I have read the eulogy of Robert Ingersoll on the life and character of Walt Whitman. In them I find a chastity of sentiment, a purity of diction, a wealth of reason, a flow of soul, a conception of the beautiful which come from a mighty and nowerful brain. Ingersoll is the life of the significance in the simultaneous appearance in this city of Mr. J. C. Manning, the Third Party evangelist from Georgia, and Brother Adams of Bibb.

These two "Apostles of Reform," via the Ocala platform and the St. Louis convention, are said to have been in close communion at a hotel in the city yester-day.—Birmingham Evening News. powerful brain. Ingersoll is the great leader of advanced thought commonly called an infidel. Aside ment-railroad-telegraph-democrat, from his skepticism, he is the greatest living orator of the age, judged from the standpoint of eloquence and brilliant intellect. In the lat- borning of the Third Party, that ter he soars far above the average he may get some boodle that will brain, his mind grasping thoughts that are pure and delicate as the lilly, yet grand and sublime as the tempest. Beauty of vision is combined with a depth of comprehension that makes his every sentence a living, breathing expression of power. infuseing the very souls of his hearers with an advanced conception of human life, with its passions, charity and love, are a refutation of his who voted ignored its action and terances, approaching so near to the voice of the gods, to feel that the soul which lives with such a brain cannot die. Such genius, it seems to us, is a strange way to perhaps, cannot recognize a divine obtain recognition. being as its master, but weaker minds can only see in it the reflection of omnipotence casting through pictures as he draws of human life types of a life beyond where all must end in immortal perfection. Not even denying their right to A reading of his sublime sentences enter a protest, we feel justified in and an absorption of their wondervince one of the fallacy of his position than all the attacks made upon CANDIDATE BURNS was too shrewd the committee meeting, ought to him by puny and intolerant brains convince them that their cause is from the standpoint of abstract thethough he was called for several hopeless. Seeing their error, reas- ology. No clearer proof can given, times. John knows how to get on and right would have dictated no higher conception can be reachtheir wisest course in accepting the than is received by letting into the claiming to be regular, though on difrebuke given them by the conspicu- heart and brain the beauty and "Col. PITTS assertion that the ous absence of support, and they brightness of the mortal mold which "Chronicle did tell the truth, for he would have gracefully given way to easily convince us of its divine origin an lits eternal tendency. gersoll's own mind gives out the answer to his false reasoning.

Col. H. C. Tompkins has an-Pitts committee, and place them- nounced his candidacy for congress it is most probable that the State con selves beyond the pale of organized from the second district. He also of the McMillan committee did so democracy. It is plain now that issues a call for a meeting of the through misrepresentation as to the the coming state convention will be State Executive Committee. The called upon to again decide a contest meeting is called for the 15th inst., as, the Pitt- committee in order to from Shelby county. In deciding when it is supposed that Col. Tomp. bring about harmony and resultant MR. TURPIN, candidate for conit the convention will only need to kins will resign the chairmanship faith, and in a spirit of all fairness, gress in the ninth district, doesn't endorse the action of the last con- and enter actively into the cam- offered to make all concession necessar-> show the utter hopelesness of Kolb's reason be expected from the strong to ment again go on with a county canvass. Barbour his home county, JUDGE HARRALSON, of Selma, is a canthe two factions embraces the issue between Jones and Kolb. It is between Jones and Kolb. principally an issue between men who want the county offices, the to the pople of Alabama. Would it not be the fitting thing for Perry county to honor the worthy son of our si-ter Dallas?-Marion Standard.

Being acquainted with Judge Harralson's character as a christian Judge of the City court of Selma, it The Journal copies an extract gives us pleasure to copy the para- ly the friend, but more able to carry graph above-and also add that the the party to success, and that the convention can make no mistake in State convention will, when assembled in June, being fully apprised of the nominating him as one of the asso- true inwardness of conditions in this ciate judges.

work of organizing the People's Party will be actively under way in Alabama. the fact that the party is given by will be actively under way in Alabama. it resolved that we as democrats look-ample facts before it to justify this sons, denounce and repudiate the acassertion. Mr. Adams' "conven. tion of the self constituted, so called speakers before the mass-meeting men" is called for May 30th and the holds the rule of the few instead of view indicates that the "cat is dance wish the facts setforth in the ed the resolutions, that he might getting ready to jump" in that di- preamble, we will recognize the Pitts

Bro. Adams is still at his old; Col. Pitts, in his speech before give 82, with still a majority for the governor of 83. With Kolb's utter defeat in his own county, and the Powderly conference. A few days defeat in his own county, and the later he is in "close communion" fall down and worship him. The governor's overwhelming endorse- later he is in "close communion" fall down and worship him. The ment at home shows that tide has with Manning, the People's Party McMillan wing will pay about as turned to the side of democratic evangelist. A remarkable worker much heed to Pitts as the Savior did to the devil.

ARE THEY TWO OF A KIND?

The significance is plain to us. As a sub-treasury-Ocala-govern-Mr. Adams has found himself exploded and he wants to be at the be necessarily spent. The parson is a "sooner," brother News.

EVERY speaker in the mass meeting at Columbiana admitted-in fact it was set forth in the preamble-that the McMillan committee is the legal head of the democratic party of Shelby county, yet those der the control of a body that had been condemned. Such conduct by men claiming to be loyal democrats,

THE MASS MEETING.

LUTING.

At the mass meeting last Saturpower, all beauty, all grandeur, day, there was a very small crowd present, the most liberal estimate being thirty. The following resolutions were adopted, and the Pitts committee was instructed to call a primary election:

of the democratic party existing in Shelby county (a fact very much to be deplored.) each faction having its referent grounds, one known as the McMillan committee, the creation of a convention by appointment, and the the result of a primary election; and whereas, the faction claiming the regularity of the Pitts committee have demonstrated beyond a doubt, that they are in the majority, and whereas vention in recognizing the regularity true conditions existing in this county but no doubt in good faith, and wherery for a complete conciliation, except actual and absolute humiliation on Two counties have spoken which their part which latter could not in the weak, and whereas all of such overtures have with s orn been rejected by the McMillan committee; and whereas, as the so called regular a primary election as demanded by a large majority of the democratic veters giving as a reason for such action, that it preferred the defeat of the party in August to even endangering its affection in the party in this county, is directly attributable to the above mentioned action of the McMillan ough news service from every important interests of the south.

Sommittee and to general uncom
The source of the McMillan ough news center in the world.

Somewhat is the part of the south.

The source of the south of t promising and intolerant management, evidencing incompetency to and believing that the Pitts committee judging from its action is not oncounty, recognize the regularity and legality of the Pitts committee, and whereas, we as democrats recognize No DOUBT before the 1st of June the the fact that the party is greater than Our morning contemporary has and desiring its success above all percommittee as the proper exponent of true democracy of Shelby county.

THERE IS GREAT EXCITEMENT sixty-six, had up to Tuesday, held tricks. He is holding on to the the mass-meeting last Saturday was Among Rhoumatic sufferers over the primaries or conventions, resulting presidency of the alliance, manipuates follows:

Jones has 165 dele-lates a county convention now and lates a county convention now and late gates and Kolb 81, showing a ma- then, has himself elected a delegate would come back to the "true par Lightning Remedy for Rheumatism and jority for Jones of 84. Add to this to the state convention with in-Perry's prorate of 7 and Jones has structions to cast the vote for mitagged From Perry will nority candidates, at the same calls but we will divide with you!"

It certainly making for itself a world with pour in the struction of the state country is full of Rheumatism. The manufacturers sell it on an absolute guarantee, and offer to retain the same calls but we will divide with you!"

It is a struction of the state country is full of Rheumatism. The manufacturers sell it on an absolute guarantee, and offer to retain the struction of the state country is full of Rheumatism. The manufacturers sell it on an absolute guarantee, and offer to retain the struction of the state country is full of Rheumatism.

> SOMETHING NICE FREE. ouyour address to B.W Wreng, Gen. Pass. Agent 23 Tenn. Virginia & Lines, Knoxville, hnn. and he will send you a hardewise lithographic postage 110

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA: ALABAMA. Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York Louisvilte and Birmingham at regular rates cyarged by the larger cities.

We transact a general banking business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

Fire and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

Brick Store, Montgomery Avenue.

Whereas, There are two factions PATENT MEDICINES,

CIGARS AND TOBACCOS.

Prescriptions Carefully Compounded at All Hours by an Experienced Druggist.

Having Just Opened a Drug Business in Calera, I Desire to Solicit the Patronage of All Who are in Need of Goods in My Line, Which are Offered at the Lowest Possible Margines.

A. R. SCOTT, Proprietor

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION.

Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

papers.

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.
the farmer's family, bringing each week

6. Bill Arp, Plunkett, and Uncle Re 2. It is invaluable to the farmer's family, bringing each week the farmer's family, bringing each week the farmer's family, bringing each week to the fireside and happiness to mus and a host of other special writers are engaged by the year, and their inimitations are engaged by the year.

It covers the news of the whole itable sketches appear each week. world, having its correspondents scat- 7. It is the People's Friend, and it tered over the globe, and having a thorthe sturdy champion of the agricultur.

scenter in the world.

8. It pays more money for its species lts Agricultural Department alone features and for its news service that is worth many times its subscription any other four of the weekly news paper price to every farmer. This department of the south, and much more foan any other four of the weekly newspaper in America.

1. It is the cheapest, being only Only 1.

wnose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. Its Woman'3 and Childeren's Deer time a hen lays an egg she pays for partments are a source of infinite pleas- one issue of the greatest weekly newspo ure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these is a household word

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of you neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta. Ga.

THE ALABAMA (PREMIUM NO. 14) FREE.

This handsome Carriage is only one of the many Vehicles which ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY is offering its customers for 1822 Special Premiums for Men, Women, Boys and Girls.
THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER produced the Champion Crops reports. the State last year. Write for Circulars and Prices.

ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPAD

MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA

GENERAL INFORMATION.

PAUL ROAD TIME TABLE

W.	6222326	OMD 1	10111	T I L L
	Louis	VILLE &	NASH	VILLE.
₩o. 1.	South	Bound,		4:53 a.	m.
	44	4.6		4:41 p.	m.
9,		64		5:10 a.	m.
2.	North	Bound,		10:19	1
16 4	6.6	44		10:05 p.	m.
10,	4.6	66		7:15 p.	m.

R. T. V. & G. R. R.

No. 1, To Selma, 4:40 p. m. 2:04 a. m. " 2, From Selma, 10:40 p. m.

ALABAMA MINERAL.

4:35 p. m. 10:25 a. m. No. 85, Arrives at 86, Departs at

AT THE CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter. Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. H. Kidd. County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland.

Superintendent of Education-T. N. Huston. County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. Dyeey, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the

RICHARD K. FOX. Square. New York City. Franklin Square.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

The next best thing possible to insur-Calera.

Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the stolms of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old rge should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-

LOCAL LODGES.

A. F. A. M. J. D. Hardy, W. M.
J. R. Pratt. S. W.
W. H. H. Whatley, J. D.
W. W. Wilson, S. D.
F. M. Blake, J. D. T. C. McKibbon, Sec.
John Black, Treas.
A. M, Sanders, Tyler.
Meets second and fourth Saturday nights in each month.

K. OF P.
T. C. McKibbon, C. C.
J. B. Randall, V. C.
G. J. Wright, P.
J. F. Palmer, M. A.
W. E. Brinkerhoff, M. E.
L. G. Privett, K. R. S. & M. F. Elbert McClinton, I. G. A. R. Scott, O. G. Meets second and fourth Friday nights

K. & L. OF H. L. G. Privett, P.
Mrs. G. B. Finley, V. P.
Mrs. M. Hardy, C.
J. Black, Sec.
S. Stein, Treas.
W. C. Hazard, Guide.
Bishard Francis, Guardie. Richard Francis, Guardian. Henry Sanders, Sen. Meets every Thursday night.

K. OF H.

G. B. Finley, D.
J. D. Hardy, V. D.
J. H. Duran, A. D.
J. B. Randall, F. R. A. Campbell, R.

Stein, Treasurer. M. W. Jones, C. Meets 1st and 4th Thursday nights.

FINAL SETTLEMENT NOTICE. STATE OF ALABAMA) Probate Court March 14, Estate of William Ozley, deceased.

This day came John W. Ozley, as administrator of the estate of William Ozley, deceased, and filed his accounts, vouchers, evidences and statement for a final settlement of the same. It is or-dered that the 11th day of April, 1892, heappointed a day for making such set-lement, at which time all parties in interest can appear and contest the same

if they think proper. 119mchet

R. W. Cons, Judge of Probate.

TOWN TOPICS.

Mr. W. E. Brinkerhoff made a business trip to Meredian, Miss., on Tuesday.

Fruit growers are congratulating themselves that the prospects are good for a fair crop.

The masonic hall has undergone some repairs this week in the way of a new carpet.

seats add much to a house of wor

While the spring sunshine is making nature verdant go and examamine Mrs. McCauley's stock of millenery.

Mrs. C. C. Vandergrift, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. METHODIST—Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

Hermodist—Services on the second frank Corbett, of Birmingham, results turned to her home at Montevallo last Saturday.

At Wilsonville a democratic club was organized, which endorsed the action of the executive committee. There were forty-five members enrolled, twice as many as voted at the mass-meeting on the same day.

Mr. S. K. Harrel, who has been the express agent at this place for some time, has been transferred to Nashville, where he assumes the among his friends in Calera last Sunposition of night clerk. His place day. here is filled by Mr. Elbert McLenden, formerly a messenger on the Boys, pile all the hoops in the front of the JOURNAL office you world containing all the latest sensa-tional and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes property. The shearring of Mr. Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy.

> West Bibb; its editor is R. M. Pendleton, and it will support the nombe a lively and credible sheet.

> Our Bibb county exchanges are two to one for the mass meeting faction, and if we understand the situation about that proportion of the people favor that side of the question. But it is a notorious fact that people outside of Bibb can't tell anything about what is the true condition of her politics.

On the 27th ult., at his home in Bibb county, Mr. Williamson Jones, an aged, well known and respected citizen, died of paralysis. Mr. J. was a native of Georgia, but has lived at or near where he died for ty and plain, practical intelligence. He was slow to conclusions and altook great interest in political affairs, and was a staunch democrat, never refusing vote the ticket nom inated by the party of his allegiance without a scratch. He leaves behind him an aged companion, eight grown up sons and daughters, several grand children, and a host of friends. The writer of this notice knew Mr. Jones for many years, in his company often, and was always entertained and benefitted at each meeting, and he extends to the sorrowing family earnest sympathy.

ANOTHER PRIZE PROBLEM. If Moses was the son of Pharaoh's daughter, what relation would Moses be to the daughter of Pharaoh's son?

The Queen will give an elegant Mason and Risch or Steinway Fine Toned Upright Piano to the first person answering the above problem correctly; an elegant Gold Watch for the second correct answer; a China Dinner Set for 3rd correct answer; an elegant Silk Dress Pattern for the fourth correct answer, and many answer; an elegant Silk Dress Pattern for the fourth correct answer, and many other valuable prizes, all of which will be announced in the March issue of the Queen. Valuable special prizes will be given for the First Correct Answer from Each State. Each person answering must enclose fifteen U. S. two cent stamps for The Canadian Queen Military Schottische, just out, together with a copy of The Queen containing a beautiful water-color production, "Seven He Loves," and full particulars of our Educational Prize Competitions. The object of offering these prizes is to increase the circulation of this popular Magazine.

By sending to-day you may secure a valuable prize. Address The Canadian Queen, "B," Toronto, Can.

HUGH T. CAFFEY, PHYSICIAN & SURGEON

CALERA, ALA. feb12-1v.

WANTED:—A lady in each town to take orders r something new that every lady wants; we pay 5:0 for first s hours' work; sample and leatmetton, cents. Mrs. Harr' work, cample and leatmetton, D. Ale.

MEN ARE NOTHING.

THE PEACE OF THE GREAT WHITE

These are not times when democrats can afford to trifle with the peace of the great white race. A crisis has arisen in its history. No true democrat can fan the fires of passion that they may light his pathway to office.

These fair women, these little children, The Baptist church will be supplied with new pews. Comfortable sacrifices, and all the proud hopes that becken us to a glorious future cry, but becken us to a glorious future cry, but "God forbid." The weal or woe of this generation, and of generations yet unborn, depends upon the unity and success of the deocratic party of Alabama. Shatter it or rend it in twais, and all the woes of our past will be bright compared to the future which awaits us. What man shall deem himself so great or so low that he will consciously be made the instrument to work out our ruin?

Men are nothing. If there is nothing in this contest but the personal ambition of Reuben F. Kolb or Thos. G. Jones, it Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

Cumberland Presentan—J. C Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3.

Column Arnold, a charming young lady from Six Mile, stopped over in Calera from 11 till 5 o'clock yesterday. She was en route to Montgomery.

In the case of the State vs. Jas. Handley, charged with the murder of Joe Bowman, the jury returned a verdict of guilty, and the prisoner was sentenced to penitentiary for life.

Column Arnold, a charming should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down the valls of our civilization, which can be guarded by an united white rice. No extremity can drive me to take the party by the throat no matter how wrongful I might deem a decision against me. Whatever the voice of the party appoints to speak for it, I will heed and obey.

If my competitor cannot see his duty as I see mine that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either of them should strike them down than that either would be better for the state that the lightning should strike them down than

If my competitor cannot see his duty as I see mine, the people will surely judge between us. The verdict of Barbour county, if it speaks for me will end this long contest, which involves so much and where one of the contestants himself threatens to destroy the party rather than submit to its decision.—Governor Jones at Clayton.

Prof. Ellenburgh, the earnest and capable principal of the Pelham High school was in Calera last Saturday.

LIKE A GREAT RAILWAY.

with its branches running in every direction, are the arteries and veins which convey the blood to every part of the human system. A cold, sudgen changes or exposure, may cause poisonous acids to clog the circulation, and then comes Rheumatism. Beware! if you value life remove the obstruction with Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy. You can mond's Lightning Remedy. You can get a large bottle at the druggists for $5 or it will be sent to you by prepaid express with a guarantee of curelif you send to Drummond Medicine Co., 48-50 Mai den Lane, New York. Agents wanted.

Specimen Cases.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with Neuralgia and Rheumatism, his stomache was disordered, his Liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured

Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Using three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawha, O., had five large Fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklens Arnica salve cured him en

IMPORTANT TO LADIES

Sir-I made use of your Philotoken Sir—I made use of your Philotoken with my last child, in order to procure a safe and easy travil. I used it about two months before my expected time, and I had a very quick and easy confinement. Nothing occurred to protract my convalescence, and I got about in less time than was usual for me. I think it a medicine that should be used by every expectant mother, for should they but try it as I have, they would never again be without it at such times. I am again be without it at such times. I am yours respectfully,
Mrs. ELIZABETH DIX.

Horace Adams of Anniston was mong his friends in Calera last Sun-lay.

Any merchant or druggist can procure Risley's Philotoken for $1 a bottle.

CHARLES F. RISLEY, Wholesale Druggist, 62 Cortlandt St., New York.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION

Is hereby called to meet in the Court House in Columbiana, Ala., at 11:30 a. m., on April 21, 1892, for the purpose of selecting delegates to the State, Congressional, Chancery, Judicial and Senatorial Republi can Conventions, and to nominate candidates for Representative in the property. The shearing of Mr. General Assembly, Judge of Probate, Sheriff, Circuit Clerk, Tax Assessor, Tax Collector, Treasurer, Superintendent of Education, Coroner and a Commissioner for each Commissioner's District and for such other business as may be deemed necessary for the success of the Republican No. 1, Vol. 1 of the Bibb County Democrat is on our table. It is an enterprise of Woodstock in North Worth Pith Woodstock in North Research Party in the past. It is recommended by the Chairman that the Republicans in each beat meet in their respective beats on Wednesday, the 13th of April, at such time and place as the beat committeeman may select and select delegates to the county conance against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of first number is a true index, it will lowing representation in the convention: beat committeeman may select, and select delegates to the county cona six column four page, and if the vention. The different beats in the county will be entitled to the fol-

> Beat 1, Columbiana, and Shelby8 2, Spring Creek..... Calera... Montevallo, Aldrich, Gurnee ... Beat 6, Helena .. Longview or Camp Branch...
> Yellow Leaf......
> Wilsonville.... Best 10, Harpersville..... Beat 12, Highland
> Beat 13, Bold Springs,
> Beat 14, Sterrett or Vandiver
> Beat 16. Vincent
> Leat 17, Pelham,

In view of the uncertain position of the Democratic Pary on all the of which are well patronized in the way of membership. A list of the officers of each are given below:

Inty-eight years, where he has ever duestions affecting the masses of our people, namely: the Tariff, Silver, and Finance, your chairman recommends that every Republican in Shelevach are given below: by county shall constitute himself a committee of one to organize the Republicans of his beat for active work, Let us meet the oppressors of of the common people in every beat in the county, advocating the cause ways steadfast to principle. He of right from now until the polls close next August, and the people will

J. D. HARDY, Chairman Republican County Committee.

Calera, March 27, 1892.

--FINE MILLINERY--

Mrs. S. H. McCauley's,

NEAR THE DEPOT,

Montevallo, ... Ala. A Splendid Line of Trimmed and Untrimmed Hats in the Latest Styles, and at Reasonable Prices.

HANDKERCHIEFS & HOSIERY. Saturday Sales at $1

HARDWARE & TINWARE,

Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded

Shells always on Hand.

118 19TH STREET, BIRMINCHAM.

The Calera Journal,

A Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of he state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at every point in the county.

Quikly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

Commercial

THE JOURNAL will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patremage of all who have any work

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

Eacts Worth Knowing.

Q. Is Alabastine expensive?
A. No, it is the cheapest article for the purpose on the market.
Q. How is that? Cannot I purchase kalsomines at a few cents per pound?
A. Yes, kalsomines can be purchased at almost any aries.

A. Yes, kalsommes can be purenased at almost any price.
Q. Why then is Alabastine less expensive?
A. In the first place a package of Alabastine, costing a few cents more, will cover double the surface that a package of kalsomine will.
Q. What other advantage has Alabastine that kalsomines do not possess?
A. Alabastine is entirely different from all kalsomines. It is manufactured from a base in itself a cement, and when applied to a wall sets hard.

nard.

Q. How do kalsomines differ from this?

A. Kalsomines are made from whiting, clays, chalss or some inter powder for a base and are entirely dependent on animal glue to hold them on the wall.

the wall.

What are the results?

In one case the Alabastine being a cement dens with age, and the kalsomines as soon the glue, which constitutes its binding lity, decays, rubs and scales off, as it has hing to hold it on the wall.

Does Alabastine require washing and uping off before reconting?

No, Alabastine when once applied to a an surface can be recoated for any length of the without having to wash or scrape the

Q. Does this feature count for much?

A. Ask any practical housekesper, who has been driven from home to have walls washed and scraped, whether it will be desirable to have all of this overcome, and walls improved instead of spailed by coating them.

Q. How can I get Alabastine?

A. From your local paint dealer. If he does not keep it in stock, and tries to sell you something else, tell him you are determined to try Alabastine, and if he will not keep it you will get it elsewhere.

The Yaquilas Indians, of California, are again on the warpath.

ONE dose of Bercham's Pills relieves sick headache in 2) minutes. For sale by all drug-gists. 25 cents a box.

Mayor Tillbrook Scrofula in the Neck

By Hood's Sarsaparilla All parents whose children suffer from Scrofula, Salt Rheum, or other diseases caused by impure blood, should read the following from Mrs. J. W. Tillbrook, wife of the Mayor of McKeesport, Penn

"My little boy Willie, now six years old, two years Bunch Under One Ear which the doctor said was Scrofula. As it conting ued to grow he finally lanced it and it disenarged timates appear, was a reply, I said: "I for some time. We then began giving him Hoo is ask them, the Republicans, to say Sarsaparilla and he improved very rapidly until it whether it is or is not true, according to healed up. Last winter it broke out again and was their standard of justice to the agricul-

Erysipelas

parilla. He has never been very robust, but now seems healthy and daily growing stronger. with. The doctor seemed quite pleased at his appearance and sold be feared at one time that we should lose him. I have also taken Hood's Sarsapar lla myself and am satisfied that I have been helped by it." Mrs. J. W. Tillbrook, Fifth Avc., McKeesport.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, perfectly

Book to "Mothers" mailed FREE. BRADFIELD RECULATOR CO. ATLANTA, GA.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

William McKeekan, Druggist at Bloomingdale, Mich. "I have had the Asthma badly ever since I came out of the army and though I have been in the drug business for fifteen years, and have tried nearly every thing on the market, nothing has given me the slightest relief until a few months ago, when I used Boschee's German Syrup. I am now glad to acknowledge the great good it has done me. I am greatly relieved during the day and at night go to sleep without the least trouble." (9)

SHORTHAND.

YOU NEED TO FEAR

The Policy of Protection.

IT RESULTS IN THE FARMERS' SITUATION BEING MORE HOPELESS THAN EVER UNLESS THEY ROUSE TO ACTION AGAINST REPUBLICANISM - SPEECH OF GOVERNOR BOIES, OF IOWA.

The following address, made by Governor Boies, of Iowa, in reference to statements made by United States Senator Allison, will be read with interest by farmers in all parts of the country: Senator Allison, it appears, is dissatisfied with the statistics furnished by our Bureau of Labor Statistics on which I based my statement in New York that grain-raising in lowa, by reason of depressed market prices, had failed to pay the farmer for his labor, reckoning it at market rates in other lines of business.

He demonstrates to, his own satisfac tion that the average price of corn during the years of which I spoke was a fraction over twenty-five cents, instead of twenty-two, as stated by me. Here he again unintentionally misrepresents his neighbor. What I did say was the average price of corn, soon after harvest, when, as farmers generally know, the great majority of them were compelled to sell, was twenty-two cents a bushel. The average reached by the Scnator is, I suppose, the average for the whole year, and includes the profits made by purchasers of grain who buy it of farmers and hold it for prices that very few farmers realize because they cannot be come speculators and hold their crops.

Again the Senator satisfies himself that the cost of producing an acre of corn is $5.55 instead of $8, as shown by the estimates of the farmers upon which my statements were made. That interest at six per cent. on the value of the land used would increase this cost to $7.40 an acre, instead of about $10.50, as shown by an average of the farmer's estimates. That the average yield during the years referred to was 34.21, instead of 334, and the average price during these years was 25.1 cents, as here-

A little calculation, therefore, shows that according to the Senator's views the entire cost of producing an acre of corn in lowa from 1885 to 1889, both incluive, was $7.46, while the average value of the crop during the same years was 8.50, showing a clear net profit during all these years on every acre of corn prouccel in the State, after paying all expenses of production and interest at six per cent. on the value of land used, of $1.04 for each acre. To this also must be added his estimate of the value of the stocks, forty-five cents per acre, making a clear net profit of $1.49 per acre. In my speech at Cherokee to which the Senator's address, wherein the above es- | the industries of other States and negtural interests of this State, that from We again gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla with most excellent results and he has had no further trouble. His cure is due to the use of Hood's Sarsa low a were such that the people of this Iowa were such that the people of this State should have been satisfied there-

Senator Allison is entitled to credit for the prompt and explicit response he has made to that question. His answer is an emphasized affirmative. He says, and states with entire explicitness the figures on which his answer is based, that during these years the farmers of lowa made a clear profit of all all an know you will abandon the conclusion acre on every acre of corn they produced. No man in these United States is in a United States farming has been a busi-position to state with a clearer under-ness that could properly be levied upon standing the position of his party or those engaged in manufacturing industries than is the learned Senator, and, in considering the comparative rights of different classes of our people to favorable legislation, we know what Senator Allison's opinion will be. He may right-fully speak for the party in his own State, whose most honored leader he is; and he may as properly speak for the national party to which he belongs, as one of the most trusted advocates of its |

What do the farmers of Iowa think of the situation as he presents it, as the party he represents in both State and Nation presents it through him? Stop with me a moment and look over the dismal years in question and tell me whether you feel that you ought to support a party vhose most intelligent representative declares, and furnishes his own figures to prove, that in these years you were not only paid for your work and interest on your investment, but that over and above this you received a net profit of $1.49 on every acre of corn produced.

What is the logic of these conclusions? Surely not that your industry is in a situation that demands favorable con-sideration at the hand of the lawmakers of this nation. Certain it is that, during the dark years of which I have spoken, you were in a situation where another $1.40 for every acre of corn you produced could have rightfully been taken from you and given to the protect ed industries of this country and still left your business a paying one.

You know this is a cruelly erroneous conclusion. You have not forgotten your struggle in these years of low prices. but what can you expect if they return in the near future, from a party whose high priests tell you these prices paid you an enormous profit?

Do you expect under such circumstances that the representatives of the Republican party in Congress from your own State, or any other, will urge legislation to improve your condition? You certainly cannot. You may rightfully expect that with such a view of your situation all legislation by that party will be framed, as it has been in the past, to advance the interests of other industries instead of your own. If I had a million tongues, with every one of them I would shout pressed far below any point they have ever yet reached before you can approach even your own Senators and Representatives with a demand for legislation in

You now know that prices must be de- Indians.

Did partisanship ever lead an intelligent mind to more erroneous conclusion? Are you, the farmers of lowa, the fettered slaves of political parties so that you cannot resent this cruel injustice to your calling?

But now, Senator Allison, I cannot leave you here. If you will carefully study Census Bulletin No. 104, issued from the Department of the Interior under date of August 22, 1891, you will find that the average per cent. of gain per capita, as shown by the assessed valuation of property in the United States during the last ten years, shows an increase of 15.01 per cent. per capita in the wealth of all the people of the United States.

If you will follow out the inquiry you will find that the average increase per capita of wealth during that time in Maine was 28.59 per cent.; New York, 20.65 per cent.; New Hampshire, 41.36 per cent.; Penusylvania, 25.45 per cent.; Vermont, 86.03 per cent., and Iowa, your own State, 1.95

You will see in the principal manufacturing States of this Union the average increase of wealth of the inhabitants is from ten times to more than forty times the average increase of the wealth of your own people, notwithstanding your State is a new one in which the natural increase in the value of real estate has been vastly greater than it has in any of the manufacturing States.

Will you tell me how you account for this if it is true that the agricultuual industries of Iowalhave been in the highly prosperous condition your figures in-

You certainly will not claim that these statistics are unfair. There is one other fact demonstrated by statistics from the same source to which I must invite the Senator's attention. The recent census shows that the aggregate population in twenty-six of the ninety-nine counties of the State has decreased during the last decade and that it has increased in seventy-three, A study of the figures de-monstrates that in fifty-four of the courties, the rural population has decreased and in forty-five only has it increased. These forty-five however, are counties that, at the beginning of the decade, were sparsely settled and contained within their limits vast areas of cheap wild land.

If farming has been the success your figures indicate, will you tell me why in largely more than half the counties of the State, the best in an agricultural sense in this country, less numbers of men are engaged in it to day than were so engaged ten years ago? No, your whole theory is wrong. You have directed your great talents to a study of lected a study of those of your own. You are now engaged in leading the party you represent in a cruel crusade against the most rital interests of the people who have so long honored you. You have become blind to their situation, to their necesssities. It is your duty to study and honestly investigate these. Do not be deceived by our present prosperous condition. It is due alone to calamities that have overtaken our neighbors in other States and blighted their harvests, while our own have been abundant. Go to the most reliable statistics you can get, study them and learn the condition of agricultural industries for a period of ten years past, and I that in Iowa or in anywhere else in these to build up other lines of industry. Look over the men of your acquaintance who during your public life have become millionaires. Tel! me of a single farmer in Iowa who has attained great wealth in his calling. Look at the men in whose interests the policy of protection which you advocate was adopted, and tell me whether it is not true that in those industries hundreds and thousands of men have become millionnaires and many of them many times millionnaires. And when you have completed the comparison tell me if you still believe the legislation of the last twenty years, which has levied an enormous tax on the class that remained poor for the benefit of the call that has grown rich, is just and right.

Prophetic Souls.

An amusing story demonstrating the power of imagination, comes from an English cathedral town. For many years half a dozen devout old ladies have been in the habit of going, in fine weather or in foul, to the early morning service in the cold min-Recently it was decided to ster. Recently it was decided to warm the church, and the old ladies, with one voice, protested against the innovation. "We shall be suffocated," they declared. "We shall be carried out fainting." One morning when bey arrived for their devotions the found half a dozen stoves set up in different nooks and corners of the cafhedral. In course of the service, therefore, three of the old ladies fairfied. We knew how it would be." they afterward said to the Dean. But the Dean confounded them by assuring them that the new stoves had never been lighted.

EVERYBODY who tries to make others happy gets paid for it in Heaven's money.

Corn bread has various names in different localities. The general name of the article is Indian. Bread. In Delaward griddle cakes made of Indian meal are called corn cakes. In Maryland they are called cookies. Pone is the name for Indian bread an inch or more in thickness and baked to a crisp crust top and bottom. In parts of New England corn meal, with every one of them I would shout baked into a thick crisp cake, is in the ears of the farmers of Iowa the called Indian bannock. The Puristartling truth which this speech of Senator Allison reveals. making that bread from the Bannock THE LONDON CABBY.

A Unique Specimen of an Interesting Class of Bread-Winners.

By no means the least interesting feature of London life is the "cabby, as he is called, the driver of the hansom cab. These cabs are so numerous that the city seems actually to swarm with them, and it is easy to believe the statement of the guide-books that there are 10,000 of these vehicles in the town. Of course, there is a great variety in the drivers, and it has more than once happened that the sons of families of considerable position have passed the better portion of their lives on the box of a hansom.

An American who was in London during the past summer encountered rather an odd specimen of cabby, a man who had in some way evidently come down in the world, unlessmounting a box be regarded as a rise. The stranger took a cab for a drive one afternoon, and, having no definite idea what he wished to do, told the driver to take him to some place that was worth seeing.

The cabby looked him over, apparently making up his mind what manner of man he had as passenger, and then started off in a direction which was not in the line of the American's previous explorations, although he had been in England a number of times and knew London tolerably well. The passenger poked up the little trap-door to the roof of the cab and asked where they were

"Along apiece," the driver returned. "Do you see, sir, that crowd on the corner?" he added, pulling up.

The American looked in the direction indicated, and saw a crowd of people gathered about a woman who was turning the crank of a barrelorgan. She was rather a pretty woman, and appeared strangely out of keeping with her occupation. "That is Lady Linton," he said. And by subsequent inquiry the American found that this was not a mere 'traveler's tale,' designed to beguile him, but that the organ-grinder was really a member of the nobility cast off by her family.

The hansom was started up again. and pretty soon the driver announced that they were in Chelsea.

"That house," he said, pointing it out, "is where that old crab-apple Carlyle lived. Further up the street, he continued, waxing more communicative, "there is a funny fellow named Whistler. He's a painter, and the papers pitch into his things like blazes, and he gets as mad as a hatter and answers them back. They say it's great fun for them that is in it. "You do not follow it up yourself, then," the American said. "No, sir," the cabby said. "I like better to give my time to flowers. I have a place that is pretty to look at, if I do say it; and I've taken a very tidy lot of prizes, too, sir. I go for chrysanthemums just now. That's the go, and I can make something to help me on with in the greenhouses and get the missis a new gown now and then."

The cabby who cultivated flowers for amusement and drove a casual passenger out to see the house of Carlyle could hardly be looked upon as a type, but as a variation he was at least interesting.—Boston Courier.

Balls of Feathers. In' the extreme South, more especially in Louisiana, and in New Orleans, worst of all, where French, Spanish, Italian and African-all races peculiarly susceptible to occult influences-predominate, superstition runs riot. Perhaps the most peculiar of the many methods adopted to work upon the superstitious negroes was the insertion by apparently super natural means of balls of feathers into pillows and bed. The closest scrutiny failed to discover rip or newly sewed seam in bed or pillow tick, and yet the balls were found buried in the mattresses and among the soft feathers of the pillows. They were made of soft, highly colored feathers brilliant and gaudy, scarlet and gold, bright blue and vivid green, and were about the size and shape of an orange A peculiar odor was exhaled, and when lightly struck an almost impal-able powder arose. One of the queer objects when cut in halves showed therein such an assortment as Shakspeare puts into his witches' caldron, as they brewed in darkness and tempest. Jerrold, all his life long, bitterly protested against the fashion of translating and adapting, which excluded the work of native writers and gave a reputation to men for work which they had not originated. Talking once with Mr. Planche (a noted adapter of plays) on this question, Plauche insisted that some of his characters were original. "Don't you remember," he said, "my baroness in 'Ask No Questions'?" "Yes, indeed. I don't think I ever saw a piece of yours without being struck by your barrenness," was the reply.

PROMINENT among chestnut bells

Pierce Well Excavator Co., New York. KEYSTONE Loads a ton in 5 minutes. Saves time, work, men, hay. Strong, durable, light draft. Send for description. KEYSTONE M'F'G GO. LOADER

S65 A MONTH for a Bright Young Hen or ZIEGLER & CO., Phila., Ph. FIN SICONS Due all NOLDIES, 4 disabled, $2 fee for increase, years experience, Write for Laws, A. W. McCormice, Sons, Washington, D. C. Cincinnati, C.

PATERITS W. T. Itzgerald, Washington, B. C. 40-page book free,

How's This?

We only One Hundred Dollars reward any case of catarrh that cannot be cured by taking Hall's Catarrh Curs.

F. J. CHENEY & Co., Props., Toledo, O. We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transacligations made by their firm. WEST & TRUAX, Wholesale Druggists, Toleds, WALDING, KINNAN & MARVIN, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O. Hall's Catarth Cure is taken internelly, acting directly upon the blood and inucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free Price 75c, per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

The Only One Ever Printed.

The Only One Ever Frinted.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words there except one word. The same is true of such new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine (°o. This house places a "trescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, DEAUTI-BULLITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE.

COUGHS, HOARSENESS, FORE THROAT, etc., mickly relieved by Brown's Bronchial moches. They surpass all other preparations in removing hoarseness and as a cough conedy are pre-eminently the best.

Two armed United States cutters are to be

For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and Stomach disorders, use Brown's from Eitters. The Best Tonic, it rebuilds the system, cleans the Bood and strengthens the muscles. A splendid ton-to for weak and debititated persons.

The Bengal, India, cotton trade has almost FITS stopped free by Dr. Kling's Great Nervy Restoren. No Fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise and a trial bottle free. Dr. Kline, 331 Arch St., Phila., Pa.

If you suffer from sick, nervous, neuralgic, rotine will cure you promptly. Fifty cents; drug stores. The Tiber has inundated the lower parts of ha Nouragia, Indigestion, and Enfourages, also Brown's Iron Bitters—It gives strength, asking old persons feel young—and young ersons strong: cleasant to take.

Salt Lake City, Utah, is having a natural

ONE ENJOYS Both the method and results when Syrup of Figs is taken; it is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and cures habitual constipation. Syrup of Figs is the only remedy of its kind ever produced, pleasing to the taste and acceptable to the stomach, prompt in its action and truly beneficial in its effects, prepared only from the most healthy and agreeable substances, its many excellent qualities commend it to all and have made it the most popular remedy known. Syrup of Figs is for sale in 50c and $1 bottles by all leading druggists. Any reliable druggist who may not have it on hand will procure it promptly for any one who wishes to try it. Do not accept any substitute.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. SAN FRANCISCO, GAL.
LOUISVILLE, KY. LEW YORK, N.Y.

Kennedy's Takes hold in this order:

Bowels. Liver, Kidneys, Inside Skin, Outside Skin,

Driving everything before it that ought to be out. You know whether you need it or not. Sold by every druggist, and manufactured by DONALD KENNEDY, HONDURY, MASS.

Buy or sell your Cotton on JONES 5-Ton Cotton Scale. For terms address Formes OF BINGHAMTON, RINGHAMTON, N. Y.

The seed is planted when you feel "run-down" and "used-up." Malarial, typhoid or bilious fevers spring from it—all sorts of diseases. Don't take any risk. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery invigorates the system and repels disease. It starts the torpid liver into healthful action, purifies and enriches the blood, and restores health and vigor. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it sets at work all the processes of digestion and nutrition, and builds up flesh and strength. For all diseases that come from a disordered liver and impure blood, skin, scalp and scrofulous affections, it's the only remedy that's guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure in every case, you have your money back. You pay only for the good you

The worst cases yield to the mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. That's why the proprietors can, and do, promise to pay $500 for a case of Catarrh in the Head which they cannot cure.

Sure cure for SICK HEAD-ACHE, impaired digestion, consti-pation, torpid glands. They arouse vital organe, remove nausea, dizineys and bladder. Conquerbillous discourses, Establish networks, Establish netwo 0 00

Beautily complexion by purifying blood. FURELY VEGETABLE.
The dose is nicely adjusted to suit case, as one pill can sever betto quach. Each vial contains 42, carried in vest ocket. We had pencil. Business man's great outcale. Taken easier than sugar. Sold everywhere. All genuine goods bear "Crescent." stamp. You get 33 page book with sample DR. MARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa from which the excess of oil has been removed, Is absolutely pure and it is soluble. No Chemicals are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more ecobonical, costing less than one centa cup. It is delicious, nour-ishing, strengthening, EASLLY DIOESTED, and admirably adapted for invalidations of the control of the contr as well as for persons in health. Sold by Gracers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO. Dorchester, Mass.

School, Library, and Office S-H-O-U-L-D Have a Dictionary.

Care should be taken to GET THE BEST. THE INTERNATIONAL, from Cover to Cover, Successor of the "UNABRIDGED," WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY.

No. 13 1892

AM. N. U.

Down the Stream.

Love! It began with a glance, Grew with the growing of flowers, Smiled in a dreamful trance, Reckoned not the passage of hours; Our passions' flood rose ever, Flowing for her and me, Till the brook became a river And the river became a sea.

Grief! It began with a word, Grew with the winds that raved; A prayer for pardon unheard, Pardon in turn uncraved; The bridge so easy to sever, The stream so swift to be free! Till the brook became a river,

And the river became a sea. Life! It began with a sigh, Grew with leaves that are dead; Its pleasures with wings to fly, Its sorrows with limbs of lead; And rest remaineth never For the wearier hours to be, Till the brook shall become a river, And the river become a sea.

-[Lord Houghton.

BETSEY'S IDEA,

BY HELEN FORREST GRAVES.

Mrs. Kybers's drawing-room had never looked lovelier than on this raw December afternoon. Long-stemmed roses in Royal Worcester vases, threw out fragrant hints of June; a cannel coal fire blazed in a huge colonial fireplace, and Lillian's hair flashed back its golden wires, half hidden by a fantastic Roman scarf.

Opposite the window, a strange, weird landscape in oils occupied the place of honor. Many an artist owed his life's success to entering the "Royal Road" through Mrs. Kyber's afternoon receptions and the obscure desciples of art vied with each other for

The room was full of people, quiet of voice, elegant of attire. Mrs. Kyber . bood by the doorway, smiling ano gracious.

Lilian, at the other end of the room, was dispensing bread and butter, orange-pekoe tea, and brown, frothing chocolate, and as the guests came and went, Mrs. Kyber was mentally coming to the agreeable conclusion that her afternoon was a success, when suddenly her "dearest foe," one Mrs. Magnus Martindale, fluttered up

"Good-by, dear!" she said. "So glad your rooms are so full! But you always did attract people."

"Thank you!" said Mrs. Kyber,

"And it's so ridiculous, isn't it," arm. added Mrs. Martindale, adjusting the fifth button of her glove, "that you and I should have chanced to fix upon the same evening for our reception?" "It's rather a coincidence," observed

"But then, you see, Signora Sivardi could only come to me on Tuesday. And Signora Sivardi is such an attraction! Good by! I really mustn't keep the horses waiting any longer." Mrs. Kyber's color had risen, and then paled. She looked at Lilian. Lilian returned the glance with interest, even while she gave old Miss Pooley a cup of chocolate and listened to Doctor Drowell's tedious reminiscences of his last trip to Egypt.

"Mother," she whispered, as she came past, carrying some sponge cakes to a lady in the corner, who seemed temporarily neglected, "as true as you live that woman has offered Sivardi more than we did, and the singer has thrown us over!"

And Mrs. Kyber only responded by a look of despair.

While the lady in the corner was eating her sponge cakes and drinking amber-clear tea, Lilian ran up stairs to the big western bedroom.

"Betsey," she cried, cheerfully, "there is some chocolate and cake for you, since you won't come into the drawingroom."

A round faced, dark eyed girl of twenty sat curried up in the window seat, staring out at the leaden sky.

It was Betsey Bloom, a second cousin of Miss Kyber.

"Me!" echoed Betsey, with an impatient movement of her shoulders "In the drawingroom? I should look pretty there, shouldn't I? But all the same, Lilian, it's real good of you to ask me. Mother said you city folks would be ashamed of me, but you are not-not a bit!"

Lilian sat down beside her on the window seat, and put her arm caressingly around the ill-gowned waist-

"No, I hain't!"

"Yes, Betsey, you have. Tell me what the matter is."

"The matter is," oried Betsey, "that I'm a failure! I've got to go back to Cockletown and own up that I'm beat. I thought I was going to make a living in New York, and I hain't no show at all. I thought, 'cause I could sing in the church choir, that I could | Lilian. give lessons and get engagements here. But I can't!"

"But you have a sweet voice, Bet-

"So have nine hundred and ninetynine other people. And I'm only Betsey Bloom of Cockletown, and I never shall be any one else if I live to be a hundred. So I've made up my mind that I'll go back, and go into the mill, or get a place to teach the district school. And there's an end of all my dreams about a c-c-career!"

And Betsey's big round tears trickled down her cheeks, and the end of her nose grew purple, like an under-ripe

"You an' your ma've been awful good to me, Lilian," whispered she. "I won't never forget it. I know I'm an awkward country girl, and I know that my clothes ain't up to the New York mark, and I don't even pronounce my words like you do; butbut you've treated me just as if I was | critically, or you will embarrass her." a queen!"

"Don't cry, Betsey," soothed Lilian. "Drink this hot chocolate, and then lie die on the sofa and rest. You're tired and nervous."

"I don't know about being nervous," snorted Betsey, "but I am tired. I guess you'd be tired a-trampin' up and down to educational bureaus, and intelligence offices, and musical headquarters and all that sort o' thing. I dunno why I can't have the luck o' that Madam Sivardi that's to sing at your ma's reception, and him, since his violin is to be our sole gets fifty dollars a night. It'll take me long enough I know to earn fifty dollars at the Cockletown silk mills, or even teaching school at Cockletown Centre."

Lilian sighed

"She isn't going to sing at mamma's reception," said she. "Mrs. Magnus Martindale has been tampering with her. She's going to play us false. At least that's what mamma and I think."

Betsey Bloom had suddenly straightened herself up and seized her cousin's Jack's violin, the poke-bonneted hero-

"Why couldn't I sing at your mother's evening?"

"You, Betsey?"

"Yes. I wouldn't charge a cent. I'd only be too glad of the chance. I don't mean that I could sing Italian bravuras and that sort of thing; but I know all the good old-fashioned songs; and why wouldn't that please dress up old woman style, you know, and it would be a little different from the common. And I'd sing 'White Cockade,' and 'Banks of Allah Water,' and 'Bonnie Doon,' and 'Cruel Barbara Allen." Grandmother Bloom taught me lots o' them old-fashioned songs."

Lilian's eyes sparkled. She sprang to her feet.

"Betsey," said she, "it's a good idea! We'll try it. I don't believe but that it would please mamma's friends more than the Sivardi herself. But don't tell mamma. You shall do your practicing when she is out and we'll make it a genuine surprise."

"I'd ruther the artist-fellow shouldn't come," stipulated Betsey, rather awkwardly. "He always looks at me so sort o' queer and amused, as if I wasn't more'n than half civilized."

"Do mean you Mr. Lowrie? He's the best natured man in the world."

"All the same he makes me as nerv-"Well, perhaps he won't come. And now, Betsey, I must hurry back to mamma's guests. But I really think that idea of yours is a capital one. We'll think it over, Betsey."

about her evening reception.

"It's so difficult," said she, "to make such an affair different from everybody else's. I do like my receptions to be characteristic. And Sivardi would have been such a card to play! It was perfectly disgraceful of her to "Betsey," said she, "you've been throw me over at the eleventh hour in that sort of way; and especially after | were, Betsey?"

the invitations had gone out with 'Musical' in the corners."

"Well, mamma, it shall be 'musi-I'll play some of my old harp solos." "That's all nonsense!"

"Mamma, do you mean to say that we're not musical?" laughed merry ever .- [Saturday Night.

The evening came; the guests assembled.

Mrs. Martindale's special friend was there, dispatched by that lady herself, to bring back a personal and authentic of Denver, however, wouldn't trade account of Mrs. Kyber's discomflure her pussy Dot for the biggest Newand defeat.

Jack Lowrie, the artist, was there with his violin.

"If the field daisy gets frightened at the eleventh hour," remarked he, "I'll be ready to face the emergency. But she won't be frightened. The admiring mistress: field daisy is too plucky for that."

"Jack," cried Lilian, "why do you call her the field daisy?" "Because she's so pretty."

"Betsey Bloom! Pretty?"

"Yes. Don't you think so?" "I-never did think so," said Lilian, slowly. "She has a fresh complexion and bright, pleasant eyes. Well, yes, perhaps she is pretty. But, Jack, you mustn't look at her too at her because she is so like a wild, woodland flower."

"Is that the reason," said Lillian,

"Why on earth have you got up the little stage and the silk drop-curtain?" asked Mrs. Kyber, with rather a bewildered air.

"Jack thought-"

"Jack Lowrie is too fantastic for anything," said Mrs. Kyber, laughing. "However, I suppose I must indulge refuge tonight. And there is such a

But when the silken curtain slid noiselessly aside, showing an oldfashioned personage with a poke bonnet, a black visite and an immense green-cotton umbrella bulging out on every side, with a blackground of tall red hollyhocks and a farm-house door, sketched by Jack Lowrie's facile hand, Mrs. Kyber was the most amazed of any one in the room.

With the long, quivering thrills of ine burst out into the sweet, wild accents of "Cruel Barbara Allen." Next came "Old Rosin the Bow," "Banks and Braes of Bonnie Doon" and Mary of Argyle," and each in its top and fell down the whole flight. turn elicited more enthusiastic ap-

Old people surreptitiously wiped their eyes; young ones listened with deep interest. Everybody whispered, "Who is it?" And when at last Betpeople just for a change? I could sey Bloom courtesied low, and the curtain concealed her poke bonnet after round of applause filled the

> "You have prepared a most delightful surprise for us, Mrs. Kyber," said old Judge Jugleby, wiping his frostwhite lashes. "I declare that Roll On, Silver Moon,' has taken me back to my childhood days again. Who's the artist? I'm sure she's the very one that my daughter would like to sing at her Fridays in January."

> And Mrs. La Velle, the most exclusive and aristocratic great lady in Fifth avenue, whispered an entreaty for "that clever creature's address" in Mrs. Kyber's ear.

said Mrs. La Velle. "Where did you pick her up, Mrs. Kyber!"

"She is my cousin," said Mrs. prised as any one."

And when a casual caller, the next day, told Lilian that the Sivardi had had a sore throat and sent a "regret" to Mrs. Magnus Martindale, Mrs. Kyber felt herself avenged.

"Now, what do you think about your 'career,' Betsey?" cried triumphant Lilian. "Here you have four Mrs. Kyber was very low spirited engagements ahead, at twenty dollars fact that Texas is five times as large coming the fashion. And Jack Lowrie says you must certainly cultivate your "Did Mr. Lowrie say that?" her conscious eyes.

"No!" whispered Betsey.

"That's fortunate," said Lilian. "Because I shrewdly suspect, Betsey, cal!' reassured Lilian. "Mr. Lowrie that he's in love with you. You see, will give you an air on the violin, and Betsey, there are more careers than > "Nonsense!" said Betsey. But her blush was brighter than > > A Watch Cat.

Watch dogs are numerous, but who ever heard of a watch cat? An old lady who lives alone in a suberb west foundland in the land. The animal is large, weighing over sixteen pounds, and on more than one occasion has he proved his ability to protect his mistresc. The latest exploit of the redoubtable Dot is thus told by his

"It was last Wednesday night," she says. "I was not feeling well and went to bed as soon as the servant left. I sleep up stairs and fastened every door and window, just as I always do. Dot was sleeping on my bed, just as he always has done all his

"Away in the night I was awakened by a sudden motion he made, and I found when I put my hand on him that he had raised his head and was "I! Critically! Why, Lill, I look listening, trembling all over, he was so nervous. I thought he heard a rat and was about to go to sleep again, when he sprang to his feet and stood beside me, growling once very low. Then I listened, too, and I distinctly heard stealthy footsteps coming up the

> "I was so frightened that a smoothering sensation came over me and I came near dying right there.

> "I knew well enough that I was going to be killed, that I would be murdered in a few minutes, but I could not move or even scream; I just lay there as though I were dead. I heard the feet begin to move slowly, slowly across the floor toward my bed, and soon he was touching the bed, and I closed my eyes, expecting the final

> "And just at that moment Dot made an awful leap, and I am sure he must have landed square on that man's head, for of all the wild yells that ever came from a mortal throat that was the worst.

"Dick! Dick! Come an' help. conscious that my legs were getting weak and my step unsteady, and then I staggered when I walked. Having received no benefit from the use of patent medicines, and feeling that I was constantly growing worse, I then, upon advice, began the use of electric belts, pads and all the many different kinds of electric appliances I could hear of, and spent hundreds of dollars for them, but they did me no good. (Here Mr. Quant showed the Journal reporter an electric suit of underwear for which he paid $124.) In the fall of 1888 the doctors advised a change of climate, so I went to Atlanta, Ga., and acted as agent The devil's got me! ' he screamed and ran for the door. Dot jumped off, but the man must have been blinded with blood, for he missed his footing at the

"At the bottom Dot pounced on him again, and when his comrade ran to his assistance Dot gave him a taste, and I heard him swear that the whole top of his head was torn off. The first robber was carried out, groaning by way of the cellar window. I didn't notity the police. I didn't and green cotton umbrella, round think it necessary. I don't know how they found out how everything in the house was situated and I don't care-They won't try it again,"-[Chicago

Seven Thousand Miles of Wheels.

If all the locomotives in the United States were coupled to together they would make a train of solid iron and steel over 300 miles long. Add the passenger cars and we would have 300 miles more of wood and iron; this would give us a gigantic passenger train 600 miles in length, counting both engines and cars. Should we want a huge "mixed" train we might add the "box," "flat" and every other "She's got it in her to do wonders," kind of freight car, and our train then would then have a total length of over 7000 miles! The passenger cars in this gigantic train would be capable Kyber. "And I am as much sur- of seating 1,500,000 people, and upon the freight cars could be loaded the weight of all the pyramids of Egypt, and all the State capitol buildings in the United States besides. Verily, great is the railroad system of America.-[St. Louis Republic.

> The Wonderful "Lone Star." Dr. Barrows calls attention to the an evening, and you are rapidly be- as England, and thirty-four times the size of the state of Massachusetts. The entire living population of the Globe, 1,400,000,000 people, divided into families of five persons each, Betsey Bloom colored and dropped could be located in Texas, each family with a house on a half acre lot, "You're not so afraid of him as you and there would still remain 70,000 vacant lots!-[St. Louis Republic.

A SARATOGA CO. MIRACLE.

C Clean

HELPLESS FOR YEARS AND EX-CLUDED FROM HOSPITALS AS INCURABLE.

THE REMARKABLE EXPERIENCE OF CHAS. QUANT AS INVESTIGATED BY AN AL-BANY (N. Y.) JOURNAL REPORT-ER-A STORY OF SUR-PASSING INTEREST.

Albany, N. Y. Journal, March 12th.

dyspepsia. But I continued to grow gradually worse for four years. Then I began to have pain in my back and legs and became conscious that my legs were getting weak so I went to Atlanta, Ga., and acted as agent for the Estey Organ Company. While there I took a thorough electric treatment, but it only seemed to aggravate my disease, and the only relief I could get from the sharp and distressing pains was to take morphine. The pain was so intense at times that it seemed as though I could not stand it, and I almost longed for death as the only certain relief. In Sentember of 1888, my certain relief. In September of 1888 my legs gave out entirely and my left eye was drawn to one side, so that I had double sight and was dizzy. My trouble so affected my whole nervous system that I had to give up business. Then I returned to New York and went to the Roosevelt heavilled was the sight and went to the Roosevelt heavilled was for four months I was velt hospital, where for four months I was treated by specialists and they pronounced my case locomotor ataxia and incurable.

my case locomotor ataxia and incurable, After I had been under treatment by Prof. Starr and Dr. Ware for four mouths, they told me they had done all they could for me. Then I went to the New York hospital on Fifteenth street, where, upon examination they said I was incurable and would not tak me in. At the Presbyterian hospital the me m. At the Fresbyterian hospital they examined me and told me the same thing. In March, 1890, I was taken to St. Peter's hospital in Albany, where Prof. H. H. Hun frankly told my wife my case was hopeless; that he could do nothing for me and that she had better take me back home and save my money. But I wanted to make a trial of Prof. Hun's feature skill and I. Tananaka she had better take me back home and save my money. But I wanted to make a trial of Prof. Hun's famous skill and I remaind under his treatment for nine weeks, but secured no benefit. All this time I had been growing worse. I had become entirely paralyzed from my waist down and had partly lost control of my hands. The pain was terrible; my legs felt as though they were freezing and my stomach would not retain food, and I fell away to 120 pounds. In the Albany hospital they put 17 big burns on my hack one day with red hot irons, and after a few days they put I4 more burns on and treated me with electricity, but I got worse rather than better; lost control of my bowels and water, and upon advice of the doctor, who said there was no hope for me, I was brought home, where it was thought that death would soon come to relieve me of my sufferings. Last come to relieve me of my sufferings. Lass September, while in this helpless and suffer-ing condition, a friend of mine in Hamilton, ont., called my attention to the statement of one John Marshall, whose case had been similar to my own, and who had been cure to by the use of Dr. Williams's Pink Palls for treatment with Dr. Williams's Pink Pills.

and after taking some 15 boxes was fully restored to health.

"I thought I would try them, and my wife sent for two boxes of the pills and I took them according to the directions given on the wrapper on each box. For the first few days the cold baths were profity savera and was so very weak, but I continued to follow instructions as to taking the pills and treatment, and even before I had used up the two boxes of pills I began to feel beneficial effects from them. My pains were not so bad; I felt warmer; my head felt better; my food began to relish and agree with me; I could straighten up; the feeling began to come back into my limbs; I began to be able to get about on crutches; my eye came back again as good as ever, and now, after the use of eight boxes of the pills—at a cost of only $4.00—seel—I can, with the help of a cane only, walk all about the house and yard, can saw wood, and on pleasant days I walk down town. My stomach trouble is gone; I have gained 10 pounds; I feel like a new man, and when the spring onens I expect we ne acie to renew my organ and plano agency. I cannot speak in too high terms of Dr. Williams's Pink Pills for Pale People, as I know they saved my life after all the doctors had given me up as incurable."

Other citizens of Galway seeing the work. SARATOGA, March 11th.—For some time past there have been reports here and elsewhere in Saratoga County of a most remark able—indeed, so remarka le as to be miraculous—cure of a most severe case of locomotor able—indeed, so remarka le as to be miraculous—cure of a most severe case of locomotor ataxia, or creeping paralysis, simply by the use of a popular remedy known as 'Pink Pills for Pale People, 'prepared and put up by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Morristown, N. Y., and Brockville, Ont. The story was to the effect that Mr. Chas. A. Quant, of Galway, who for the last six or eight years has been a great sufferer from creeping paralysis and its attendant ills, and who had become utterly powerless of all self-help, had, by the use of a few boxes of the Pink Pills for Pale People, been so fully restored to health as to be able to walk about the street without the aid of crutches. The fame of this wonderful, miraculous curo was so great that the Evening Journal reporter thought it worth his while to go to Galway to call on Mr. Quant, to learn from his lips, and from the observation and testimony of his neighbors, if his alleged cure was a fact or only an unfounded rumor. And so he drove to Galway and spent a day and an hight there in visiting Mr. Quant, getting his story and interviewing his neighbors and fellow-townsmen. It may be proper to say that Galway is a pretty little village of about 400 people, delightfully located near the centre of the town of Galway, in Saratoga County, and about 17 miles from Saratoga Springs. Upon inquiry the residence of Mr. Charles A. Quant was easily found, for everybody seemed to know him, speak well of him, and to be overflowing with surprise and satisfaction at his wonderful cure and restoration to the activities of enterprising citizenship, for Mr. Quant was born in Galway. as I know they saved my life after all the doctors had given me up as incurable."

Other citizens of Galway, seeing the wonderful cure of Mr. Quant by the Pink Pills for Pale People, are using them. Frederick Sexton, a sufferer from rheumatism, said he was finding great benefit from their use, and Mr. Schultz who had suffered from shreping. was inding great benefit from their use, and Mr. Schultz, who had suffered from chronic dysentery for years, said he had taken two boxes of the pills and was already cured. Mr. Quant had also tried Faith cure, with experts of that treatment in Albany and Greenville, S. C., but with no beneficial results. Greenville, S. C., but with no beneficial results.

A number of the more prominent citizens of Galway, as Rev. C. E. Herbert, of the Preshyterian church; Prof. James E. Kelly, principal of the academy; John P. and Harvey Crouch, and Frank and Edward Willard, merchants, and many others to whom Mr. Quant and his so miraculous cure by the use of Dr. Williams's Pink Pills for Pale People are well known, were pleased to have the opportunity of bearing testimony to the high character of Mr. Quant, and of verifying the story of his recovery from the terrible affliction from which he had for so long a time been a sufferer.

Truly, the duty of the physician is not to save life, but to heal disease.

The repair ble market the asse of Mr. Quant, induced the reporter to make further inquiries concerning them, and he ascertained that they are not a patent medicine in the sense in which that term is generally used, but a highly scientific preparation, the result of years of study and careful experiment. They have no rival as a blood builder and nerve restorer and have med with unparalleled success in the treatment of such diseases as paralysis, rheumatism, sciatica, St. Vitus's dance, palpitation of the heart, that tired feeling which affects so many, and all diseases depending upon a watery condition of the blood or shattered nerves.

Dr. Williams's Pink Pills are also a specific everybody seemed to know him, speak well of him, and to be overshowing with surprise and satisfaction at his wonderful cure and restoration to the activities of enterprising citizenship, for Mr. Quant was born in Galway and had spent most of his life there. Mr. Quant was found at his pretty home, on a pleasant street nearly opposite the academy. In response to a knock at the door it was opened by a man who, in reply to an inquiry if Mr. Quant lived there and was at home, said: "I am Mr. Quant, Will you come in After a little general and preliminary conversation, and after he had been apprised of the object for which the Journal reporter had called upon him, he, at request, told the story of himself and of his sickness and terrible sufferings, and of the ineffectual treatment he had had, and of his final cure by the use of Dr. Williams's Pink Pills for Pale People, and cheerfully gave assent to its use for publication. He said: "My name is Charles A. Quant. I am 37 years old. I was born in the village of Galway, and, excepting while traveling on business and a little while in Amsterdam, have spent my whole life here. My wife is a native of Ontario. Up to about eight years ago I had never been sick and was then in perfect health. I was fully six feet tall, weighed 180 pounds and was very strong. For twelve years I was a traveling salesman for a piano and organ company and had to do, or at least did do, a great deal of heavy lifting, got my meals very irregularly and slept in enough 'spare beds' in country houses to freeze any ordinary man to death, or at least give him the rheumatism. About eight years ago I began to feel distressed in my stomach and consulted several doctors about it. They all said it was dyspepsia, and for dyspepsia I was treated by various doctors in different places, and took all the patent medicines I could hear of that claimed to be a cure for dyspepsia. But I continued to grow gradually worse for four years. Then I began to have pain in my hack sandlegs and became for trouble peculiar to females, such as sup-pressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood and re-store the glow of health to pale or sallow cheeks. In the case of men they affect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever

A Famous Old Argonaut Judge.

On further inquiry the writer found that

On further inquiry the writer found that these pills are manufactured by The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and Morristown, N. Y., and are sold in boxes (never in bulk by the hundred), at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams Medicine Co., from either address. The price at which these pills are sold makes a course of treatment comparatively inexpensive as compared with other remedies, or medical treatment.

Judge Rearden described the morning appearance of the late Judge Lake when he sat upon the bench. It seems that Judge Lake used to be a sort of Judge Jeffreys toward criminals and that his was never strained. For instance, he would walk up the steps of the "bench," and the poor murdering or thieving criminal below would shiver and think of cells and gallows.

"Pat," would the Judge say sharply, "heat the stove!"

Then the faithful menial would stir the fire hurriedly, and the Judge would adjust his shining collar and faultless neckcloth

After which he would rub his polished finger-nails together and thrust them through a page or two of the decisions of that famous British jurist, Lord Erskine, and as a climax he would look at his translucent hands and exclaim:

"Hurry them up-I've only a few minutes this morning. Then the batch of prisoners would be ushered into the dock and the steely eyes of the Judge would be turned upon them in such a fashion that, like certain pictures painted by the old masters, one might imagine that the eyes looked a dozen ways at once.

Lake seems to have been so impartial that he lacked discrimination, for on a certain occasion, when the clerk called off the first name on the docket, a graybearded burglar of sixty-eight years, stepped forward to be sentenced.

"Prisoner at the bar," said the Judge, inspecting his elegant little finger-nail, "you have been before this court on the charge of theft many times. I hesitate to be severe, but in justice to public morals I find it my duty to sentence you to confinement in State prison for the term of fifty years, and when you emerge from its walls may you be a better man!"

"Say, Judge," said the clerk, looking up to the polished jurist, "you got the wrong man-you forgot-it was young Hayes you were going to send up for fifty. The old tramp, there, he ain't going to last two years, let alone fifty!"

"Ah! how is that?" demanded the Judge, inspecting the list on his desk-"Oh, I see-yes, yes!-dear me!-how very odd! Just give Hayes fifty years also, and you may as well let the other matter stand. When a man of sixty odd years hasn't learned enough to avoid being found out he's much safer in

And the docket would proceed .- San Francisco Examiner.

Suffering Very Creat.

Pale People.

"In this case Mr. Marshall, who is a prominent member of the Royal Templars of Temperance, had after four years of constant treatment by the most eminent Canadian physicians been pronounced incurable, and was paid the $1000 total disability claim allowed by the order in such cases. Some months after Mr. Marshall began a course of treatment with Dr. Williams's Pink Pilk The famine in the north of Hungary is spreading. Two thousand persons have been without food for a month in the commune near Munkaz. Many deaths from starvation are reported. In fifty communes the suffering is extreme.

FRANK W. GIST. EDITOR.

Entered at the Post Office in Calera as Second Class Matter. CALERA SATURDAY, APRIL 23.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

We are authorized to announce G. B. ject to the action of the democratic par-

We are authorized to announce D. R. McMillan as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county to the action of the democratic county

We are authorized to announce Wm. R. A. Milner as a candidate for the office of Circuit Clerk of Shelby county. sulflect to the action of the democratic county convention.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic and conservative party.

John A. Campbell.

Now that the contest for governot is virtually settled in favor of many words that these men are Jones, we see the names of promitired of the democratic party, and them are Judge Caffee, of Lowdnes, for the office of Secretary of State.

THE JOURNAL rises to remark that fidential confab with leaders of the ers will go over to the republicans. opposing parties. Several of the alliance leaders parade their democand the judgement is usually cor-

Oxford has a new democratic newspaper as will be seen by the terms which the editor uses in defining his political faith: "We are the best bow-legged, box-anxled, spindle-shanked, whopper-jawed, pigeon-toed, cross-eyed, frecklefaced, red-headed, crooked-nosed, flop-eared, tobacco-chawing cuss of a democrat in this whole country. We are for Cleveland, Jones, Lon Grant, Alf Truitt, and Cadwell, and we don't care a durn who knows it." There will be no plea for the "Night Hawk's" contemporaries to doubt its polities.

Turs has been quite an important week in local politics: The Pitts committee met on Wednesday, the republican convention on Thursday, have met every day in front of the great daily in Alabama honest stores and at the post office and enough to attribute to the weekly gave vent to their forebodings and press of the state that honor and ap imaginary disruptions of the demo- preciation that is due it. The folcratic party. When a county like lowing tribute which we find in the Shelby, once noted for its loyalty to Evening Birmingham News of the from the spirit world whisper soft. democratic faith and democratic 15th inst. is a compliment worthy ly, sadly, and the mists settle principles, gets torn to peices with of big hearted, enterprising Editor around the living heart until it no leader, or in other words, every Rhodes, and should repay his week office-seeker his own leader, it is in ly contemporaries for the unkind a deplorable condition. Such is the thrust of the Age-Herald, given a that the living envy their repose. situation of many counties in Ala- few weeks ago: Hold men for council" and some young men, such as we have, to go beds of Kolbism and Third Partyism, have remained true and unswerved from the path of democratic duty under the pure democracy. We need men in all the interior counties, to persuade—not to drive—the people to political duty.

The pain of democratic duty under the most trying circumstances. Those that have wandered off after Kolb and his political teachings can be counted on your fingers. Neither will they be boodwinked by Brothers Adams, Manning the leading candidate for congress hid behind a convenient silence in the ninth district, has been up in week y press of Alabama! Blount the past week giving the people some pure, straight demoeratic goods. He divided time with Cleveland and Tariff Reform. "third partyite" George F. Gaither at one of his appointments, and report says, that Hawkins' victory inently spoken of for State Audi- has no candidate, and will be left over the people's party evangel was tor, and the Age-Herald has it that to entertain the convention which complete and forcible. It is hoped be will most probably enter the she will do hospitably and well. of his counties, where the people possesses the confidence of the peohave refused to be taught by any ple. His eminent character and fit-dates, and every effers will be Three bottles of Electric Bitters cared save the Macune-Baltzell system, ness would of course secure for him made to secure the convention. Tour Jones and Jim Hawkins. They are good people, but have had bad praining.

Reports published from all over the convention for nomination for county superintendent of education. Mr. Wyatt is a good man and would make an acceptable praining.

This handsome Carriage is only one of the many Vehicles which THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY is offering its customers for 1892.

Special Premiums for Men. Women, Boyca and Girls. THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER composition for county superintendent of education. Mr. Wyatt is a good man and would make an acceptable praining.

This handsome Carriage is only one of the many Vehicles which THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY is offering its customers for 1892.

Special Premiums for Men. Women, Boyca and Girls.

THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY.

Special Premiums and Prices.

Write large is only one of the many Vehicles which THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY is offering its customers for 1892.

Special Premiums and well. John Speaker, Catawla, O., had five large Fever sores on this leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box man and would make an acceptable large for circulars and Prices.

Write large is only one of the many Vehicles which THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY is offering its customers for 1892.

Special Premiums Arrive as always and well. John Speaker, Catawla, O., had five large Fever sores on this leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box man and would make an acceptable of the convention for nomination for country superintendent of the large Fever sores on the large for the convention for nomination for country superintendent of the large fever sores on the large for the convention for nomination for country superintendent of the large fever sores on the large for the convention for nomination for country superintendent of the large fever sores on the large for the large fever sores on the large for the large fever sores on the large for the large for the large fever sores on the large for the large for the large f

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

This question will be asked permade known. It may mean that ing. Deans as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, suba third party will be organized upon with advantage to the county. its ruins. The language of the resolutions certainly preclude the idea that they had seen their error and lives. We are authorized to announce John S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelpy county, subject to the artism of the probate Judge of Shelpy county. justified. The second follows in the same strain.

which shows that the Kolb forces places them outside the party, and they will now flounder about in search of a place to cast their destinies. Some will go straight back

One thing is settled by this action. There will be no more disracy, but spend more time with cussion as to the true democracy of pleasant one to all visitors. Third Party Manning and others of Shelby county. But one committee his stamp than with leaders of their is left, but one faction remains to own party. Men may expect to be claim recognition, and there is now judged by the company they keep, no room for doubt as to the right nia," and the present gives it crething to do.

Democrats will now go into the convention already called; others will go with the independents and with it peace or pleasure, but it is republicans. The differences in Shelby are settled at last, and will remain so until some one else gets defeated and kicks out again.

Thus it has ever been with discordant elements. Once then make complaint, it is only a question of time when they will be on the outside of their own accord. The true only remain so by complete acquiescense in the will of the majority as expressed through the legal and organized channel. 7 He only is safe in his political affiliation who bows to the action of the party ma-

HONOR TO THE WEEKLY PRESS

Many of them, published in the hot-political duty.

The report comes from Blount county that there has been no political speaking there for seven years. Hon, James E. Hawkins,

Col. John G. Bass is being prom-

GOSSIP OF THE CRITIC.

The Critic went over to Centreville last Saturday with Mr. J. T. haps by every one who reads the Wilson, of Briarfield. He is one of news of the disbanding of the Pitts Bibb county's most successful farm-Committee on Wednesday. It can- ers, who has found stock raising not be answered until the sequal is more profitable than cotton grow-He is one of her best citizens the convention, or it may mean that missioner, which office he would fill Bibb county had more such men her the state executive committee, and and good men is Dr. J. W. Brand, impunes motives to it which are not of Randolph. The Critic has known and loved him since his kind words to nobler aspirations. Through The third attacks the last state many attempts to slander his good convention, and in advance charges name he has come up to the present fraud upon the next. It is a straw with a record pure and spotless. He has reared a family of interesting children, whose moral excellence seeing defeat are paving the way and intellectual training are due to his example and precept, in both of The resolutions only say in so which he has been aided by his good wife. The Doctor's hand has min istered to the sick, and his kind words have touched many a heart. nent men coming forward for oth- intend to sever their connection To say that he is a man is to raise er places on the ticket. Among with it. Their own declaration the standard of manhood to a point worthy of attainment.

I am in receipt of an invitation to a Grand Military Tournament to a man's democracy may be seriously to the democratic fold, others will the auspices of the Dallas Light be had in Selma on May 5, under questioned when he is seen in con- remain independent, while still oth- Dragoons, Troop C, Third Regiment A. S. T. Among the committees I find the names of Cols. F. L. Pettus and W. W. Quarles, who with their associates will make the day a

> A Latin bard of the olden time exclaimed, "Vita est nihil sine fadence. Wealth, happiness, power, friendship and sometimes love will fade, and nothing is sure of lasting excepting fame. It may not carry in itself a lasting element, and once established cannot be destroyed. We are all creatures of circumstances, and many an effort well applied is of no avail. Life may lead to a glorious eternity, but it is nothing here without fame.

Passing in the grey and gloomy ight through the silent city of the ead one gathers impressions of the eming future that are grand in night through the silent city of the dead one gathers impressious of the coming future that are grand in their awful solemnity. One feels know how you can furnish such works no fear who believes not in ghosts, out around him settles the very writes. shadow of the grave and life seems and am pleased without measure. All who have seen it say it would be cheap the state with t to bow to the reign of death. Marble slabs rise like grim sentinels at the threshold of eternity, and tall nonuments stand erect, grand, gloomy, peculiar, immovable guards er the fallen heroes that sleep bereath. The night winds murmur a and Calera's able political lights | We are glad that there is one sad requiem that take shape into words that tell the weary traveler "the paths of glory lead but to the grave." Anon a flickering wil-'othe-wisp floats up, out and away is if to seek and light some weary, lreary soul to the haven that is only found inside the tomb. Voices would pour out its burdens and sorrow in tears upon the mossymounds So sweetly seem the dead to sleep With these thoughts one passes on bama today. The people need some All hall to the patriotic weekly press and sleeping dreams of a future state where peace eternally dwells.

To watch

To the next 100 each Solid Gold

Ring. state where peace eternally dwells within the soul, where flowers perpetually bloom and sadnes is left outside the immortal gates.

CONGRESSIONAL CONVENTION.

CALERA IS THE PLACE FOR IT AND when the committee meets.

We have every advantage to offer, and no reason can be given

Calera is located in the centre of the district, and is easy of access to all points. Hotel accommodation an excellent ball for the convention can be furnished. Shelby gun correspondence whith the mem-

& Co., and tell them what true de- ferson.—Birmingham Age-Herald, health and authorized us to an-

ADDRESS OF THE COMMITTEE.

To the Democratic Voters of Shelby County, Ala.:

We have appointed June 3, 189?, as the time, and Columbiana as the place of holding the democratic county convention of Shelby county, Alabama,
Your committee appointed Saturday, the 28th day of May next, as the time for holding the beat meetings to select delegates to the county convention, each beat to select its delegates in such man re as it may deem best.

fill The eligibility to participate in beat If meetings as presented by your committee, is in conformity to a resolution adopted by our present state demotroubles would soon all be changed cratic executive committee and is confin to bright homes and successful ed to those who voted the democratic ticket at the last state and federal elec-Another of Bibb's truly great these elections, or either of them, have heretotore habitually voted that ticket and intend to support it in the en sning elections, and to those who have become voters since the last elections and those who will become voters by the used to encourage the young heart next elections and intend to vote the to nobler assirations. Through resentation adopted by your committee for the several beats is one delegate for every twenty democratic votes cast in the last election for governor, and for every fraction over ten, provided every beat shall be entitled to two delegates.

Upon that lasis the different beats in the county will be entitled to the fall ing representation in the convention	:

	Beat 1, Columbiana,	18
	Beat 2, Spring Creek,
	Beat 3, Calera,	6
ı	Beat 4. Monievallo,	13
	Beat 5, Tyler's,	2
ı	Beat 6, lielena,
	Beat 7, Camp Branch,	8
ı	Beat 8, Yellow Leaf,	7
	Beat 9, Wilsonville,
	Beat 10, Harpersville	10
	Beat 11, Weldon,	+
	Peat 12, Highland,	2
	Beat 13, Bold Springs,	2
	Beat 14, Sterrett,	2
	Beat 16, Vincent,
	Beat 17, Pelham,	3
	Total,1	02

J. R. WHITE. Ch'n. Dem. Ex-Com. Shelby Co. THEY HAVE A BONANZA.

It seems the owners of Dr. Drummonds Lightning Remedy for Rheumatism have a Bonanza, as their remedy has never been known to fail in the market for a megicine that will do what the claim for this wonderful preparation. Al though the price is $5 per bottle, if it does one-half claimed for it the price should be $100. If the druggist has not got it. the remedy will be sent to any address by prepaid express on receipt of price. Drummond Medicine Co., 48-50 Maiden Lane, New York. Agentwanted.

ONE DOLLAR WEEKLY

Buys a good gold watch by our club system. Our 14-karat gold-filled cases are warranted for 20 years. Fine Elgin or Waltham movement, stem wind and set Lady's or gent's size. Equal to any $50 watch. To secure agents where we have

for the money,"
Our agent at Pennington, Texas, writes "Am in receipt of the watch

One good reliable agent wanted for each place. Write for particulars EMPIRE WATCH CO., New York

REE Bible 1 COMPETITION

TOTTO IL VIDE I	CHILLIAN IL	LEG OF IT		4
First	Cash pres	ent in g	old	$1,500
Second	Cash pres	ent in g	old	1,250
Third	Cash pres	ent in g	old	1,000
Fourth	Cash pres	ent in g	old	750
Fifth	Cash pres	ent in g	old	500
Sixth	Cash pres	ent in g	old	200
Seventh	Cash pres	ent in g	old	100
Eighth
Ninth	Breech lo	ading si	not gun.
Tenth
Eleventh Twelfth
Thirteenth
To the ne	xt 10 ea	ch Solid	l Silver

CONDITIONS. 9

Each competitor must find the word in the Bible—not in captions of chapters, foot or marginal notes, and with his answer to the question he must send enclosed $1.00 for one year's subscription to The Weekly Advertiser, otherwise the answer will not be

Advertiser, otherwise the answer will not be recorded.

This contest is open for old and young. Every letter is recorded and numbered—there can be no mistakes. Send money by postal note, money order or registered letter. We pay no attention to answers without subscription to The Advertiser.

The Advertiser is by far the best news and literary paper published in the South, and gives its subscribers sixteen pages a week, eight on Tuesday and eight on Friday, making it almost equal to a daily paper. To Alabamians in other States it is like a letter from home twice a week. To read it is to love it.

Don't delay until too late to get one of the big rewards.

Reference: Any Business House in Montgomery.

THE ADVERTISER,

Montgomery, Ala.

fice has trees.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was roubled with Neuralgia and Rheuma-Major Hawkins will go into the race. He is a prominent and capadark corners of Bibb, another one ble man, a war horse democrat, and gree, appetite fell away, and be was

Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had interspersed with an occasional lecture from Groce, Adams, Brown of his home delegation here in Jeftric Bitters and seven boxes of Buck

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA.

Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York Louisville and Birmingham at regular rates equrged by the larger cities.

We transact a general banking business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

Now is the time for everyone who cherishes good health, to pay particular attention to the condition of their blood and its proper circulation. Nearly all diseases that flesh is heir to are caused and agravated by an impure condition of the blood and a slurgish singulation.

THE KING OF BLOOD PURIFIERS Possessing Extraordinary Cleansing Powers.

Restoring and Strengthening the whole System, Enriching the Blood producing increased vitality by restoring an impaired digestion and bringing back the bloom of youth to the cheek of the enteebled and emaciated.

Price, $1.00 per Bottle-6 Bottles for $5.00.

For Sale by All Druggists.

NABERS, MORROW & SINNIGE,

SOLE CONTROLERS,

Birmingham.

--FINE WILLIAMRY--

Mrs. S. H. McCauley's,

NEAR THE DEPOT,

Montevallo. - - Ala. A Splendid Line of Trimmed and Untrimmed Hats in the Latest Styles, and at Reasonable Prices. handkerchiefs & Hosiery.

Baturday Sales at 51

CORBETT PREESE,

Harness & Saddles.

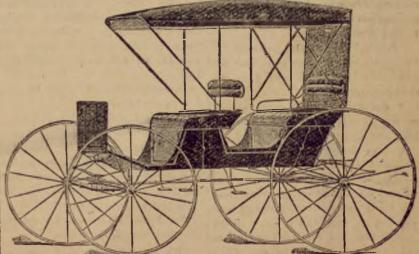

DEALERS IN HARDWARE & TINWARE.

WAGON MATHRIAL.

Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded Shells always on Hand.

118 19TH STREET, BIRMINCHAM.

THE ALABAMA (PREMIUM NO. 14) FREE.

7:15 p. m. E. T. V. & G. R. R. No. 1, To Selma, 4:10 p. in. 2:04 a. in 2, From Selma, 10:40 p. m.

ALABAMA MINERAL.

4:35 p. m. 10:25 a. m. No. 85, Arrives at 86, Departs at

AT THE CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m.

METHODIST—Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

Priday evening at 3.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. II. Kidd. 1 County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland. Superintendent of Education-T. N.

Muston. County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. Dyeey, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes tripple whenver it coes

friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for Send five cents for sample copy. RICHARD K. FOX

Franklin Square. New York City.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

The next best thing possible to insurthe progressive Life Insurance Agents of hold.

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and camily to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the storms of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old rge should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, eld reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-it a medicine that should be used by but try it as I have, they would never again be without it at such times. I am yours respectfully,

Mrs. ELIZABETH DIX.

Any merchant or druggist can procure Risley's Philotoken for a a bottle.

CHARLES F. R SLEY, Wholesale fused to stop for them, and they Druggist, 62 Cortlandt St., New York.

LET US REASON.

before they decide to Purchase some remedy, they could not help avoid any so-called cure that is sold for $1. Figuring the retailers, the jobbers, and the manufacturers' profits out of that solitary dollar, and there is left not over 20 ple were out in their bright spring was celebrated Wednesday night by a descent the word of the remaining and there is left not over 20 ple were out in their bright spring was an attractive after the results of the remaining and the remaining

NOTICE.

GURNEE, SHELBY, Co., ALA Aprill 7, 1892.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Excelsior Coal Company will be held at the office of the company at Gurnee, Alabama, on Thursday, May 12, 1892, at 12 o'- duced price, claiming that he had clock, noon.

In addition to current business, a propo-

HUGH T. CAFFEY,

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON CALERA, ALA.

feb12-1y.

TOWN TOPICS.

A light frost again this morning. The PITTS COMMITTEE, TOO PERE TO Rev. S. P. West, of Talladega, was in town yesterday.

The family of Col. John P. West gave him a birth day dinner today.

There were interesting Easter services at all the churches of Calera last Sunday.

Mr. Aldrige is making some very neat and substantial improvements to his residence.

Miss Sallie Booker, of Uniontown, is in the city. She goes from here to Shelby Springs, where she will spend she summer.

months as a premium for the first convention, and whereas, mess of Irish potatoes. Who will be the first to send in.

Conductor J. D. Norman, of the Baptist Church—Rev. I. G. Lowrey, rastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at day's visit to his home in Kentucky.

The Shelby county alliance meets next Wednesday, and as the Pitts committee have disbanded, our readers need not be surprised to Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil- hear of some startling political developments.

> NAL office is crowded with work. fore, be it resolved, We return thanks to our patrons, work and prices.

Major Duran suggests that the "Pitts Committee" have Chairman McMillan to "open the doors of the and while returning had a runaway which threw them out of the buggy. Neither was badly hurt, though both were considerably shaken up.

An effort is being made to get our few days. Some excellent pastime

Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which snarts with a truism like a spankling jewel:

"It is a duty was a spankling jewel:

"It is a duty was a spankling jewel:
"It is a duty was a spankling jewel: "Lemon Squeeze,i' given for the benefit of the Baptist Church. neat little sum wss raised, with which the ladies will carpet the 000T.

> land Presbyterian brethren from this and neighboring churches took the train here Wednesday evening for Jemison, as delegates and visitors to the Presbytery. We presume they will return to day.

A party of ten went to Shelby Springs Wednesday for a days outhad quite a walk down, but they got here time for the dance. They say Conductor Norman can pack a grip on the end of a stick with as conts for the medicine. Aside from its reputation, and the fact. Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy appeals to one's good sense. The price is $5 per bottle and to any one suffering from Rheumatism it is as cheap as it is good and effective. Sent to any address by Drummond Medicine Co., 48-50, Maiden Lane, New York. Agents wanted.

pre were out in their bright spring suits, and it was an attractive affair. A lengthy programme had been arranged and the dancing led far into the night. The usual spirit of enthusiasm prevailed and everybody had a good time. Several visitors were present and were highly entertained. highly entertained.

lera Land Company, we learn that L. T. Grant, who skipped the country last week had gotten into the Land Company for about $3000.

He had sold all the machinery ough news service from every important interests of the south.

Land Company for about $3000.

He had sold all the machinery ough news service from every important interests of the south. belonging to the company at a rebeen instructed by the directors to do so. Mr. Duran went down last sition for the consolidation of the fran-chises and property of this company with the Cahaba Coal Mining Company will be considered and acted upon.

A. H. CARPENTER,

aprili-it

Security:

A. H. CARPENTER,

Aprili-it ble rent, none of which he had ever accounted for. He got in all about ure to every family, and the name of pers in the world. accounted for. He got in all about $1000, which represents an actual loss to the company of three times that amount. All the contracts which he made for the company will be carried out by them, and they will suffer the lesses without a mur-

GONE TO JOIN THE ANGELS.

LIVE, DISBANDS.

According to a previous call, the Pitts committee met on Wednesday. H. C. Taul offered the following

Whereas, The state democratic executive committee by their action have announced their intention of seating as many machine democrats in next conit, regardless of the will of the people, and, whereas.

It is apparent from the action of the well, A. A. Sensbaugh and N. R. Jones men in counties where the farmers have majorities that they have assurances from said committee that the con-We offer the Journal for six testing delegation will be seated in said

The duly elected and regularly accred- ty offices. ited delegates of the party represented by this committee were unceremoniously refused admittance into the last convention for no other reason than it was Comperland Preserverian—J. C. Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3. laboring men of the state can again be whipped into the support of their ticket when nominated; and, whereas,

We do not propose to again place ourselves in the attitude of independents The job department of the Jour- us as was done in the last election, there- had unanimous vote of the conven-

1st, That this committee, in view of and promise satisfaction in style of the fact above demonstrated, deem it un- ture direction of the party in Shelby wise and inexpedient to elect delegates | county. to the democratic state and district conventions. Resolved,

2nd, That this committee, having done all they could consistently with honor to harmonize the differences in this county and failed, feel that they can do nothing on the statement by Mr. Hardy that more than submit the whole question to the democrats had disbanded, leav-Messrs. George Wright and Will the people, who can and will settle it at ing nothing but the republicans to the ballot box. Resolved,

3, That this committee do now dis-

The resolutions were discussed drawn. by H. C. Taul, who introduced them, and Judge Campbell, who was boys interested in base ball, and a not a committeeman. The Judge club will probably be organized in a was opposed to the preamble. He and against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co., unanimously adopted, and the Pitts committee is no more.

A STARTLING SENSATION.

TWO PROMINENT CITIZENS GONE.

for locals for this issue, we learned Quite a number of the Cumber. that Col. J. P. West and Maj. W. D. Huggins, one a sprightly, jovial widower, the other a handsome bachelor, had skipped the town and had not been seen for twenty-four determined to defeat it. hours. Knowing that John Ozley, our popular family grocery mer- this purpose, and Saturday was chant, had left early Tuesday morn-Mr. I. W. Gullahorn, a noted ing, we began to think there was Sir—I made use of your Philotoken with my last child, in or ler to procure a safe and easy travil. I used it about the word his family to Calera, where knowledge that the absence of Mr. that he may find it to his advantage nessed Maj. Huggins' fine trotter every expectant mother, for should they and pleasure to locate with us. We to it and was gone north, leaving no need such enterprising men as he is. trace as to destination. Up to this writing nothing has been seen of them, and the last heard was that they continued north for several miles, and then turned a due west course. The question comes up: "Where did they go, and will they ever return?"

If any one who suffers from Rheuma- much grace as he punches a ticket. returned, and have every appear of passion and prejudice and in the ance of having been well treated.

Some ining nice free. your address to B. W. Wrenn, Gen. Pass. Agent. Tenn. Virginia & Georgia Lines, Knoxville, and he will send you a handsome lithographic sult in good for that county.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

The republican convention met on the 21st, and the following delegates were appointed to the state

J. D. Hardy, J. L. Vandiver, Henry Sterrett, and A. A. Sensbaugh.

The following were appointed as vention as may be necessary to control delegates to the district conven-

S. S. Holbrook, John T. Crom-Feilding.

A committee was appointed with one member from each beat to select candidates for the various coun-

The following resolutions were

Resolved, That the republicans of vention for no other reason than it was necessary to defeat Kolb; and, whereas, hereby declare their loyalty to the printing assembled.

Resolved, That the delegates here selected to the state, district and judical conventions use all honorable means to elect delegates favoring the nomination of President Harrlson.

On a test vote, Mosely had 10 black votes; Hardy had 47 white and be denied represention at the ballot and 15 colored votes, Hardy's vote boxes and have our votes counted against increasing on each ballot, until he tion, and was invested with the fu-

A suggestion was made that the members of the convention pledge themselves to support the ticket the committee would put forth; But vote for, he thought the suggestion a needless one, and it was with-ed the mass meeting at Centreville every point in the county. Saturday last, and found politics there in a serious niuddle.

Local differences have existed there for some time, which have finally resulted in a division between the the alliance and anti-alliance peo-In looking around on Wednesday ple. The former have charge of the party organization, the other side claim they have had no representation. The recent convention there nominated a ticket which is very unsatisfactory to many of the best determined to defeat it.

The mass meeting was held for lively day in Centreville. An equal number of both factions were present, and two meetings were held. two months before my expected time.
and I had a very quick and easy confinement. Nothing occurred to protract my convalescence, and I got about in less time than was usual for me. I think less time than was usual for me. I think they may find it to his advantage that the absence of the first two naming to do with the disappearance of the first two nents he failed, and the meeting was held. It was an orderly and determined body of men, among whom were some of the most inteligent people of the county. They placed before the people a ticket which bids fair to be elected. They will also contest for recognition by the state convention.

If there is any time when an up-LATER-The two gentlemen have rising of the people against the rule interest of good government was justified, it is now in Bibb. We trust the coming campaign will re-

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION.

Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

highly entertained.

From Mr. J. H. Duran, the assistant general manager of the Calera Land Company, we learn that

1. It is the best of all weekly newspartments, is a household word throughout the south.

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south. the farmer's family, bringing each week learn that the farmer's family, bringing each week learn that the farmer's family and a host of other special writers are somewhalf.

news center in the world. 4. Its Agricultural Department alone features and for its news service than is worth many times its subscription any other four of the weekly newspapers price to every farmer. This department of the south, and much more than any is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, 9. It is the cheapest, being only One Deliver the price of the south.

he household. are engaged by the year, and their inim-3. It covers the news of the whole itable sketches appear each week.

It pays more money for its special

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

ELECT DELEGATES AND PROVIDE FOR CANDIDATES,

A Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

BIBB COUNTY POLITICS.

BIBB COUNTY POLITICS.

THE WHITE PEOPLE DIVIDED ON LOCAL ISSUES.

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week; at twill have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of the state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and

A JOURNAL representative attendather at Centreville left mass meeting at Centreville.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at

Quikly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

Commercial Printing a Specialty

mg agricultural authority of the south, whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. It is the cheapest, being only One whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. It is the cheapest, being only One the whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. It is the cheapest, being only One the south, will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work on this line.

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

Mr. S. G. Derry of Providence, R. I.

Widely known as proprietor of Derry's Waterproof Harness Oil, tells of his terrible sufferings from Eczoma and his cure by Sarsaparilla "Gentlemen: Fifteen years ago I had an attack of inflammatory rheumatism, followed by breaking out on my right leg. The humor spread all over my legs, back and arms, a foul mass of sores, swoken and itching terribly, causing intense pain if the skin was broken by scratching, and discharging constantly. It is impossible to describe my 13 years of agony and torture. I spent

Salt Rheum

Thousands of Dollars in futile efforts to get well, and was discouraged and ready to die. At this time I was unable to lie down in bed, had to sit up all the time, and was unable to walk without crutches. I had to hold my arms away from my body, and had to have my arms, back and legs bandaged twice a day. "Finally a friend urged me to take Hood's Sarsa-parilla. I began by taking half a teaspoonful. My

Stomach Was All Out of Order

But the medicine soon corrected this, and in six weeks I could see a change in the condition of the humor which nearly covered my body. It was driven to the surface by the Sarsanarilla, the sores seen healed, and the scales fell off. I was soon able to give up bandages and crutches, and a happy man I was. I had been taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for seven months; and sluce that time, 2 years, I have worn no bandages whatever and my legs and arms are sound and well.

The Delight of myself and wife at my recovery it is impossible to tell. To all my business friends in Boston and ever the country, I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla from personal experience." S. G. DERRY, 45 Brad-tord Street, Providence, R. L

If you are Bilious take Hood's Pills.

Shortens Labor, Lessens Pain.

Endorsed by the Leading Physicians. Book to "Mothers" mailed FREE. BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO. ATLANTA, GA. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

The casting out of the devil of disease was once a sign of authority.

Now we take a little more time about it and cast out devils by thousands—we do it by knowledge.

Is not a man who is taken possession of by the germ of consumption possessed of a devil?

A little book on CAREFUL LIVING and Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil will tell you how to exorcise him if it can be done.

Free.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, 132 South 5th Avenue, New York. Your druggist keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil—all druggists everywhere do. $1.

"August Flower"

"I am happy to state to you and to suffering humanity, that my wife has used your wonderful remedy, August Flower, for sick headache and palpitation of the heart, with satisfactory results. For several years she has been a great sufferer, has been under the treatment of eminent physicians in this city and Boston, and found little relief. She was induced to try August Flower, which gave immedaite relief. We cannot say to much for it." L. C. Frost, Springfield, Mass.

60006666

Futt's Tiny Pills?

TARIFF INIQUITIES.

THE M KINLEY BILL TAXES THE NECES SARIES OF LIFE AND MATERIALS OF INDUSTRY-THOSE WHO CAN LEAST AFFORD IT TAXED THE HEAVIEST.

The beneficiaries and supporters of the McKinley system, says Congressman Wilson in the St. Louis Republic, are gathering courage after the recent explosion of popular anger because they affect to see some weakening or some signs of disagreement among those who are fighting the battle for just taxation.

If there be any weak, weary or despondent warrior in the ranks of tariff reform, he need but recall the plain and obvious wrongs inflicted upon the American people by our protective system to rekindle his waning zeal and renew his flagging efforts.

Our main grievances against the present tariff laws may be summed up under three heads:

1. The tariff gathers its largest revenues from taxes on the necessaries of life, thus wronging the great mass of taxpayers by its unjust placing of the burdens of government.

2. The tariff puts some of its heaviest duties on the materials of industry. In doing this it lessens both the chances of employment and the wages of labor in the lines of industry of which those materials form the basis.

3. The tariff makes war upon trade, seeking either to suppress it altogether or to reduce it to a minimum, except in the articles which do not interfere with the private business and profits of those who dictate our laws. It is thus always endangering and making less profitable the market for our surplus products, which, as we have seen, is the reliance of our farmers for prices and largely for sales. As commerce flourishes, said Mr. Hamilton, land rises in value.

Let us consider in this paper the tariff merely as a tax, a source of revenue for the support of the General Government.

Without entering into the difficult inquiry as to what system of taxation is theoretically just and perfect, and admitting that when it comes to law-making we must be guided somewhat by rule of thumb and by existing conditions, we may take as a rule the canon of Adam Smith, that citizens ought to contribute towards the support of Government as nearly as possible in proportion to their respective abilities. And the ability of the citizen is in proportion either to the amount of property he possesses or the amount of revenue he enjoys under the protection of the State.

Taxation is compared to the payment made to the expense of managing an estate by a number of joint owners. Each pays to such charges in proportion to the amount of his interest in the estate.

Some years ago, in a speech in the Senate, Mr. Sherman incidentally divided taxes into two kinds—taxes on possessions and taxes on consumption. While this classification is not exact enough for the scientific student of taxation, it is correct enough to bring out, in strong contrast, the difference between State and Federal taxes, and to show where their respective burdens are made to fall.

The State with its minor divisions of counties, townships and municipalities taxes us mainly on what we possess. The United States tax us on what we consume. In the one case accumulated property bears the burden. In the other the supply of constantly recurring and unavoidable want is made to contribute the public revenue. It is also significent that the State mercifully exempts from taxation the very things on which the Federal tariff lays its heaviest hand. The State does not intrude into the citizen's wardrobe or cupboard, because clothing and food are things that supply our primary wants. The tariff drives directly at the tool-box of the mechanic, the pantry and clothes chest of the laborer, and extorts from them its largest

The State of New York, for general State purposes, taxes Mr. Gould's stocks and bonds (if it can find them) at the rate of one and three-eights mills on the dollar, and exempts the clothing of his coachmau. The United States pass by Mr. Gould's stocks and bonds, and tax the livery of Mr. Gould's coachman at the rate of eighty cents on the dollar.

I have lying before me a volume which is made up each year by the Bureau of Statistics "in regard to imported mer-chandise entered for consumption in the United States, with the rates of duty and amounts collected."

A study of its figures will disclose as no other official statement can do the sources and the incidence of a tax upon consumption.

For example, out of a total revenue from duties collected last year of $216,-000,000, $35,000,000 came from taxes on woolen goods, the necessary clothing of the people thus paying one-sixth part of the tariff taxes. Seventeen millions came from taxes on manufactures of iron and steel, among them the tools and machinery with which American laborers make their living. Fifteen millions came from taxes on cotton fabrics, chiefly the nice and fancy grades worn by the workingman's wife and daughters. Nearly $5,000,000 were taxes on earthen, stone and china ware, the indispensable furniture of our breakfast and dinner tables. A like amount was received from taxes on glass and glass ware. Remembering now that under State or local taxation the rates seldom go higher than $1 or $2 on the hundred, and that men pay more or less according as they possess more or less, it is instructive to learn from the actual working of the McKinley bill the rate of taxes it places upon these common necessaries of life. The average duty collected was 46.28 per cent. On manufacturers of wool the average tax was $80.63 on every hundred dollars' worth. On cotton fabrics it was $50.98 on the hundred. On pottery it was $57.24 on the hundred dollars' worth. On glass and glassware it was $55.67 on the hundred dollars' worth. It is clear to everyone, even without showing, as we might do, how these rates discriminate against the common and cheaper varieties, that what Senator Sherman called taxes on consumption are not proportioned to the ability of the citizen to pay, having no just relation to the amount of property or the amount of income, but are thrown upon the poorer classes of the people, and are nowhere counterbalanced by other taxes that bear on the rich and Considered, therefore, merely as a revenue tax, and without regard to the weightier exactions for protections, the existing tariff ought to arouse the unrelenting opposition of every citizen who believes in fair play and just and equal distribution of public burdens.

TYPICAL dog sled is very like a toboggan, says Julian Ralph in the second of his Harper articles on the Hudson Bay region. It is formed of two thin pleces of oak or birch lashed together with buckskin thongs and turned up high in front. It is usually about nine feet in length by sixteen inches wide. A leather cord is run along the outer edges for fastening whatever may be put upon the sled. Varying numbers of dogs are harnessed to such sleds, but the usual number is four. Traces, collars, and blackbands for the harness, and the dogs are hitched one before the other. Very often the collars are completed with sets of sleigh bells; and sometimes the harness is otherwise ornamented with beads, tassels, fringes or ribbons. The leader, or foregoer, is always the best in the team. The next dog to him is called the steady dog, and the last is named the steer dog. As a rule, these faithful animals are treated harshly, if not brutally. It is a Hudson Bayaxiom that no man who cannot curse in three languages is fit to drive them. The three profanities are, of course, English, French, and Indian, though whoever has heard the Northwest French knows that it ought to serve by itself, as it is half-soled with Anglo-Saxon oaths and heeled with Indian obscenity. The rule with whoever goes on a dogsled journey is that the driver, or mockpassenger runs behind the dogs. The main function of the sled is to carry the dead weight, the burdens of tent covers, blankets, food, and the like. The men run along with or behind the dogs, on snow-shoes, and when the dogs make better time than horses are able to, and will carry between 200 and 300 pounds over daily distances of from twenty to thirtyfive miles, according to the condition of the ice or snow, and that many a journey of 1000 miles has been performed in this way, and some of 2000 miles, the test of human endurance is as great as that of canine grit.

Men traveling "light," with extra sleds for the freight, and men on short journeys often ride in the sleds, which in such cases are fitted up as "carioles" for the purpose. I have heard an unauthenticated account, by a Hudson Bay man, of men who drove themselves, disciplining refractory or lazy dogs by simply pulling them in beside or over the dash-board, and holding them down by the neck while they thrashed them. A story is told of a worthy bishop who complained of the slow progress his sled was making, and was told that it was useless to complain, as the dogs would not work unless they were roundly and incessantly cursed. After a time the bishop gave his driver absolution for the profanity needed for the remainder of the journey, and thenceforth sped over the snow at a gallop, every stroke of the halfbreed's long and cruel whip being sent home with a volley of wicked words, em- could. -- Port Crescent Leader. phasized at times with peltings with sharp-edged bits of ice. Kane, the explorer, made an average of fifty-seven miles a day behind these shaggy little brutes. Lilton and Cheadle, in their book, mention instances where the dogs made 140 miles in less than forty-eight hours, and the Bishop of Rupert's Land told me he had covered twenty miles in the forenoon and twenty in the afternoon of the same day, without causing his dogs to exhibit evidence of fatigue. The best time is made on hard snow and ice, of course, and when the conditions suit, the drivers whip off their snow-shoes to trot behind the dogs more easily. In view of what they do, it is no wonder that many of the Northern Indians, upon first seeing horses, named them simply "big dog." But to me the performances of the drivers are the more wonderful. It was a white youth, son of a factor, who ran behind the bishop's dogs in the spurt of forty miles by daylight that I mention. The men who do such work explain that the "lope" of the dogs is peculiarly suited to the dog-trot of a human being.

Fired on From Ambush.

Rangers scouting in Starr county. Texas, met three armed Mexicans supposed to be the followers of Garza who opened fire on them. A running fight ensued when suddenly the rangers were fired on from ambush and one killed. Those in ambush are reported to have numbered from ten to two hundred. Indications point to more trouble in the lower country. Mexicans here say that invasions of Mexico will be resumed during the next month. United States treops have left for the scene of action. The outbreak, however, is nothing more than was expected after the troops were withdrawn from this section. Persons thoroughly familiar with the situation declare that Garza's movement is more dangerous now than at any time since it become

A Steamer of Goods.

The steamer Missouri, from New York, with food for the famine sufferers, was enthusiastically welcomed on her arrival at Libau. The steamer Concordia, having aboard Consul-General Crawford, Count Boorinski, Mr. Edgar, Consul Bomhold, and a number of civil and military authorities, went out to meet the Missouri. A band aboard the Concordia played the American and Russian national anthems. The discharge of the Missouri's cargo has already comHUNTING THE ELK.

Royal Sport in the Picturesque Valleys of the Far West;

Here is a specimen story, by way of illustrating the sport to be enjoyed by hunters in the territory contiguous to Port Crescent:

William Ginger, who lives about five miles above Beaver prairie, on the Soleduck River, took his rifle from the cedar pegs over the door on which it rested and meandered forth to slay or be slain. In Mr. Ginger the instinct of the huntsman is largely developed, and he sniffed sport in the air that morning—and then he "saw signs," too, that convinced him that there was what the picturesque Georgian would call "oodles" of elk in his immediate neighborhood. The mountains that form the background for Mr. Ginger's homestead had been covered with snow for several days, and more snow, and considerable of it, had fallen on the range the previous evening and the air was deliciously

There were tracks—elk tracks, and fresh ones, too-all about, and it wasn't long until the eager Mr. Gluger had struck the trail of what he knew must be a big band of the game he was after. He had gone but a few miles when he caught sight of a band of elk numbering thirty-five, and to his infinite delight they were slowly passing through a little open valley but a short distance ahead of him, feeding as they went, and all unsuspecting that a rancher with a rifle had camped on their trail.

Here was Gunner Ginger's inning, and he knew what to do with it. Making a detour, he struck in at a point a considerable distance ahead of the band-one that the elks would have to pass as they headed for the mountains.

On they ambled gently, while Ginger, his heart in his mouth and his rifle at his shoulder, awaited their approach. The leader of the herd, & big, noble fellow, with all the pride of his brief tailed race centered in his antler adorned head, came within range and died. But he didn't die the death of a common, sorrel bellied, short legged plug.

His death struggle was a dramatic piece of business, from which Sarah Bernhardt could filch points for her Camille. The bullet struck his kingship just above the heart. Springing into the air with a wild cry, that rang through the valley and was echoed back from the cliffs, he staggered along for twenty feet on his hind legs, and, then whirling and facing the startled creatures that knew him as their leader, he tossed his beautiful head aloft, proud but tottering monarch that he was, and with a second warning cry he reeled forward and fell among his herd, every member of which, quivering with a nameless terror, sprang past him a moment later, in a wild dash for life and safety. Three times in rapid succession Mr. Ginger's rifle again rang out, and before the fleeing band had passed three elk were lying dead along the trail to keep their fallen leader company.

Delighted with his day's success, the hunter went home, taking with him some choice cuts of elk steak. The next day, with a neighbor, Carl Oburg, he returned to the woods to pack home as much of the best portions of the elk he had killed as they

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, BEAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE. Secretary Foster says silver is the burning question abroad just now.

Ir your Back Aches, or you are all worn out, good for nothing, it is general debility. Brown's Iron Bitters will cure you, make you strong, cleanse your liver, and give a good appetite—tones the nerves. Non-orthodox churchee are being closed

Mr. M. A. Murry, Wilmington, Del., writes: "I had one of my severe headaches and was persuaded to try your valuable (Bradycrotine) medicine. I never had anything to do me so much good for headache."

FITS stopped free by DR. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTORER. No Fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline. 331 Arch St.. Phila.. Pa.

The worst cases of female weakness readily yield to Dr. Swan's Pastiles. Samples free. Dr. Swan, Beaver Dam. Wis.

Five million dollars' worth of vessels are being built on the lakes.

Brown's Iron Bitters cures Dyspepsia, Malaria, Biliousness and General Debility. Gives Strength, aids Digestion, tones the nerves—creates appetite. The best tonic for Nursing Mothers, weak women and children.

Chicago has a bicycle electric railway "BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are wide ly known as an admirable remedy for Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Coughs, and Throat troubles. Sold only in boxes.

BEECHAM'S PILLS will cure constipation, keep the blood cool and the liver in good working order; price 25 cents a box. If afflicted with core eyes use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye-water. Druggists sell at 26c.per bottle

Deafaons Can't be Cared

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the nuccous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfact hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be at royed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

F. J. Chener & Co., Teledo, O.

Cotton continues on its way to a doubtful

Elsewhere in this issue are published the partic ulars of a remarkable cure that fairly outrivals the celebrated case of John Marshall, of Hamthe celebrated case of John Marshan, of Hamilton, which created such a sensition throughout the country. The particulars of this are vouched for by the Albany Evening Journal, recognized as the leading newspaper at the New York State Capital, and one of the leading papers of the United States. There is, therefore, no room to doubt that the particulars of the case are accurately and carefully set forth, in every respect true, and must therefore prove of deepest interest to our readers; the article is commended to their careful perusal.

Extraordinary shipments of cereals are being made in Europe

The Skill and Knowledge

Essential to the production of the most perfeet and popular laxative remedy known have enabled the California Fig Syrup Co. to achieve a great success in the reputation of its remedy, Syrup of Figs, as it is conceded to be the universal laxative. For sale by all

There are fifty million dollars in the savings banks in Maine.

Six Dollars to Chicago. The Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton R. R. announce a reduction of the fare between Cincinnati and Chicago to six dollars. This rate is now in effect, and in purchasing tickets to the World's Fair City see that they read via the C., H. & D., the Pullman Safety Vestibuled Line, with Dining Cars.

COPYRIGHT 1859 All alones

both in the way it acts, and in the way it's sold, is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for women.

It acts in this way:
If you're weak or "run-down," it builds you up; if you suffer from any of the painful disorders and derangements peculiar to your sex, it relieves and cures. It improves digestion, enriches the blood, dispels aches and pains, brings refreshing sleep, and restores flesh and strength. For all functional weaknesses and irregularities, it's a positive remedy. Hence,

It's sold in this way: It's guaranteed to give satisfaction, in every case, or the money paid for it is refunded. They're the smallest, the cheapest, the easiest to take.

But all that would be nothing, if they weren't also the best to

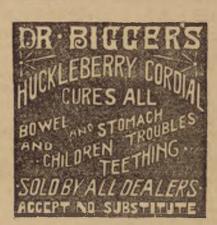

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets prevent and cure Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the liver, stomach

Obstinate Blood Humor.

I HAD TERRIBLE ECZEMA FOR EIGHTEEN-YEARS—WAS and limbs swollen and scaly like a dead fish. The itching was terrible, and finally LOST MY SIGHT. After treatment by five physicians, and other remedies without relief, I took S. S. S. AND IT CURED ME. My skin is soft and smooth, and the terrible trouble is all gone .- R. N. MITCHELL, Macon, Ga. I know the above statement to be true. - S. S. HARMON, Macon, Ga.

I was for some time troubled with an obstinate RASH OR HUMOR, that spread over my face and breast. I consulted physicians, and used many remedies without a care. At the suggestion of a friend I used Swift's Specific, which completely cured me. This was two years ago, and I have had no return of the trouble.—E.H.WELLS, Chesterfield, Va. S. S. is the safest and best remedy for all troubles of the Blood and Skin. It cures by removing the cause, and at the same time builds up the general health.

Send for our Treatise, mailed free. SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Atlanta, Ga.

For GENTLEMEN. $5.00 Genuine Hand-Sewed. $4.00 Hand-Sewed Welt Shoe.

$3.50 Police and $2.50 Extra Value Calf Shoe.

$2.25 Working-man's Shoe. $2.00 Goodwear

For LADIES. $3.00 Hand-$2.50 Best Dongola. $2.00 Calf and Dongola. S1.75 For MISSES. For BOYS' & YOUTH'S. $2 & $1.75 SCHOOL SHOES.

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTES. IT IS A DUTY you owe to yourself and your family, during these hard times, to get the most value for your money. You can economize in your footwear if you purchase W. L. Douglas' Shoes, which, without question, represent a greater value for the money than any other makes.

W. L. DOUGLAS' name and the price is stamped on the bottom of each shoe, which protects the consumer against high prices and inferior shoes. Beware of dealers who acknowledge the superiority of W. L. Douglas' Shoes by attempting to substitute other makes for them. Such substitutions are fraudulent, and subject to prosecution by law, for obtaining monoy under false pretences. W. L. DOUGLAS, Brockton, Mass.

If not for sale in your place send direct to Factory, stating kind, size and width wanted. Postago tree. AGENTS WANTED. Will give exclusive sale to shoe dealers where I have no agent and advertise them tree in local paper.

DIES Send 15 Cents
For package of crazy patch pleces all silk plush. We send can learn shorthand without a teacher, as many successful reporters have done, and earn from $100 to $200 per month. Perseverance, practice, a good book (suited to a self-tearner) and SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS are all you need. Send $2 for Phonographic Manual with special instructions—postal note, draft or currency. Address John J. Squier, (Out out this adv.) Box 668, Eureka Springs, Ark.

SHORTHAND.

Cheapest Family Atlas

101 Pages, 01 Full Page Maps Colored Maps of each State and Territory in the United States. Also Maps of every Country in the World. The letter press gives the square miles of each State; time or settlement; population; chief cities; average temperature; solarles of officials and the principal postmaters in the State; number of farms, with their productions and the value thereoff different manufactures and number of employes atc., etc. Also the area of each Foreign Country; form of government; population; principal products and their money value; amount of trade; religion; size of army; miles of railroad and telegraph; number of horses, cattle, sheep, and a vast amount of information, valuable to all. Peatural for 25c.

RELIEVES all Stomach Distress. REMOVES Nausec, Sense of Fullness, Congestion, Pain. REVIVES FAILING ENERGY. RESTORES Normal Circulation, MARMS TO TOE TIPS.

DR. HARTER MEDICINE Co., St. Louis, Me. For 60 cts we will send by mail one of our famous Rug and Embroidering Ma-chines with 3 sized needles and picture catalogue or Rug and Embroidery Pap-SECURE

ns. P. S.—Retail price of Machine $1.10. E. ROSS & CO., Toledo, O. AGENTS make 100 per Ct. and win $748 CASH PRIZE Den 1 D on my cor.ets, helts. brushes and medicines Samples free. Territory, Dr. Bridgman, 373 ll var. N.Z.

VOL. I.

CALERA, ALA., FRIDAY, APRIL 22, 1892.

NO. 26.

Ode to Spring.

I wakened to the singing of a bird; I heard the bird of spring. And lo! At his sweet note The flowers began to grow, Grass, leaves and everything, As if the green world heard The trumpet of his tiny throat

Fled at his melody, and passed in air. I heard at dawn the music of a voice. O my beloved, then I said, the spring Can visit only once the waiting year; The bird can bring

From end to end, and winter and despair

Only the season's song, nor his the choice To waken smiles or the remembering tear! But thou dost bring Springtime to every day, and at thy call The flowers of life unfold, though leaves of autumn fall.

-[Mrs. James T. Fields, in the Century.

A BOX OF DIAMONDS.

In the year 1867 I found myself at Rio Janeiro, Brazil, just out of hospital, not a dollar in my pocket, and ready to ask the American Consul to send me to the United States in the name of charity. I had been out with an American whaler, and had been left there so broken in health that no one supposed that I could live two weeks. As the ship had taken no oil there was nothing coming to me. Indeed, I was in debt to her, and but for the few dollars raised among the men I should have been a pauper on landing.

One afternoon, while I was on my way to the Consulate to see what help I could obtain, I encountered an Englishman, whom I at once identified as a sailor-captain or mate. He stopped and inquired my name, nativity and occupation and when I had given him the information he slapped me on the back and exclaimed:

"It's a bit of luck that I met you! I've got a place for you, and we'll drop in somewhere and have a talk."

He was a blunt-spoken man, but a cautious one. He did not unfold his plans until he had pumped me pretty dry and apparently satisfied himself that I was a man he wanted. Even then I only got a part of the story, and am still in the dark as to many particulars. The stranger's name was Captain Roberts, and he had given up the command of an English brig on purpose to enter upon a hunt for treasure. Two years before, as he informed me, a coasting schooner, which was carrying half a million dollars' worth of diamonds, besides a large sum in rough gold, between Rio and Montevideo, had been wrecked about seventy miles below Porto Alegre. Why this treasure had been intrusted to a sailing vessel and whether it belonged to church or state or some individual I never learned. The captain had nothing to say about that, and I bound myself to secrecy regarding the whole affair.

How Captain Roberts had located the wreck was a matter I did not ask about, but I did hear it said that all the crew were lost. I was a sailor and a diver and he offered to stand all the expense of the search and give me $10,000 in gold if we recovered the diamonds only. If we got the gold as well I was to have a larger share. He had chartered a coasting schooner for three months, and was then getting aboard whatever he thought would be needed. I signed with him that afternoon as mate, and three days after we had picked up all our crew. Fortunately for us a ship came in with twelve seaman rescued from a burn ing bark at sea, and we took eight of them and a cook. This gave us eleven hands all told on the little craft, but wrecking is a thing demanding plenty of muscle at the cranks, windlasses and tail ropes. The crew proper were not let into the secret, but signed for a voyage to Buenos Ayres and return.

There was a Rio banker behind the expedition, as I accidently discovered, but he did not come near the schooner, and Captain Roberts visited him only by night. We were so well provisioned and provided that it must have taken a snug sum of money to fit us out. This the banker no doubt advanced and took his chances. At the Custom House we cleared for the La Plata in ballast, but some of that ballast had been taken aboard under cover of darkness. We had a diver's outfit, timbers, planks, spare casks, extra ropes and chains, and about the off to use them. A fifth man was last package received contained a light came we were far away.

Captain Roberts had a pretty of the wreck, and after o'clock. When we came to work inshore we got sight of the mountain peaks laid down on the chart, and in a couple of hours were satisfied that their backs. the wreck was within a mile of us about four miles off shore and extending up and down the coast for thirty the winds light but holding steady, we anchored off the reef, and then the men were told that we had come to search for a wreck. It was all right with them, and after dinner two boats were lowered to begin the search. Taking the schooner as the centre, we pulled both ways, running close to the reef. The treasure craft had been dismasted in a squall and driven shoreward, and we confidently expected to find her hull, if it had not gone to pieces, on or near the reef.

Before sundown we had made careful search for three miles away, but without finding the slightest trace of but nothing was brought to light. In the surface at low tide, in others there was plenty of water to carry us over at any time. The treasure craft might have hit the reef at a favorable spot and been driven almost to the beach; but before accepting this theory we got out the drag and explored the deeper waters seaward low, and using up the men with the hard work. The schooner was then sailed over the reef and anchored in a crowned with a dense forest, with a few yards of shingly beach at long intervals.

We had searched this bay for four days without luck when I had the good fortune to discover the wreck with my own eyes. She lay within water, and was bottom side up against | the wreck. I found it, not in the a big rock. She had probably passed captain's stateroom, but on the floor rock, which thrust its head within in a cast-iron box about as large as a three feet of the surface, and in going | child's savings bank, and the gold in now that not a soul of her crew had behind. escaped, and how anybody had afterward located the wreck and made a chart of the locality was a greater mystery than ever. Our first move that the captain had been tied in the possible, and then we began preparations to lift the wreck. She must be turned over, so as to float on her keel, if nothing more. Lying boitom up, her cabin.

Next day after the discovery, attached chains to her starboard side. These were spliced out with stout questions. ropes leading aboard our schooner, and after half a day's work we were ready to haul. We could lift her a bit, but not more than a foot, and after working one day we gave up that method for another. Casks were sent down to me and attached wherever possible, and but for the presence of sharks we would have had her over in a day. As if one monster had communicated with another for miles of the wrecking expedition to anyone. up and down the coast, they gathered I learned later on that Government about the schooner and the wreck. and I had the closest kind of a call from being seized by a man-eater that was fully 15 feet long. Standing on our decks I counted 86 dorsal fins adventure instead of clearing up the moving about us at one time, and I don't believe that was half the number of sharks within a circle of a quarter of a mile. There could be no more diving while they were hanging about, and we set to work to get clear of their company. Captain Roberts had foreseen such an emergency and had come provided.

I doubt if a ship's crew ever had deeper revenge on Sailor Jack's implacable enemy. The muskets were brought up and four of the men told given charge of a whale lance, and cork on one condition. Ethel-What spears. dozen muskets and a lot of fixed ammunition. We slipped out quietly one istering a punishment which might be he popped.

night with the tide, and before day- called barbarous by humanitarians. We heated bricks red hot on the galley stove, swiftly wrapped them up in fair chart of the neighborhood cloths, and they no sooner touched the Some Ingenious Oriental Ruses a water than they were gulped down. speedy run down the coast we As soon as a shark was wounded by reached it one afternoon about 4 ball or lance so as to leave a trail of blood he was at once eagerly attacked by others, and our hot bricks soon turned a dozen or more big fellows on

It was a regular circus for about north or south. Just there was a reef three hours, during which at least piscicultural sharp. "In winter they fifty of the monsters were slaughtered, and then those that were left alive manded in the market seeks shelter miles. Behind this reef in many suddenly drew off to the last one, and places was deep water up to the shore | we did not sight another shark during | a considerable depth. They cannot line. It being summer weather, with our stay. I did not go down again for twenty-four hours, however, not feeling certain that some big fellow was not lying in wait behind the wreck. When I did descend I found the schooner lifting to the casks, and after attaching three or four more she slowly rose to the surface. We then got the boats out and towed her into a depth of fourteen feet and then swayed render them disabled by the time they her over until she righted. She went are forty years old. to the bottom again, of course, as the casks no longer buoyed her, but we expected that.

When I came to go down in my suit I found almost a clear deck. She had been schooner-rigged and both masts her. Next morning we tried it again, had been carried away at the deck. Beginning at the heel of the bowsprit of employing cormorants to aid them some places the reef showed above and running along the port side about twenty-five feet of her bulwarks were left standing. Capstan, windlass, pose have collars around their necks hatch covers and the skylight of the cabin had been swept away. This latter fact was greatly in my favor, as I could drop directly into the cabin. I was told to look for the treasure in the captain's stateroom, but my feet from the reef. We spent three days had no sooner touched the cabin floor at this work, grappling only the rocks | than my outstretched hands encounhidden away from 30 to 60 feet be- tered something which I knew by the feel to be a dead man. My finding him in the situation I did still further deepened the mystery of the whole snug berth in 30 feet of water, and expedition. He was tied fast and I years old. The cormorant fishermen we began the search of the shore had to cut him loose with my knife. waters. The shore was a rocky bluff As soon as released the body floated upward, and the men told me that it floated out to sea with the tide, riding on the surface like a cork.

Evening was now drawing near, and further search was abandoned until another day. After breakfast next morning I descended again, and withthe reef in safety, but had struck this of the main cabin—the diamonds were down had turned turtle. It seemed stout wooden boxes, and I left nothing

From the treasure being found where it was I argued that there had been a mutiny before the storm, and was to bring the schooner as near as cabin and the crew was making ready to divide up the spoils. Perhaps after driving over the reef and striking the rock one had been cast ashore to tell the story, and it was on his informathere was no possible way to get into | toon we acted. If so, however, the fact was not admitted. I learned no more than I have told you. Not one went down in my diving dress and of the crew knew the value of our fiud, and, sailorlike, asked but few

When the treasure was safe aboard we returned to Rio. For four days not a man was permitted to leave the vessel. Then I received the sum agreed upon, with a considerable increase, the men were made happy with a snug sum of money counted down to each, and we were all bundled aboard a steamer bound for Cuba. each giving his promise to say nothing vessels searched for weeks for the wreck, and that the Rio banker had to flee to England for safety, but that only added to the strangeness of the many mysteries .- [M. Quad, in St. Louis Republic.

Reparation.

Jones-I say, colonel, your dog bit my child, and you've got to make

Colonel Brown-All right, Jones, I'll make suitable reparation. You (sadly) may have the dog .- [Yankee Maud-I believe Miss Sears would would be that condition? Maud-That QUEER ANGLING.

to Catch Wary Fish.

The Chinese Have Trained Cormorants to Assist Them.

"The Chinese have many very curious ways of catching fish," said a dive for them. A certain species deduring the cold season under rocks at be got with a hook and line, and so the fishermen go down into the water after them, plunging from a boat. Three dives are made each hour, and a fire is kept up on board the boat for the purpose of warming those at work between whiles. Not infrequently they come up bleeding from the lungs, and rheumatism and skin diseases

"It was the Chinese who invented the well-known plan of capturing ducks and other water fowl by wading toward them with a basket over the head and dragging them under water before they knew what had caught them by the legs. Theirs is the idea of Bristol, England, named Edward, in fishing. You have heard, doubtless, how the birds used for this purto prevent them from swallowing the food they capture. At a signal given by their owner they plunge into the water after the prey. Whatever they get is taken from them, and they are rewarded for every success with a bit of fish small enough for them to eat. They are forced to work very hard all day long, but great care is taken of them and they are nursed most attentively when they are siek. A bird is usually good for service until it is ten | thence. are organized into societies, the birds belonging to each association having a peculiar mark.

"In India also the natives employ many methods of fishing which seem odd to us. There is in the district of Oude a species of so-called 'walking fish' with snake-like heads, which are often seen floating on the water as if dived for afterward. In the Indus, the Ganges and other streams are numerous fish-eating crocodiles which attain a length of more than 20 feet. Except when near their nest and anxious to defend their eggs they run away from human beings. Of fish they eatch an enormous number, and it has been thought very strange that the fishermen should not destroy such rivals in their own business. But they regard the mere suggestion of such an idea with horror, saving that the crocodiles are brothers in trade.

"The man-eating crocodiles of those rivers are regarded as sacred and are never harmed. Of late years they have destroyed more lives than formerly, owing to the prohibition by law of the ancient practice of consigning corpses to the streams. It was the good old way to fill the mouth of the defunct respectfully with mud and leave the cadaver to be swept away by the current. Upon such supplies of food the great saurians depended largely, and, being deprived of them, they lie in wait to snap up living people and cattle. Five persons have been known to be carried off in one year at a single pool. However, the country is over-populated, but one would not think it an agreeable death

"The Buddhists in India have a horror of eating the flesh of animals, believing them to be incarnations of human beings' souls; but they permit themselves the luxury of fish, usually getting around the difficulty by saying that the fishermen take away the fishes' lives and are responsible. On the walls of their temples are numerous frescoes vividly depicting the terrible tortures which fishermen will have to endure in a future state. In these paintings fires are represented stirred by imps, who are dragging the fishermen into the flames in nets, hauling them by hooks and lines and marry a man with a head as light as a prodding them from behind with fish priest who lodged for some time at Free Press.

the house of a fisherman. The latter had recently reformed and was pursuing another occupation. After two days the guest asked why no fish were served upon the table, and, being informed that his host was withheld by conscientious scruples from catching them, he expressed his approval in high terms. At the end of a week, however, he felt a craving for fish strong upon him, and inquired how far the fisherman's net stretched across the neighboring stream. He was told that it extended one-third of the way

1-10 Clerys

"If that is the case,' said the priest, 'the fish have their choice as to whether they will be caught or not. So, if they choose to be taken nobody else is responsible. Therefore, you will do right to try to catch some.'

"Accordingly the priest was served therewith with fish, of which delicacy he would have been deprived had it not been for the wisdom which sacred books had taught him."

How They Came by Their Names.

The study of philology develops such curious derivations as those below, and proves a most interestingeven fascinating-study.

Blankets, it is said, were named after their first makers, three brothers Edmund and Thomas Blanket, who established a large trade in this article of woolen goods, and were the earliest slush." manufacturers of it in the middle of the fourteenth century.

Cambrics, we are told, came from Cambray, a town in French Flanders famous for its fine linens, and damask originated in Damascus.

Calico is derived from Calicut, on the Malabar coast, and muslin from Moussoul, a city of Asiatle Turkey, giving evidence that, though these goods are now sent to India and the East, they were originally imported Few persons have ever troubled themselves to think of the derivation of the word dollar. It is from the German thal (valley), and came into use in this way some three hundred years ago. There was a little silver mining city or district in Northern Bohemia called Joachimsthal, or Joachim's Valley. The reigning duke of the region authorized this city in half a mile of the beach in 22 feet of in two hours had the treasure out of asleep. The people shoot them with the sixteenth century to coin a silver cross bows. Usually they sink when piece which was called "joachimsthey are killed, so that they have to be thaler." The word "joachim" was soon dropped and the name "thaler only retained. The piece went into general use in Germany and also in has been adopted for increasing the Denmark, where the orthography was changed to "dealer," whence it came Brown-So? What is it? Jones-A into English, and was adopted by our forefathers with some alterations in the spelling.

> A Population of Snagglers and Thieves. The population of the Manchurian provinces of China is largely composed of bands of people who live by smuggling opium and ginseng and of horse thieves, who are so numerous that they alone form gangs of hundreds of mounted banditti. This class of people has been outlawed by the Chinese Government, and it forms the nucleus about which discontented leaders may organize a rebellion against the imperial authority at any time. It is a junction of these var. ous bands of outlaws which has ber, Miss Flypp, I have searched for brought the present insurrection to the beautiful, the true and the good. its formidable proportions, and which Miss Flypp-Oh, Mr. Hunker, this is bids fair to shake the ruling dynasty to its foundations. In case this rebellion should extend to the adjoining provinces, the number of resolute men engaged in it would very probably be enabled to accomplish that cherished object of every thorough Chinaman's heart—the overthrow of the ruling Manchu line of Emperors and the establishment of the ancient Chinese house of Mings upon the throne of which the Tartars deprived them in the 16th century.-[New York Times.

The Most Durable Voices.

All other things being equal, a baritone voice in a man, and a contralto voice in a woman will wear better and last longer than any of the others. It is, however, impossible to lay down any absolute rule as to the voices of individual sangers, because so much depends on the method of life, temperance in food-solid as well as liquid-and the care of the voice ex-"There is a story of a Buddhist ercised by each individual .- [Detroit

The Return. Now home again comes Love who long Has absent been, and Joy once more From sleep awakes and, with a song, Hastens to meet him at the door.

He sees in each familiar spot The friends who sorrowed when he went And all his exile is forgot,-'Tis they who tell of banishment. For, like that wayward son of old

Who left his kindred, far to roam, Love knew but half the grief they told Who long had exiled been at home. -[F. De Shermon, in Youth's Companion,

HUMOROUS.

A high-toned singo is generally off

"Well, how did her father come down?" "With his heavy shoes on." The depth of misery lies at the bottom of a mud-puddle if you happen to step in it. The height of industry—a girl so industrious that when she has nothing else to do she knits her brows. Most tailors are followers of fashions-trying to catch up with the young men who have them on. The truth of the saying "To be forewarned is to be forearmed," often resolves itself into a question of "Did you ever write any Beautiful

Snow' poetry?" "I tried it once, but the editor pronounced it beautiful A school journal advices: "Make the school interesting." That's what the small boy tries to do to the best of his ability. "Does your wife pull down your ties?" asked Jenks. "No," replied Breezey, "but she frequently raises my choler." "Gentlemen," said the tramp, "it is many days since food has passed my lips. I would like to dine-a-mite." And the people fled. To the chiropodist frankness is the most admirable of human characteristics; he delights in hearing men acknowledge the corn. Saleswoman-Mademoiselle. I can strongly recommend you this style of mantle. Only last week an intimate friend of mine became engaged in just such another. Harry-So she refused you, did she? Jack-Yes, and I shall remember what she said as long as I live. Harry-What did she say? Jack

-She said No. James-I understand a new motor speed of horse cars in this place.

"No," said one chicken to another, "we don't speak to her. She wasn't hatched from the same lot of eggs that we were." "Oh, I see. She's from a different set."

whip for the mules.

"When I went away," said the returned wanderer, "Hardhit was crazy over Miss Icely. Did he ever get cured of his fancy for her?" "Oh, ves: she married him."

The Ancient Beauty-Think of it, Cecelia, last night at the ball I listened to five declarations of love. Her friend-You must have been sitting behind a very pretty girl.

Hunker-Ever since I can remem. so sudden. But you may speak to

Mr. Droptin-Look here, old fellow, excuse my frankness, but why in thunder don't you have that child's hair cut? Mr. Foresite-Not for worlds, dear boy; I intend to make & professional pianist of him.

Bingo (at the table)—Seems to me we have less and less to eat all the time. What's the matter? Mrs. Bingo (sweetly)-You can't expect us to have as much as usual, my dear, when I am paying for my sealskin on the installment plan.

Teacher-Now, Willie Wilkins, I want you to tell me the truth-did Harry Thomas draw that picture on the board? Willie Wilkins-Teacher, I firmly refuse to answer that question. Teacher-You do? Willie Wilkins-Because I gave Harry my word of honor I would not tell on him.

'I have an idea!" she suddenly said. Her lover was sitting near;

He gazed at her fondly: "I see that your have,

and an awful bright eye, dear."

CALERA, SATURDAY, APRIL 30.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Peans as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic par-

We are authorized to announce D. R. to the action of the democratic county convention.

We are authorized to announce John S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county

We are authorized to announce Wm. R. A. Milner as a candidate for the office of Circuit Clerk of Shelby county, the birth of the People's party county convention.

ocratic and conservative party. JOHN A. CAMPBELL.

for representative in the General Assembly of Alabama, subject to the action of the Democratic County Convention.

GORDON DUBOSE.

THE voters of Calera have been visited by few, if any, candidates Pitts committee.

THE Chronicle of this week shows a commendable spirit of forgiveness and charity towards Editor Campbell, but spoils it all by tantalizing him with "The Chronicle told fourth district whose platforms have alliance was held at Chapel on Wed-

A special from Tuscaloosa dated the 27th says: Col. N. N. Clements there is in it." Not a word about has announced his withdrawal from the race for congress in the sixth district. Indications now are that the delegation, which had been instreted for Clements, will go for Bankhead.

News from Seale states that Maj. James F. Waddell is dead. He was a veteran of two wars, an able lawyer, a member of State Senate, a leading citizen of the eastern part platforms; but are before the people Hardy that an understanding had of the state, and was possessed of a on the broad principles of democracy independents to support a fusion character that is a heritage to his and tariff reform. We refer to the ticket, equally divided as to numchildren.

in the dailies, that the Kolb people have a delegation at Montgomery on June 8 from every county in the state. It is a question whether he will be allowed to enter such delegations as members of a democratic Rev. S. M. Adams, president of the have opposed in a vigorous speech, convention.

date for probate judge of Bibb, was was not supposed that the friends tion, so that those connected could considerably shaken up, a few days of the ticket would attempt to supago, in a railroad accident. We press the voice of their opponents. and afterwards side with the indehope his injuries will not prove last- But with Mr. Adams leading the pendent county ticket. ing, but that he will soon be able courthouse was captured and the to take the field.

himself a candidate for representative in the general assembly. Mr. DuBose is one of Shelby county's young democrats, is a lawyer of marked ability, and would doubtless represent his county well. His aspiration is a commendable one, and should he receive the nomination he would add strength to the ticket.

Monroe's seven and Lauderdale's five votes were added to the Jones eolumn last Saturday. Lee and Russell hold their conventions today, and prospects are that they too will take place under the governor's name. According to the Age-Herald's status, which the friends of Mr. Kolb claim as the fairest paper in the state, this puts the governor 122 votes ahead, or 223 to 101. Kolb had just as well be getting some one of his lieutenants ready with a patriotic speech to move Jone's nomination by acclamabe selected, strong speakers put in fraud. the field, honest politicians to manwill be wen.

THE Jacksonville Republican in have heard it stated that Mr. Ad- gesting the name of Mai. C. G. is discussed.

THE secret of the remodeling and disbanding of the Pitts committee was divulged last Wednesday, in subject to the action of the democratic babe. For five long years, the alliliance thing has been in great labor I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby in Shelby, and at last, through the county subject to the action of the demandation of the demandation of the skillful surgeons assistance of the skillful surgeons Longshore, Pitts, Adams, and oth-I hereby, announce myself a candidate ers, after consultation with the celebrated Dr. Manning, the parent on Saturday, the 4th day of June, since the death and burial of the will come forth with "Republican" fence, at that .- Central Express. emblazened across its face, with all kinds of isms streaming from its every pour.

THERE is no doubt but that there are candidates for congress in the that "I am for myself for congress. I want the office for the money that nate and elect such men. Then we formulate the plans. have at least one candidate who is Col. Jno. B. Randall, of this by Miss Maggie B. Hill. nents of democratic principles and Pitts and others. Ir is contemplated, as reported white supremacy, Hons. Lon Grant and Cecil Browne.

"Tur most outrageous piece of a plan of action for the campaign Furniture, including beasteads, a plan of action for the campaign presumption and gall we have ever a plan of action for the campaign presumption and gall we have ever President Adams, of the state alseen displayed, was the action of liance, was present and is said to Springs for bedsteads and spring state farmers' alliance, at Centre- the action of the meeting. It is we are sorry to learn that M. Y.

WE are sorry to learn that M. Y.

meeting that was called to the court cers in the field. The date of meeting that was called to the court cers in the field. Bibb County Democrat and candi- opposed the convention ticket, and after the county democratic convenmass forced to another house, in MR. GORDON DUBOSE announces order to avoid bloodshed, and hold To the Democratic Voters of Shelby Countheir meeting in peace. A man who all sides to have a fair and impartial all sides to have a fair and impartial hearing would have had more selfrespect than to have added to select the select than to have a fair and impartial and the select than to have a fair and impartial the select than to have a fair and impartial the select than to have a fair and impartial the select than to have a fair and impartial the select than to have a fair and impartial the select than the select tha respect than to have acted as did the fast decaying leader of the intelligent farmers of Bibb county.

Marion Standard.

Ax organization or party that

Ax organization or party that

Ax organization or party that pretend to be for a good purpose, ed to those who voted the democratic and is only used to personal or parto their own personal aggrandizement, until every nook and corner of ment, until every nook and corner of resentation adopted by your committee this beautiful land of ours is in tur- for the several beats is one delegate for good, its delaration of purposes are excellent, and if the dishonest and broken down lawyers, unrighteous the county will be entitled to the following representation in the county will be entitled to the following representation in the county will be entitled to the following representation in the country will be entitled to the following representation in the country will be entitled to the following representation in the country will be entitled to the following representation in the country will be entitled to the following representation of purposes are excellent, and if the dishonest and broken down lawyers, unrighteous preachers, cranky doctors and selfish speculators had been excluded, the purposes to which it looked With a new born babe called the would have been advanced. The Peoples' Party, with the Pitts com- contrary, however, is the true statmittee as God-Father, brought forth us. That nine members out of ten in a sacred Methodist church, who have staid within its folds vouched for by the high republican and followed the teachings of the muck-a-muck, and groomed by a characters that have took the lead, Tall minister and a Long (shore) at- are in a worse condition, financialtorney, the democrats are fore- ly, socially and morally, no sane warned and should be forcarmed for man will deny. Hence it can be the fray. Let the best men for office looked at in no other light only as a

That is an ugly scrape Sheriff age the campaign, and the victory Smith and his deputy got into at

IN ANOTHER place will be found a COLORED TEACHERS INSTI its issue of the 23rd, says: "We card from "An Old Citizen," sugans' question to the Alliance gath- Wagner for the position of repreering at Nance's Creek, was not sentative of Shelby county. Like What has the republican or demo- the writer, we are not acquainted catic parties done for the people in with Maj. Wagner's views on the We are authorized to announce G. B. | the past 20 years?' but was 'Which | subject, we do not know that he the democratic or republican par- We feel certain that his willing. ties?' This latter shape of the ness to accept the offered question very materially changes its position would do more to settle the McMillan as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject import. It is a question as might troubled state of local differences in R. Glenn. be very properly propounded in any our county than any move that could gathering of people where polities be made. While we are always for principles before men, we believe in this instance the man could and would with his cool, compassionate and conservative wisdom, and expe- followed by Mrs. F. N. Glenn. rience of past troublous times, do much towards calming the storm that is upon us, and harmonize the people upon principles and policies flection and emphasis. Prof. A. T of democracy and white supremacy from which we have gone so far es-

> The newspaper men flocked to has been delivered. The great tri- Centreville last Saturday for an bunal will meet in council at Calera item and we presume got it. Bros. Gist, McCumber and Culbreth were on hand late and early, all on the to name the baby, when no doubt it straight democratic side of the PEOPLE'S PARTY.

REARED UPON THE RUINS OF THE PITTS COMMITTEE.

A meeting of the Shelby county fourth district whose platforms have alliance was held at Chapel on Wednever been announced further than nesday. After the business meeting ton County Supt. of Education. was over the doors were thrown open, a mass meeting was held for political purposes.

It soon took shape of a proposirepresentation of the people's inter- tion to form a people's party, and ed by W. R. Wood and others. est. Can a suffering people nomi- as those present seemed ripe for the movement, it did not take long to manly enough to confess that he place, asked if the intention was to stands upon the Ocala platform. It let the movement extend to state affords us the greatest of pleasure and national fields. He was an swered that for the present to announce that there are at least that was not the idea. Mr. Randall two candidates in this district who then made the statement that he are on neither of these unreliable had been informed by Mr. J. D. been had for the republicans and young, strong and steadfast expo-bers. This was denied by Mr.

The meeting resulted in the appointment of a committee, which is to meet in Calera on the 4th of delegates to the various conventions

ADDRESS OF THE COMMITTEE.

ticket at the last state and federal elecand is only used to personal or partisan ends is a fraud. The alliance in its infancy looked to the advancement of the tillers of the soil. But cranks and politicians have used it looked who, having failed to vote at these elections, or either of them, have heretofore habitually voted that ticket and intend to support it in the ensuing elections, and to those who have become voters since the last elections and those who will become voters by the moil and strife. Its organic law is the last election for governor, and for

ing representation in the convention:
Beat 1, Columbiana,18
Beat 2, Spring Creek, 3
Beat 3, Calera, 6
Beat 4. Monievallo,
Beat 5, Tyler's, 2
Beat o, Helena, 6
Beat 7, Camp Branch, 8
Beat 8, Yellow Leaf, 7
Beat 9, Wilsonville,10
Beat 10, Harpersville10
Beat 11, Weldon, 4
Beat 12, Highland, 2
Part 12 Pold Springs
Beat 13, Bold Springs,
Beat 16, Vincent, 5
Beat 17, Pelham, 3
Total,102
J. R. White,
Ch'n. Dem. Ex-Com. Shelby Co.

SOMETHING MICE FREE.

TUTE OF SHELBY CO.

AT COLUMBIBNA ALA. ON FRIDAY AND SATURDAY, BEFORE THE FIRST SUN-DAY IN MAY 6 AND 7 1892.

PROGRAM. FRIDAY, 10 A. M. 1-Opening exercise of song and

2—Eurollment of members. 3-Address of welcome by Miss Emma Teague, Response ov Prof G

1-"The organization of a school by W. R. Wood followed by Miss Mamie 2-"What subject should be taught in our public school?" by R. D Taylor 12 M. Recess.

1:30 г. м.

1-"The best method of Teaching Reading with special reference to in-Thomas. Response by Miss Ada

1-"The best method of Teaching Arithmetic, both elementary and advance," Prof. D. B. Butler.

3 P. M. 1—"How Geography should be taught," by Miss Carrie Reaves. 3:30 г. м.

1-"The teachers relation to Institute," by Prof. J. D. Jennings.

4 P. M. 1--"The best method of teaching Orthography," by Mrs. F. N. Glenn. 5 P. M. Recess.

7:30 P. M.

1-"How to elevate the standard of 8:30 р. м.

I-"How our teachers can secur more interest in schools on the art of parents," by Froi. G. R. Glenn follow-

SATURDAY 9 A. M.

I--How students may be taught habits of cleanliness and politeness,

10 л. м. 2—Opening the Question Box.

Mortgage Sale.

TUNDER AND VIRTUE OF A MORT gage executed to the undersigned by Mary M. Baker and Hope H. Baker, and recorded in Mortgage Book No. 21. page 270, in the office of the Judge of Probate, of Shelby county, I will pro-ceed to sell at public outcry to the highest bidder, for cash, at Shelby Springs, in said county on

The 20th day of May, 1892, within the legal hours of sale, the following described personal property, to-wit:

Pump and Boiler (engine)...... 215 00 fee House...... 150 00 Cooking Utensils..... Range .. Lan.p in Dining Room..... 40 00 Mattrasses (70)..... Bath Tubs... Water Works. Laundry Stove

Table Ware, including knives and Stove in Store.....

 1 amps for Rooms
 15 00

 Pastry Table with Marble top...
 10 00

 Office Gong
 12 00

Baggage Truck. 2
Black-Smith and Farming Tools. 15
MARY A. DEDMAN, Mortgagee.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve. The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruise, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains Corns, and Skin Eruption and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents a box.

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA. Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans,

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York Louisville and Birmingham at regular rates cyarged by the larger cities.

We transact a general banking business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

Now is the time for everyone who cherishes good health, to pay particular attention to the condition of their blood and its proper circulation. Nearly all diseases that flesh is heir to are caused and agravated by an impure condition of the

THE KING OF B OOD PURIFIERS Possessing Extraordinary Cleansing Powers.

Restoring and Strengthening the whole System, Enriching the Blood producing increased vitality by restoring an impaired digestion and bringing back the bloom of youth to the cheek of the enfeebled and emaciated.

Price, $1.00 per Bottle-6 Bottles for $5.00.

For Sale by All Druggists.

NABERS, MORROW & SINNIGE,

SOLE CONTROLERS,

Birmingham.

-- FINE MILLINERY--

Mrs. S. H. McCauley's,

NEAR THE DEPOT,

Montevallo. - - Ala. A Splendid Line of Trimmed and Untrimmed Hats in the Latest Styles, and at Reasonable Prices.

HANDKERCHIEFS & HOSIERY. Saturday Sales at $1

Harness Saddles,

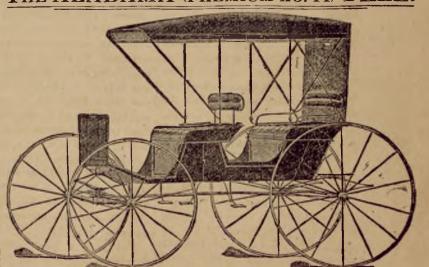

DEALERS IN

HARDWARE & TINWARE.

WAGON MATERIAL. Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded

Shells always on Hand.

118 19TH STREET, BIRMINCHAM. THE ALABAMA (PREMIUM NO. 14) FREE.

This handsome Carriage is only one of the many Vehicles which THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER COMPANY is offering its customers for 1892.

Special Premiums for Men. Women, Boys and Girls.

THE ALABAMA FERTILIZER produced the Champion Crops reported in the State last year.

Write for Circulars and Prices.

MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA

No. 85, Arrives at 4:35 p. m. 10:25 a. m. 86, Departs at

AT THE CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m.

METHODIST--Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

Baptist Church--Rev. J. G. Lowrey, pastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

Cumeerland Preserverian—J. C. Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Pand weets 3:20 p. m. each let and 2nd Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter. Register in Chancery—D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. II. Kidd.

County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland. Superintendent of Education-T. N.

County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. Dycey, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson,

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX,
Franklin Square. New York City.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

The next hest thing possible to insurance against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of Calera.

Read and profit by the following sound

Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the stoams of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old rege should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

to attend county court. Among the number who were kept there till after the train left were Col. West, Dr. Armstrong and Mr. Crim. Not feeling disposed to remain over 24 hours for a train, they concluded to walk home, and a few minutes before eleven they reached Calera, the sprightly widower, of course, taking the lead.

That was a wise merchant in Atlanta, who was appealed to by a county alliance for advances on the

REE Bible 6 COMPETITION! "SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES!"

FourthCash present in gold	750.00
Fifth Cash present in gold	500.00
Sixth Cash present in gold	200.00
Seventh Cash present in gold	100.00
EighthCash present in gold	100.00
Ninth Breech loading shot gun.	100.00
Tenth Gent's Gold Watch	100.00
Eleventh Ladies' Gold Watch	100 00
Twelfth One Farm Wagon	75.00
Thirteenth Road Cart	25.00
To the next 10 each Solid Silver
Watch	200.00
To the next 100 each Solid Gold
Ring	500.00
To the next 100 each Handsome	000.00
Photograph Album	800.00
To the next 200 each Handsome	000.00
Gold Pen and Holder	500.00
To the next 200 each $2.50 Cash	500.00

CONDITIONS. Each competitor must find the word in the Bible—not in captions of chapters, foot or marginal notes, and with his answer to the question he must send enclosed $1.00 for one year's subscription to The Weekly Advertisez, otherwise the answer will not be Advertisez, otherwise the answer will not be recorded.

This contest is open for old and young.
Every letter is recorded and numberedthere can be no mistakes. Send money by postal note, money order or registered letter.

We pay no attention to answers without subscription to The Advertiser.

The Advertiser is by far the best news and literary paper published in the South, and gives its subscribers sixteen pages a week, eight on Tuesday and eight on Friday, making it almost equal to a daily paper. To Alabamians in other States it is like a letter from home twice a week. To read it is to love it.

Don't delay until too late to get one of the is rewards.

Reference: Any Business House in Montgomery.

THE ADVERTISER,

Montgomery, Ala. HUGH T. CAFFEY.

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON

CALERA, ALA.

Many a person is starving with a full table before them. Appetite gone! Ambition gone! Life a burden!! What is the matter? The Liver has ceased to do its proper work. The life channel are clogged. Poisonous fulls are thrown back into the blood, which should be thrown out. SMITH'S BILE BEANS will surely stimulate the liver to do its work well, and headache, sallowness and bad breath will flee away. Price, 25 cents per bottle. All druggists.

TOWN TOPICS.

Marriage bells have rung in Caera this week.

Maj. Huggins' court was in session Thursday afternoon.

Attention is called to the notice of a mortgage sale in another col-Base ball has been engaged in by the young men and boys of Calera Miss. Ethel Greek, of Columbiana, spent Sunday in the city, the smiles. guest of Miss Pilffreen. Mr. Sydney Harrell, of Nashville, friends and relatives.

Spring has at last opened upon flowers and growing vegetation.

Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Evans and their interesting little boy, "T. D." of Randolph, stopped over several hours on Monday with friends. Last Monday was a day full of anxiety with republicans all over the state, and Tuesday disappointment came to many of them. a rainfall, and this writing-Thursday morning gardens are suffering for want of a shower. Where is the economy in sending your printing to foreign offices, cheap at home? We guarantee as ling and Alma Finley. good work at reasonable prices any city office.

Mr. Slusser, a worthy farmer who came here a year ago last January from Indiana, left Calera on Thursday with his family, for his old home, where he says he will remain. Mr. Slusser made a good citizen while here, and we regret that he could not be contented among us.

Services at the Cumberland Presbyterian chuch twice a day—10, a. m. and 8, p. m. -this week or three able sermons at the beginning of the series of services, after which Rev. Mr. Caldwell has done most of the preaching, the different services being under the guidance of the pastor, Mr. Arnot.

Last Monday several of Calera's citizens went up to the court house to attend county court. Among gated the applicant and found that the parties asking indulgence were People's partyites. After considering for a moment he refused to supply them with the remark: "I ean't see that you people are rais-got the above syptoms you have got the Rheumatism and if the druggist tells you the truth he will say Dr. Drummond's Remedy is only known cure. Agents

Mrs. ELIZABETH DIA.

Any merchant or druggist can procure Risley's Philotoken for $1 a bottle.

CHARLES F. RISLEY, Wholesale preciate the sacrifice.

AN Our Company

ONE DOLLAR WEEKLY

Buys a good gold watch by our club system. Our 14-karat gold-filled cases are warranted for 20 years. Fine Elgin or Waltham movement, stem wind and set. Lady's or gent's size. Equal to any $50 watch. To secure agents where we have none, we sell one of the hunting case watches for the club price, $28, and send C. O. D. by express with privilege of examination before paying for same.

Our agent at Durham, N. C., writes:

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how you can furnish such works for the moreous."

3. It covers for the money. Our agent at Pennington, Texas, writes "Am in receipt of the watch and am pleased without measure. All ho have seen it say it would be cheap news center in the world. One good reliable agent wanted for each place. Write for particulars.

EMPIRE WATCH CO., New York

THE LOSS OF A LEG

Or an arm by amputation would not cause so much suffering as many people endure with Rheumatism. One of the greatest discoveries of the century is a greatest discoveries of the century is a certain cure for this terrible disease, a speedy relief from horrible suffering, and a rapid cure. What it blessing! It is Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy, price five dollars, large bottle, and if the druggist hasn't got it, the remedy will be sent to any address on receipt of price, by Drummond Medicine Co., 48-50 Maiden Large New York Agents wanted

WEDDING BELLS

RING OUT IN THE MERRY SPRING TIME. Two weddings in a day for our quiet town, a day fraught with the four great souls.

after the night-fall. A propitious side was in the best of shape, thsoe who just now see naught but tage.

CROSS-WEST.

place, were married, Rev. M. W. County court was in session this and is to be congratulated upon win- score: week. As usual, several offenders ning so excellent a lady. The from Calera were in attendance. bride is a daughter of Col. West. The couple left on the 10:20 train for the home of Mr. Cross.

WADE-MCELROY.

Thursday night at 8:30 Mr. Will Wade and Miss Juddy McElroy were married at the Méthodist church by Rev. Z. A. Dowling.

Lovely decorations had been placed in the church, and the cere-Two weeks since Calera has had mony was performed amid a bower of evergreens and roses.

Messrs. Walter Boyd and George Holcomb were the ushers; the attendants were A. R. Scott and Miss Hardy, L. G. Privett and Miss when it can be done as neat and as Blevins; flower girls Julia Bell Dow-

> The bride was dressed in cream cashmere, with chiffon trimming, orange blossoms.

Miss . Hardy wore cream satin,

Miss Blevins wore cream cashmere, red roses.

The flower girls were in pure The ceremony was a beautiful and pleasing one, and was witnessed by a large audience. The happy Montevallo, couple left on the ten o'clock train Rev. Witherspoon preached two life will be begun with the best 15 minutes. wishes of all their friends.

Mr. Wade had been a resident of Calera for some time, during which he had made many friends by his quiet manner and excellent deport-Calera's sweetest and best young the sentiment of all who knew them give it to them. when it predicts for them a life of happiness well deserved.

[A CALL.] SHELBY COUNTY, April 25.

EDITOR CALERA JOURNAL:

While the political pot is boiling all over the state, and while the democrats four own county are in a demoralized condition, knowing not what to do or where to go for a leader that could calm crop to be raised in 1892. Like all take Maj. C. G. Wagner, of Siluria. All Thursday, May 12, 1892, at 12 o'cautious business men, he interro- of your readers know him, they know

Mr. Editor, while we will have many able and gallant young men in the next legislature, we need some older heads for counsel, and in selection of these, let can't see that you people are raising anything but a big lot of h—l, and I can't advance on that kind of security."

WHAT AILS YOU?

If you have sudden darting pains in the points or muscles, and it securs every time you get cold, and appears in new places without leaving any of the new places without knowing whether on the subject, whose counsel would be conservative, and whose high-toned to middle dignity to the house and credit to our county.

I make this suggestion without knowing whether on the subject, without knowing whether on and elect Maj. C. G. Wagner, whose mind it selection of these, let Shelby county legislature, we need some of vourt leaving any exists—and unite on and elect Maj. C. G. Wagner, whose counsel would be conservative, and whose high-toned safe and easy travil. I used it about two months before my expected time, and I had a very quick and easy confinement. Nothing occurred to protract my the place of t new places without leaving any of the old ones, the best thing to do is to send five dollars to the Drummond Medicine Co., 48-50, Maiden Lane, New York, for a bottle of Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy for Rheumatism. It will cure you. Be wise in time, and do not be fooled with anything else. If you have got the above systems you have got the glove gratter and appears in this suggestion without knowing this time honored patriot's feelings on the subject, without knowing whether he could be induced to give up his quiet home and accept the place; but having learned that his health, which all of us know has for some months been impaired, is in a measure restored—it occurs to me that he might be prevailed upon to allow the use of his name in this converse.

AN OLD CITIZEN.

BASE BALL.

THE OPENING GAME OF THE SEASON THE GENERAL THE OPENING GAME OF THE SEASON THE

The first game of ball played in beginning of life's real existence for Shelby this season was played here Wednesday between Montevallo and It was a day of sunshine, an even. Calera. It was only arranged a ngof stars, the rain fall coming only day or two before hand, and neither beginning, quite full of hope to though Montevallo had the advan-

The game was called at 2:15 with the home team in the field. In the At 9 o'clock, Thursday morning first two innings Montevallo won was down Sunday on a visit to his at the residence of Col. Jno. P. the game easily on account of Ca-West, Mr. N. H. Cross, of High-lera's Catcher not being on hand. land, and Miss Carrie West, of this After this the boys played fairly place, were married, Rev. M. W.

Jones officiating. Mr. Cross is one of Shelby county's best citizens, let in six runs. Following is the with all the beauty of lovely Jones officiating. Mr. Cross is one well until the seventh, when they

CALERA.

		Runs.	Outs.
	Stocking, p	0	6
	Wright, 1st b	1	4
	Holcomb, 2nd b	1	2
	Pilgreen, r f	3	$\frac{2}{3}$
	Duran, 1 f	2	2
	McKibbon, c	1	4
	Privett, s s	2	2
	Postelle, 3rd b	2 2	4 2 3
Į	McLendon, cf	1	1
ı		-	-
i		13	27
I	MONTEVAL	LIO.
ı		Runs	Outs
	Weaver, c	Runs.
	Weaver, c P. Kroel, p	4	0
	P. Kroel, p	4 3	0 1	Q1
	P. Kroel, p Rogan, 1st b	4 3 3	0 1 4	$1.
	P. Kroel, p	4 3 3 3	0 1 4 3	$1.
	P. Kroel, p Rogan, 1st b F. Kroel, 2nd b Davis 3rd b	4 3 3 3	0 1 4 3 6	$1.
	P. Kroel, p Rogan, 1st b F. Kroel, 2nd b Davis 3rd b Ambrose, s s	4 3 3 3 1 5	0 1 4 3 6 2	$1.
	P. Kroel, p Rogan, 1st b F. Kroel, 2nd b Davis 3rd b Ambrose, s s Peters, 1 f	4 3 3 1 5 4	0 1 4 3 6 2	$1.
	P. Kroel, p Rogan, 1st b F. Kroel, 2nd b Davis 3rd b Ambrose, s s Peters, 1 f Kennemore, c f	4 3 3 1 5 4	0 1 4 3 6 2 2 5	$1.
	P. Kroel, p Rogan, 1st b F. Kroel, 2nd b Davis 3rd b Ambrose, s s Peters, 1 f	4 3 3 3 1 5 4	0 1 4 3 6 2	$1.
	P. Kroel, p Rogan, 1st b F. Kroel, 2nd b Davis 3rd b Ambrose, s s Peters, 1 f Kennemore, c f	4 3 3 1 5 4	0 1 4 3 6 2 2 5	$1.

123456789 Calera, 0 2 1 7 0 2 0 1 0-13 7 4 0 0 5 0 6 0 4 - 26

UMPIRE-Gist; Scorers-Hardy for Mississippi where their wedded and Dill; Time of game, 2 hours and NOTES.

Calera can play ball if she will practice, and keep her men together.

The Montevallo boys are good ment. Miss McElroy was one of players, but they are noted for Calera's sweetest and best young their kicking qualities; they want ladies. The JOURNAL but voices the the earth, and expect the umpire to George Postelle makes an excellent captain.

Quite a crowd of ladies were out to witness the game.

NOTICE.

GURNEE, SHELBY, Co., ALA.,) Aprill 7, 1892.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Excelsior Coal Company will be held at the office of the company at Alabama, on clock, noon.

In addition to current business, a proposition for the consolidation of the franchises and property of this company with the Cahaba Coal Mining Company will be considered and acted upon.

A. H. CARPENTER,

every expectant mother, for should they but try it as I have, they would never again be without it at such times. I am yours respectfully,
Mrs. ELIZABETH DIX.

It pays more money for its special

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of he state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

ONLY

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at every point in the county.

Quikly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

and Legal Printing a Specialty Commercial

14. Its Agricultural Department alone features and its news service than is worth many times its subscription any other four of the weekly newspapers price to every farmer. This department of the south, and much more than any is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, and much more than any weekly newspaper in America.

15. It pays more money for its special features and its news service its news service is a feature and more than any weekly newspaper in America.

16. It pays more money for its special features and its news service than any other four of the weekly newspaper in America.

17. It is the pays more money for its special features and its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers in America.

18. It pays more money for its special features and its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers weekly newspapers in America.

18. It pays more money for its special features and its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers weekly newspapers in America.

18. It pays more money for its special features and its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers weekly newspapers are in the features and the features and the features and the features are in the features ung agricultural authority of the south, 9. It is the cheapest, being only One whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. Its Woman'3 and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleas
6. It is the cheapest, being only One who is the cheapest of the cheapest, being only One who is the cheapest of the c partments are a source of infinite pleas- one issue of the greatest weekly newspaure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it. Agents Wanted in every Locality.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION.

Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages. REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT. 1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these de

2. It is invaluable to the farmer and throughout the south.
the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to the household.

6. Bill Arp, Plunkett, and Uncle Remus and a host of other special writers are engaged by the year, and their inimital states of these departments, is a household word throughout the south.

3. It covers the news of the whole itable sketches appear each week.
world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thorough news service from every important interests of the south.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information.

THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

Miss Mattie A. Cobb of Providence, R. I.
For the terrible weakness and prostration

After the Grip, Diphtheria Typhoid Fever, Scarlet Fever, Pneumonia, Malaria wonderful success as a building-up medicine and Miss Mattie A. Cobb of Providence, R. I., and her Miss Cobb is a young lady of 18, a Picture of Health and a promising pupil in the High School. Her father is a well-known police officer:

"Messrs. C. I. Hood & Co.:

"I write to tell how much good Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for me. I had diphtheria and was sick for a year afterward, being Weak, Blind and Helpless I used one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and it made me well and strong." MATTE A. COBB, South Chester Avenue, Providence, R. L.

"As my daughter wanted to write how well she liked Hood's Sarsaparlia, I thought I would say a Greatest Blood Purifier before the people. Some of my friends say 'go away with your medicine.' I said the same once, but since my daughter has taken Hood's Sarsaparilla

My opinion has changed considerably." Man Gro-M. Cobb, Providence, R. L.

Hood's Pills do not weaken the system like other eathartics, but actually tone up and give strength.

Every Month

many women suffer from Excessive or Scant Menstruction; they don't know who to confide in to get proper advice.

Don't confide in anybody but try

Bradfield's Female Regulator

a Specific for PAINFUL, PROFUSE. SCANTY, SUPPRESSED and IRREGULAR MENSTRUATION. Book to "WOMAN" mailed free, BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO., Atlanta, Ga.

"German Syrup"

I must say a word as to the efficacy of German Syrup. I have used it in my family for Bronchitis, the result of Colds, with most excellent success. I have taken it my-self for Throat Troubles, and have derived good results therefrom. therefore recommend it to my neighbors as an excellent remedy in such cases. James T. Durette, Earlysville, Va. Beware of dealers who offer you "something just as good." Always insist on having Boschee's German Syrup.

Kennedy's MedicalDiscovery

Takes hold in this order:

Bowels. Liver. Kidneys, Inside Skin, Outside Skin.

Driving everything before it that ought to be out.

You know whether you need it or not. Sold by every druggist, and manufactured by

DONALD KENNEDY. ROXBURY, MASS.

KING COTTON Buy or sell your Cotton on JONES 5-Ton Cotton Scale.
NOT CHEAPEST BUT BEST.
For terms address
JONES OF BINGHAMTON, RINGHAMON,

BINGHAMTON. N. Y.

A bright, suergetic man or woman wanted to take the wofe agency for an article that is needed in every home and indispensable in every office.

SELLS AT SIGHT, in town or country. $700 in 90 days and a steady income afterward. A "Bonanza" afterward. A "Bons nza" for the right person. Good jobs nr scarce and scon taken. With at once.

W. JONES, Manager. Springfield, Chie-

HIGH TARIFF EVILS.

THE TARIFF TAXES THE CONSUMER-RICH MEN'S CLOTHES UNTAXED-THE HANDWRITING ON THE WALLS.

"Mr. Chairman, said Congressman McMillan in the tariff debate in the House of Representatives, "many of the friends of High Protection pretend to believe and have busied themselves to show that the duty collected is not a tax upon the people. They claim that it is a premium or tax paid by the foreigner whose manufactures are sold in this country for the privilege of selling them here. Those holding to this view insist that the tariff is not a tax. I will not take a great deal of time in answering such arguments. When an American citizen | buys here an article manufactured abroad he pays for not only the original cost abroad' but the cost of transportation to this country and the duty collected at the port of entry, and when he uses and consumes the article he pays the tax imposed by the Government on it-it makes no difference who, whether he or some prior dealer, handed the money to the customs officer that was collected

"Not only this, when an American citizen buys goods manufactured here which are sold in daily competition with goods of a like character that have a similar use imported from abroad, he has to pay the cost of production here, and, in many instances, an amount equal to or nearly equal to the rate of duty fixed on foreign goods so competing. If the foreigner and not our citizen pays the duty, why did we relieve him from paying millions of tax for us on sugar? Why not let him continue to pay this fifty odd millions?

"Mr. Chairman; if no other good resulted from the McKinley bill, it has taught the American people that the tariff is a tax, and a tax upon the people who consume the articles upon which it is levied. The day that the tax was removed from sugar the price went down in all American markets an amount about equal to the duty removed. On the other hand when an additional tax of 1.2 cents a pound was imposed on tin plate, tin plate went up in price all over the country. So on pearl buttons, upon which the duty was vastly increased; so on linen goods. Whatever may have been the situation before, the American people have come to know that the tariff is a tax and have dealt with those who increased the tax in the last Congress accordingly by administering to the authors of the high rates we now have to pay the greatest rebuke that was ever administered to any party in this country, turning a Republican majority into a Democratic majority of almost three-fourths.

"But it is sometimes claimed by the friends of this excessive taxation that the Waterloo visited upon the Republican party in 1890 was not on account of the tariff bill passed. If not, what was the cause of it? Will the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Lodge, admit that it was a rebuke to him and his followers for passing the Force Will the distinguished gentleman from Maine, the ex-Speaker of this House, admit that it was not the tariff but was the result of his administration of affairs here? Will those gentleman who were in charge of the appropriations admit that it was on account of the prodigality of that Congress? something to do with it, doubtless, but the greatest factor that entered into the overwhelming defeat was the tariff law that we are now attempting to amend.

"Mr. Chairman, there is another provision of the present law that should be amended-the one allowing those who are opulent enough and have the leisure to go abroad to bring in free of duty quantities of clothes as wearing apparel. To illustrate: A rich man going abroad can bring back thousands of dollars' worth of wearing apparel free from taxation, but if one of his humble laborers were to seek to get $100 worth of woolens brought back by him for the use of his family he would have to pay, according to the average rate on woolen goods, more than $90 duty, and on some grades he would be compelled to pay on knit goods more than $300 duty. There should be some limit placed upon the amount even of woaring apparel that can be im-

"The law now enables those who buy extensively to pay the expenses of a trip abroad in the mere matter of saving duty. I know one man who voted for the McKinley bill, and who helped to saddle that measure upon the people, who in less than a hundred days after its passage landed in England and bought $1,000 worth of clothes the first thing.

He was a protectionist. "Mr. Chairman, the question of excessive increase in the rates of taxation has been passed upon by the people and condemned in a manner not to be mistaken. Thorough discussion preceded its adoption. Newspapers and periodicals did their work in informing the people of the changes. Then came the advance in price, speaking in unmistakable tones of the hardship that comes from increased taxation. Then the election came and never was such a defeat administered to a recreant party as was visited upon those who had passed this measure. From Maine to California, from the Lakes to the Gulf, people rose almost as one man. They condemned it in bulk and in detail. They relegated to private life the leaders who had conceived it and the followers who had executed it. An arrogant majority was converted into an insignificant minority. New England sent a majority of Democrats here; the whole North sent a ma-jority; the South sent a majority.

"So overwhelming was the defeat that if you divide the country into two sections, North and South, and remove every Democrat from the South, the Democrats from the North would still be in the majority. If you remove every Democrat from the North, those from the South would have a majority over their opponents. Those who held the clothes while others threw the stones fared as ill as those who did the stoning. Rank and file were smitten hip and thigh, until to-day there are but a handful of those who favored the bill left on this floor. On the other hand, among the Democrats who opposed it, only one in the United States who was renominated was defeated by the people. The handwriting is on the wall and is not to be mistaken.

"The people have resolved, and they will make that resolution good, that they have a reduction in the rate of taxation, or a still further reduction of those in Congress who favor high taxation. This battle is on, and is on to the finish. On the one side is arrayed the Democratic party in favor of just taxation; on the other, its opponents, clamoring for excessive and unjust taxation. We would not avoid this conflict if we could, we could not if we would. Let the battle rage, and the fiercer the better, until some recognition is given to the princi-ple that taxes should be levied and collected for the support of Government, rather than for the oppression of the many at the behest and for the benefit of the few."

A School for Five Hundred Years.

A school that has flourished continuously for five hundred years was the sub. lect of the lecture of George L. Fox. of the Hopkins Grammar School, New Haven, Conn., in his course on "The Public Schools of England." This was the Winchester School founded by William of Wykeham, the famous Bishop of Winchester during Cromwell's time.

The school was established to prepare boys for New College, and the foundation provided for the support and education of seventy poor boys from the surrounding countries. As years passed on these scholarships were given by the members of the official board to their friends. Since 1857, however, they have been filled by competitive examination. The competition for the vacant places is very spirited, and often for eight vacancies there will be more than a hundred applicants. Consequently the scholars at Winchester are always able and scholarly boys.

The boys formerly rose at five, spent their time in chapel and school until breakfast at nine. In the few holidays thay had, their chief diversion was to march, two by two, to "Hills," an eminence called St. Catherine's Hill, which was one of their playgrounds. The amount of corporal punishment administered in the old time was excessive.

The school narrowly escaped extinction because of the greed of Henry VIII. When Cromwell defeced and disfigured the cathedral and other buildings of the city, Wykeham's tomb and school escaped, unharmed, because of the loyalty to his old school of a Wykehamist officer in the Puritan army. So the building, built of Flint cobble stones, five centuries ago, stands firm to-day and is in constant

The lecture was illustrated with many views of the quaint old buildings of the school, exterior and interior, as well as of the playgrounds and fields around it. -Boston Transcript.

Peculiarities of the Terrapin.

Although he bites at a hook sometimes, the terrapin is clearly not a fish for that reason alone, as the pigeon also bites at a hook when deftly concealed in a grain of corn, and nobody ever thinks of classifying a pigeon as a fish. Nor is the terrapin a shell fish because he carries a shell on his back and front. True, he is as much a shellfish as any other animal that swims and carries a shell on his back and front, but as there is no other animal that both swims and is equipped as described, he is no nearer to being a shellfish than before. Not being a fish at all, finally, it would appear that the terrapin cannot possibly be a shell fish, and it is straining natural history all out of shape to classify him as a saurian. He is a reptile in fact, and a several times through a hole in the door, saurian is a reptile, but that does not but the puffs of air can be given at the make him a saurian, any more than proper time only by swinging a key penthe fact that a horse is an animal and a dulum, previously adjusted, to vibrate in cow is an animal makes a horse a cow.

Altogether, we should be inclined to normal. These are record-breaking times, however, and we know no reason why a reptile should not be guarded as a shell fish with as much propriety as a stock food can be regarded as a fertilizer .- Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier.

The Thinness of a Bubble.

The most powerful microscopes render visible a point about 1-100,000 part of an inch in diameter. There is reason for believing that a single molecule is mch smaller even than that. One reason for this has been deduced from the soap bubble. Scientists have measured the thickness of the envelope of soapy water inclosing the air of the bubble when it had become so thin as to produce rainbow tints. At the appearance of the shade of violet, it was one-fourth the thickness of the length of an ordinary violet wave of light-one-sixty-thousandth of an inch-thus making the thickness equal to one-two-hundred-andforty-thousandth of an inch. As the bubble continued to expand a black patch formed adjacent to the pipe from which the bubble was being blown, and the thickness of such patch has been found to be only one-fortieth of the thickness of the vielet section, or about onemillionth of an inch .- Electricity.

Cen. Charles W. Field.

Charles W. Field died at his residence in Washington, D. C., Saturday night of Bright's disease. He served in the United States army until 1861 and then entered in the confederate army as major-general of the volunteers. After the war he entered the army of the Kedive of Egypt, where, in command of these forces, he remained several years. He was door-keeper of the forty-fifth and forty-sixth congresses. He leaves a widow and two sons.

Flouring Mill Burned.

At Cattlesburg, Ky., the flour mill of K. G. Patton & Co. was destroyed by tire. Charles McCoy, the miller, was burned to death. It is supposed to be of incendiary origin. The loss on the mill is $50,000; uninsured.

SCIENTIFIC AND INDUSTRIAL.

Parsley is poisonous to many kinds of There are 365 electric roads in this country. Only nine per cent. of all operations in amputations are fatal. Conch shells, when ground, enter into the manufacture of porcelain. Electricity is to be applied to the flour milling interests in St. Paul, Minn.

Ammonia as a motive power is coming into use on various street car lines. France's latest torpedo boat made twenty-three knots and a half in a bad

Good peat in Germany furnishes a cel lulose which is valuable to papermakers. The phonograph is now used in hospitals for the purpose of studying the auditory characteristics of pulmonary dis-The Liverpool (England) Elevated Railway will be worked by electricity, using motor cars instead of separate An Antwerp (Belgium) inventor has patented a system of ventilation by com-pressed air, for use in the holds and cabins of vessels. A recent English invention is a screw propeller in which the blades can be adusted for maneuvering or can be feathered for running under sail. Four tons of grapes to tho acre are said to take from the soil three pounds of nitrogen, twelve pounds of phosphoric acid and forty pounds of potash. In calming the ocean by means of oil, it has been found that petroleum and mineral oils in general are indequate for the purpose, and that train oil is the most effective.

The heaviest freight locomotives built nowadays weigh 115,000 pounds and their tenders loaded weigh 64,000 pounds. Passenger coaches weigh 50, 000 pounds and the palatial Pullmars run up to 95,000.

Dr. Valentini, of Konigsberg, Prussia. who has met with phenomenal success in the treatment of typhoid fever, gives his patients all the water, milk, etc., they can drink. He says the fluids eliminate the poisons in the system.

The first ingot of nickle steel to be used for the manufacture of armor for the United States Navy was cast in a mold weighing fifty-six tons. The ingot weighed 60,000 pounds. This armor plate will be used on the Maine.

A snake moves by means of the ribs and the scales on the abdomen, to which each rib is attached by a set of short muscles. These scales take hold of the surface over which the serpent may be passing, and in that manner aid the creature to glide, often very rapidly, around the trunks of trees and along the smaller Machinery is now made for the manufacture of all kinds of casks and tubs, so that no handwork is required. Flour barrels are made in this way for six cents each, and other kinds in proportion. If butter firkins sell for forty cents each, it seems as if the business of making them, where lumber is cheap, might be profitable, if the cost of shipment was paid by the purchaser.

A Norwegian farmer has invented a curious lock in which the bolt is released by a stroke from a pendulum bob. The pendulum, invisible from the outside, is moved sufficiently by blowing sharply unison with the lock pendulum.

Air plows, V-shaped contrivances, to decide that the terrapin does not come be placed on the front of engines of fast under the laws governing shell fish in express trains, are the latest scheme to South Carolina, if all conditions were get more speed by overcoming much of the natural resistance of the air to the front of the locomotive. The plow extends from a few inches above the track to the top of the smokestack, the sharp edge, of course, in front. "Shoveling fog" is a common expression among railroad men, but piowing wind is a new thing in railroad agriculture.

Saved From Suicide by His Dog.

An intelligent pet dog owned by Louis Schmidt, of Camdem, N. J., has prevented him from committing suicide. Schmidt is just recovering from a serious attack of typhoid fever, which left him very nervous and subject to fits of melancholia. He was seized with one of those spells Monday night, and while his wife was asleep stole to the kitchen. Here he procured a rope, and, making a noose, tied one end to an iron hook in the wall. Then procuring a chair he adjusted the rope, and kicking away the chair swung himself off, as he thought, into into eternity. But, unknown to Schmidt, his faithful dog had followed him, and instinctively knowing something was wrong the intelligent animal went back into the bedroom whining pitifully. Finally he awoke Mrs. Schmidt by tugging at the bed clothing and rubbing his cold nose in her face, and she followed the dog down stairs as soon as she missed her husbaud. There she found him hanging from the hook. She managed to cut him down in time to save his life.—Philadelphia Times.

An Epidemic of Heliotrope. We are about undergoing an epidemic of heliotrope and the green tints; we are going to have it bad. The trouble will run its full course; it will be something like the yallery greenery craze that struck us along with Oscar and his long locks some ten years ago, and is directly traceable to the prevalence of the seventeenth century styles in decoration, and we are sorry for it, for those delicate colors which looked well and were charming against the fresh painted faces of the court beauties of Louis XVI and the powdered wigs and silken attire, white stockings and laces, would show to horrible disadvantage against our modern dress and honest complexions. - The Upholsterer.

The coal agents of New York have advanced the price of chestnut coal twenty-five Sanitary Walls and Ceilings. Q. Does the Bible have anything to say regarding sanitary walls? A. Read Leviticus, 14th Chapter, 38-41

A. Read Leviticus, 14th Chapter, 38-41 verses.
Q. What do modern sanitarians say.
A. That wall paper and glue kalsomines are directly responsible for much of the sickness, ignorantly attributed to other causes.
The Chicago Inter-Ocean, in an article on papering walls, under the caption of "Nasty Practice," has this to say. "Our Health Officer, Dr. De Wolfe, says the free passage of air through walls of living rooms is an important element in proper ventilation. The practice of repapering rooms by layer upon layer of wall paper, made adhesive by glue or paste, which adds a decomposing material to the nasty practice, can receive nothing but condemnation from the sanitarian. The perfect wall for domestic habitation is of material which resists decomposition in every form, and which sists decomposition in every form, and which permits the free passage of air. It seems to me that Alabastine is admirably adapted for me that Alabastine is admirably adapted for the purpose."

The Doctor agrees with the Inter-Ocean, that a special law should be passed to prevent the practice of pasting repeated layers of paper on the walls.

Write the Alabastine Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., for supplement from the report of the Michigan State Board of Health, entitled "Sanitary Walls and Cellings."

Remember the name, Alabastine, made from alabaster rock.

A syndicate is going, to cultive te tobecco.

A syndicate is going to cultivate tobacco n a large scale in the Congo Free State,

MANY persons are broken down from over-work or household cares. Brown's Iron Bit-ters rebuilds the system, aids digestion, re-moves excess of bile, and cures malaria. A spendid tonic for women and children.

Eight thousand unknown dead were buried in the Potter's Field of New York city last

STATE OF UHIO, CITY OF TOLEDO, {

Frank J. Cheney makes oath that he is the senior partner of the firm of F. J. Cheney & Co., doing business in the City of Toledo, County and State aforesaid, and that said firm will pay the sum of $100 for each and every case of catarrh that cannot be cured by the use of Hall's Catarrh Cure.

Frank J. Cheney.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence, this 6th day of December, A. D., 1886.

A. W. Gleason,

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Send for testimonials, free.
F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O.
Sold by Druggists, 75c.

The Only One Ever Printed

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD? CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

Those is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words all except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, BRAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE.

For strengthening and clearing the woice

For strengthening and clearing the voice, use "Brown's Bronchial Troches."—"I have commended them to friends who were public speakers, and they have proved extremely serviceable."—Rev. Henry Ward FITS stopped free by Dr. Kilne's Great Nerve Restorer. No Fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline, 931 Arch St., Phila., Pa.

Mr. C. D. Payne, publisher of the Union Signal, Chicago, Ill., writes: "I never saw anything that would cure headache like your Bradycrotine." All druggists, fifty cents. Senator Stanford, of California, has refused an offer of $110,000 for the stallion Advertiser.

LADIES needing a tonic, or children who want building up, should take Brown's Iron Bitters. It is pleasant to take, cures Malaria, Indigestion, Biliousness and Liver Complaints, makes the Blood rich and pure.

Guiteau, President Garfield's assassin, is declared to have been drunk when he was executed.

BEECHAM'S PILLS are not a new remedy. They have been used in Europe for 50 years, all well tested and excellent.

ONE ENJOYS

Both the method and results when Syrup of Figs is taken; it is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the Kidneys. Liver and Bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and cures habitual constipation. Syrup of Figs is the only remedy of its kind ever produced, pleasing to the taste and acceptable to the stomach, prompt in its action and truly beneficial in its effects, prepared only from the most healthy and agreeable substances, its many excellent qualities commend it to all and have made it the most popular remedy known.

Syrup of Figs is for sale in 50c and $1 bottles by all leading druggists. Any reliable druggist who may not have it on hand will procure it promptly for any one who wishes to try it. Do not accept any substitute.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. LOUISVILLE, KY. NEW YORK, N.Y.

KANSAS FARMS and Mortgages are all right. Big crops and good prices. Farms for sale at bargains. List free. CHAS. R. WOOLLEY, Osborne, Knn.

PATENTS Washington, D. C.

Am. N. U. -No. 15 1892

Rather risky -the offer that's made by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Risky for them. For you, if you have Catarrh, it's a certainty. You're certain to be cured of it, or to be paid $500. That's what they offer, and in good faith - they cure you, or pay you, no matter how bad your case, or of how long standing.

But—is it so much of a risk? They have a medicine that cures Catarrh, not for a time, but for all time. They've weiched it for years, curing the most hopeless cases. They know that in your case there's every chance of success, almost no chance of failure.

Wouldn't any one take such a risk with such a medicine?

The only question is - are you willing to make the test, if the makers are willing to take the

If so, the rest is easy. You pay vour druggist fifty cents and the trial begins.

Sold everywhere. All genuine goods bear "Crescent." Send us 2 cent stamp for 32-page

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo. GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa from which the excess of oil has been removed, Is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one centa cup. It is delicious, nourishing, atrengthening, EASILY DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalida as well as for persons in health. Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO.. Dorchester, Mass.

FREE OF CHARGE.

of music to play the Plano and Organ in 5 minutes, we will give away to any one ordering our Simplified Chord Instructor and Book of Accompaniments, an elegant Music Folio, containing over 100 pages of the latest vocal and instrumental music, File E OF CHARGE. The price of the Chord Instructor and book is only one dollar. No house having an instrument should be without the Simplified Chord Instructor, as it will teach any one harmony at sight.

AGENTS WANTED in every City and Village in the United States and Canada. Liberal terms.

Descriptive circular sent on application.

THE AMER. SIMPLIFIED MUSIC CO.,

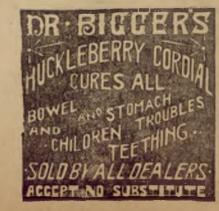

7 W. 14th St., bet. 5th & 6th Aves., N. Y.

SHORTHAND.

Parisions - Due all NOLDIERS:
y disabled. Effector increase. 28 years experience. Write for Laws. Av. McCormics som. Washingron, D. C. & Cincinnati, Q.

VOL. I.

CALERA, ALA., FRIDAY. APRIL 29, 1892.

NO. 27.

Above Suspicion.

They who imagine evil That does not meet the eye, Are the mean and base in spirit; Pass them by, pass them by!

They who always cheer the worthy, Help them onward to the goal. Always think the best will happen, Hail them, bless them, heart and soul! -[George Griffith, in the Housewife.

"ROGUE" ELEPHANT.

BY C. B. LEWIS.

I had read and heard a great deal of the famous "rogue" elephant of the district of Mysore, province of Madras, before I ever got within 200 for years was a veritable terror to an brea of country 50 miles long by 30 road.

This fellow was called "The Wicked" by all the natives in that territory, and some of the stories told of his doings were really wonderful, as well as strictly true. His territory was along the Suddar Valley. On the eastern edge of this valley, which is from one to five miles wide, is a dense jungle fifty miles long, and this place was his retreat. He was probably hunted after more than any other "rogue" ever heard of in India. After a year or two the Government offered a reward of £100 for his death, and before he was finally disposed of this reward had been increased to £300. He was hunted on several occasions by bands numbering 400 men, and at least fifty different white hunters journeyed into the district and had a try at him.

It was wonderful how "The Wicked" managed to escape death so long, but it used to be asserted that he was only an elephant in form. The natives fully believed that he was the Evil One in disguise, and more than 1000 people moved out of that productive valley on his account. The official records of his doings would make a big book. He began killing as soon as he appeared. One night about midnight he enertered a native village containing about seventy huts, penetrated to the centre and killed five people sleeping in a hut. Even the dogs knew nothing of his presence until he got to work. He put his tusks under the foundation poles of the hut and tipped it over and then he trampled on the family sleeping in the given the alarm. middle of the mud floor.

Only three or four people caught eight of him as he moved away. A grand hunt was organized, but he was not even discovered. It was hoped that he had been frightened out of the district, but two or three days later, as a native was driving a bullock cart along a road at the edge of a forest, the elephant, who was in hiding behind a clump of bushes, picked the man off his seat with his trunk, and flung him 20 feet into the air. In the same minute he drove his long tusks through the bullock and then disappeared. The native was so badly hurt that he died three days later. This was on a Thursday, about 11 o'clock in the morning. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the elephant appeared at a point up the valley, exactly 32 miles away, and killed a ryot, or native farmer, who was at work in his field.

In three years, according to official returns made, "The Wicked" killed upward of 100 people, destroyed thousands of dollars' worth of crops, and caused the death of hundreds of domestic animals. His aim was to kill and destroy, and he went about his work in such a queer and mysterious manner as to keep all the people afraid of him. Wild elephants never leave cover during daylight. This fellow stalked abroad by day as well as by night. He moved as silently and then, while I had a smoke, he started swiftly as a tiger. On one occasion five natives, who had been stacking grain, sat down to eat their luncheon It was high noon, and they were haif a mile from the edge of the jungle. The elephant came upon them over hard and stony ground, where the footstep of a man would certainly have been heard, and the first known of his presence was when he struck two of the five down. The others escaped him by leaping into a ravine.

When I reached the valley it was half depopulated, and all those remisining were in a state of continual terror. Not a day passed that the elephant did not kill or attempt to by trampling on him. I ran through Press.

kill some one. As one of the precau- the forest in several directions, pertions against his visits after dark the feetly reckless of the probability that villages had been surrounded by walls the elephant was in ambush again, but of dry brush. The idea was that in I got no track or trace of him. He breaking a way through or over the animal would make noise enough to betray his presence. On two occasions he had removed enough brush to make an opening and done it so carefully that people sleeping ten feet away had heard no noise. When discovered and shouted at "The Wicked" always made off for the jungle without attempting further mischief, but he generally managed to kill some one before an alarm was raised. At the time I reached his stamping ground there were two British army officers miles of his stamping ground. He hunting him at the other end of the made his first appearance in 1868, and jungle, but no one had seen the elephant for about a week. He hadn't left the district, however, and neither had he been killed.

I took possession of an abandoned village at the lower end of the valley. Here the elephant had first appeared, and here he had killed over a dozen people. The villagers had at length become so terror stricken that they moved thirty miles away. There were about forty huts still standing, but instead of occupying any one of them I took up my position for the night in a ravine at the northern edge of the town. I had two native hunters with me, and to lead the elephant to believe that the villagers had returned we tied five or six dogs to as many doorposts. It was looked upon as doubtful if "The Wicked" would show up, and after watching until straight line to the "dummy" we dug midnight I turned in for a nap, leaving both natives on guard. It appeared that they dozed off after an hour or so, but an hour before daybreak one of them awoke and found the elephant standing on the bank and neither hoped nor looked for "The looking down upon us.

very steep. The man plucked at my sleeve, but the instant I moved the elephant vanished. I would not believe that he had been there, but daylight proved to the contrary. It was soft ground, and the prints of his feet were so deep that both natives declared he had stood in one spot for many minutes, perhaps half an hour. We further found that "The Wicked" had traversed a good part of the village, and that so quietly that not a dog had

The natives of this valley had long before resorted to pitfalls, traps, and other practices in vogue, but all to no pupose. The white hunters had set spring guns and even poisoned some of the pools where he was supposed to drink, but "The Wicked" had outwitted every move. I determined to take up his track and follow it until he was found. One of the natives refused to enter the jungle for any price I could pay, but the other had more pluck and agreed to stay with me. We found the elephant had gone straight into the jungle from the ravine, and as the soil was moist from a recent storm, the tracker had no difficulty in following him for about five miles. Then all evidences of the trail were lost on rocky ground. A wild elephant moving through a jungle generally leaves a plain path by breaking and trampling. If in retreat it looks as if a troop of cavalry had forced its way along. This fellow had moved as cautiously as a deer, and no white man could have followed him half a

At the spot where the trail was lost there was an immense outcrop of rock, and, after looking around for three hours without finding trace of footprints, I became heated and exhausted, and sat down for a pull at the water bottle and a bite to eat. The tracker also refreshed himself, and off to search anew on his own account. He had not been out of sight more than five minutes when I heard him shriek. After running a distance of 400 feet I came to a small dell or glade in the jungle. About the centre of this lay the body of my tracker. It could hardly be called a body; it was rather a mass of pulp. There was no living thing in sight, but there were footprints to prove that the elephant had been there. "The Wicked" had been in ambush behind a large mass of rock. He had only fifteen feet to go to seize the unfortunate tracker, and he had made short work of him had vanished as silently and swiftly as a siartled wolf.

I returned to my quarters fairly beaten, and to learn two days later that the elephant had killed one of the British officers the day after killing my tracker. He had ambushed him in the same fashion and had torn him limb from limb. It had now become utterly impossible to hire native assistance. At least no one would consent to beat up the jungle with me, and I saw that I must depend entirely upon my own resources or leave the field. In this emergency I determined to meet "The Wicked" with his own weapon-trickery. For several nights he had not molested any of the villages, but during each day he had committed some depredations. His last victim was a woman, and she was killed within two miles of where I was stopping. She was working in a field with a heavy fringe of bushes along the north side. The elephant had abandoned the fertile spot and rushed out of cover and killed her with a blow of his trunk, and was gone before the husband, who was working 200 feet away, got the alarm.

The night was dark and rainy, and I hired some of the natives to go with me and prepare the plot. We dressed up a lay figure to represent a ryot's wife in the act of reaping grain. We placed this about forty feet from the bushes. Then at the edge of the bushes and thirty feet away from a a rifle pit deep enough to hide me. Every care was taken to leave nothing by which the elephant's suspicions might be aroused, and as soon as the natives retired I went to sleep. I Wicked" to appear during the night. This bank was 12 feet high and If he did, then I should miss having a shot, and he might even find me as I slept and pull me out of the hole.

The night passed without an alarm, and I was awake when daylight came. I had an English elephant gun carrying a two-ounce explosive ball, and I knew that elephant was my meat if he appeared. I was well covered in with bushes and branches, but had peepholes through which I could clearly survey the field. It was 9 o'clock in the morning before anything moved, and had I not been watching "The Wicked" would have played me a sharp trick. He came out of the edge of the jungle just where I had hoped he would, but so quietly that but for seeing him I could not have credited his presence. He covered the ground between the jungle and the lay figure at a swift pace, and it was not until he seized the dummy that he suspected anything. He tossed it sky high and wheeled to go back, and I stood up and gave him a ball behind the shoulder. As he received it he wheeled and started across the grain field, but I rolled him over before he had gone

The trickey old beast was dead at last, and he had been lured to destruction by one of the simplest plots ever put into practice against him. I had to walk around him three or four times before I could realize that he had actually been downed. Indeed, until the natives began to gather and rejoice over his death, I was afraid that I had missed the "rogue" and trapped some beast from a near-by herd. He was soon fully identified, however, as he carried several marks by which he was well known. For instance, he had a deep scar across his forehead, where a bullet had furrowed the hide, there was another on the trunk, where a native had once slashed him with a big knife; he had a peculiar spot on his side, and, in brief, there was no possibility of mistake. The Government paid the reward without hesitation, and it no sooner became known that the dreaded scourge of the valley had met his fate than the people began to return to their homes, and the anniversary of the event has for years been celebrated in the district as a holiday .- [St. Louis Republic.

Taking Chances This Time.

"You know that I love you," she said. "Then why not give me time to consider before I name the day?"

"That's all right enough," he said, gloomily, "but l've lost three girls that way already."—[New York

ICE-HARVESTING.

How the Ice is Gathered In and Stored in Houses.

Three or More Crops May Be Cut From the Frozen Fields.

While ice is in general use, comparatively few people know how the crop is gathered. It is a very interesting as well as useful industry. Recently artificial ice has been introduced, but it does not compare favorably with the natural ice. Snow ice is the most desirable, it having more durability than the clear ice, and consequently is most sought after for use in refrigerators, etc.

A large quantity of ice for New York consumption is gathered up the Hudson, and from the lakes in Rockland and Orange counties. The ice is fit to cut when about ten inches thick, though sometimes crops over twenty inches in thickness are gathered.

If the season is a good one sometimes three or more crops are cut, providing the companies engaged in the industry have sufficient storage capacity. The ice harvest provides employment for a large number of men who caunot work at their ordinary occupations during the winter-carpenters, bricklayers, masons, fishermen and others being among those who benefit by the industry.

The first process of gathering in the ice is to plane it (which is Idone with a machine called a scraper or planer), which removes all the rough pieces of ice and other substances, and leaves a nice, smooth, clean surface. The next thing is to mark out he ice in blocks 22 by 30 inches, which is done by a machine. After this the ice-plow is brought into use. The plow resembles a saw with very big teeth, and is drawn by a horse and guided by a person who cuts into the lines made by the marker. The ice is plowed to within four inches of its depth, which leaves it sufficiently strong to bear the weight of the workmen. Large cakes are next sawed off by hand and floated through canals kept open for the purpose to the ice-house. The workmen have long steel bars with which they guide the blocks along. It is a common sight to see men standing on large cakes of noating ice and pushing themselves along with their ice-bars; occasionally the wind or current will carry them out to the middle of the lake or river, making their rescue necessary by boat. As the large cakes of ice are floated up to the storing-house a workman breaks off the blocks into the regulation size as marked. This is done with a bar, and is called barring off the ice. The blocks are then guided on to a machine resembling an endless chain, which carries the ice to the room, where it is stored away in layers, with the ends two inches apart. The old plan was to pack the ice close together, with the result that it froze into a solid mass. This meant a great deal of labor to get it out again when wanted, and also considerable waste in broken ice. Even when stored with the ends of the blocks two inches apart there is more labor attached to getting out the ice than in cutting and storing it away.

When wanted the ice is taken from the top and conveyed by an incline tramway or slide, which runs down on the outside of the building to the ground, and is placed in wagons and carried to the trains and boats for transportation all over the country. It takes one hundred and fifty men about five days to cut and store away the ice from twenty acres of water.-[Harper's Weekly.

The Nest in the Cherry Tree.

"Grandmamma, please tell us a story," said Nino. "I am very willing to," said grandmamma, "for you sat down while his sister Bella stood up beside him, just as you see them in the picture; they looked very attentive, waiting to hear grandmamma's story, for grandmamma knew so many pretty stories! She began:

Once upon a time there was a little boy named Robin. One day he saw in the garden, in the cherry tree, a pretty bird's nest; in it were six little bare and their bodies as yet covered wited. She stayed at home.

only with a light down. When they saw Robin they were afraid and Friendship is not like love; it cannot say opened their beaks wide, chirping to their papa and mamma to come out and protect them. Robin, instead of having pity upon them, began to laugh, and carried away the poor little birds.

"He was very wicked," said Nino. "Oh, yes," added Bella, "a hardhearted boy." Grandmamma continued: "But while he was carrying off the poor birds he heard a voice, which said, 'When the month of May comes the cherry tree in the garden will be covered with lovely flowers. But when the month of June comes there will be no cherries on the cherry

Robin stopped short, very much astonished, for he loved cherries.

"No, there will be no cherries there, the cherries will have been eaten before they were ripe by ugly worms. If Robin had left the little birds in their nest the little birds would have become large and would have eaten all the ugly worms, which would thus not have been able to devour the cherries. But nobody now will hinder the worms from eating the nice red cherries which Robin is so fond of."

"I am going to put back the birds in their nest," said the little boy.

But it was too late; when Robin put the birds back in their nest they There were no cherries on that cherry tree for Robin-[Brooklyn Citizen.

A Journey to the Sun.

Stop and think a moment what the sentence "A journey to the sun" implies. A cannon ball could hardly complete the trip in fifteen years going at the rate such missiles are known to travel. Take the fastest express train as another illustration of that unthinkable distance. Had one of these trains left the earth at the same moment the Mayflower sailed for America, and had it into a state of coma and it is feared travelled at the rate of a mile a he will die. Then his debtors will minute day and night since that time, laugh last and best. it would still be several miles from its celestial destination! The fare, at the customary rate, would be $2,-

Again, it has been found that sensation is not absolutely instantaneous, but that a very minute time elapses as it travels along the nerves. Therefore, if a person put his finger to a neated iron, or in the blaze of candle, there is a certain almost inconceivably small space of time, say the one-thousandth part of a second, before the brain knows of the burn. Now, suppose a man with an arm long enough to reach the sun. From the known rate of sensatory transmismore than one hundred years after touching the great luminary before he would know that his fingers had been scorched!-[St. Louis Republic.

The Twin Phenomena of the Northwest.

Just as the Atlantic cities were surprised when Chicago distanced all but two of them in population, and challenged all of them by her enterprise, so will they be astonished again and from another quarter, if they refuse to study the forces that are operating to build up new capitals in the West. In another ten years there will be another claim of a million population, and the counting of heads will not make nonsense of it. The new and wonderful assumption of metropolitan importance will be that of the twin cities of the wheat region-Minneapolis and St. Paul. They may not be joined under one name and government-opinions differ about that-but all agree that they will jointly possess a million of population. The last census credited Minneapolis with 164,700 population, and St. Paul with 133,000, or, jointly, 297,000. At the time of the preceding census (1880) the two cities included about 88,000 souls. At that rate of increase they will boast in 1900 a population of have both been very good." So Nino | 976,000 and more. But they insisted in the summer of 1891 that they possessed more than 350,000 joint population, and that the million mark will appropriating his hair-oil, filled his be reached before the next census is taken.- [Harper's Magazine, Friendship.

"Now is fruition given me and now The crown of me is set on mine own brow. This is the minute, the hour and the day." It cannot find a moment which it may Call that for which it lived; there is no Nor pledge thereof, nor first fruits of its bough, Nor harvest, and no myrtle crown nor bay. Love lives for what it may win or has won; But friendship has no guerdon save to be,

Itself is its own goal, and in the past Or future can no dearer dreams be done Or hoped for; save its own dear self to see The same, and evermore unchanged to

-[Edward L. White, in New York Sun.

HUMOROUS.

The woman question—Is my hat on straight?

When a chappie loses his head nobody notices any change in him.

There is always a hand of welcome ready to be offered to the strange um-

When you need a friend don't pick out the man whose dog never wants to

He-Mattie, if I only dared to kiss you! She-Harry, whatever you are, don't be a coward. When you open a window on the your eye is a cinder. "A goot turn done a friend vas vort more as six turns vat you didn't railway train the first thing to catch

The man who has a great fund of humor usually exercises it by trying to turn it into a fund of cash.

done," says Carl Pretzel.

"A horse will never die for the want of a crumb." "No?" "No, as long as he has a bit in his mouth."

Wool-When it comes to a difficult case Dr. Emdee is always at home. Van Pelt-How is that? Wool-He is never called.

An Iowa tailor has laughed himself

Many men who complain of working "as hard as a truck-horse," probably allude to the time that the truck is standing on the corner waiting for a

"How did the surprise party go off last night?" "Double-quick time. The surprised people thought they were burglars and turned the hose on them."

It is said that a man in Chicago owns an ape who steals his master's shoes and blacks them with ink. We've heard of monkey-shines before, but this beats all.

Officer (of the Society for the Presion, that man would have to live vention of Cruelty to Animals, to grocer)-Do you keep the cover over that cheese all the time? Grocer-Yes, sir. Officer-That won't do. You must lift it off occasionally and give the cheese air.

The postman's whistle, down the street, May bring us woe as well as weal: But when he passes on his beat

And doesn't call-how glum we feel!

A Big Catamount.

Last Wednesday Hugh Carpenter and Wiley Curtis, with six hounds, went a fox hunting. About 10 o'clock the dogs treed an animal and on going up to it found it to be a catamount. At first they did not know what it was and Mr. Curtis climbed the tres and cut the limb on which it was perched. It then jumped to another tree and Mr. Curtis climbed this tree and with a stick punched it out-not knowing what it was. It fell to the ground and after about ten minutes' chase the hounds caught it. This was in Asberry Fry's woods, about four miles southwest of La Plata. They brought the animal to town yesterday and we believe the best authority-at least a majority of the Westenerspronounced it a catamount, while some claimed it was a wild cat. It measured six feet and four inches from tip to tip and was a vicious looking animal .- [La Piata (Mo.) Home Press.

Largest Orange Trees.

J. T. Hancock, Sr., has an orange tree on his place, two miles west of Fort Meade, that measures 24 inches A crusty old bachelor, not liking the in diameter two feet from the ground. way his landlady's daughter had of Six years ago it bore 7000 oranges. The age of the tree is not known. It bottle with liquid glue the day before was there 40 years ago, when Mr. birds, whose little heads were still the party to which the girl was in- Hancock first took the place .- [Savannah (Ga.) News.

FRANK W. GIST,

Entered at the Post Office in Calera as

CALERA, SATURDAY, MAY 7.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

We are authorized to announce G. B. Deans as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic par-

We are authorized to announce D. R. McMillan as a candidate for the office of

to the action of the democratic county

We are authorized to announce Wm. R. A. Milner as a candidate for the office of Circuit Clerk of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the demperatic and conservative party.

John A. Campbell. Thereby announce myself a candidate for representative in the General Assembly of Alabama, subject to the action of the Democratic County Convention. GORDON DuBOSE. The friends of Col. Jno. P. West an-of Shelby county. The friends of D. W. Wyatt authorize

THE strong are commanded to be charitable to the weak. The friends of Gov. Jones should try to exercise love, charity, for Kolb for he is certainly weak.

ers what platforms the different rate of interest which it is worth to candidates for congress are on, the borrower depends on the neces-The duty of every true democrat is sity which forces him to borrow or plain, and we appeal to all such to upon the benefits he expects to deact as becometh members of the true rive from it. If it is right to reguand tried democracy.

If there is a true democrat in the state who is following Kolb and the St. Louis-Ocala craze, and who wants to remain in the fold of the party, the sooner he turns away from them the better. Surely there is no good in them.

ignore him entirely? May be they tion. consoled him with a strictly secret resolution? Brethren, Rueben needs | while it does people who want moconsolation of a public nature, and ney are willing to pay what it is as the alliance is, in a measure, responsible for his trouble, the con- inconveniences which the law will ference should have been the first naturally entail. Some of our legto extend it.

In our announcement column this foolish laws. week will be found the names of Col. Jno. P. West for Representa-love lick of his mighty stature,"

This has the right ring, and we are then bob up in the courts. not afraid to wager that that subthat are built that way.

IMPORTANT DECISION

The supreme court has decided a very important case, which is likely to effect financial circles. The following special from Montgomery explains the nature of the case: In the case of William Youngblood vs. Birmingham Trust and Savings company. Justice McClellan and his opinion decided that under section 4140 of the criminal code of Alabama in these words: "Any banker who discounts any Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county note, bill of exchange or draft at a higher rate of interest than 8 per cent per annum, not including the We are authorized to announce John S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject a misdemeaner." the appellee in discounting the draft sued on at a higher rate than 8 per cent, had committed a criminal offense—a misdemeanor. It is also held that the effect of the statute in the transaction in and by which the Trust and Savings company acquired the draft and acceptance sued on was to vitiate and defeat all right on the part of the company under the contract, the court holding that all contracts mafle in violation of a penal statute are absolutely void.

Undar this law every banker in the State of Alabama is guilty of a misdemeavor, for none of them can nounce him as a candidate for the Lower House of the Legislature. Subject to the action of the Democratic convention than one per cent, a month. Custhan one per cent a month. Custom is so readily found at this rate that it is plainly evident busness that it is plainly evident busness the county Superintendent of Education of Shelby county, subject to action of the democratic convention.

The friends of D. W. Wyatr authorize that it is plainly evident busness that it is pl the practice of fraud on the part of people who have been accommodated under this system in pleading the statute against a legal claim.

Money is a commodity in a certain sense, and the lending of it is LAST week we told our read- a legitimate business. The price or late the rate of interest by law, it is right to regulate the price of cotton, corn or meat by the some rule. The careful bussiness man can borrow money, put it in business, turn it over two or three times a year and make profit which will net him a high rate of interest on his investment. He should pay the lender Did the great Alliance conference what the money has been worth to sympathize with Mr. Kolb in his him, and no law should interfere gubernatorial trouble, or did they with so purely a business transac-

> However the law exists, and worth for its use must suffer the islatures, in attempting to please the people, have passed some very

EVERY man, except he te wilful tive, and Rev. D. Y. Wyatt for Su- ly blind, is bound to admit that Mr. perintendent of Education. These Kolb has a clear and undisputed two gentleman have long been citi- majority of the democratic convenzens of Shelby county and are too tion against him. Now isn't it well known to need introduction at very plain that it is folly, no matter our hands. We have no hesitancy, how strong the devotion of friends, however, in saying that they are in to have a hope of obtaining a nomievery way qualified to fill the posi- nation? Then why support him tions to which they are announced. further? What is he running for? Is he working on the same line as Bro. BLAND, of the Troy Mes- two years ago? Does he want to senger, is getting real poetic. Hear again pledge his services to the exhim on the situation: "Kolb said ecutive committee, and then go into in Pike that he would not meet any counties where local differences exmeet the Governor in person. He the flames? Is he holding on with now proposes to meet the hench- a hope that the Third party will be men of defeat, but declines to meet constrained to him and unit; with 8th he will meet the old man face to crats in a bolt? It seems that he face and lie low from the sarcastic will always be a candidate. Why not the counties that are yet to act come up to the primaries as one THE Buck Creek sub-Alliance in man, and send up a solid Jones del-Georgia, has adopted this resolu- egation, adding 111 more votes to lities of the order, or hold to its ortion: "Resolved, That if Carroll the majority column? This might, is platform we will not pay any If he sees a crumb, even a shadow can answer. more dues, and our charter will be of a crumb, from either of these he subject to the proper authorities." will be in the field till August, and alliance is composed of men whose THE chairman of the executive enough, and only wants determined Monday. 6th day of June. 1892. convictions are formed after reason committee requests the organization effort be followed successfully. Let and exercise of common sense and of democratic clubs throughout the democrats go to the beat meetings, judgement. They have studied the county. Atttention is called to his send good men as delegates to the organic law of the order. Their in- address in this issue, with the hope convention, let these delegates nomterpretation of the declaration of that it will incite the desired inter- inate good men for office, and let purposes of the order are correct. est, There is no better way to all unite in their election. No reation arouse democrats to duty than by in a half-dozen sub-alliances would associating them together in the ment, as there is no irregularity to of the north-west qr of the south-west qr of the south-west qr of the south-west qr of the south-west qr of section 8; the north-west qr of the south-west qr of the south-west qr of section 1; the south-east qr of section 1; the south-east qr of the north-west qr of the south-west qr of section 8; the north-west qr of the south-west qr of section 8; the north-west qr of the south-west qr of the south-west qr of the south-west qr of section 1; the south-west qr of the southquiet the third party move- study and discussion of the issues bother. Keep the present organiment in this state. But we fear involved. We hope to hear that a zation pure, and let the independthere are not that many in Alabama club has been organized in every ents go their own way. Let dembeat in the county.

The Best Place to Secure a Business Education is at the

NEW YORK

COLLEGE®COMMERCE

BIRMINGHAW, ALA,

Send for Circular,

LEONARD LIPPMAN, President.

G. F. HART, Secretary and Treasurer.

M. M. FIELDS, Vice President.

the state convention, which is 14 People's party: . The fight between and a fraction more than necessary | the Third party and the Democracy | include, says the News, any dele, crowd are trying to raise new isgates from Randolph or Washington sues to hide behind and thereby decounties, both of which are report. ceive the people, but the voters of ed as having probably gone for old Marshall are too sensible and the governor. Including those to too intelligent to be fooled in any be selected today, there are yet 111 such way. There is only one issue to be elected, and it is reasonable before the people and that is: Shall to expect that Jones will secure 75 the democratic party lie supinely of these, which will give him a ma- on its back and allow the third parjority of 144. This will leave gene- ty to ride rough shod over it, or al Reuben so far in the back-ground shall the democracy in thunder tones that there will be no plea for an in- repel the insidious invader? Dedependent candidacy.

This is the way the way the Montgomery Advertiser has the delegation footed up: Jones delegates, 248, with 14 more secured that have not been officially announced, aggregating 162 votes. The only are added we have 18 more votes to Kolb and 18 taken from Jones, This would reduce Jones' vote to 244, or 10 majority of the entire convention even if Kolb were to win all the remaining delegates.

The Advertiser further says: · Every one familiar with the counties yet to act knows that the governor will get at least sixty more votes, and have an overwhelming majority in the convention.

of Jones' henchmen. That he would ist and throw fire brands of strife to what political action they should ence held at Birmingham tells you less time than was usual for me. I think "Defeat" himself, But on August republicans and disaffected demo- of the great parties, that you must of the great parties, that you must support the Omaha nominees. The again be without it at such times. I:m lines are drawn, and drawn by the leaders of the ailiance. What is your duty? Either sacrifice a principle and cut lose from the poganic law and vote with the party County Alliance adopts the St. Lou- in a measure, check-mate his plans. of your choice is the only way you > should not assume any undue proportion. The way is simple enough highest bidder, on ocrats do their duty.

According to the slate of the READ what that able weekly of the governor has 2474 delegates in Democrat, has to say about the to nominate. These figures do not waxes warmer. The Third party mocracy or Ocalaism.

The beautiful little city of Hunts ville already has two cotton factories under way, and now the news comes to us that she is to have another to cost $100,000. The capibona fide contests so far on Kolb's city. Ten car loads of machinery tal was principally raised in that part are as to Marshall and Dale, for the great $1,000,000 Dallas cotton mills have arrived and being put in position. Besides the manufacturing enterprises Huntsville is soon to have a southern railroad outlet. With such facilities there is no reason why it should not very state. Calera, Columbiana and all our little towns would take strength and grow if more attention was given to the establishment of small manufactories

IMPORTANT TO LADIES Do the Simon-pure Democrats of with my last child, in order to procure a the alliance hesitate longer as to safe and easy travil. I used it about what political action they should two menths before my expected time, and I had a very quick and easy continement. Nothing occurred to protract there is no hope of relief in either it a medicine that should be used by

yours respectfully.

Mrs. ELIZABETH DIX.

Any merchant or druggist can procure
Rislev's Philotoken for $1 a bottle.

CHARLES F. RISLEY, Wholesale
Druggist, 62 Cortlandt St., New York.

scribed real estate, to-wit

The south hif of section 6; the north hif of section 7; the north-west qr of section 8; the west half of the north-east qr of section 8; the north-west qr of the ship 22, range 21, west, containing in all 1280 acres.

MARY A. DEDMAN, W. W. QUARTES, Att'y. may7-tds

Birmingham News of the 3rd inst., North Alabama, the Guntersville the governor has 2474 delegates in Democrat, has to say about the

Mrs. S. H. McCauley's,

NEAR THE DEPOT,

Montevallo. - - Ala. A Splendid Line of Trimmed and Untrimmed Hats in the Latest Styles, and at Reasonable Prices.

HANDKERCHIEFS & HOSIERY. Saturday Sales at $1

CORBETT REESE.

Harness Saddles,

DEALERS IN

HARDWARE & TINWARE,

WACCH WATERIAL soon be the largest town in the Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded

118 19TH STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA.

Receive Deposits,

Shells always on Hand.

will proceed to sell, for cash, to the highest bidder, on highest bidd

Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE.
No. 1.	South	Bound,	4:53	a m
3.		44		g). 111
" 9,		- 66		a. m
" 2.	North	Bound,	10:19	44
 4	4.6	14.6	10:05	p. m
" 10,	6.6	46	7:15	p. 11

	B. 1. 1. 1
So.	1, To Selma,	4:36 a. m.
	3, 11	4:40 p. m.
	2, From Selma,	2:04 a. m.
	4, "	10:40 p. m.

No. 85, Arrives at 86, Departs at AT THE CHURCHES.

10:25 a. m.

PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m.

and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

We hear that there are

Baptist Church--Rev. J. G. Lowrey, rastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN-J. C. Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3 Friday evening at 3.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter

Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. H. Kidd.

County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland. Superintendent of Education-T. N.

County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. Dyeev, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy. RICHARD K. FOX.

New York City. Franklin Square.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

The next best thing possible to insurance against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of Calera.

stouns of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old sge should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

NOTICE.

GURNER, SHELBY, Co., ALL April 7, 1892.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Excelsior Coal Company will be held at the office of the company at Gurnee, Alabama, on Thursday, May 12, 1892, at 12 o'clock, noon.

In addition to current business, a proposition for the consolidation of the fran-chises and property of this company with the Cahaba Coal Mining Company will be considered and acted upon.
A. H. CARPENTER,

Secretary.

ONE DOLLAR WEEKLY

Buys a good gold watch by our club system. Our 14-karat gold-filled cases are warranted for 20 years. Fine Elgin or Waltham movement, stem wind and set. View is one of our best weekly ex-lady's or gent's size. Equal to any $50 changes, and we reget that any watch. To secure agents where we have thing should occur that would de mone, we sell one of the hunting case watches for the club price, $28, and send C. O. D. by express with privilege of examination before paying for same.

Our agent at Durham, N. C., writes:

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege buth, works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how your privilege such works."

One good reliable agent wanted for

WHAT AILS YOU?

If you have sudden darting pains in got the above syptoms you have got the but no trace could be found. Rob-Rheumatism and if the druggist tells you bery was supposed to be the object, the truth he will say Dr. Drummond's Remody is only known cure. Agents

HUGH T. CAFFEY,

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON CALERA, ALA.

feb12-1y,

TOWN TOPICS.

W. B. Browne, of Columbiana, was in Calera Monday.

W. R. Oliver, Esq., visited Blocton on professional business since our last issue.

There was communion service at the Cumberland church last Sunday last Sunday were very interesting membership?" C. W. O'Hara. and instructing.

John Spencer, of Columbiana, was in to see us yesterday morning a few minutes.

Attention is directed to the mortgage sale of real estate, which appears in this issue.

The Methodist Sunday school Methodist-Services on the second of this place will pie nic at Talla-

> We hear that there are several weddings broked for Calera, to take ed by a collection for missions, Dr. W place during the month of June.

from Calera Tuesday evening, Edi- resented in this meeting. Everybody mending him to our citizens. He tor Campbell winning the laurels.

Mr. J. S. Bridges, of the Vander. bilt Hotel, claims to have the finest litter of Berkshire pigs in the

Mrs. J. E. Farrington spent a few hours in Calera yesterday. She was en route for Jemison to visit her sister, Mrs. Allen.

Mr. J. F. Palmer and family moved this week to Jemison.

The young players of Calera have reorganized a second nine. They are training, and expect to soon be able to compete with the best ameteure nines in country.

to be held at the Baptist church in in August is past, victory shall be our re-

R. M. Pilgreen has asked a Jour. NAL man how we spell his name? Last week we had it "Pilffreen." Typos can see at a glance how natural it is to make such a mistake.

The JOURNAL will be sent to subscribers until after the election for continuance of eleven days. The 25 cent, which barely covers the pastor, Rev. Mr. Arnett was assistcost of publishing. Postmasters in ed for two days by Rev. Witherthe county are authorized to take spoon, the remainder of the time money and send in names.

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the stouns of the financial world cannot was applied to. attributes to the annual bath he was applied to.

> hoff, while in Birmingham the oth | nominations, but there were few er day, got their names in the penitents who presented then:selves paper as the owners of immense for pray—but let us hope that the possessions in this county. Only services dispensed "will not return the day before one of these gentle- void," but return "as bread upon men saw a snake that the other the waters cast.

In this issue will be found a notice of a mortgage sale of real estate at Shelby Springs. This is matter will be arranged in time for the opening of the springs.

Fill. Gardner, the jovial man on the road, has been in town since our last issue, and told Col. West he was going to stick to the Jones democracy till August, and if it was not victorious in Bibb he intended joining the alliance. Fill always was a queer fellow.

We regret to learn that Editor Lawrence, of the Chilton View, was quite sick first of the week. hope he is better ere this. The View is one of our best weekly ex-know how you can furnish such works Montevallo, on the Three B's railfor the money,"

Our agent at Pennington, Texas, writes "Am in receipt of the watch and am pleased without measure. All stores, church and a number of road. It is located in the mids of a who have seen it say it would be cheap houses have already been erected. Mr. Vandegrift named the new papers. town Maylene in honor of his daugheach place. Write for particulars.

EMPIRE WATCH CO., New York ter, Mrs. Frank T. Corbett of this city.—Age-Herald.

Wednesday night as Major A. B. Holt was on his way to preaching he was struck on the head by a rock or brick thrown by an unknown negro. He turned in time to see the negro run, but there belooked with anything else. If you have got the above syptoms you have got the sundandard in the points or muscles, and it securs every time you get cold, and appears in the points or muscles, and it securs every time you get cold, and appears in he was on his way to preaching he was struck on the head by a rock or brick thrown by an unknown negro. He turned in time to see the negro run, but there belong the following and the sturdy champion of the agricultural ough news service from every important in the sturdy champion of the south.

8. It pays more money for its special sworth many times its subscription price to every farmer. This department is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, and much more than any weekly newspaper in America.

9. It is the People's Friend, and is the sturdy champion of the agricultural interests of the south.

8. It pays more money for its special sworth many times its subscription price to every farmer. This department is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thorough news service from every important in the sturdy champion of the agricultural authority of the south.

8. It pays more money for its special sworth many times its subscription price to every farmer. This department is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thorocal many of the sturdy champion of but as the Major was not knocked down the perpetrator was frightened away. Quite a number of tramps are hanging around the town, and every day one or more is run off. The boys are ripe for a little fun and will likely have it before the town is rid of these nuisances.

CENTENNIAL MEETING

OF THE FRIELBY BAPTIST ASSOCIATION.

To be held with Calera Baptist Church May

FINDAY 10 A. M.-Devotional Exercises, 30 minutes. C. W. O'Hara of Bible study among our members?

F. M. Woods. 2:30 p. m.—"How may we best The services at the Baptist church | guard the | doctrine of | a | regenerate

7:30—Sermon, Dr. E. B. Teague. SATURDAY 9 A. M .- "Devotional exercises 30 minutes," N. T. Lucas.

9:30—Centennial movement ex plained, Dr. W. C. Cleveland. 2:30 P. M.—Signs of the times as work? E. B. Teague. 7:30 P. M.—Sermon, J. W. Mitchell, SUNDAY 10 A. M.—S. S. exercises, conducted by T. M. Fancher.

C. Cleveland.

invited to attend.

J. G. Lowry, Chairman. Hotel.

DEMOCRATIC CLUBS. To the Democratic Executive Committee o

Shelby County. Reeling convinced that thorough organization is absolutely essential for the advancement and maintainance of the Democratic Party in Shelby county, I earnestly urge the Executive Committeemen of each beat to immediately orregret to lose our good citizens, but ganize Democratic Clubs, thereby prewish them success in their new paring our people for effective work in behalf of the principles of our party, and successful resistance to the efforts of whatever opposition we may have to

I urge this, believing that if the members of the committee, aided by the democrats of our county, will at once begin We direct attention to the pro- the organization of these clubs in their gramme of the Centennial Meeting respective beats, when the first Monday ward and the time honored principles of the Democratic party vindicated.

J. R. WHITE, Ch'n. Dem. Ex. Com., Shelby Co. Columbiana, Ala., May 2, 1892.

The series of meetings held at the Cumberland church in this place, was closed Wednesday night after a by Rev. Joe. Caldwell, of Huntsville. Services were held twice each day, Mr. W. H. Duran has been suf- 10, a. m, and 8, p. m. The ser-Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

Mr. W. H. Duran has been suffering from a severe cold which he attributes to the annual bath he attributes to the annual bath he were well delivered and full of deep, Lamps for Rooms spiritual truths. The attendance was good during the entire meeting. Much interest was manifested by Capt. O'Brien and Mr. Brinker- the christians of the different de-

10:30-Importance and best means and young democrats are earnestly so-J. P. WEST, J. H. GUNN, R. M. PILGREEN,

May 7, 1892.

Attention is called to the large dvertisement of the New York College of Commerce, which appears in this issue. Young men and ladies who desire to prepare themselves for busness can do no better than attend this institution, bearing on the progress of mission which is one of the best in the

Dr. J. C. Pierson will be in Cale. a on May 25th, on and after which 11 A. M.-Missionary Sermon follow- time he will offer his professional services to three who desire work in his line. Dr. Pierson is a dentist It is earnestly hoped that each of ability and experience, and the A trio of fishermen went out church in the association will be rep- Journal takes pleasure in recomwill be found at the Vanderbilt

Mortgage Sale

UNDER AND VIRTUE OF A MORTgage executed to the undersigned by Mary M. Baker and Hope H. Baker, and recorded in Mortgage Book No. 21, page 279, in the office of the Judge of Probate, of Shelby county, I will proceed to sell at public outery to the highest bidder, for cash, at Shelby Springs, in said county on

The 20th day of May. 1892, within the legal hours of sale, the following described personal property, to-wit: Furniture, including beasteads, washstands, tables, chairs and

mirrors	904	25
Springs for bedsteads and spring
cots,	258	00
Park Lamps	75	00
Pump and Boiler (engine)	215	00
Ice House	150	00
Pastry Stove	50	00
Cooking Utensils	134	QQ.
Range	350	00
Steam Table and Fixtures	150	00
Water Cooler,	36	00
Lamp in Dining Room	40	00
Lamps in Parlor	10	90
Mattrasses (70)	210	00
Pillows	100	00
Blankets and Comforts	30	00
Bath Tubs	30	00
Water Works	150	00
Laundry Stove	30	00
Table Ware, including knives and forks, spoons, crockery and table linen	250	00

Bed Linen and Towels. Diningroom Tables and Safe..... Billiard Table..... Bed Room Sets..... Pastry Table with Marble top....

W. W. QUARLES, Att'y. april30 3t

SOMETHING NICE FREE.

tate at Shelby Springs. This is very valuable property, and should bring a good price. We hope the leases that flesh is heir to are caused and agravated by an impure condition of the blood and a sluggish circulation.

Possessing Extraordinary Cleansing Powers Restoring and Strengthening the whole System. Enriching the Blood

THE KING OF BLOOD PURIFIERS

producing increased vitality by restoring an impaired digestion and bringing back the bloom of youth to the cheek of the enfeebled and emaciated. Price, $1.00 per Bottle-6 Bottles for $5.00.

For Sale by All Druggists.

NABERS, MORROW & SINNIGE.

SOLE CONTROLERS,

Birmingham

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION. Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages,

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

It covers the news of the whole itable sketches appear each week.

I. having its correspondents scat
7. It is the People's Friend, and is Wednesday night as Major A. B. world, having its correspondents scature to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these de is a household word partments,

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.
the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to the household.

tution at great expense.

of a postage stamp. Think of it! Ev- be done at the state of the state of the greatest weekly newspa-

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality. Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information,

THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

In obedience to the suggestion of the Chairman of the democratic executive commiltee of Shelby county, the democrats of Calera beat—No. 3—are requested to meet at the office of W. D. Huggins, Monday evening, May 9th at 8 o'clock, for the purpose of organizing a Democratic Club. Old democrats and and young democrats are earnestly solicited to attend. J. P. W.

A Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, and t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of the state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent accordance to the contract of 200 oo every point in the county.

Quikly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

and Legal Printing a Specialty Commercial

The Journal will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

We call it Alabastine, as it is manufac-tured from alabaster rock.
The people use it because it is durable and beautiful. The Reasons Why.

The sanitarians endorse it because it is of a sanitary nature, and contains no poison-ous material.

We advertise it as we want all to have an opportunity to be benefited by its advantages.

Wall paper firms fight it, as it displaces
their poisonous products,
Some dealers talk against it, as they can halomines and where the people

Some dealers talk against it, as they can buy cheap kalsomines, and where the people are not posted, sell at Alabastine prices, thus making more profit.

Kalsomines must go, as they are only temporary and spoil the walls.

Alabastine has come to stay, as it possesses merit, and has the unqualified endorsement of those who have used it for years.

Alabastine has stood the test of time, and now stands higher in public favor than ever now stands higher in public favor than ever before.

Prot. Kedzie, the eminent sanitarian of Michigan, says: "Have carefully tested for arsenic or copper; none could be found. Find no traces of poisonous or injurious material."

Dr. DeWolfe, the health officer of Chicago, says: "The perfect wall for domestic habitation is the material which resists decomposition in every form. It seemes to me that Alabastine is admirably adapted to the pur-

The Good Health Publishing Co. of Battle Creek, Mich., writes: "We will, probably, use Alabastine as long as it is in existence." We are located at Grand Rapids, Mich., and will cheerfully answer any communications in relation to our goods.

The musk antelope can send forth such a powerful odor of musk that even at the distance of 100 yards he can smother his enemy to death.

Catarrh Can't be Cured

With local applications, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you have to take internal remedles. Hall's Catarrh Cure is, aken internally, and acts directly on the blood and nucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is no quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

F. J. Cheney & Co., Props., Toledo, O. Sold by druggists, price 75c.

The Only One Ever Printed. CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, BEAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE.

Chief Justice Fuller and Justice Harlan, though very unequal in stature, are firm

Is it sensible? Is it reasonable? Is it economy to suffer yourself and worry others with a headache when Bradycrotine will relieve you in filter minutes? It costs only fifty cents a bottle, at drug stores.

The worst cases of female weakness readily rield to Dr. Swan's Pastiles. Samples free. Dr. Swan, Beaver Dam. Wis.

SUFFERERS FROM COUGHS, SORE THROAT, etc., should try "Brown's Bronchial Troches." a simple but sure remedy. Sold only in boxes. Price 25 cents.

If afflicted with sore eyes use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye-water, Druggists sell at 25c a bottle.

Mr. Warren D. Wentz

Is given the highest endorsement for honesty and integrity by all who know him. For years he has worked for Mr. D. P. Wilson, the harness maker and member of the Geneva Board of Health. Read the following statement of his terrible sufferings from yspepsia

And his cure by Hood's Sarsaparilla. "I was taken sick last October with gastric fever, and myrecovery was considered almost ho After 7 weeks the fever slowly left me, but I could not eat the simplest food without

Terrible Distress

It seemed that I had recovered from the fever to die of starvetion. I took pepsin compounds, bisn.uth, charcoal, cod liver oil and malt until my physician confessed that he did not know what else to try. Everything I took seemed Like Pouring Melted Lead into my stomach. I happened to think I had part of a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla that had been in the house for two or three years, that I found had benefited me previously for dyspepsis. I began taking it and soon began to feel better. I have now taken a little over two bottles and can truthfully say I feel well again and can eat anything without Pie and Cheese which I have been unable to touch for years. The English language does not contain words enough to permit me to express the praise I would like to give to Hood's Sarsaparilla." W. D. WENTZ, 1836 Castle Street, Geneva, N. Y.

A Good Voucher "I have known Mr. Warren D. Wentz for many years and can youch for him as a man of veracity and one well known about here. I have sold him several bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla during the past few months." M. H. PARTRIDGE, Druggist, Geneva, N. Y.

Hood's Pills Cure Liver Ills

and Blood diseases sent sealed for OC.; also Disingurements, like Birth Marks, Moles, Warts, India Ink and Powder Marks, Scars, Pit-tings, Redness of Nose, Su-perfluous Hair, Pimples, John H. Wondbury, Dermatologist, 125 W-42d St., New York City. Consultation free, at office or by letter. FACIAL SOAT

FOR THE LADIES.

A NEW MATERIAL.

A new material is called Llama cloth and it is the hardest thing imaginable to cords are the fashion at present. distinguish from fine all wool challies. It has au all wool finish in cream and light shades and the printed designs are dainty and "Frenchy." Garlands of gay small flowers are the most popular designs, and they have a Watteau effect that is really charming. They are thirty-one inches wide, and come almost as cheap as the ordinary cotton challie of years past.-[New York Press.

GREEK FASHION FOR THE HAIR.

The hair is still worn in Greek fashion, combed well up from the neck and back from the ears, and then arranged in a heavy coil that goes outward in a point like the shell of a small, round snail. When the hair is in itself beautiful this is a very effective arrangement, but occasionally it becomes almost grotesque. heavy, pendulous cheeks and a narrow forehead. One associates it with harmony of outline, at least, if not absolute

FLOWERS FOR EVENING.

Flowers are growing more and more popular as a trimming for evening costumes. Even the old-fashioned flowers find themselves at fashionable society events, clinging with a certain timidity to the graceful folds of some filmy gown. An attractive chiffon costume is of pale yellow made over a foundation of yellow silk. The chiffon is draped loosely over the silk and is trimmed with garlands of pale yellow roses, which reach from the waist almost to the bottom of the gown. The lower part of the bodice is outlined with a pointed belt of yellow ribbon. A long yellow sash falls over the chiffon drapery at the back and the bodice is cut very low. The exact shape is outlined with the yellow roses, and a graceful bunch of the roses form a cap over the shoulder, which is the fashionable apology for a sleeve .- [St. Louis Repub-

RIBBON BOWS FOR HATS.

In hat trimmings, large masses of long, narrow ribbon bows are much used on straw hats. The cluster of ten or twelve sharp bows and ends placed on the side of the hat almost conceals the low crown.

In the midst of the bows is often placed an enormous daisy of cut jet. The daisies and stars of jet, blue steel or green iridescent steel are recent novelties. They are several inches in diameter and have a handsome effect. noticed one placed flat on the wired tulle crown of a lace hat and entirely covering the top.

Rose stems are twisted into brims and crowns of hats-the rubber stems being adorned with most natural thorns. Leaves and foliage, with a bit of lace, form the trimming. Most of the hats and bonnets have strings tying under the chin.

Long floaters of fine black or white lace also hang from the back of the hat and twist around the throat. I saw a beige and green straw to-day trimmed with roses and green gauze, and the gauze tied under the chin in a large bow.

Black lace thistles are among the new hat trimmings. A novelty is mousseline de soie in bands, edged with tiny bits of feathers or the single blossoms of a lilac bloom or the separate forget-me-not flowers stuck deftly along the edge. The gauze is then folded around and around till it forms a tuft or blossom. It is a dainty ornament .- [New York

BEADING FOR NECKWEAR.

One of the nicest things that has been invented lately in the line of neckwear is beading—just rows of beads run on a little cord and stitched in the neck. They keep clean, of course, five times as long as the ordinary ruching, and when they do get dirty, a little soapsuds on a nail-brush will restore them to their pristine freshness. There is only one thing to be remembered: the thread they are strung on in the store is apt to cut, and it will save you much agony of mind and bother if you will just go over your neckwear before you sew it in your gown, and fasten each bead with a silk thread. The silk won't cut as cotton would; the beads will stay in shape until you drop something heavy on them some day when your waist has fallen off the back of the chair on to the floor .- [American Dairy-

FASHION NOTES.

Toilet sets are handsomer than ever. Columnar vases of cut glass are new. Italian forms are prominent in garden

Speckled tweeds are favorites for woolen goods.

traveling wraps.

the new cut-glass pitchers. Yellow holds its own among the large vases for palms and plants.

black velvet ties.

among things desirable. Flower glove fasteners are something ew. White enamelled daisies on a which he may go back to his civilian foundation of silver are seen. Pansies,

Baby ribbons are the ribbons of fash-They are, as their name implies, the narrow ribbons used for babies, and are rendered serviceable for children of

A Sample Cake of Soap and 128 page Book on Dermatology and Beauty; Illustrated; on Skin, Scalp, Nervous Black-ribbed velvets with a stripe of Black-ribbed velvets with a stripe of color between the ribs will be worn for the wealth which these idle multitudes skirts this season. These are made plain; the only trimming, when trimming at all is used, is a band of reathered silk around the bottom.

> Pink is greatly worn. Even pink cloth hats are seen, with clusters of ostrich for all Napoleon's terrific campaigns feathers and trimmed with jet, Pink from Lodi to Waterloo.

and black is a popular combination. Black silk petticoats have pink silk flounces veiled with black lace.

The silk shoestring is laid upon the shelf; its reign is o'er. Silver and gilt the end of each cord is a diminutive rosette. Twisted cord of black and silver or black and gilt is highly popular.

The princess gown promises to be a leading favorite during the coming season. Long basques are being replaced by corsagos, with the skirt draped up on them or drawn straight over their extreme edge, a single flat fold being laid where it joins the bodice.

Striped fabrics continue to be cut on the cross. The best modistes made them with a deep gored seam up the front of the skirt, throwing the lines out on either side in such a way as to form a series of acute angles. This gives a bell-shaped effect to the skirt and an appearance of slenderness to the wearer.

A late novelty in guimpes is simply a round collar finished with a deep frill The Greek coiffure goes badly with that falls low on the waist of the dress and over the tops of the sleeves. This gives the popular effect of a bertha of mony of outline, at least, if not absolute lace surrounding the low neck or the beauty of feature.—[New York Adver- yoke of a dress. White China silk or mull as well as lace is used for these Bonnet strings are of moment. They are worn long, and when tied in a knot on one side fall far below the waist. Light strings are more fashionable than black. White are preferred in Paris. Mauve, pale pink, blue, green, and yellow are worn. They are thought to soften the outlines of the lace.

New tailor-made gowns have two pockets. They are inserted lengthwise in gores, and are as useful and convenient as men's trousers pockets, which they greatly resemble. A horizontal pocket is sometmes introduced directly below the belt on the right side. But it is likely to interfere with the hang of the

Fur and astrachan cuffs have been worn all winter, but the cuffs which are to appear this season will suit the most fastidious. They are adjustable and slip over gowns of varied hues. Over gray gowns steel cuffs are to be worn, jewelled cuffs with light evening gowns and deep cuffs of voven gilt for light spring cos-

Jackets have a severely military air. They are double, breasted and trimmed with large bone or pearl buttons. Pocket flaps have developed in size since last spring, and are usually finished with three rows of stitching up and down the front and around the collar. A jacket of gobelin blue lady's cloth was stitched with black. A Russian collar and large bone buttons were the only decoration.

The girls are busy just now making neck-ties for their best young men. They first carefully study his complexion and then buy the silk which will be becoming to his peculiar style of beauty. The silk is crocheted into a "four-in-hand tie." It takes time and patience, but the maid and man are happy. The youth who has not been presented with one of the new ties is wearing a pained, hurt look.

THE COST OF ARMED PEACE.

Europe Is Poorer by at Least $1,000,-000,000 a Year by It.

In Europe to-day 3,000,000 men, the physical flower of the continent, have been drilling, marching and countermarching, practicing at targets, learning the use of bayonet and sabre, and performing as nearly as is possible in sham fights the evolutions of actual war. It was so yesterday and last year and through all the yesterdays of twenty years. Seven times during this period has the personnel of this vast host been renewed; consequently there are now about 20,000,000 Europeans not yet b yond middle life who have been trained to the fighter's profession and who could at briefest notice take their places in the active army or in the reserve. Every city has its barracks and parade ground, says a writer in the Forum; evefrontier frowns with a double row of fortifications. At the end of the nineteenth century Europe, from the Douro to the Don, is a camp, wherein ten times 300,000 of her able-bodied men are bivouacking, ready at a sign to spring to arms and slay each other. The spectacle is without parallel in the history of the world. Even in the boisterous days of antiquity, when wars were frequent, fighting was the business of comparatively few. Alexander's phalanx and Cæsar's legions were composed of picked men, who adopted the soldier's career and followed it until they were retired or killed. So, too, the armies of Charles V., and

Philip II., of Gustavus Adolphus and Turenne, varied in numbers from year to year. The majority of Napoleon's old guard and of many of his regiments of the line fought through a dozen campaigns, and he regulated the quota of each year's conscription according to each ye r's needs. But our generation has witneseed the expansion in Europe of Black silk ulsters will be worn for a military system as severe in time of peace as the old military systems were Tall, slender and tankard-shaped are in war-time, a sort of perpetual levy en Measures which once have been deemed unjustifiable, except in the most Powder blue is a new electric shade which promises to be popular.

Fancy colored hats, such as pale green or blue, will be trimmed in jet with black yelvet fies.

Hat defined any strateging emergency, are now employed every day, and what was the standard of war has been fixed as the standard of peace. Under the new system every eligible man is at a given age withdrawn from his trade or occupation Small pieces of gilded furniture painted and converted for three or five years ed with corn-flowers and carnations are into a soldier, till he becomes proficient in firing a breech-loader and in the apwhich he may go back to his civilian calling, but with the liability of being violets, diminutive tulips and rosebuds summoned to fight at any time until he is

45 or 50 years old. The economic waste which is due to this system needs no comment. To estimate the sum we must reckon in not only the money actually spent on food, clothes, lodging, arms and ammunition, the salaries of officers and the stipend of could produce, were they profitably employed. This computed, Europe is poorer by not less than $1,000,000,000 a year. Her armed peace during the last twenty

Timothy seed is very small, and it is easily destroyed in the ground if too deeply covered. Early in the spring the ground should be harrowed fine, and the seed broadcasted on the surface, to be slightly brushed in. It is better to broadcast the seed if the field is expected to have an evenly covered appearance, as drilling not only covers the seed too much but causes it to come up too thickly in some places and too sparingly in others.

People Know a Good Thing.

THAT'S WHY REMINGTON TYPEWRITERS ARE IN DEMAND.

Some idea of the present wonderful growth of the typewriter business may be gained from the fact that the sales of Remington typewriters for January and February, 1892, exceeded those of the corresponding months of 1891 by $160,000.

The great and constantly gaining popularity of the Remington is clearly shown by the fact that the business has more than doubled within three years. The Remington factory at Ilion, N. Y., employs 700 men to fill the demand of eated by the sales agents, Wyckoff, Seamans & Benedict, who dispose of machines at the astonishing rate of one every five minutes. ingly in others.

Street Cleaning.

Analysis of the street cleanings in one of the large cities shows that while they contain less water than horse manure, they contain also cless potash, nitrogen and phosphoric acid. The insoluble matter, sand, etc., in the sweepings are fifty times more than in the horse manure, which leaves but little value in the sweepings compared with horse manure.

Uses of the Bamboo.

it is hoped by the Department of Agriculture that the bamboo may yet be cultivated in this country as it is In China, where it supplies a large part of the wants of the peonle, being applied to more than five hundred different purposes. In the Flowery Kingdom it takes the place of both iron and steel. The farmer builds his house and fences out of it, his farming utensils as well as his household furniture are manufactured from it, while the tender shoots furnish him with a most delicious vegetable for his table.

The roots are carved into fantastic images, shaped into divining blocks to guess the will of the gods, or cut into lantern handles and canes. The tapering culms are used for the props of houses, the framework of awnings, the ribs of sails and shafts of rakes. for fences and every sort of frames, coops, and cages, and the handles and ribs of umbrellas and fans. The leaves are sewed into raincoats and thatches. The shavings and curled threads furnish materials for stuffing pillows, while parts supply the bed for sleeping, the chopsticks for eating, the pipe for smoking, the broom for sweeping, the mattress to lie upon, the chair to sit upon, the table to eat on, the food to eat, and the fuel to cook it with, etc., etc. In fact, its uses are almost without num-

Murray, the well known English publisher

The Skill and Knowledge

Essential to the production of the most perfect and popular laxative remedy known have enabled the California Fig Syrup Co. to achieve a great success in the reputation of its remedy, Syrup of Figs, as it is conceded to be the universal laxative. For sale by all

Queen Victoria has become so feeble re-cently as to require assistance when she

MALARIA cured and eradicated from the system by Brown's Iron Bitters, which enriches the blood, tones the nerves, aids digestion. Acts like a charm on persons in general ill health, giving new energy and strength.

Senators Sherman and Hoar and ex-Sena-tor Evarts are cousins.

FITS stopped free by Dr. KLINE'S GREAT NERVE RESTOREM. No fits after first day's use. Marvelous cures. Treatise and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline. 331 Arch St., Phila., Pa The pleasant coating of Beecham's Pills completely disguises the taste without impairing their efficiency. 25 cents a box.

Abbas, the new Khedive of Egypt, is a linguist to the extent of speaking five languages

Brown's Iron Bitters cures Dyspepsia, Malaria, Biliousness and General Debuity, Gives Strength, aids Digestion, tones the nerves—creates appetite. The best tonic tor Xursing Mothers, weak women and children.

Mr. Coombs, of California, the new minister to Japan, is yet in his thirties and is a lawyer by profession.

Heads of disease - Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. In a way, that you can understand, too, by purifying the blood. When you're weak, dull and languid, or when blotches and eruptions appear - that's the time to take it, no matter what the season. It's easier to prevent than to have to cure.

For all diseases caused by a torpid liver or impure blood, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Scrofulous, Skin, or Scalp Diseases - even Consumption (or Lung-scrofula), in its earlier stages, the "Discovery" is the only remedy that's guaranteed. If it does'nt benefit or cure, you have your money back.

You pay only for the good you

The proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy lose $500 if you're not cured of Catarrh. They promise to pay you that if they can't cure you. What do you lose by trying it? Is there anything to risk, except your Catarrh?

FOR THE

My little girl suffered for three years from a large Abscess on her hip, the result of a fall and dislocation. The Abscess was large, with six openings, all of which discharged puss. I was induced by friends to give her S. S. S., and by the time the fifth bottle was finished the Abscess was entirely healed, and the child was well and happy.—Mrs. J. A.

I had three little girls who were attacked with obstinate BOZEMA or Blood Trouble, which at first resembled heat, but soon grew to yellow blisters, some of them quite large. One of the children died from the effects of it, but we got Swift's Specific and gave to the other two and they soon got well. S. S. S. forced out the poison promptly. The to the other two, and they soon got well. S. S. S. forced out the poison promptly. The cure was wonderful.—J. D. RAINS, Marthaville, La.

S. S. S. has no equal for Children. It relieves the system promptly, and assists nature in developing the child's health. Our Treatise mailed free.

SWIFT SPECIFIC COMPANY, ATLANTA, GA.

"August Flower"

"I have been afflicted with biliousness and constipation for fifteen years and first one and then another preparation was suggested to me and tried, but to no purpose. A friend recommended August Flower and words cannot describe the admiration in which I hold it. It has given me a new lease of life, which before was a burden. Its good qualities and wonderful merits should be made known to everyone suffering with dyspepsia and biliousness." BARKER, Printer, Humboldt, Kas.®

O ATLANTA, GA.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS. Consumption carries off many of its victims needlessly. It can be stopped sometimes; sometimes it

BRADFIELD RECULATOR CO.

It is as cruel to raise false hopes as it is weak to yield to false fears.

There is a way to help within the reach of most who are threatened_CAREFUL LIV-ING and Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil.

Let us send you a book on the subject; free.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, 132 South 5th Avenue, New York, New York.
Your druggist keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil—all druggists everywhere do. $1.

9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS ACCEPT NO SUBSTITUTE Best in the World for the price.

the best leather produced in this country. There are no tacks or wax threads to hurt the feet, and is made as smooth inside as a hand-sewed shoe. It is as stylish, easy fitting and durable as custom-made shoes costing from $4.00 to $5.00, and acknowledged to be the

For QENTLEMEN. $5.00 Genuine Hand-Sewed.

$4.00 Hand-Sewed Welt Shoe. $3.50 Police and Farmer. $2.50 Extra Value Calf Shoe. $2.25 Working-man's Shoe. $2.00 Goodwear

For LADIES. $3.00 Hand-$2.50 Best Dongola. $2.00 Calf and Dongola. $1.75 MISSES. For BOYS' & YOUTH'S. $2 & $1.75

SCHOOL SHOES.

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTES. IT IS A DUTY you owe to yourself and your family, during these hard times, to get the most value for your money. You can economize in your footwear if you purchase W. L. Douglas' Shoes, which, without question, represent a greater value for the money than any other makes.

CAUTION. W. L. DOUGLAS' name and the price is stamped consumer against high prices and inferior shoes. Beware of dealers who acknowledge the superiority of W. L. Douglas' Shoes by attempting to substitute other makes for them. Such substitutions are fraudulent, and subject to prosecution by law, for obtaining money under talse preferees. W. L. DOUGLAS. Proceeding Mass. false pretences. W. L. DOUGLAS, Brockton, Mass.

If not for sale in your place send direct to Factory, stating kind, size and width wanted. Postage tree. AGENTS WANTED. Will give exclusive sale to shoe dealers where I have no agent and advertise them free in local paper.

00

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Ma.

$50.00 woman wanted to take a sole a gency for an article that is needed in every home and indispensable in every office.

ELLS AT SIGHT, in

SHORTHAND.

NO. 29.

"Doc Ye Nexte Thynge." The mysterious thread of life Which lies in a tangled skein Of duties and joys and voiceless hor All knotted at times with pain, Will untwist its vexed string As you "doe ye nexte thynge."

Do duties of every day Coil closely from head to feet, Till, throbbing with pain, the heart and brain Against the dread meshes beat? Would your heart soar and sing? Only "doe ye nexte thynges."

Ambition with mighty greed For riches, or fame, or place Entwines round the soul its web of lust And strangles each heavenly grace Wond von live by the word? Give "ye firste thynges" to God.

With peace in the heart and mind, Life's skein in its tangled maze Unravels its mystreies one by one, E'en down to the end of days. Then "ye laste thynge" will be To pass over Death's sea. -[Alice Armstrong, in Frank Leslie's.

THE FIRST DELEGATE.

BY EMMA A. OPPER.

Annie was up to her ears in work. She had come to her Consin Lorenzo Fraser's to visit, not looking forward to a whirl of gaiety, since Lorenzo was a minister.

But she had not even visited. Lorenzo's wife was sick abed with a mild attack of pleurisy. The children had been sent to her mother's, and good, faithful Lorenzo was getting his own meals; but even so, Annie had found Mrs. Fraser in the depth of a despair which was quite frantic.

For the conference was to be held in their church next week, and they were to entertain at least four of the delegates, and she sick abed, with the house in disorder and not a bit of cooking done!

Annie had straightened her pillow, and smiled comfortingly.

"Then I'm glad enough I came," she said, energetically; "and I'll stay longer than the week I came for, if it's necessary. Mother doesn't need me. I'll see you safely through the conference, and stay till you're up, Tilley. I know how to work, you know. Don't worry a bit now."

"The dearest girl in the world!" poor Tilly had sighed, restfully, to Lorenzo that night. "The smartest and the best, and one of the prettiest, too. Yes, she's unusual every way. I wonder how it comes she isn't married, or engaged even? When we were there last winter, there was that young man-what was his name? Whitbeck? Whitcomb?-who paid her every attention, and seemed so nice."

"Nice young men who pay handsome girls every attention don't always want to marry them," said Lorenzo, with unexpected worldly wisdom. "Not but that Annie is good enough for the best of them. But I've heard since that that young Whitby went West."

"I hope Annie's heart didn't go with him," Tilly murmured.

That was how it came about that Annie was up to her ears in work.

It was Saturday afternoon. She had washed a few things that morning, and she intended to bake bread and some pumpkin pies and a cake, and make apple and cranberry sauce before night, and do the small iron-

A white cloth bound her yellow head neatly, and a long apron covered her from chin to feet. A few blonde locks escaped prettily, and her heated cheeks were becomingly red.

But she was too rushingly busy to give a thought to her appearance; she was saying to herself that if anything happened to interrupt her, she should die-when the door bell pealed.

She gasped and groaned. Dreadful! She took her hands out of the bread-dough, but they were doughy, and there were various smudges on broad and butter and pickles. her apron.

She knew the pies would burn if she left them; and how could she stop to entertain anybody? It was a flushed and flustered young person who went frowningly to the door.

It was a man. Of course it was a ting away with all the cold food man! She had known it would be a vou've got." man. It was a man with a beard and an utterly absurd long coat to his peculiarly unclerical. Annie wavered heels, as though the thermometer was between astonishment and mirth.

she disliked beards. She regarded the delegate. stiffly the third button of the objectionable coat. "Well?" she said.

"I-you-I-" the visitor stam- says that the conference delegates are mered.

And then the truth dawned upon expect any till Monday. Come in, please-come in!"

She was much abashed. A minister and she with a greasy apron, and a rag round her head! She talked on humorous minister was something with apologetic haste.

the delegates this week, but of course | beard. you are very welcome. He isn't at home just now, but you will lay your coat off and make yourself comfortable? I'm sorry, but Mrs. Fraser is ill. I am their consin, and I am taking her place as nearly as I can."

She was shaking down the baseburner in the parlor, having given the delegate a chair. She thought her cordiality ought to thaw him-that and the base-burner.

But he sat down with his coat on, without response beyond a cough. He seemed stiff.

were commonly afflicted that way. beard made it difficult to judge, and the parlor was dim.

"Mr. Fraser will be sorry not to have been here to receive you," said Annie. She contrived to shove a footstool within the man's reach, and placed the last magazine on the table near him. The pies were engrossing squarely upon him. her thoughts chiefly. "I know you'll excuse me? I'm so busy just now!"

"Certainly, certainly!" the delegate responded, making evident the fact that his voice was heavy enough to keep the sleepiest congregation awake. "Don't let me detain you."

"I'll come back now and then," Annie thought, with recovered self-

And when the pies were out of the It's Western, Annie." oven, and the bread in, she did go back, with a set little phrase for the clutching the lapels of the long coat. entertainment of the earliest delegate.

"Will the conference be a large one?" she queried. "Mr. Fraser thinks so."

before the genial glow of the base- estate business in Wisconsin is a firstburner. He leaned forward with his rate one, Annie-or it has been for mc.

"It was in Connellsville last time."

the delegate. "I suppose the confer- found you were here, I made a beeence subsisted on cheese mainly."

Annie smiled. Why, the delegate was quite bright and humorous.

"Cheese always makes you think of pie," he added. "I beg your pardon, but do I smell pumpkin pie baking?"

"You smell pumpkin baked," Annie laughed. "Would you-would you have a piece?"

The delegate made a gesture of long I could keep it up." pleased assent.

"There's nothing I'm so fond of,"

Annie went and brought it. The regular "case." delicious-looking wedge, on a china I have been so stupid?" she marplate, and the plate on a napkined veled.

"Ah!" said the delegate, smacking his lips. "So many thanks." "Perhaps," said Annie, consciencestricken, "you havn't had any din-

"Well-a lunch," the delegate answered, hesitatingly.

"Wouldn't you like- Wait!" Annie whisked away, and came back with cold meat and milk and delegate, bestowing a kiss, "if I can The delegate spread them on the satisfaction. "I was hungry," he said, in his hoarse-sounding voice. "Famished. I feel like a tramp, though, to be get-

"Getting away" with things was

"Shall you make me chop wood in Annie did not like eccentricities, and the back yard to pay for it?" queried

"I'd rather you'd stone raisins," said Annie. "I've got a cake to she was engaged to a trombonist.make for the delegates. Cousin Tilly | [Good News.

dreadful eaters."

"It's from being asked to tea so much by members of their congregations," "Oh!" she faltered; "you are one said the delegate, "and not being given of the delegates? You'll excuse me- anything but tea and preserves. When I ought to have known! But we didn't | they get where there is something to eat, they eat. ?

Annie tittered. She wished the parlor were less dim, or that he would look at her more squarely. A really new. She could almost forgive the "Mr. Fraser did not look for any of coat, which was still on, and the

"Is it going to be a fruit cake?" said the delegate. "With currants, besides the rasius?" "Yes," Annie responded.

"And citron?"

"And citron," said Annie.

"I will stone the raisins," said the delegate. "I like fruit cake next to pumpkin pie."

He took up the emptied tray with an enthusiastic flourish and followed Annie to the kitchen.

She was filled with astonished amusement. Was there ever such a Annie supposed young ministers conference delegate—such a minister? Certainly he was jolly, but was he to Or wasn't he young? That horrid be exactly approved of? She was bewildered.

"If you could lend me a dish-apron," said the delegate, "why, I could pitch right in."

Annie turned to look at him. It was not dim in the kitchen. The light from the south window fell

She dropped with a crash the spoon and tin dish she had taken, and gasped and wavered backward.

"Joe!" she cried, faintly.

The delegate jumped and grasped

"Don't faint, Annie! Annie, dear, don't! Oh, little girl, aren't you glad to see me? It seems as though I could eat you alive! Excuse the expression.

"It can't be you, Joe!" she cried, "How-when- Joe, Joe, I wasn't to have seen you again till next spring!"

"Didn't I tell you I should come back for you as soon as ever I was "He ought to know," the delegate able?" he demanded, fondly. "Did I want to wait till next spring? No! Some of his dignity had evaporated And I'm able now, Annie. The real Whitlock & Co. (and I'm the company) has boomed-fairly boomed-and I've come back for my promised wife. I "Where the cheese factory is," said got home yesterday, and when I

> "But, Joe," she interupted, protestingly and unsteadily and tenderly, "that awful coat—and a beard!"

line-"

"The climate in Wisconsin is to blame for both," he pleaded; "and for my awful cold, too. To think was rich! I was wondering how

"I was so flustered with the hurry I was in." she said, slowly and wonderingly, "and I was so far from expecting you, Joe, dear, and so sure delegate was surprisingly unminis- that you must be a delegate. And terial; but he wasn't the poke she had your beard and long coat, and your taken him for. As for that, she could hoarseness, and the parlor was so remember when Lorenzo had been a dark! I knew there was something to $2 or $2.50, according to feed and queer and natural about all the funny She put the pie, a big and thick and things you were saying. How could > "You could hardly have helped it," he declared, with his arm strangely located.

"A delegate-the first conference delegate!" she cried. "Oh, Joe, the joke is on you! And, Joe," she begged, with feminine abruptness and softness, "you will have that beard off, won't you? Do!"

"I'll leave the beard," said the first take vou."

"I shall see Tilly safely through centre-table with an air of extreme the conference, though," said Annie, flying to take off the apple-sauce before it burned.

> "Nice young men," said Lorenzo to his wife that evening, humorously, "do, perhaps, oftener than not marry the handsome girls they have paid attentions to."

> > A Man of Note.

Mrs. Gadd-Mrs. Blabb tells me her daughter is going to marry a man of

FOR FARM AND GARDEN.

EARTH-WORMS.

Numbered with the numerous preventives and cures for earth-worms in flower pots, is the following:

To keep earth-worms out of flower pots, pour on the soil a warm (80 to grafting, it may be spread while hot 90 degrees Fahrenheit) decoction of upon moderately thin, but tough manquassia or wormwood and powdered | ila paper, this paper when cool to be horse chestnuts. In a few moments cut up into strips of convenient size every worm will come to the surface for use. Thin cloth may be used inand can be removed .- New York stead of paper, but the paper will usu-

OSAGE HEDGES.

Cargo orange hedges are best thickened by cutting back while one to two feet high, and continually trimmed to keep them within bounds; it is less work to splash or lay them down at four feet than to cut back;

In splashing bend the bush one way and cut half off so it will lay down and yet retain vitality enough to grow shoots straight up from the tops that are down.

Osage is such a rank grower and gross feeder, it is difficult to make it ornamental and requires careful attention in the early growth to get a good stand to make a good fence stock proof; there is always a gap somewhere to patch up with boards, unless great care is taken while young; prune any time, but splash the early part of March, before growth.-[Farm, Field and Stockman.

HOW TO TRAIN A COLT.

A colt should be put in training as soon as it is born. It should be thus early made acquainted with its owner, and especially with the person who a pet of it. As soon as it will eat oats the owner should teach it to take then be taught its name. As it grows this acquaintance should be kept up, and in every way possible it should be made tame and gentle. In time it should be taught the use of the bridle and bit and to carry a light saddle on its back, and if the side saddle will be to the dangling skirt. A small boy may ride it as soon as it is strong enough, and everything should be done to avoid having it frightened by about and turned hither and thither to learn the use of the bit. Then, by continuing the gentle training when it comes to be used, it will be entirely safe and gentle. To make a friend and acquaintance of a horse is to save a great deal of trouble afterward and to double the value of the animal .-[New York Tribune.

FARMERS BOARDING HORSES.

you didn't know me, Annie! Oh, it cities, farmers have more calls to winderstood that the keep of a horse near a city or large village is worth much more than it is at a greater distance. lay-"Chickens don't pay." When such horses are sent into the low as $1 a week, and from that up the daily hay ration. It will not be in very good condition in the spring.

We have often thought when we have seen farmers thus wintering have on the farm. stock, whether they could not dispose of surplus grain and hay by purchasing thrifty animals and making all they gained or produced during the winter. It is here that the extra value and cost of boarding horses near a city comes in. What will keep a horse in good order will support a milch cow. Her milk can usually be sold if near the city to milkmen for much more than the horse owner is willing to pay. The cow if properly fed will make as much and as valuable manure. There is only the extra labor of milking to be considered in estimating the difference between the two. -- [Boston] Cultivator.

GRAFTING WAX. There are many kinds of grafting wax as well as other compositions for Mrs. Gabb-That's queer. I heard the same purpose. For grafting in the open air, or for root grafting apple seed- to standard when advertising-some lings during the winter, as practised one will see them.

by nurserymen, we prefer a wax made of the following materials in the prportions given: Common rosin, four parts; beeswax, two parts; clean cally. beef or mutton tallow, one part; melt together, and when cool work up into rolls. If to be used in root ally answer every purpose, costs of linseed oil may be substituted for not. A liquid-grafting wax may be made by melting together one pound | the plant tissues. each of rosin and tallow. When the cions in place than raffia, a ma- cocoon. terial now in use among nurserymen, New York Sun.

POULTRY ON THE FARM.

Most farmers consider poultry on the farm more of a nuisance than a The North American coyote is in fact benefit and only tolerate fowls on the much nearer to the greyhound, zoologfarm because the old women like to | ically speaking, than the pug is. It will use it. If this is a woman, she have them around, writes Aunt Betsy, is simply a wild dog. So is the wolf should be with it frequently and make in the Farmer and Breeder. Such likewise. From just such wild types men either forget or ignore the fact | man's faithful four-footed friends are that the good house-wife and her descended. some from the hand, and it should chickens supply most of the necessaries, such as coffee, tea, sugar, etc.

Were it not for this despised source of supply the husband would have to goods" or go without them and any there are times when it is difficult to poultry will always bring the cash no difference what time in the year.

value on the farm, and every year we find a few more going into the busithey call it, by having a few thoroughbred roosters.

We find a few more willing to take poultry papers and learn from others that have made it a success, but it is very hard to get some people out of the old rut. "You can't tell me anything about raising chickens, the old In many places, especially near dung hill is just as good as you thoroughbred. The trees are good ter favorite horses than they can at- enough for hens to roost in." The tend to. It does not seem to be un- hen is kicked about if she comes into the barn, and all she gets to eat is what she steals; then if she don't Try building a hen house, one that country 10 to 15 miles from any sta- is comfortable and warm, give the tisn, they can be kept very cheaply, as hens the same care other stock gets, supply them with green food, such as turnips, onions and potatoes, somecare given. At $1 a week the animal times cooked and at others simply will probably be turned to the straw chopped or mashed; plenty of charstack, with only a little hay per day coal, lime, gravel or broken shells, all and no grain. In that way it will of which the farmer can get with a need or rather get no care excepting little trouble generally on his own (R. I.) Journal. farm, and then with plenty of milk and fresh water, my word for it, they will pay better than any stock you frozen. Spread it on grass land. Get the sash for the hot-bed ready to use, that is if you have not already started your bed.

> FARM AND GARDEN NOTES. Cut your cions before it is too late.

foods and not so fattening. Always keep houses clean and well whitewashed; also see that all coops and drinking utensils are clean.

One good all-around variety of fowl is best to begin with; never attempt more than two varieties on any ble: never keep birds that are not up

SCIENTIFIC SCRAPS.

Paris dishes are washed automati

Gas engines of 60 horse power are now made.

It is bacteria which causes the milk

A luminous cravon has been invented which enables lecturers to draw on the blackboard when the room is darkened for the use of the lantern.

A good deal of the dew which we less than the cloth, and yields see in the morning covering the leaves more readily to pressure as the of grasses and other plants comes from stocks enlarge by growth. One pint the interior of the vegetables themselves. The extremely fine dew, as a each pound of tallow, and while some rule, is atmospheric, but the larger prefer wax made with oil others do drops which we find on the margins of leaves are, in general, exudations from

The remarkable instinct which cooled down add a spoonful of tur- causes the mudfish to roll himself in a pentine and four ounces of alcohol ball of mud when the dry season apand two of water. Heat again and proaches, is a wonderful provision of stir briskly until all ingredients are nature, intended solely, it would seem, thoroughly mixed. This wax must be to prevent the extinction of the kept in bottles and applied with a species. The most interesting fact stiff brush. If you prefer to use a about this fish is that it breathes by liquid wax or the hard wax melted means of gills when in its native eleon your apple grafts, then you will ment and by means of lungs during find nothing better for strings to hold its voluntary imprisonment in the mud

People commonly imagine that in although bass bark will answer almost speaking of dogs they are referring to as well, but it is not quite as soft. - a single species which has many varieties. But in reality the name is merely a conventional one, under which are grouped in popular parlance all of the domesticated canidæ.

Modern Whaling Implements.

The shoulder gun which fires a bomb from a blunderbuss of large provide the hard cash for the "store bore has been almost entirely superseded by the Pierce darting bomb one that lives on a farm knows that lance, invented by Captain Eben Pierce of New Bedford, Mass., who used, some time later it should be used get ready money. But fresh eggs and has made many voyages in command of a whaler. This darting gun, which is used almost exclusively by the But there is a class of progressive Arctic fleet, is a device used close by farmers who have discovered and will the side of the whale, which can be anything. At first it should be walked acknowledge that poultry is of great hurled successfully for only nine or having a double toggle, which spreads ness and trying to "grade up," as at right angles with the shaft a distance of six inches, and which, once firmly embedded through the blubber, cannot be pulled out. A bomb lance is also set in a brass barrel attached to the same shaft as the harpoon. The iron strikes first, and after penetrating a distance of about 17 inches, or through the blubber, a projecting wire, cut to the proper length, explodes a Winchester cartridge, which shoots a bomb loaded with tonite into the vitals of the whale. Within the bomb is a fuse cut to burn five or six seconds. The tonite is a form of dynamite which can safely be burned in the palm of the hand, but when confined, has an explosive force ten times as great as ordinary gunpowder. The bombs are very deadly, sometimes killing a whale outright. Fragments of the shells have been taken from all parts of the whale, from the point just behind the head, where it is usually fired, to the tail .- [Providence

An Accommodating Subject.

Dr. Lauder Brunton recently told some good stories in his address to the North London (England) Medico-Chirurigical Society. He remembers once a whole class of students standing around a man whose heart was Get out manure while the ground is diseased and who had one of the pupils of his eyes enormously dilated. After a great many learned opinions had been given as to how the faulty heart dilated the pupil, the man "up-Do not feed too much corn. Wheat, set the coach" by observing that the buckwheat, oats and barley are better eye was a glass one. Another of his stories is that of a professor who was telling his students that he was able to discover this, that and the other symptoms of internal disease from the teeth of a woman whose case was being diagnosed. She was very anxious to help in the businessrather too anxious, because, to the horror of the professor, she took her Weed out the birds as soon as possiteeth out, saying: "Please, sir, I'll hand them around. Some of the gentlemen might like to look at them more closely."-[Chicago Post.

EDITOR.

Entered at the Post Office in Calera as

CALERA, SATURDAY, MAY 14.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject

We are authorized to announce John be buldozed. S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic and conservative party.

John A. Campbell.

The friends of Col. Jno. P. West announce him as a candidate for the Lower House of the Legislature. Subject to the action of the Democratic convention of Shelby county.

which actuated this proceeding were we so disposed.

Dr. W. W. Haden, the chairman of this meeting, is one of the most of Shelby county.

We are authorized to anneunce J. T. SLAUGHTER as a candidate for the office of Sheriff of Shelby county subject to the to pull us off of the democratic deleaction of the democratic convention.

the race for Probate Judge. Read weare aware of the fact that in Menthis card, in which he returns thanks gomery during the early part of last to friends who have tendered him week, that in a conference of Kolb their support.

SINCE 1853 it has been our prov-In almost every campaign we have the whole responsibility. did it not eminate from the source it does would be criminal. When we press-extending into five southern | ison county or the state. states -we have never known an editor to sell his political or religious principles for money. We THE announcement of Mr. J. T. convention as delegates.

the ablest edited papers in the state, elected. and the thought presented in the following paragraph is not imagiof Calera beat at 10 o'clock today, the beat meetings and county conthe beat meetings and county conwho have given me their support, and in the beat meetings and county conwithdrawing from the race, I hope to its editor-in chief having been "an The political situation demands the cognized democratic organization, party," and knows what it is to go Then the necessity for organization bickerings and join hands, standing off after false bolters. His ad- is plane, and every democrat should shoulder to shoulder, and work in vice should be heeded by every one do his part by attaching himself to democratic party in Shelby county who has a thought of adopting the his beat club, attend its meetings ning-Pitts third party craze:

"What do you wish to gain by leaving the organized democracy? Should your leaders succeed they get a salary incident to it, and you will get nothing but a little valua-ble experience. Let those Alabamians who have known the political this morning (May 4th) I potice an ians who have known the political history of Madison county figure up what has been gained by the bolters and disaffected element. Now you and disaffected element. Now you place yourself in the same position was the nominee of the democratic successful resistance to the efforts of of your neighbors and friends that party for the legislature in 1890. There whatever opposition we may have to these men have been in for the last is no truth in the statement. On the meet.

county. Shelby, Bibb and Chilton the Republican, three days thereafter, ward and the time honored principles of counties have officers and nominated aspirants for positions to which ted aspirants for positions to which the deficers and prosperous farmer that the deficiency of the Democratic party vindicated.

J. R. White, the Democratic party vindicated.

J. R. White, the Democratic party vindicated.

The Democratic part they are wholly unfitted, who would never have been known beyond the confines of a small election precint, and whose incompetency is the direct result of disaffection in the democratic ranks. What have those who have followed them, but recolwing have followed them, but recolwing with relatives and next door neighbors.

In the same issue is also reproduced a complimentary notice of him from the Hot Blast. I voted for him cheerfully. I have never failed to support the nominee of my party, although in doing so I have sometimes had to antagonize close personal friends.

L. W. Grant.

HUGH T. CAFFEY,

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON

Ship with relatives and next door

Robits of a small election precint, and whose incompetency is the direct result of disaffection in the democratic ranks. What have those who have followed them, but recolwing so I have sometimes had to antagonize close personal friends.

HUGH T. CAFFEY,

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON

CALERA, ALA,

feb12-1y.

In the same issue is also reproduced a complimentary notice of him from the Hot Blast. I voted for him cheerfully. The total of section 6: the north east of section 7: the north-west qr of section 8; the west half of the north-west qr of section 8; the west half of the north-east qr of section 8; the north-west qr of section 8; the north-west qr of section 8; the west half of the north-east qr of section 8; the morth-west qr of section 8; the north-west qr of section 8; the morth-west qr of section 8; the north-west qr of section 8; the north-west qr of section 8; the north-west qr of section 8; the morth-west qr of section 8; the morth-west qr of section 8; the morth-west qr of section 8; the north-west qr of section 8; th they are wholly unfitted, who would In the same issue is also reproduced a

PLAIN TALK.

Charley Lane cannot be bluffed. He has been asked by an Alliance mass meetting to resign his place on the Kolb delegation from Madison county, for the reason that the said We are authorized to announce D. R. mass meeting believed he would be McMillan as a candidate for the office of tray his trust. Hear the reply of a to the action of the democratic county man who stands upon his stands upon his convictions and refuses to Ordinarily we would pay no atto the action of the democratic county tention to the vaporings of a wild cat mass meeting which is clearly We are authorized to announce Wm. actuated by personal and political R. A. Milner as a candidate for the of-tice of Circuit Clerk of Shelby county, publicity we know is to dignify it publicity we know is to dignify it far beyond its merits, but just such criticism as this coming from any source we invite, challenge and In explanation of the above we will state that it was handed in by a stranger to a gentleman in the I hereby announce myself a candidate for representative in the General Assembly of Alabama, subject to the action of the Democratic County Convention.

GORDON DUBOSE.

Has tranger to a gentreman in the office who received, and all we know of it is what appears on its surface. We would, however, account for the power that is behind the throne, We would, however, account for the

The friends of D. Y. Wyattl authorize prominent republicans in this counus to announce him as a candidate for ty, was elected to the legislature, County Superintendent of Education of running on the ticket with the ne-Shelby county, subject to action of the go Williams in 1882. We take oc-democratic convention. casion to mention this little circumstance, to show who it is that wants gation to the state convention. Now we beg leave to say to the gen-MR. G. B. DEANS withdraws from tlemen from Owens X Roads, that eaders, it was concluded that 'nothing could induce Lane, of Madison county delegation, to follow Kolb and his crowd to a bolting ince to be associated, in one way or convention'-nor do we intend to another, with the press, sometimes make room for a man that willpleasantly and profitaby and at oth- | "but that there is a delegate in the er times differently. During these Madison county delegation, that had many years we have had troubles of that he could be relied upon, to which To the Democratic Voters of Shelby many kinds, and our troubles have we add, unless he feigns sickness been intermingled with pleasures. or some other excuse to dodge heard charges of dishonest, subsi- Kolb's unsavory moral character dized, bribed, bought up, controlled under any set of circumstances, for chairman of the executive commitif there is any human being that tee to urge all the democrats of the is chairman of the committee that newspapers. Coming, as it always does, from the most blatant demagogues and dissatisfied politicians, mortgaged real estate or raise the selection of delegates to the county it is disgusting in the extreme, and weights of cotton, and then tell convention to be held on June 3rd. three different tales about it, two of which must have been lies, and tention to the following resolution then try to disrupt the democratic of our county executive committee, realize the fact that these charges party because it won't embrace him. prescribing the eligibility of partici originate in the minds of dishonest We don't propose to have any such pants in the beat meetings, which and ignorant office seekers and dem- contemptible bluff as this run on us, is as follows: agogues, we are consoled with the nor do we propose to resign, make thought that the prosecution is gratified and the press is not injured. Resolved, That any white person who any explanations or apologies, or in any wise do anything calculated to accommodate Mr. Haden, his crowd accommodate Mr. Ha During this long connection with the or jeopordize the democracy of Madhave often known them to make Slaughter as a candidate for Sheriff From the above resolution, it Lightning Remedy, and a speedy cure is henest mistakes, sometimes to their financial ruin, but as a rule they are free from bribery or from being "bought up," and are as honest and "bought up," and are as honest and proven himself thoroughly compensations, and the best meetings, and proven himself thoroughly compensations, and the above resolution, It classifies the structure of the above resolution, It classifies the above resolution than a supplied the above resolution than a supplied the above resolution. It costs $$\frac{1}{2}$ the above resolution than a supplied than a patriotic as any other class of men. tent. He is at present chief depu- have, through misapprehension of ty, and has full charge of the office. facts, followed opposing committees THE Huntsville Mercury is one of He will make an efficient officer if except those who voted for Butler.

> CHAS. P. LANE, Delegate to Dem. State Con.

unhappy apostle from the democratic strongest efforts of the democracy, it now behooves us to lay aside all Polk-Macune - Simpson-Peffer-Man- and get his harness on for a long and a strong pull for victory.

(ADVERTISEMENT.) PROMPTLY DENIED.

JACKSONVILLE, Ala., May 4.

Editor Hot Blast-In your issue of these men have been in for the last few years. You will accomplish no good in any event."

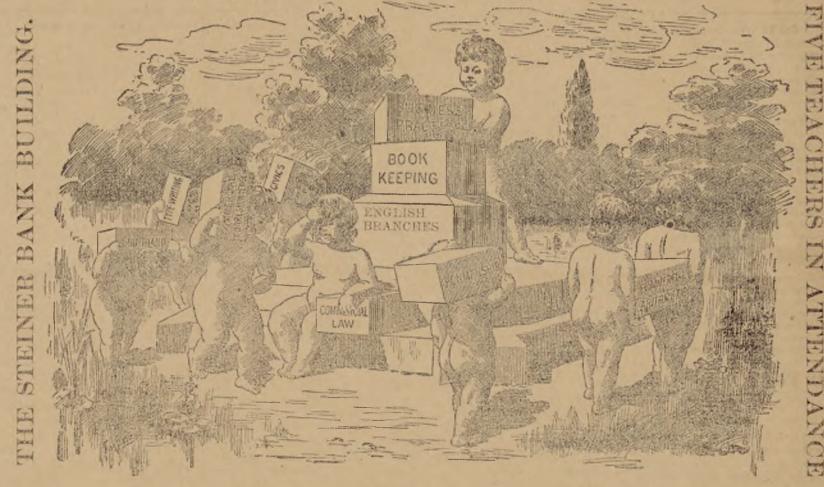

The readers of the Journal have lessons nearer home than Madison segments. Shelly, Bibb, and Chilton the Republican, three days thereafter.

Is no truth in the statement. On the contract in the statement. On the lessons that if the members of the committee, sided by the democrats of our county, will at once begin the organization of these clubs in their respective beats, when the first Monday in August is past, victory shall be our required by the Republican, three days thereafter.

The Best Place to Secure a Business Education is at the

INEIVY SCORES

RINGHEADE, ALLA

Send for Circular,

LEONARD LIPPMAN, President.

M. M. FIELDS, Vice President

G. F. HART, Secretary and Treasurer.

A CALL

As the time for holding the county democratic convention is rapidly approaching, I deem it proper, as I especially desire to call your at-

Resolved, That any white person who vote in said elections and has heretofore habitually voted the democratic ticket: any who have become of age since the last election and are in accord with and intend to support the nominees of the party, will be entitled to participate in party, will be entitled to participate in nostrums will not effect a cure—in fact,

This being the case I earnestly urge all those who have the inter-REMEMBER the call of committee est of our people and the democratvention. There being but one re-

Chair'n. Dem. Ex. Com.

DEMOCRATIC CLUBS.

genization is absolutely essential for the advancement and maintainance of the Democratic Party in Shelby county, I carnestly urge the Executive Committeemen of each beat to immediately orthogonal teemen of each beat teemen of phooed at the idea that the alliince in this county would go into the third party movement can now see how badly they were mistaken. John F. Pearson, old "giganticest" the county lecturer for the alliance, ssues the call, (the people's party and which committee was created at the Chapel church meeting, where t was given out that old Sam Adums, chief of the Eibb county hypocrites, denounced the third party movement in unmeasured terms But there is something peculiar in the fact that wherever Sam Adams s accredited with fighting the third party movement the alliance immediately resolves to go inty the peo ple's party. -Shelby Chronicle.

Columbiana, Ala., May 2, 1892.

none of them will. Don't trifle with Lane, New York. Agents wanted

> Mr. Deans Withdraws. Calera May, 13, 1892.

EDITOR JOURNAL I desire to have you withdraw my name from the race for Probate Judge. Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded carry their best wishes.

G. B. DEANS,

IMPORTANT TO LADIES shoulder to shoulder, and work in unison for a solid and reunited democratic party in Shelby county.

J. R. White,
Chair'n. Dem. Ex. Com.

Sir—I made use of your Philotoken with my last child, in order to procure a safe and easy travil. I used it about two months before my expected time, and I had a very quick and easy confinement. Nothing occurred to protract ny convalescence, and I got about in less time than was usual for me. I think it a medicine that should be used by every expectant mother, for should they To the Democratic Executive Committee of Shelby County.

Feeling convinced that thorough organization is absolutely essential for the Mrs. ELIZABETH DIX.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF A mortgage, executed to the undersigned by Mary M. Baker and Hope H. Baker, highest bidder, on it Columbiana, in front of the Court House door, in said county, within the legal hours of sale, the following de-

Our democratic friends who have nooed at the idea that the alli-

Mrs. S.H. McCauley's,

NEAR THE DEPOT

Montevallo. - - A a. A Splendid Line of Trimmed and Untrimmed Hats in the Latest Styles, and al Reasonable Prices.

Handkerchiefs & Hosier -Beturdey Bales at si

That's a good maxim, but it will not york as a rule in the purchase of a rem-

Harness Masadles,

DEALERS IN

HARDWARE & TINWARE.

TO A GON MARTAILAIL

Shells always on Hand.

118 19TH STREET, BIRMINCHAM.

Banking House

W. O. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA.

Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans,

and recorded in Mortgage Book No. 17, page 518, in the effice of the Judge of Probate of Shelby county, Alabama, I will proceed to sell, for cash, to the highest bidder, on Monday, 6th day of June, 1892,

Monday, 6th day of June, 1892, merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

Fire and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms

ALABAMA MINERAL.

2, North Bound,

No. 85, Arrives at 86, Departs at 10:25 a. m.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff-W. R. Carter Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. H. Kidd. County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland. Superintendent of Education-T. N. Huston.

County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. Dyeey, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

AT THE CHURCHES.

Presbyterian—Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m.

METHODIST-Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

CUMBERLAND PRESENTERIAN—J. C. Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first the Chronicle. Let's be more careful in future.

A game was played last Saturday between the boys of Calera and Columbiana at this place. The following is the score;

Mr. Gordon DuBose, a prominent candidate for the legislature, was in town Thursday morning. He

A game was played last Saturday between the boys of Calera and Columbiana at this place. The following is the score;

As a result of the affiance in Lee be found battling elsewhere than along the front ranks of the democracy.

As a result of the Jones-Kolb contest in Lee county it was only a contest in Lee county it was only a test of her democracy. Jones did Friday evening at 3.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy. RICHARD K. FOX, Franklin Square.

New York City.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old ge should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. Dewitt Tulmage. Witt Talmage.

ONE DOLLAR WEEKLY

Buys a good gold watch by our club syswatch. To secure agents where we have er. none, we sell one of the hunting case know how you can farnish such works for the money, Our agent at Pennington, Texas, writes "Am in receipt of the watch and am pleased without measure. All

each place. Write for particulars. EMPIRE WATCH CO., New York

When the People's party organizes it will go before the people with a platform of principles. That platform will be a substantial relation to the tv of us believe that way, and the majority is bound to rule. But there are strong and controlling reasons why no Hotel.—3t Domocrat should go off aft r the par-Our honest Alliancemen cannot afford to go moon-chasing .-- Age-Her-

THE one purpose of the Age-Herald in dealing with the Alliance conference was to let the people Sabbath schools in the place are in- Calera and the adjoining country. know exactly what it all meant. vited to be present, and as exercises We did it without bias or prejudice begin at 11 o'clock they will have and the people have the true story. It's title is People's party Age, their lessons and and the people have the true story. It's title is People's party. - Age- their lessons and get there in time.

Wonder if Genial Reuben gets any consolation out of this para-

TOWN TOPICS.

Have your protographs taken.

Gip West, of Chilton, was in Caera Sunday.

in Calera Thursday. 10:05 p. m. The chairman of the executive committee has another address in > Col. J. P. West, the popular candidate for Representative, has our thanks for favors.

this issue.

The first of the week this community was blessed with a fine rainn, since then it has quite cool for the time of year.

vomen, has been very near death's Hardy, were elected. door for seveeal days, but is reported much better.

We direct attention to the programme of the Centennial Meeting day night, and adopted a constitu- State and National political issues. to be held at the Baptist church in tion and by-laws. this place the 27th, 28th and 29th of this month.

to organize, and the meeting was they can play good ball. postponed till ten o'clock today. See the call elsewhere.

are even, Clarence, we didn't get during the summer.

in town Thursday morning. He will make his race on his merits, and only asks Calera's delegation on second choice.

world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes triends wherever it goes.

Maj. Vance and Judge Campbell, two of our prominent citizens went to Columbiana courting Monday, got left, and were restless all day Tuesday on account of something that occurred at the Weaver House.

Jonnie, little daughter of Maj and Mrs. Randall has been very il with dysentory, but at this writing is much better. The parents and The next best thing possible to insurance against fire in the coming world is a policy against death in this life, which is issued by W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co., the progressive Life Insurance Agents of Colors. that she is still improving.

Oliver Shaw, a negro boy from with a truism like a sparking jewel:

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the storms of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot touch them; where they are safe for your them."

Helena, who was riding about on the freight trains, was run over here yesterday morning. While attempting to board a caboose his foot slipped and caught under the wheel.

> the firm of Russell Bros. of Annis- OF THE SHELBY BAPTIST ASSOCIATION. graph galery at once, and guarantees the finest photographs ever made in our city. Call and see specimens.

Several of the Journal's neigh tem. Our 14-karat gold-filled cases are warranted for 20 years. Fine Elgin or Waltham movement, stem wind and set. nice vegetables. That's right, just 2:30 P. M. Woods Lady's or gent's size. Equal to any $50 keep us along for a few weeks long-Blackberries will then be in, peaches, apples and watermelons watches for the club price, $28, and send
C. O. D. by express with privilege of examination before paying for same.
Our agent at Durham, S. C., writes:
"Our jewelers have confessed they don't season."

peaches, apples and watermelons bid fair for a bountiful crop, and with a peck of meal occasionally we can get through the long, hot season. with a peck of meal occasionally creises 30 minutes," N. T. Lucas.

Attention is called to the large College of Commerce, which apwho have seen it say it would be cheap pears in this issue. Young men at $40." and ladies who desire to prepare One good reliable agent wanted for themselves for business can do no conducted by T. M. Fancher. better than attend this institution, which is one of the best in the ed by a collection for missions, Dr. W

Dr. J. C. Pierson will be in Cale- church in the association will be repra on May 25th, on and after which resented in this meeting. Everybody Alliance demands for paper money time he will offer his professional invited to attend loaned on cotton and land. The services to those who desire work in Democratic platform is bound to his line. Dr. Pierson is a dentist stand by gold and silver as the basis of ability and experience, and the of all currency, and to oppose govern- Journal takes pleasure in recomment loans to anybody. The majori- mending him to our citizens. He will be found at the Vanderbilt ty of odds and ends merely because his own party doesn't voice Lis money theories. That sort of thing will do Monday night The accident Joe. Thompson, a negro, of at the North, but in the South minori- Monday night. The accident octies are bound to stick. The evils of curred about 2 o'clock at night, and division would be greater than any the unfortunate negro died next from which Alabama is suffering to- day at noon. He was trying to The people's party will be made steal a ride on freight train No. 71. up of three things—statesmen out of His remains were sent to Mont- Ga., General Manager for Alabama

> Methodist church tomorrow. It is a day in Calera this week, the guest Blankets and Comforts. unnounced that all the children be- of W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co., who Water Works. longing to the Sunday school will are agents of his company for this take part in the exercises. All the state. He was well pleased with Table Ware, including knives and

The Methodist Sunday school filled by Mr. Tally, of Dixon, Tenn., of this place will pic nic at Deans a young man whom the boys are Drummond Medicine Co., 48-50 Maiden Lane, New York. Agents wanted.

BASE BALL.

CALERA BOYS ORGANIZING A CLUB.

The young men of Calera had a Dr. Latham, of Montevallo, was purpose of organizing a base ball

F. W. Gist was elected temporary chairman and T. C. McKibbon,

The following were elected permanent officers of the club:

retary and Treasurer; J. S. Bridgez, organizations. Umpire; L. G. Privett, Scorer; G.

Mrs. Duran, one of Calera's best of F. W. Gist, W. Wingo, J. S. Bridges, F. E. Stocking and F. H.

A uniform of solid black was adopted, which was ordered at once- only suit the absorbing game but

All the citizens contributed liberee the call elsewhere.

The Chronicle sends us word games may be arranged. If this partyism will find no assistance from

CALLEL	7.
	Runs	Out
J. D. McKibbon c	1	3
Cliff Pilgreen p	1	2
Geo. W. Holcomb 1st	b 1	1
B. Bristow 2nd b	3	$\frac{2}{1}$
M. Crim 3b	3	1
F. Onderdonk s s	2	3
Claud Duran 1 f	0	.1
Dick McLendon c f	1	3
W. Moss rf	2	2
	-	-
	14	24
COLUMBI.	INA.
	Runs	Out
Frank Jackson 2nd b	2	4
Ham DuBose p	1	4
Tom Evans c f	0	5
Heck McMillan 3rd b	0	3
Ike Cromwell e	1	1
George Mason r f	- 1	4
Clem Greek s s	1	3
Bud Cromwell 1 f	1	T
John Mllner 1st b	0	2
	-	_
	7	27
SCOPES DY IN	TATTATOO

123456789 Columbiana, 0 2 0 0 2 1 0 I I-7

CENTENNIAL MEETING

To be held with Calera Baptist Church May 27, 28, 28, 1892, FRIDAY 10 A. M .- Devotional Exercises, 30 minutes. C. W. O'Hara.

2:30 P. M.—"How may we best basis.—

guard the doctrine of a regenerate Herald. membership?" C. W. O'Hara. 7:30—Sermon, Dr. E. B. Teague.

SATURDAY 9 A. M .- "Devotional ex-

9:30—Centennial movement plained, Dr. W. C. Cleveland.

7:30 P. M.—Sermon, J. W. Mitchell.

11 A. M -Missionary Sermon follow

C. Cleveland. It is earnestly hoped that each

J. G. Lowry, Chairman.

NOTICE TO DEMOCRATS.

In obedience to the suggestion of the Chairman of the democratic executive committee of Shelby county, the democrats of Calera beat-No. 3crats of Calera beat—No. 3—are requested to meet at the office of W. D. Hugand young democrats are earnestly solicited to attend.

J. P. West, J. H GUNN,

R. M. PILGREEN, May 7, 1892. Committee.

and Georgia of the National Life Mattrasses (70) ... "Childrens' Day Service" at the Maturity Insurance Company, spent Pillows.

$500 Will be Given

ample time to get through with their lessons and get there in time.

Mr. Huston Price, who has been with G.J. Wright here for some time past, left last week for his home at Florence. He will go from there to college. His position here is being filled by Mr. Tally, of Dixon, Tenn.,

Amy case of Rheumatism which can not be cured by Dr. Drummond's Light not be cured by Dr. Drummond

PRESS PARAGRAPHS.

Opelika Industrial News: If Capt. Kolb does go into a rump convention he will be snowed under in Lee meeting on Tuesday evening for the too deep for resurrection. The land slide, of Saturday showed that Lee don't want Kolb Governor in the path or out of it.

The true poiltical tests recently made in Lee County shows beyond all question that the alliancemen will not suffer their order dragged F. W. Gist. Manager; George into politics, and that they hold Postelle, Captain; W. Wingo, Sec- their politics aloof from only secret

As a suggestion the News would offer as a substitute for names in A board of directors, consisting the Alabama teams that the Age-Herald be changed to "Base Bawl, the Evening News to "Play Bawl, and the Advertiser—just simply ... Bawl." These names would not The board of directors met Tues- are applicable to the papers on the

Mr. Wm. Bass, President of the Lee County Alliance, was in Opelially to the expenses, and the club ka Tuesday. Mr. Bass says the starts out under most favorable cir- contest was a fair one and the fight Owing to the rain storm that cumstances. Some fair players have honestly won. That Jones is virpassed over Calera Monday evening been selected, and the manager will tually nominated. Mr. Bass takes but few of the voters of beat 3 met do his best to practice them until the defeat of his favorite like a true democrat which he is, and proposes Every town in the county is invit- to go to work for state and county Baptist Church—Rev. J. G. Lowrey, pastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday at 12 a. m. sunday at 13 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday at 13 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday at 14 a. m. every Thursday.

The Chronicle sends us word that the Journal was not received at that office last week. Well, we are even, Clarence, we didn't get during the summer. the rank and file of the alliance in not win either on his personal popularity or the endorsement of his administration. The people could not follow Mr. Kolb into antagoniz- every point in the county. ing the democratic party, and des. pite their wishes to their wishes to the contrary they were forced to choose between these two evils they chose the less. Jones is a democrat and his personal character is above reproach, we all acknowledge that.

Hartselle Enquirer: The Enquirer is of the opinion that a bolt from the regular democtic state convention would stand no more chance of succeeding at the August elec tion a saucer of ice-cream going through hell without melting.

The alliance people have been saying all the while that if something better was formulated than their 'sub-treasury bill' they would accept it, That something better has been offered by Senator 41310311x-14 Morgan in his speech delivered in the senate on the 13th of April last. That speech solves the great problem of financial relief. Why may n this line. they not now adopt his plan and fight the battle out in the old democratic party? That is the speech of the country. He would make the silver dollar equal in value to the gold deltar. The policy he ad-10:30-Importance and best means vocates of issuing $3 in paper curof Bible study among our members? rency, which may be increased annually $300;000,000, all on a solid -J. C. McKendree in Age

The Anniston News is calling for the democrats of Calhoun to unite on Capt. John M. McKleroy for Congress. That would indeed skake up the situation for the situation's good. Alabama hasn't any better 2:30 P. M.—Signs of the times as man for her high honors than this advertisement of the New York bearing on the progress of mission eminent son of Calhoun.—Age-College of Commerce, which ap- work? E. B. Teague. Herald.

SUNDAY 10 A. M.—S. S. exercises, Mortgage Sale.

TINDER AND VIRTUE OF A MORTgage executed to the undersigned by Mary M. Baker and Hope H. Baker, and recorded in Mortgage Book No. 21. page 279, in the office of the Judge of Probate, of Shelby county, I will pro-ceed to sell at public outery to the highest bidder, for cash, at Shelby Springs, in said county on

The 20th day of May, 1892, within the legal hours of sale, the follow-

Springs for bedsteads and spring Pump and Boiler (engine) ... Pastry Stove. Cooking Utensils..... Range Steam Table and Fixtures... Water Cooler, Lamp in Dining Room Lamps in Parlo forks, spoons, crockery and ta-Bed Linen and Towels

12 00

The Calera Journal.

A Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as democracy.

As a result of the Jones-Kolb contest in Lee county it was only a test of her democracy.

Jones did to the Jones-Kolb contest of her democracy.

As a result of the Jones-Kolb contest in Lee county it was only a test of her democracy.

Jones did to the Jones-Kolb contest in Lee county it was only a test of her democracy.

Jones did to the Jones-Kolb contest in Lee county it was only a test of her democracy.

Jones did to the Jones-Kolb contest in Lee county it was only a test of her democracy.

Jones did to the Jones-Kolb contest in Lee county it was only a test of her democracy.

Jones did to the Jones-Kolb contest in Lee county it was only a test of her democracy.

Jones did to the Jones-Kolb contest in Lee county it was only a test of her democracy.

Jones did to the Jones-Kolb contest in Lee county it was only a test of her democracy.

Jones did to the Jones-Kolb contest in Lee county it was only a test of her democracy.

Jones did to the Jones-Kolb contest of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of the State in a condensed form. It will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contest the news of Calera and of Sheiby county. It will contest the news of Calera and of Sheiby county. It will contest the mews of Calera and of Sheiby county. It will contest the news of Calera and of Sheiby county. It will contest the county in the fourth of the county in th contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at

«JOB PRINTING»

Quikly, Neatly and Cheaply Done

Printing a

THE JOURNAL will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets wil be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

Now is the time for everyone who cherishes good health, to pay particular attempts the condition of their blood and its proper circulation. Nearly all distention to the condition of their blood and its proper circulation. eases that flesh is heir to are caused and agravated by an impure condition of the blood and a sluggish circulation.

Restoring and Strengthening the whole System. Euriching the Blood producing increased vitality by restoring an impaired digestion and bringing back the bloom of youth to the cheek of the enfeebled and emaciated.

THE KING OF BLOOD PURIFIERS

Possessing Extraordinary Cleansing Powers

Price, $1.00 per Bottle-6 Bottles for $5.00.

For Sale by All Druggists.

NABERS, MORROW & SINNIGE, SOLE CONTROLERS,

Birmingham.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION. 75 00 Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages.

> REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these de-

papers.

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.
the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to mus and a host of other special writers are engaged by the year, and their inim-ure to every family, and the name of person the world.

cheer to the freside and happiness to the household.

3. It covers the news of the whole world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thorough news service from every important news center in the world.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone is worth many times its subscription price to every farmer. This department is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasure to every family, and the name of the south of the regical writers are engaged by the year, and their inimitable sketches appear each week.

7. It is the People's Friend, and is the sturdy champion of the agricultural interests of the south.

8. It pays more money for its special features and for its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers of the south, and much more than any evekly newspaper in America.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One Dollar ser year, each paper at the price of a postage stamp. Thinkett, and of ther special writers are engaged by the year, and their inimitable sketches appear each week.

7. It is the People's Friend, and is the sturdy champion of the agricultural interests of the south.

8. It pays more money for its special features and for its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers of the south, and much more than any other four of the south.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One of a postage stamp. Thinkett, and of the veekly newspaper are ach week.

7. It is the People's Friend, and is the sturdy champion of the agricultural any other four of the weekly newspapers of the south.

9. It is the People's Friend, and is the sturdy champion of the agricultural any other four of the weekly newspapers of the south.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One of a postage stamp. Thinkett, and of the veekly newspapers are appear each week.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. Robert W. Denvir

Two Christmas Dinners In '90 a Smell was Enough

In '91 a Good Appetite The Change Was Due to Hood's Sarsaparilla.

" CHRISTMAS DAY, Dec. 25, 1891. 44 C. I. Hand & Co., Lowell, Mass. "I have been reading in a paper to-day about Hood's Sarsaparilla being a cure for

Dyspepsia
And I know that it is true. A year ago the smell of my Christmas dinner was enough for me, but this year I find that I want more than a smell, and I give Hood's Sarsaparilla than a smell, and I give Hood's Sarsaparilla the credit for the change in my feelings. For the last two years I have been troubled with dyspepsia, and could find no cure for it. My friends told me that if I went to Europe, scasickness, change of air and diet would cure me. I went to Ireland and remained the three summer months of this year, '91, and came back in September uncured. My blood was watery and I was told to take Hood's Sarsaparilla for it. I did so, and in one month I I found that

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures

Both poor blood and dyspepsia, for I am now perfectly well and have not taken any other medicine since I came home." ROBT.W. DENVIR, 238 Franklin St., Astoria, Long Island City, N. Y.

Hood's Pills are the best family cathartic, gentle and effective.

"German Syrup"

cured me of Hemorrhage of the Lungs when other remedies failed. I am a married man and, thirty-six years of age, and live with my wife and two little girls at Durham, Mo. I have stated this brief and plain so that all may understand. My case was a bad one, and I shall be glad to tell anyone about it who will write me. PHILIP L. SCHENCK, P. O. Box 45, April 25, 1890. No man could ask a more honorable, business-like statement.

Young Mothers!

We Offer You a Remedy which Insures Safety to Life of Mother and Child.

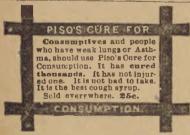

"MOTHER'S FRIEND

Bobs Confinement of its

Pain, Horror and Risk. fter using one bottle of "Mother's Friend" I ent by express, charges prepaid, on receipt of price, $1.50 per bottle, Book to Mothers mailed free. BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO., ATLANTA, GA, SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS

SHORTHAND.

KING COTTON Buy or sell your Cotton on JONES

5-Ton Cotton Scale. For terms address
JONES OF BINGHAMTON.

KEYSTONE Loads a ton in 5 minutes. Saves time, work, men, hay. Strong, durable, light draft. Send for description. KEYSTONE M'F'G CO.

Sterling, III.

PATENTS W. T. 1 stzgerald, Washington, D. C. free. A disabled. $2 fee for increase. 25 years ex-parience. Write for Laws. A.W. McCornick Marineton, D. C. & Cincinnay, Q.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A DEPARTMENT FOR LITTLE, BOYS AND GIRLS.

Something that Will Interest the Juventle Members of Every Household -Quaint Actions and Bright Shjings of Cute Children.

Why She Walked. One day last summer I was waiting in a New York ferry house for the boat that was to take me to New Jersey, when my attention was attracted by a pretty gray-eyed girl of about 14, who came limping in as though she were very tired. Another young

"Why, what's the matter? I've been here ever so long. How did you hurt your foot? What in the world kept you?"

These questions tumbled over each other as young girls' questions are apt to do as the two seated themselves, and then Miss Gray Eyes, holding up a lovely, waxen, fragrant magnolia flower, answered the last question

"This kept me," she said. "That flower!" exclaimed her friend, in astonishment. "Why, Laura, what do you mean?"

I mean exactly what I say," was the reply. "This flower made me late and caused my lameness. And, if you'll be patient for a moment or twe, I'll tell you all about it. You see, when I finished shopping at Willsy's, I had just five cents left for my car fare to the ferry. But, instead of paying car fare with it, I bought this magnolia and walked."

"Walked! 'Way from Fourteenth street? Laura, you're crazy."

"No, I'm not; I'm only very tired. and now don't you say another word till I get through. My mother loves magnolias, especially the kind that grow South, for when she was a girl and lived in Virginia they grew all around the old homestead. And, since she has become an invalid, she seems to love them more than ever. Well, you know we can't raise that kind of magnolia in this part of the country, and so she never sees one except by chance. I thought of all this when I saw a boy offering a bunch of the lovely things for sale (I suppose he got them from some hothouse) at the foot of the elevated station stairs, so I didn't go up the stairs, but bought one flower, with all the money I had, and walked to the ferry.

I couldn't help it, girls and boys, but I turned to that gray-eyed girl, as the boat came in, and said:

"God bless you, my dear, for I'm sure you are a blessing to your mother."

And before she could recover from her surprise at being thus addressed by a stranger, I was gone.—Detroit Free Press.

say at the time; they frequently report themselves to have been perfectly calm and self-possessed in cases of real or fancied danger, while eye-witnesses tell a very different story. Little Mary Woods had spent most of her life in the country, and joke, and when he found himself the she had no more fear of a cow than of object of meiriment, he was certain a kitten: but when her 17-year-old to becomd angry. city cousin Frances came to the farm one summer, Mary learned that there was at least one person in the world to whom a cow was an object of ter-

Frances had gone berrying with her him. little cousin, and as the bars between the berry pasture and the adjoining field happened to be down, a gentle, harmless cow had wandered through the opening till she came quite close to the children. Frances, in describing the scene to her aunt, said:

"Of course, Aunt Sally, I didn't want Mary to know I was afraid of a a cow, but I really thought I should that dreadful, glaring-eyed creature close at our heels. Still I was perfectly calm, and I just walked quickly but firmly to the stone wall, taking Mary by the hand, and I said, 'Let's climb over this wall, Mary; I see some splendid bushes over on the other side!" and she followed mo right over.

"She asked me a little while afterward if I was afraid of cows, but I was very busy picking berries just then, and the child didn't repeat her question. I wouldn't have had her suspect I was so frightened for any-

That night, when the small Mary was getting ready for bed, she said, "Mother, do you know I truly think Cousin Frances is afraid of cows!"

"Why?" said Mrs. Woods.
"Well," said the supposed-to-be unsuspecting child, "you know we were picking berries in grandpa's hill-pasture, and Mr. Fox's Brindle got in there, and she came close up to us. Cousin Frances had been busy picking, and she didn't hear Brindle till she gave a little 'moo.' And then Cousin Frances turned just as pale; and she grabbed my hand, and dragged me along to the wall as fast as ever she could, and she said, 'Let's climb over this cow, Mary; I see some splendid cows over on the other side!

"It was the very worst place in the whole wall to get over, and the berries weren't big at all! And," con-cluded the small sage, "I asked her if she was afraid of cows, and she didn't answer me; so I persume she didn't want to tell a wrong story!"

Curious Action of Smoke.

Cut in the top of a light, shallow it.' pasteboard box two holes, each about an inch in diameter, and place over the teacher. each an argand lamp chimney. In one hole stand a candle cut to such a length that it will project about half what happens?" an inch above the box. Light the "It falls."

candle and then hold burning "touch paper" over the other lamp chimney. The smoke, instead of rising, will go down one chimney, and after it has filled the box will rise through the other. The reason is that the burning candle makes a draught up its chimney, and if the box is air-tight to supply the place of what is going out air must come down the other chimney. "Touch paper," by the way, is made by dipping unglazed paper in a solution of saltreter. When dry it burns with a smoke but not with flame. Another experiment is to hold the hand tightly over the chimney where the draught is down-ward. The candle in the other chimney will begin to burn feebly girl, who had been seated by my side, and smoke, and will go out if there sprang up and rushed to meet the are no cracks in the box for air to get in. The reason air does not get to it flown its own chimney is that the upward draught there is too strong.

Two boys may create a pile of fun for the company by making up as a dwarf. Let one of them stand behind a table and place his hands on it, while the other stands behind the first and passes his arms around him. The head and body of the second boy and the legs of the first are hidden by curtains, which can be managed if the table be placed in a doorway. Boots are then plated on the hands of boy humber one, and a jacket put on over his shoulders and the arms of the hidden player. Then an excellent imitation of a dwarf is thus formed. The face should be disguised as much as possible, and the dwarf may be dressed fantastically to represent a Turk or Moor. To add to the fun, a third person might act the part of showman and give a comic account of the dwarf's history. Then the freak might deliver a speech, appropriate gestures being made by the player who furnishes the arms. These are apt to be ludicrous, as the second boy will probably have trouble in fitting his actions to the words of the first.

The dwarf can dance and perform many remarkable feats, such as rubbing his head with his toe or putting both feet in his mouth at once. Three bright boys can keep a room full of company convulsed with laughter with this act, but it should be well rehearsed beforehand.

Napoleon's Remembrance.

Madame Junot, in her "Memoirs of Napoleon," relates many interesting and amusing anecdotes of the Emperor's youth. He was, as a lad, quick-tempered, sensitive, and somewhat vain of his personal appearance, but possessed sufficient good judgment to control his temper upon occasion, and to give no evidence of injured vanity.

"I well recollect," writes Madame Junot, "that on the day when he first put on his uniform, he was as of his dress which had a very droll appearance—that was his boots.

They were so high and wide that Two Versions.

People who are frightened are not always conscious of what they do or ridiculous, and as soon as my sister and I saw Napoleon enter the drawing-room we could not restrain our laughter.

"At that early age, as well as in after life, Napolcon could not relish a

"My sister, who was some years older than I, said that since he wore a sword he ought to be gallant to la-dies, and, instead of being angry, should be happy that they joked with "'You are nothing but a child—a little pensionnaire!' said Napoleon, in a tone of contempt.

"Cecile, who was then twelve or thirteen years of age, was highly indignant at being called a child, and she hastily resented the affront by replying to Bonaparte, 'And you are to eat if they can get only genuine nothing but a puss in boots!'

"This excited a general laugh among scream when I looked up and saw all present, except Napoleon, whose rage I will not attempt to describe. Though not much accustomed to society, he had too much tact not to perceive that he ought to be silent when personalities were introduced, and his adversary was a child. "Though deeply mortified at the unfortunate nickname which my sister had given him, yet he affected to forget it, and to prove that he cherished no malice on the subject he had a little toy made, and gave it to me. This toy consisted of a cat in boots, and in the character of a footman running before a carriage. It was very well made, and must have been rather expensive to him considering his straitened circumstances.

"He brought along with it a pretty little edition of the popular tale. 'Puss in Boots,' which he presented to my sister, begging her to keep it as a token of his remembrance."—Youth's Companion.

What a Chance.

A clever teacher, who has the power of calling out originality in her pupils, says that she should certainly have no time for the use of textbooks if she attempted to answer all the startling questions asked in her class. One day the attraction of gravitation was under discussion and man continued: charley Beale volunteered the opin-ion that he "didn't see any need of it Mr. Barnum, and I have never for-Charley Beale volunteered the opinanyway."

"It seems to me," said Charley, "there's no particular use in having the earth attract things. Now, when the apple fell and made Newton think out the reason-why, that apple might just as well have stayed where it was till somebody gathered

"You play ball, don't you?" asked

"Suppose you hit the ball very high,

But if there was no attraction toward the earth it wouldn't fall. Don't you think that might prove inconvenient?"

Charley did not answer immediately. His eyes were the light of a new idea. His eyes were bright with "My!" he broke forth involuntarily. "What a chance for a home run!"-Exchange.

Oleomargarine.

The leading article in the latest number of the Medical News is de-voted to a discussion of the electric garine question by Prof. G. C. Caldwell. After describing the processes of manufacture, and showing that the butterine product may be as clean and wholesome as real butter, the writer says it is not so digestible, though not less so than are any other animal fats except butter. He does not believe any satisfactory proof has ever been furnished of the presence of disease germs in the artificial product, unless when admittedly in a decomposing state, and no case of disease, nor any general specific form of disease, can be pointed out as due even in the most indirect manner to the use of this food product.

There is no positive proof that but-terine is now made of disease-causing materials, or ever has been, though dyspepsia may possibly be favored by its large use, due to cheapness. And it can hardly be said that the passage of a national law has given any better assurance than previously existed that only a clean and pure product will be sold. The chief motive for such legislation was that of attempting to save from pecuniary damage another industry working along the same line; and it is not surprising that many regard it as unjust to prohibit the manufacture or sale of this substance whether directly or by such ridiculous subterfuges as requiring it to be colored pink or any other abnormal hue.

But, on the other hand, oleomargarine is not butter, and it is wrong to sell it as butter, no matter how good the imitation may be. Probably its manufacturers and sellers have brought upon themselves all the trouble in the way of prohibitive legislation by their attempts to sell it as butter. "All over the civilized world general or special laws exist prohibiting the selling of anything for what it is not, and no one denies the equity of those laws." When a man sells oleomargarine as butter he is violating those laws, and just in proportion to the ease with which the imitation can be palmed off for what it is not, and just in proportion to the value of other useful industries that are injured by such deceit, should be the penalties imposed on the fraud. The efficiency of the means for its detection ought to be ample, so that vain as young men usually are on the producer of the genuine article such an occasion. There was one part need not to go far out of his way for need not to go far out of his way for the means of defense. Therefore laws requiring that oleomargarine shall be sold for just what it is are just laws, no matter how stringent they may be. Furthermore, the writer indicates it as his conviction that there is work for the boards of health in connection with the manufacture and sale of this food product in States where these are permitted. Especially should its manufacture be watched. This needs to be done at least until it has been fully established that only clear fats actly what a man is: when he is dead. from animals killed in health can be used, and there is some doubt in regard to this point. The large license free required throws the manufacture into comparatively few hands, and thus inspection is rendered more easy. Under such restrictions it should seem that the trade in this food product might safely be left to itself, and that it might be a blessing to the community as a whole in supplying at low prices a savory substitute for butter, far better in quality than most of that which the poorer classes have butter. And as to those who can afford to pay for good butter the opportunity to get it will be better, as dairymen will be obliged to make good butter if they make butter at all.

Grateful from Intancy.

On an Atlantic steamer bound for New York a few years ago the usual entertainment for the benefit of the Liverpool Seamen's Orphanage was projected. There happened to be on board a good many "professionals, actors and singers, who all promised to take part, except one. He kept aloof and stubbornly declined to as-

As he was the person most desired, every effort was made to change his mind, and the committee of arrangements at last applied to Mr. Barnum (who was a passenger), and begged him to labor with the reluctant singer.

Mr. Barnum undertook the mission, and after stating the case and making the appeal, somewhat to his surprise the young man at once assented.
"I refused all these people," said he, "and I dislike exceedingly to take part in this sort of entertainment; but if you ask me, Mr. Barnum, I cannot decline. I am glad to do anything that will please you."

Mr. Barnum felt quite complimented, but protested a little, when the gotten it. You may not recall it, but am under great obligations to you." "Why?" hesitated the great showman; "I must confess that I don't recall-I don't remember any circumstance, and yet your face is familiar. Where was it we met? "Oh, it was thirty years ago, Mr. Barnum. I took the first prize at your first baby show! I've always felt grateful to you."—Tid-Bits. How Different Here.

only twenty-seven are Americans.

French as She's Used.

Mr. Billsdoo-I think Alice has a very chic face.
Mrs. Bullion—Yes, she has a nice repousse

Questions Often Asked.

Q. What is Alabastine? A. Alabastine is a PURABLE coating for

A. Alabastine is a FURABLE coating for walls and ceilings.
Q. Is it the same as kalsomines?
A. It is entirely different from all other preparations on the market.
Q. Wherein does it differ from these kalsomines on the market?
A. It is made from a cement that goes through a process of setting on the wall, and grows harder with age.
Q. What are kalsomines made from?
A. From whitings, chalks, clays or other inert powders for a base, and are entirely dependent upon glue to hold them on the wall.
Q. Why do kalsomines rub and scale?

Why do kalsomines rub and scale? A. Because the glue, being animal matter, decays in a short time by exposure to air and moisture, and the binding qualities of the material are then gone.

Q. Does the Alabastine contain any in-jurious substance?

jurious substance?

A. Alabastine has been most carefully tested, and is recommended by leading sanitarians throughout the country, on account of its sanitary nature.

Q. What has the same investigation shown regarding wall paper?

A. Sanitarians condemn, in strong terms, the use of wall paper for walls of living rooms, on account of the poison used in its manufacture.

manufacture.

Q. Can anything but plain work be done with Alabastine?

A. Any kind of work, from plain tinting to the most elaborate decorating can be done.

Q. How can I learn to do this work and decorate my house?

A. By. writing the Alabastine Company, Grand Rapids, Mich., for book of instructions and suggestions, and illustration of stencils; also showing six sets of tinted wall designs, sent free.

A man is all the better for trying to be good, no matter what the motive may be.

For Dyspepsia, indigestion, and Stomach disorders, use Brown's iron Bitters. The Best Tonic, it rebuilds the system, cleans the Blood and strengthops the muscles. A splendid tonic for weak and debilitated persons.

Ballet dancers never require a dress re-

How's Third

How's hard

We offer One Hundred Dollars reward for any case of catarrh that cannot be cured by taking Hall's Catarrh Curs.

F. J. Cheney & Co., Props., Toledo, O. We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions, and financially able to carry cut any obligations made by their firm.

West & Truax, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo,

WALDING, KINNAN & MARVIN, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.
Hall's Cararrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials scat free. Price 75c, per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

The Only One Ever Printed.

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a Crescent? on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you nook, exautiful Lithographs of samples free.

In 1850 "Brown's Bronchial Troches" were introduced, and their success as a cure for Colds, Coughs, Asthma, and Bronchitis has been unparalleled.

Rev. James H. Corden, pastor M. E. Church, Wilson, N. C., says: "I have used Bradycrotine and never in a single instance failed to obtain immediate relief from headache when directions were followed." Fifty cents, at drug stores.

stores.

FITS stopped free by Dr. KLINE'S GREAT
NERVE RESTORER. No fits after first day's use.
Marvelous cures. Treatise and $2 trial bottle free. Dr. Kline. 93I Arch St., Phila., Pa The electric eel can send a shock fifteen or

For impure of thin Blood, Weakness, Malaria Neuragia, Indigestion, and Biliousness, take Brown's Iron Bitters—it gives strength, making old persons feel young—and young bersons strong: cleasant to take.

There is only one time that you know ex-fuced nothing better for human ilis than the celebrated Beecham's Pills. 25 cents a box.

ONE ENJOYS

Both the method and results when Syrup of Figs is taken; it is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and cures habitual constipation. Syrup of Figs is the only remedy of its kind ever produced, pleasing to the taste and acceptable to the stomach, prompt in its action and truly beneficial in its effects, prepared only from the most healthy and agreeable substances, its many excellent qualities commend it to all and have made it the most popular remedy known.

Syrup of Figs is for sale in 50c and $1 bottles by all leading drug-gists. Any reliable druggist who may not have it on hand will procure it promptly for any one who wishes to try it. Do not accept any substitute.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. LOUISVILLE, KY. NEW YORK, N.Y.

No. 17 1892

CHEAPEST FAMILY ATLAS KNOWN.

ONLY 25 CENTS.

191 PACES, 91 FULL PACE MAPS.

Colored Maps of Each State and Territory in the United States. Also Maps of Every Country in the World.

The letter press gives the square miles of each State; time of settlement; population chief cities; average temperature; salary of officials and the principal postmasters in the State; number of farms, with their productions and the value thereof; different manufactures and number of employes, etc., etc. Also the area of each Foreign Country; form of government; population; principal products and their money value; amount of trade; religion; size of army; miles of railroad and telegraph; number of horses, cattle, sheep, and a vast amount of information valuable to all.

POSTPAID FOR 25 CENTS.

Of the foreign merchants in China BOOK PUB. HOUSE, 134 Leonard Street, New York City.

Doesn't "look" as she ought

-the weak, nervous and ailing woman. As long as she suffers from the aches, pains, and derangements peculiar to her sex, she can't ex-

But there's only herself to blame. With Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, she's a different woman.

And it's a change that can be seen as well as felt. The system is invigorated, the blood enriched, digestion improved, melancholy and nervousness dispelled.

With the "Favorite Prescription," all the proper functions are restored to healthy action. Periodical pains, weak back, bearing-down sensations, nervous prostration, all "female complaints" are cured by it. It's the only medicine for woman's weaknesses and ailments that's guaranteed to do what is claimed for it. If it doesn't give satisfaction, in every case for which it's rec-

Can something else offered by the dealer, though it may pay him better, be "just as good"?

Kennedy's

MedicalDiscovery

Takes hold in this order:

Driving everything before it that ought to be ont.

You know whether

Bowels,

Kidneys,

Inside Skin,

Outside Skin,

Liver,

ommended, the money is returned.

pect to.

RELIEVES all Stomach Distress.
REMOVES Nausea, Sense of Fullness, Congestion, Pain.
REVIVES FAILING ENERGY. RESTORES Normal Circulation, STATE WARMS TO TOE TIPS.

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Ma

Unity. A sombre pine is stirred By the recreant wind on high, And out of its gloom, like a word, Breaketh a bird to the sky. The sky speaks truth through a star; The star seeks the heart of the sea; To the sea strives a river afar; In the river a brook laughs free.

And down to the brook doth gleam The thread of a mountain spring, Born in the shade of that pine tree's dream And brushed by the bird's soft wing. -[Virginia W.Cloud, in Youth's Companion.

CHASED BY WOLVES.

BY H. C. DODGE.

During one of the coldest winters ever known, I was in Russia, my business obliging me to spend several months in an outskirt village situated on the bank of a goodly sized but unnavigable river which, of course, was frozen solid.

Having plenty of spare time and such a splendid place to indulge in my favorite sport of sailing on the ice, I blasts blowing right in my teeth. had made me a fine ice boat, on which, warmly clad in fur garments, I took when the moon was bright enough.

Although I was often warned by the peasants to avoid venturing too far up tee river-especially at night-on my horrible pursuers would slacken account of the wolves who inhabited their speed and watch me till I 'urned, that wild region, I paid little attention | while, from the darkness of the woods to their words, for, never having been attacked by those savage creatures, I couldn't realize how dangerous they much more terrible in strength and ferocity than those in this country, which had always skulked away the few times I had met them in our Western Late one clear and cold afternoon I for a longer trip than usual, for it was at the thought of what might result full moon time I wanted to see the if they took to the ice. grand mountain scenery some thirty wonderfully beautiful in their winter dress and in the moonlight.

The river's solid surface was in just right for flue sailing.

For fear I might meet some wolves my swift iceboat could easily distance in case they followed, I wore a brace of big revolvers and a small hatchet. which last, however, I always took Quickly I left the settlement far straight and wind favorable I flew with lightning's speed.

But where the river twisted so I the silent, snow-covered banks kept off the wind, I made slower progress.

The further I got up the river the more bewildering in grandeur and left the land. beauty the uninhabitable and rugged country became, and when the setting sun lighted the clouds and mountain tops with fire the effect on the weird Russian landscape exceeded my wildest dreams of nature's glory.

hind the dark forest of firs, which they wanted of heading me off and fringed the river's edge and the colors perhaps springing from the bluffs upon changed from fiery gold to silvery white, I was completely entranced. The contrast between the glitters of the moonbeams on the sparkling snow me, and yet, in spite of my enthusiasm, it awed me with its fearful sub-

Onward my iceboat flow till I came in sight of the falls ahead, then, slacking my speed, I slowly and carefully approached them.

leaped and tumbled, on either side off, they didn't, and away I skimmed trees and rocks coated with glistening to the opposite bank. ice and dazzling icicles seemed like a sugar Fairyland, while above hung fear to look up, slowly went about. a misty cloud of spray in which floated | Suddenly, before I could set well un-

I know not how leng I would have gently glided to and fro lost in admiration of the majestic scene of fore feet on the stern of the boat, spiendor had I not been startled by a well nigh upsetting it and nearly distant howl apparently coming from stopping its motion as he dragged bethe depths of the dismal woods on my hind striving to bite me with his horright quickly followed by answering | rid fangs.

howls from the other bank. while hunting in the far West that the his hold on the boat, rolled over, dysounds were from wolves and that I ing () the ice.

was discovered and, perhaps, soon to be chased by them.

I also knew that after a period of ravenous from hunger that nothing devoured him instantly. except superior speed could overcome their attacks.

Though I felt safe enough in my iceboat which, try their hardest they home I started.

But the wind was against me and, though I skimmed swiftly over the ice, my speed wasn't nearly so great comfort in case the wolves became numerous and venturscome.

All the time and from every direction, some from afar and many close frequent and long trips, sometimes trees on either bank, running along around for its last short tack. extending them far into the night with me and easily keeping up with my flight.

> At every tack I made, going no nearer the sliore than I could help, where they stood ready to spring upon me at the first chance, their hot eyes gleaming like blazing coals.

Then, as the wind filled my little Neither did I know that the Russian | sail and I shot off to the opposite bank, wolves were at least twice as big and they, giving a chorus of maddened howls, started again to head me off, while those on the side I was approaching stopped to wait for me.

So far, none had ventured on the frozen river and I began to hope they wouldn't, for, thought I might avoid started out on my iceboat prepared an attack from the banks, I trembled

All the while they were gathering miles up the river and also the falls in greater numbers and displaying there which I had been told were so more boldness and cunning in calculating and waiting for my movements in tacking.

If the wind died out, if my sail most places smooth and the wind was gave way, if I upset, as I came near to doing more than once in bouncing over a rough piece of ice, I should be which, I knew, or thought I did, that | torn to bits and devoured instantly. Even without those things happening I realized my chance of reaching home in safety was frightfully slim.

Now the howlings for some reason stopped in silent, unrelenting and tireless pursuit the ever increasing behind and where the river was bloodthirsty wolves loped along the shadowy banks easily keeping up with my boat which almost seemed to stand still while the pack on the ice had to tack, or where the ice was behind were surely getting closer and humpy, or where the tall fir tree on preventing me from flying backwards up the river in case I had to use that forlorn and, likely, hopeless way of distancing those near me if they, too,

Before me and twenty miles yet from safety the river began to twist between projecting bluffs, may be ten feet or so in height. I knew the contrary winds there would necessitate slower progress and longer tacks, and When the full moon arose from be- so give the wolves the opportunities me while I turned. Evidently they knew it, too, for without pausing to wait now when I approached the shores they darted on, and ice and the intense blackness and and I could see them forming in horshadows of the gloomy woods charmed | rid groups in front of me on several exposed points, while those in the rear on the ice were rapidly catching

One hand held the tiller, the other revolver, as under the first dreaded point I was obliged to sail, but although the immense creatures there In their center the dark waters crowded and showed signs of leaping

> I reached it and, too paralyzed with der way, with a howl of the fiercest rage an enormous gray wolf shot from the bank and landed with his

I fired, almost poking the pistol into I knew from my little experience his great open mouth, and he, loosing

At once a dozen of his fellows sprang from the bank upon him, and, while he still struggled in his death intense cold weather they became so throes, tore him limb from limb and Paying the Last Honors to a

That taste of blood maddened the others, and, faster than I can tell it, Five Weeks of Native "Playthey leaped from everywhere on the river till before and behind and each couldn't catch, I thought it high time side they rushed after my boat, which to be off, so pointing the bowsprit for just then was spurting across for one more tack ere I should have some miles of straight sailing where the wind would be favorable.

But right in my path, and where I as when going with the breeze, while had to go about, a pack of wolves, the tacks I had to make brought me forty at least, were coming or waiting, too close to the gloomy banks for for they seemed to have learned the trick of the ice-boat's tacking.

Aiming quickly at those in front I emptied my revolver into them; then as I drew nearer I gave them the conby, came those blood-curdling howls tents of my other pistol. As before each increasing in number and filling me wounded wolf was pounced upon and with an indescribable terror, which torn and eaten by his comrades, but so chilled me even more than the cutting many of the beasts were at me that all could not join in the bloody feast. Soon I saw dusky forms outlined Still it broke their ranks and gave me against the shadowed snow under the a few seconds longer to work my boat

> Hatchet in hand, on and into the confused pack I dashed, hitting some and sending them sprawling, but in spite of everything three mighty fellows leaped on my boat, one of them knocking the tiller from my grasp as he struggled for a footing—the other two hanging from the stern and dragging like the rest did. In a moment more the whole gang-then chasing me not forty feet behind-would have been fighting over my bones. Never minding the snapping, entangled wolf aboard, I reached back and fetched my sharp hatchet on the paws of the two who were hanging on the stern, chopping them off and dropping the beasts for their companions to finish.

> Then regaining the helm and refilling the sail, I shot away on a straight course down the river faster than my fleetest pursuers could follow.

> Now I had time to attend to the wolf aboard, who had fortunately jammed his feet in the gear of the boat and was held there, while he made furious efforts to get at me.

Expecting he would break loose and attack me before I could wholly reload, I hastily slipped a cartridge in my pistol and fired, hitting him in the shoulder only.

The howl he gave was answered by the hundreds in chase who, thank heaven, were dropping further and further behind my flying boat.

I dared not wait to load anew, for my horrible passenger, made desperate by his wound, was surely forcing himself loose. Fastening the tiller I jumped with my hatchet to strike him ere he did so. Al the same instant he leaped at me, catching a good cut across his eyes as I dodged him. Then, before he could turn, I sunk the hatchet blade in the back of his head with such force that it stuck there while he fell limp and lifeless into the seat I had vacated.

Loading the pistol again I put half a dozen bullets into his head and body to make certain he was dead-then, sitting on his carcass, I took the tiller once more and steered for home and

The danger was over. Though I saw a few more wolves I passed them so swiftly that chase was vain.

It was dawn when I reached the village bank with my awful trophy and the tale I told astonished and startled the anxious peasants who in all their days had known no such an escape as mine.

The wolf I killed was a monster even for the Russian country and it took two strong men to carry it to my house. Its skin, made into a rug, now decorates my American home and furnishes a never-ending start for all sorts of adventures, none of which can approach the one I told .-- [Chicago

A New Kind of Weapon.

At one of the grammar schools in this city the fourth-grade pupils were. not long since, reading the story of an important battle during the civil war. The text read, "Both sides fought with dogged pertinacity." When this point was reached a boy in one of the back seats raised his hand and calmly inquired, "What kind of weapons are those?"-- [Buffalo Ex-

The footpad is generally successful in striking a man for a job.

SAVAGE GRIEF.

West African Potentate.

ing," Feasting and Dancing.

At a time when we read of the funeral rites of several great men who have been prominently before the English people, it may be of interest to know something of the last honors paid by his people to one who in his time received no small share of attention both in his own country and here—the black King Ja-Ja of Opobo, West Africa. It will be remembered that he died at Teneriffe when returning to his own country, whither he had been permitted to go by the Government. His people urgently asked for his body, which there was much difficulty in obtaining, as he was buried in a place under Spanish jurisdiction, which does not permit the removal of the dead under a considerable interval. By the efforts and influence of the Consul-General of the Oil Rivers Protectorate, Major Macdonald, this rule was set aside, and the steamer Benin brought the King's remains to Opobo.

The body was in four cases, two of wood, one of tin and one of lead. As soon as it was known the steamer had arrived all the chiefs of the town and district came with their followers in their big canoes, attired in their best, and with streamers and flags flying from their boats. The outer case was removed from the coffin, which was then wrapped in many folds of costly silk brocade and placed in a large canoe, with Ja-Ja's brilliant state umbrella erected over it, and guarded by two chiefs of his house. The big canoe then headed the crowd of others and proceeded up the river. All native trade was stopped, and the last five weeks have been devoted to native 'plays," feasting and dancing, and numbers of fowls and goats were killed for food. In the town and its neighborhood continuee cannon firing has gone on day and night, about 500 kegs of gunpowder being consumed in this way. To the final "great play" all the white residents on the river were invited. The town was decorated with numerous flags. The cannon and gun firing kept up, and native music from tomtoms (drums hollowed out of tree trunks) and various strange instruments was rendered with vigor. Ja-Ja is buried within the courtyard of his palace, which stands in the centre of a square of small houses, having galleries fronted with glass. The room containing the vault in which lies the coffin was draped round with silk brocade and hung with photographs and pictures of the late King, one large painting in oil being well executed. At one end of the room was a large mirror; at the other end a

The vault is cemented over, and at its head a plate of food and a large jar of rum stood, the latter of which every day had been poured over the grave. Much treasure is buried with the body. Time was when the lives of even 100 slaves, openly sacrificed, would not have sufficed on such an occasion that the spirit of the king might proceed on its journey with due state; but under the wise and firm government now existing this terrible custom has been abandoned. The funeral feast was laid in a large room adjoining the one containing the vault; and a long table, laid with white cloth, knives, forks, glasses, and dinner napkins, supported a profusion of food. A splendid roast turkey was carved by the head chief, who, wise man, removed his most superfluous garment for the good work. There were roast and boiled meats, yams, palm-oil "chops" and "fu-fu," which latter is a dough-like substance made from pounded yam. The proper method of consuming this delicacy is to roll a piece into a ball the size of a hen's egg, dip it into palm-oil "chop," open the mouth wide, shut the eyes and there your are. It is wholesome, and, as Sam Weller remarked, "wery filling."

broad couch, on which reclined his wives, who have watched the body night and day since its arrival.

Large jars of "tombo," a native tree, were handed round. A hospitable | specied by the white people.

invitation to these good things was given by the chiefs, whose black followers crowded the sides of the room, and eagerly watched for portions of the feast handed them by their masters. When eating was done, then came the last ceremony-that event 6

smashing upon the table all the plates and dishes used. Adjourning to seats under a large tree in the courtyard, the chiefs and their guests watched the "plays" commence, to the accompaniment of vigorous and startling native music. Men dressed in grotesque costumes decorated with bells and rattling nutshells, wearing headpieces of bullocks' horns and goats' hair, danced about, some on foot and others on stilts; processions of young men carrying swords and knives marched two abreast, contorting their bodies as they went, while troops of women and girls walked about singing funeral chants to Ja-Ja.

Another procession was formed by the daughters of Ja-Ja, and some of the prominent chiefs, attired in English military and naval full dress, wearing gold epaulets and cocked hats, and having quantities of valuable pink coral strung around their persons. The music, drumming, dancing and gun firing were kept up all the day and the following night. In a short time will commence the ceremony of installing the new head chief of Ja-Ja's house.—[Liverpool Post.

Washing Little Indians.

We were camped at the Hot Springs on the Lo Lo trail, made famous in Indian annals by the escape of Chief Joseph and his band of Nez Perces. Just above us was a large camp of Flatheads who were making their fall hunt. One morning we were awakened by their shouts and cries. Evidently there was great excitement somewhere, and we promptly jumped up. It was just after daylight, and cold clouds of steam were rising from the big basin-shaped pool at the foot of the granite wall from which poured a thick stream of boiling water. The pool was so large that at the lower edge the water was almost cold; the nearer you approached to the place where the hot water burst from the thousand that I got from my friends." rock the better chance you stood of getting boiled,

At the edge, at a place where the water was of a comfortable temperature, stood two Indians, one on the bank and the other on a stone in the water. Near by were a dozen other Indians guarding a number of little Indian boys and girls, who had nothing on and were howling and crying.

When we looked out of the tent the two Indians at the pool had an Indian boy-one holding him by the feet and the other by the hands-and were gravely swinging him backward and forward through the warm water, while he yelled at every dip. As soon as they had finished with him he was set upon the bank and ran to the willow brush near by.

Then the noise redoubled, for each child in the group guarded by the Indians feared that it was his turn. They all tried to escape to the brush, but their elders pursued and caught them, until the very last one had been put through the cleansing process. - [New York Sun.

Ingenious Indian Basket Makers.

The Tarratines, or Penobscot Indians, who live on an island in the iver a dozen miles above Bangor, Me., are the most ingenious of all basket makers, and no chemist has produced brighter colors than those with which the children of the forest adorn their wares. The baskets are made of thin strips of ash and maple, the latter for rims and handles, and much of the work is interwoven with fragrant sweet grass from the salt marshes along the coast. Alder is steeped for pale red dye, white birch bark for bright red, cedar boughs for green, sumac for yellow, white maple bark for black. A light solution of maple yields purple instead of black. Some of the Indian basket makers are very prosperous. One family of four cleared $1000, in addition to their living expenses, last year, and in the parlor of their house is a Brussels carpet, upholstered furniture, a $400 piano, various expensive ornaments, lace curtains, Catholic books and pictures, and a set of Cooper's novels. There are many lazy and drunken Indians, but the goot Indians control; drink made from a species of palm | the affairs of the tribe, and are reThe Last Slumber.

He sleeps. Who sleeps?

You do not know, And I must tell you soft and low, My little baby sleeepeth so.

He sleeps. My baby sleeps so late! The little birds awake and sing, And flit about on happy wing. He waketh not for anything.

My baby sleeps. The noon upon the morn doth wait; The sun shines full upon the gate; The bees and birds are in full tune. And summer life is at its noon-My heart doth break

My baby never will awake!

He sleeps so late,

He sleeps. The tender eve draws near: The lights of home are shining clear, But in the churchyard, dark and drear,

My little baby sleeps. Myrta L. Avary, in Atlanta Constitution

HUMOROUS.

A trade union-A baker marrying a dressmaker. The worst thing about some men's failures is the failure of conscience.

A pessimist is a man who believes that all the chestnuts have worms in them. "Now is the time to do me a good turn," as the griddle-cake said to the hired girl. The museum freak is not so anxious to be let in on the ground floor as he is to get up stares. The clergyman who ties the nuptial knot is usually summoned by the ringing of a belle. "I'll join you in a minute" is what the minister said to the couple who were waiting to be married. Out on the border the whereabouts of Garza continues as great a secret as that other great border mystery, hash. Everybody knows a woman is hard to please. She likes the matrimonial harness, but doesn't like to be hitched up with a man who is strapped. Bulfinch—How is that little mining scheme of yours getting along? Any money in it? Wooden-Auy money in it! Well, I should say so. All of mine, all of my wife's and about fifty

Mrs. Oldboy-Oh, you needn't talk, John. You was bound to have me. You can't say that I ever ran after you. Oldboy-Very true, Maria: and the trap never runs after the mouse, but it gathers him in all the

The Natural Resources of the South. By the census statistics the mortality among whites for the census year 1880 was 14.74 per 1000 for the whole United States, including the South; and for the southern states alone from Maryland to Louisiana inclusive it was but 14.04 per 1000. By the best of all demonstrations, therefore, the South is proving the salubrity of her climate, the fertility of her soil, the extent of her natural resources, and her fitness for the support of a large population. An empire in extent, her lands are still not one-half occupied. Her population per square mile averages about one-third that of the average northern state, and but one-fifth that of the more populous ones. The sole condition which now prevents a large immigration, both from abroad and from the north-western states, from taking advantage of the opportunities open in the South, is ignorance of the situation. Such ignorance cannot be of long duration.

Briefly, there is not elsewhere upon the globe a territory open to the Anglo- Saxon race, with such varied and great resources and such propitions and easy conditions of life and labor, so abundantly supplied with rivers, harbors, and with lines of railroad transportation, or so well located to command the commerce of both hemispheres. The prophecy of what our people will make of these advantages in the struggle for commercial supremacy among the nations of the earth is but faintly written in what has already been done, under adverse conditions, by each section working alone. Now their united strength will be brought to bear on the easiest part of the problem. The most progressive race on earth-the leaders of the world in science, in invention, in wealth, in energy, and in enterprise-will here develop the greatest natural resources under the most favorable conditions possible.

The Forum.

FRANK W. GIST, Entered at the Post Office in Calera as Second Class Matter.

CALERA, SATURDAY, MAY 21.

ANNOUNCEMENTS. We are authorized to announce D. R. McMillan as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Slielby county, subject to the action of the democratic county

We are authorized to announce John and nominate him for governor.

We are authorized to announce Wm. R. A. Milner as a candidate for the of-dice of Circuit Clerk of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county convention.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic and conservative party.

John A. Campbell.

the action of the Democratic convention of Shelby county. The friends of D. Y. Wyatt' authorize us to announce him as a candidate for County Superintendent of Education of Shelby county, subject to action of the democratic convention.

We are authorized to announce J. T. SLAUGHTER as a candidate for the office of Sheriff of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic convention. MOBILE, like the rest, gave her eight votes for Governer Jones. Its all one way now. THE officers of the Columbiana president, A. H. Templin vice pres ident, J. T. Leeper secretary, H. E. Reynolds assistant secretary, J. P. Spencer treasurer.

think the democratic convention will be made up of fools, or is he crazy?" Neither, brother, it's only another one of his errors. You still succeeded in getting Calhoun's know he's always making mistakes. delegation. In other words, Cle-

Shelby, to hear from in the fourth coveting the earth, was anxious to district. There are five candidates take the senator from Cleburne. in the race and they all have some claims of Cleburne and throw his delegates pledged, but none have weight in favor of Anniston, he enough to nominate. The outlook still could have had this delegation. for a dead lock is quite flattering.

In the Calhoun county convention held last Tuesday the 8 delegates to the state convention were, on motion of a Kolb man, instructed to cast the vote for Jones. The delegates to the congressional convention uninstructed, but are for Lane. Kelly was andorsed for circuit judge.

county for Jones, and he would not trade off a single vote of Jones to save himself.

Such actions are few in latter day politics, and the man of whom such a compliment may be written such a compliment may be written.

county for Jones, and he would not trade off as single vote of Jones to last election and are in accord with and intend to support the nominees of the party, will be entitled to participate in the beat meetings, and in the county convention as delegates.

From the above resolution, it will be readily observed that all de-

Kolb in radical camp. Thither his road leads straight.—Birmingham is that Kolb claims so much, he will ed him may be ashamed of their desbe stopping on the way to gather picable course. Such incidents will up fragments of all parties, and run down before he gets there.

NEXT Saturday every democrat and make the action of every beat meeting unanimous. Let it be remembered too that the meeting unanimous. Let it be remembered too that the meeting unanimous and make the action of every beat cratic nominees. The organization certain. It costs $5 per bottle, but a bottle is worth a hundred of anything else, and for that remembered too that the meeting unanimous. the last election.

that the next electoral college will the same as four years ago. The equal to the whole number of Sen- and an honor to the county and the ators and Representatives to which state. the state is entitled in congress.' The new apportionment does not go tions. - Age-Herald.

CAN HE BE SANE?

The Birmingham Evening New at times gets real funny. Under the above heading it had, in its issue of Monday the following amus-

"Kolb dods not disguise his intention, so say those who talk with him, to have all his followers, whom he can control, walk out of the dem ocratic convention June 8th next

The rest of his scheme is 'real S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject cute,' so to speak, and is as follows: to the action of the democratic county After Kolb shall be nominated by the bolters, they are to return to regular convention and participate in the nomination of the rest of the

The Kolb delegates will no doubt run off to themselves and "unanimously" nominate Kolb for governor, but they will have to stay out in the cold until the convention I hereby announce myself a candidate for representative in the General Assembly of Alabama, subject to the action of the Democratic County Convention.

GORDON DUBOSE.

in the cold until the convention gets through, which means that he will then be where we have expected he would land for the last three The friends of Col. Jno. P. West announce him as a candidate for the Lower House of the Legislature. Subject to and Chalmers, of Mississippi.

GRANT'S DEFEAT

A gentleman in Anniston, writing of the Calhoun convention and the defeat of Lon Grant, says of that gentleman's course:

Now Mr. Grant could have had backing of his county had he not been too great to stoop to a trade. He was offered four of the eight votes "to divide the delegation of eight between him and Lane and give Kolb four votes." Grant was too grandly patriotic, too devoted Democratic Club are W. B. Browne to principle and democracy, to stoop for his own grandizement. This is the more conspicuously noble from the fact that Gov. Jones did not need a vote from Calhoun, yet Mr. Grant would not see his county disgrace herself or destroy her unithan shameful success.

Again, had Mr. Grant betrayed Cleburne county, whose delegation had been instructed for him, he had burne is entitled to the state sena-THERE is only one more county, tor from this district, but Anniston, Now if Grant would ignore the True to principle devoted to right, forgetful of self, and mindful only of his county's honor he nobly sur-rendered his ambition and today state and federal elections, or who hav-above personal ambition, and the be rememberd long after the pres-should be at his beat meeting, and six counties in the state to hold her have a voice in selecting the very convention, but it should be one shoulder to shoulder, and work in acres of campus. Board, lights, fuel best men in the beat as dele. of the best and most conservative. unisen for a solid and reunited gates to the county convention. If the democrats will turn out as a democratic party in Shelby county. Select men who are known for their unit to the beat meetings next Satfirmness and loyalty to the princi- urday, and work harmoniously, apples of democracy and good govern- point good and true men-without favor to certain candidates-not tying their hands with rigid instruc-ONLY one week from today to the eat meetings. Every democrat will again be placed in the column being the will again be placed in the column being the will again be placed in the column being the will be well, and Shelby edy for Rheumatism. Any of the cheap nostrums will not effect a cure—in fact, none of them will. Don't trifle with life beat meetings. Every democrat will again be placed in the column in Shelby county should turn out with true, safe counties for demomembered too that the party has men into a people's party, and the cure is wanted. Sent to any address by decided that none are eligible to leaders caucusing with dyed in the decided that none are eligible to leaders caucusing with dyed in the take part in these meetings except republicans need not scare or distance, New York. Agents wanted. those who voted the state and fed-hearten a democrat. His is the eral democratic ticket in 1891, and cause of truth, and "the truth is those who have become voters since mighty and will prevail." It has stood the test in this country for The suggestion has been made almost a dentury, and will continue to stand though the combined forces families and health seekers in Alabama of the north-east qr of section 12, townbe composed of only 701 members, it. Then let every true lover of its

Delightful shades, ten pin alleys lawn tennis, and all other health and pleasconstitution says that each state principles stand firm and the result write to shall appoint a number of electors of the convention will be a credit

THAT 'are same old coon turned into effect until March 3, 1893, af- up in Walker county the other day ter the electoral college shall have except that he had another ring on been selected and fulfilled its fune- his narative. He was in Columbi ana Monday.

The Best Place to Secure a Business Education is at the

TO E WAT TO BE THE

THE ESCONDIES

BEERIVEEN GERAINE, ALAR

Send for Circular,

LEONARD LIPPMAN, President.

G. F. HART, Secretary and Treasurer.

A CALL

M. M. FIELDS, Vice President

An exchange asks: "Does Kolb ty, and thus accepted defeat rather To the Democratic Voters of Shelby

As the time for holding the county democratic convention is rapidly approaching, I deem it proper, as chairman of the executive committee to urge all the democrats of the druggist has not got it, he will order it, selection of delegates to the county convention to be held on June 3rd. I especially desire to call your attention to the following resolution of our county executive committee, prescribing the eligibility of partici pants in the beat meetings, which is as follows:

ic party at heart, to participate in the beat meetings and county conit now behooves us to lay aside all J. R. WHITE,

Chair'n. Dem. Ex. Com.

"Any Port in a Storm."

That's a good maxim, but it will not work as a rule in the purchase of a remand prolong agony. Get Dr. Drummond's and for that reason is cheapest when a

SHELBY SPRINGS.

This popular summer resort will open on the first day of June 1892 for ure giving games. For full particulars H. H. BAKER, Shelby Springs Ala.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, Bruise, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains Corns, and Skin Eruption, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents a box.

For any case of Rheumatism which can not be cared by Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy. The proprietors do not hide this offer, but print it in bold type on all their circulars, wrappers, printed matter, and through the newspapers everywhere. It will work wonders, one bottle will cure nearly every case. If the druggist has not got it, he will order it county to attend the beat meetings or it will be sent to any address by pre-on May 28th and participate in the Drummond Medicine Co., 43-50 Maiden Lane, New York. Agents wanted

FEMALE UNIVERSITY. Fall Terms begins September 15,

Spring Term begins Janua-Over 125 boarders, 20 teachers and officers. Full University curriculum. Five distinct courses, three which Thorough Business Course Art. IT will be a pleasant thing to the Mr. Grant is one of the old guard Jones or Forney in 1890 are entitled The scheme of study is framed with democratic press of Alabama to see democrats with whom party stands to vote in the beat meetings, and view of offering to voung women such of course include all democrats who facilties for obtaining a liberal educahave, through misapprehension of tion as are enjoyed by the young men country needs more like him. These facts, followed opposing committees at the best Universities. Hindsom-The greatest fear of the Journal men in his own county who defeat except those who voted for Butler. estand most complete school edifice This being the case I earnestly in the South. All the rooms halls and urge all those who have the inter- stairways carpeted. Accommodation est of our people and the democrat- for four hundred boarders. Smead's improved system of heat and ventilation. Lighted with gas and electricity Hot and cold water throughout vention. There being but one re- Abundance of bathrooms and closets SHELBY is the last of the sixty- cognized democratic organization, Parlors, library, reading rooms and gymnasium conveniently located bickerings and join hands, standing Cash cost of building, $85,000. Eight servant's attendance etc., five months $64.59; tuition, $25. Send for cata-

REV. L. D. BASS, D. D., Florence Ala.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF A mortgage, executed to the undersigned by Mary M. Baker and Hope H. Baker, and recorded in Mortgage Book No. 17, page 518, in the office of the Judge of Probate of Shelby county, Alabama, I will proceed to sell, for cash, to the highest bidder, on Monday, 6th day of June, 1892,

at Columbiana, in front of the Court House door, in said county, within the legal hours of sale, the following described real estate to with scribed real estate, to-wit:

The south hif of section 6; the north hlf of section 7; the north-west gr of sec tion 8; the west half of the north-east gr of section 8; the north-west gr of the south west gr, section 8, all in town 22, the entertainment of guest. These range 1, west; and the east hlf of south Spring are the most popular resort for east qr of section 1; the south-east qr ship 22, range 21, west, containing in all

MARY A. DEDMAN, W. W. Quarles, Att'y. may7-tds

This would be a comparatively happy world if everybody knew the victures of SMITH'S BILE BEANS as a family medicine, and acted upon that knowledge. One half the misery of the world comes from allments which arise from a bad stomach or a bad liver. Chiefest among these are dyspepsia, billiousness, sick headache and Neuralgia.

BILE BEANS will cure all of these besides all miasmatic diseases, Door One Bean.

Mrs. S. H. McCauley's,

NEAR THE DEPOT,

Montevallo. - - Aa. A Splendid Line of Trimmed and Untrimmed Hats in the Latest Styles, and at Reasonable Prices.

handkerchiefs & Hosiery. Saturday Sales at 51

CORBETT PREESE,

such a compliment may be written is greater in defeat than in victory. From the above resolution, it will be readily observed that all democrats who did not vote against mocrats who did not vote against. Thorough Business Course.

DEALERS IN

hardware & tinware.

MAGON MARIARAKAR

Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded Shells always on Hand.

118 19TH STREET, BIRWINCHAM.

Banking House of

W. E. Brik erhoff & Co.,

CALERA: ALABAMA.

Negotiate Loans.

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York Louisville and Birmingham at regular rates charged by the larger cities.

We transact a general banking business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike

Fire and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND

Bought, Sold and Rented upon jurt terms.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE. No. 1, South Bound, 4:41 p. m. 5:10 a. m. 10:19 " 2, North Bound, 10:05 p. m. 7:15 p. m.

ALABAMA MINERAL.

No. 85, Arrives at 10:25 a. m. 86, Departs at

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter Register in Chancery—D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest.

Tax Assessor-W. H. Kidd. County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland. Superintendent of Education-T. N.

County Solicitor-J. L. Peters.

County Commissioners—John E. Dyeev, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

ATTHE CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN—Services on the 4th Sundays in each menth, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a.m.

and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

Mr. D. R. Mc

Baptist Church--Rev. J. G. Lowrey, naster. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN-J. C. Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Before our next issue reaches its Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes RICHARD K. FON, Square. New York City.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the stoates of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old | making good pictures. rge should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-Witt Talmage.

ONE DOLLAR WEEKLY

none, we sell one of the hunting case watches for the club price, $28, and send C. O. D. by express with privilege of Our agent at Durham, N. C., writes:

for the money.

Our agent at Pennington, Texas, writes "Am in receipt of the watch and am pleased without measure. All who have seen it say it would be cheap at $40."

One good reliable agent wanted for each place. Write for particulars. EMPIRE WATCH CO., New York

CENTENNIAL MEETING

OF THE SHELBY BAPTIST ASSOCIATION.

To be held with Calera Baptist Church May

FRIDAY 10 A. M .-- Devotional Exercises, 20 minutes. C. W. O'Hara

10:30—Importance and best means

7:30—Sermon, Dr. E. B. Teague. SATURDAY 9 A. M.—"Devotional exercises 30 minutes," N. T. Lucas. 9:30—Centennial movement ex plained, Dr W C. Cleveland.

2:30 P. M.—Signs of the times as bearing on the progress of mission work? E. B. Teague.

SUNDAY 10 A. M.—S. S. exercises, conducted by T. M. Fancher.

11 A. M -Missionary Sermon followed by a collection for missions, Dr. W C. Cleveland.

It is earnestly hoped that each church in the association will be represented in this meeting. Everybody invited to attend.

J. G. Lowry, Chairman.

Sir—I made use of your Philotoken with my last child, in order to procure a safe and easy travil. I used it about two months before my expected time, and I had a very quick and easy confinement. Nothing occurred to protract my convalescence, and I got about in less time than was usual for me. I think it a medicine that should be recommended in the description of the banks of the great Mississippi, and expose his hardened flesh to the ravages of musquetos. Go again brother.

J. C. Pearson, D. D. S., will remain in Montevallo till the 25th inst., when he will be found at the Vanderbilt Hotel Co.

TOWN TOPICS.

One more week till the beat meetings Yesterday morning was almost cold enough for frost. visiting Miss Pilgreen here.

Attention is directed to the professional card of Peters, Wilson 4:35 p. m. and Lyman.

> Mr. Hugh Morgan, of Randolph, was in Calera Monday, and called > Shelby county will hold the democratic convention two weeks from yesterday.

Montevallo Sunday schools held their annual pic nic at Shelby Springs Thursday.

Good roads brings every manufacturer and every farmer in close communication with the market.

A post office has been established at Hillsdale, in this county, with a negro, George R. Glynn, as post master.

The View and the Chronicle have crossed swords, and aresparing over Methodist-Services on the second the possibility and probability of an

Mr. D. R. McMillan, of Colum- Butler. Secretary-F. W. Gist. Treas rule. biana, and a prominent candidate for probate judge, was in to see us yesterday.

The Journal job office has been laws: turning out some very neat work

Before our next issue reaches its readers the Centennial meeting of the Shelby Baptist Association will be in session at this place.

The Montevallo Choral Society gave a concert last night. The JOURNAL returns thanks for an invitation to attend.

Walter Dobbins, the popular Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy.

rain. With seasonable rains from which footed up 111. now on, the crops promise to be

Russell, the photographer, will be here only a few days longer, and those desiring work in his line

The democrats of Columbiana with us in that cause. members. The club has invited the name of the club shall be the Gov. Jones, H. C. Thompkins, L. W. Grant and Cecil Browne to speak to them today.

warranted for 20 years. Fine Elgin or Waltham movement, stem wind and set. Lady's or gent's size. Equal to any $50 watch. To secure agents where we have An extra train run over the L. & N. Road from Birmingham to Mont-"Our jewelers have confessed they don't gomery to carry the Magic city's know how you can furnish such works enthusiastic base ballers. The game at Montgomery will be between Birmingham and Montgom-

> We hear considerable complaint about the unbusinesslike manner in which the tax books have been kept. Officials should always discharge their duty promptly and well, and if they fail the people always have a remedy under the law.

at Shelby Springs Wednesday. As ganize Democratic Clubs, thereby preis very often the case on such occasions, it was a very wet and disa- successful resistance to the efforts of greeable day. But, notwithstand- whatever opposition we may have to ing, the young folks enjoyed them- meet.

notices of that gentleman in Wed nesday's issue, to be getting unusually thick with Jim Page. Look out Clarence, Editor Campbell won't get them shees and invite you to his pic nic.

7:30 P. M.—Sermon, J. W. Mitchell. while here last Monday that the re- negro, whose name is Will Lewis, coalesce in this county. The lead-last week, out of which grew the ers of both crowds were in caucus shooting. Five shots were fired, was housed with them.

> The last issue of the Chilton View was unusually sprightly. After looking it over we concluded that off to a city on the banks of the two mules and a wagon loaded with Diningroom Tables and Safe......

main in Montevallo till the 25th in cost of vehicles. less time than was usual for me. I think it a medicine that should be used by every expectant mother, for should they but try it as I have, they would never again be without it at such times. I am profession—dentistry—they will do well to give him a call. The day of well to give him a call. well to give him a call. The doctor is a graduate in his profession, and has all the latest improved instruments and appliances for practice.

Any merchant or druggist can procure Risley's Philotoken for $1 a bottle.

CHARLES F. RISLEY, Wholesale Druggist, 62 Cortlandt St., New Yerk.

CALERA DEMOCRATS

organize a club with 82 members.

Pursuant to the call of the Beat committee, a number of democrats Aldrich, Miss Weaver, of Columbiana, is met in Calera on last Saturday, for the purpose of organizing a democrate ed. Aldrich presented a team com-

> The meeting was called to order by Col. Jno. P. West, and A. C. Wade was elected temporary chairman, F. W. Gist was elected temporary secre-

> On motion the chair appointed a This committee consisted of J. P. West, D. W. Boyd, L. G. Privett, I. W. Bailey and F. W. Gist.

> The meeting adjourned to Monday

On Monday night the club was called to order by chairman Wade.

The committre on membership reported, and as a result 82 names were

The following offices were elected for permanent organization. President-Dr. J. H. Gunn, Vice Presidents-W. H. Duran, I. W. Baily, W. M. Armstrong, R. L. Crim, J. L. Aldridges S. T. Bristow and G. T.

urer-R. M. Pilgreen.

W. R. Oliver, F. W. Gist and Elbert McLendon.

On motion the following campaign committee was elected:

Steve Bristow, John B. Ozley, G. J. Wright, J. S. Bridges, Elbert McLen-

The club adjourned to meet Friday night at Black's Hall.

FRIDAY NIGHT.

The club met and was called to order by the president. About 40 These conditions complied with we on Wednesday last our commu
Committee on membership reported who will meet us on our grounds.

F. W. Gist, nity was visited with another fine enrolled and the entire roll called,

it was adopted:

Resolved, That the objects and purposes of this club are to work for the and those desiring work in his line are invited to call at once. He is making good pictures.

He is buccess of the democratic party, county, state and national, and that all who have such purposes at heart are respectfully invited to join the club and labor

On motion it was decided that YOUNG MEN'S DEMOCRATIC CLUB OF BEAT 3.

D. W. Boyd, J. E. Mattison and country. Buys a good gold watch by our c'ub system. Our 14-karat gold-filled cases are of Macademized or graded public mittee to solicit voluntary contributions for the expenses of the club.

A thorough and uniform system of Macademized or graded public mittee to solicit voluntary contributions for the expenses of the club.

Columbiana. Montevallo.

with less wear and tear to wagons. in this dist to address us at next meeting.

quested to invite county candidates States courts and in the Supreme court to address the club at any time.

The club adjourned to meet at Wilson's school house next Monday

DEMOCRATIC CLUBS.

To the Democratic Executive Committee of Shelby County.

Feeling convinced that thorough organization is absolutely essential for the mey fail the people always have a advancement and maintainance of the Democratic Party in Shelby county, I earnestly urge the Executive Committeemen of each beat to immediately orbehalf of the principles of our party, and 10:30—Importance and best means of Bible study among our members?

F. M. Woods.

2:30 P. M.—"How may we best guard the doctrine of a regenerate membership?" C. W. O'Hara.

Dury the young folks enjoyed them—
I urge this, believing that if the members of the committee, aided by the democrats of our country, will at once begin the organization of these clubs in their respective beats, when the first Monday in August is patively beats, when the first Monday in August is pative beats, when the first Monday in August is pative by the democratic properties. ward and the time honored principles of the Democratic party vindicated.
J. R. White

Ch'n. Dem. Ex. Com., Shelby Co. Columbiana, Ala., May 2, 1892.

Section Foreman Jake Simons, on was only a slight one.

a quantity of vegetables that one horse and Jersey wagon could easily J. C. Pearson, D. D. S., will re-expense of one horse and difference Lamps for Rooms.....

Remember that Russell the only hotographer will be in Calera only a MARY A. DEDMAN, photographer will be in Calera only a few days longer.

CALERA INNS WITH A SCORE OF 9 TO 0.

Last Saturday a game of ball had been arranged between Calera and

At two a'clock the game was eallposed of men from both Aldrich and Montevallo, while Calera had her recently organized club from her

From the start the game was a beautiful one, Calera's new pitcher, Mr. Talley, striking his men in one, two, three order. At the end of the committee of five to solicit members. sixth inning the score stood 16 to 8 in favor of Calera, when the pitcher gave down and was batted for eleven runs. Mr. Stocking was put in and tied the score. In the first half of the eighth inning, Aldrich made four runs. When they took the field they attempted to substitute a man who was not in uniform, to which Capt. Postelle, of the Ca lera's objected. He was sustained by the umpire, and Aldrich seeing a chance to save defeat refused to play the game. Manager Gist offered them, as a matter of courtesy, to allow the substitute, but the visiting team went off the field. The umpire then gave the game to Calera with a score of 9 to 0 under the Calera's boys have found that The chair appointed the following they can play ball, and are quite committee on constitution and by enthusiastic over the sport. The team as photographed on the ground Saturday are Stocking, c and p, Talley, p, Bristow, 1 f and c, Aldridge, 1b, Holcomb, 2b, Postelle, 3b, D. McLendon, ss, McCauther, and F. McLendon, of Chus Durch and F. McLendon of Chus Durch and F. McLend ley, rf, E. McLendon, cf, Chas. Du-

The following card speaks for it-

CALERA, May 20.

The Calera Base Ball club will play any team in Shelby county which is composed of bona fide residents of the town to which the club belongs registered at the Vanderbilt Sun-members were present, and the will pay the expenses of any club

Mg'r, Calera B. B. Club.

Calera's club is composed of Ca The committee on Constitution lera boys, and they are anxious to offered the following resolution and meet any club under the above conditions.

> The second nines of Calera and Columbiana will play a match game today on the Columbiana grounds. This is second game these teams have played this season, and as Calera won the first it is expected a warm contest will be had today.

Photographer Russell makes the finest photographs ever made in this

PETERS, WILSON & LYMAN, ATTORNEYS AT LAW,

Will practice in the courts of Shelby and adjoining counties, in the United of the state.

HUGH T. CAFFEY,

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON CALERA, ALA.

Mortgage Sale

UNDER AND VIRTUE OF A MORTgage executed to the undersigned by Mary M. Baker and Hope H. Baker, and recorded in Mortgage Book No. 21, page 279, in the office of the Judge of Probate, of Shelby county, I will pro-ceed to sell at public outcry to the high-est bidder, for cash, at Shelby Springs,

The 20th day of May, 1892, within the legal hours of sale, the following described personal property, to-wit Furniture, including beasteads, washstands, tables, chairs and Springs for bedsteads and spring cots,..... 258 00 Pump and Boiler (engine)...... 215 00 Ice House...... 150 00 Lamps in Parlor..... Mattrasses (70)...... 210 00 30 00 30 00 Bath Tubs.....

Iron Safe in Office..... Billiard Table..... Bed Room Sets..... Pastry Table with Marble top.... Office Gong... Baggage Truck. Editor Manning of the Alabama Re-Black-Smith and Farming Tools. 15

MARY A. DEDMAN, Mortgagee.

W. W. QUARLES, Att'y. april30 3t

Mortgagee. W. W. QUARLES, Att'y,

The Calera Journal,

A Weekly Newspaper.

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as The Journal will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of he state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire, this class of information, and

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and hope to please all who read our paper. Liberal commissions will be given to agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at every point in the county.

Quikly , Neatly and Cheaply Done

Printing a and Legal Commercial

THE JOURNAL will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets wil be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

URE BLOOD GOOD HEALTH

Now is the time for everyone who cherishes good health, to pay particular attention to the condition of their blood and its proper circulation. Nearly all diseases that flesh is heir to are caused and agravated by an impure condition of the

THE KING OF BLOOD PURIFIERS Possessing Extraordinary Cleansing Powers

Restoring and Strengthening the whole System, Enriching the Blood producing increased vitality by restoring an impaired digestion and bringing back the bloom of youth to the cheek of the enfeebled and emaciated.

Price, $1.00 per Bottle-6 Bottles for $5.00.

For Sale by All Druggists.

NABERS, MORROW & SINNIGE,

SOLE CONTROLERS,

Birminglam.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION. Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers 12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

ough news service from every important news center in the world.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone is worth many times its subscription price to every farmer. This department is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasure to every family, and the name of the south.

8. It pays more money for its special features and for its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers of the south.

8. It pays more money for its special features and for its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers of the south, and much more than any weekly newspaper in America.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One of a postage stamp. Think of it! Every time a hen lays an egg she pays for one issue of the greatest weekly newspapers of the south.

1. It is the best of all weekly newspapers.

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to the household.

3. It is the best of all weekly newspapers.

4. Aunt Susie," the editress of these departments, is a household word throughout the south.

6. Bill Arp, Plunkett, and Uncle Remus and a host of other special writers are arranged by the year and their iring.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it, Write for information,

THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

Mrs. William Lohr

Dyspepsia C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

rapidly; lost all appetite and ambition, and barely dragged along with my work. During the winter and spring had to have help about my housework. Physicians did not help me and I got more and more discouraged. I suffered from dyspepsia so that I Could Not Eat Vegetables or meat, and at last so that I could not oven use butter on my toast. Used to dip the toast in tea and even then it would distress my stomach. In the spring I hired a girl permanently, my health was so poor. She tried to persuade me to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, as a lady for whom she had worked had been greatcost a dollar to try it."

I Dragged Along Until August, when I began to take Hood's Sar-se parilla. In about a week I felt a little better. ald keep more food on my stomach and grew ronger. I took three bottles, am now perfectly well, have gained 22 pounds, am in excellent health. I owe all this to

Hood's Sarsaparilla and am glad to let you know what it has done for me." Mrs. WILLIAM LOHR, 101 Van Buren Street, Freenort, 111

Hood's Pill's are the best after-dinner Pills, assist digestion, cure headache.

The old saying that "consumption can be cured if taken in time" was poor comfort. It seemed to invite a trial, but to anticipate failure. The other one, not so old, "consumption can be cured," is considered by many false.

Both are true and not true; the first is prudent one cannot begin too early.

The means is careful living. Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil is sometimes an important part of that.

Let us send you a book on CAREFUL LIVING-free.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, 132 South 5th Avenue, New York. Your druggist keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil—all druggists everywhere do. $1.

ADVICE TO WOMEN

If you would protect yourself from Painful, Profuse, Scanty, Suppressed or Irregular Menstruation you must use

BRADFIELD'S FEMALE REGULATOR

CARTERSVILLE, April 26, 1886.
This will certify that two members of my immediate family, after having suffered for years from Mensieural Irregularity, being treated without benefit by physicians, were at length completely cured by one bott of Eradfield's Female Regulator. I effect is truly wonderful. J. W. STRANGE.

Book to "WOMAN" mailed FREE, which contains valuable information on all female diseases. BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO., FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

SHORTHAND.

you need. Send $2 for Phonographic Manual wit pecial instructions—postal note, draft or currency Address John J. Squier, (Ont out this adv.) Box 688, Eureka Springs, Ark.

FROM THE "PACIFIC JOURNAL."

"A great invention has been made by Dr. Tutt. That eminent chemist has produced utt's Hair Dye which imitates nature to perfection; instantaneously and is perfectly harmless." Price, $1. Office, 39 & 41 Park Place, N. Y.

$50.00 A bright, energetic man or woman wanted to take the sole agency for anarticle that is needed in every home and indispensable in every office. SELLS AT SIGHT, in town or country. Strong afterward. A "Bonanza" for the right person. Good for the right person. Good soon taken. Wils at once.

3. W. JONES. Manager. Springfield, Ohio.

FRENCH FEMALE CONVICTS.

Escape Confinement in Prison,

By Marrying Fellow-Convicts They Can French female prisoners and convicts are treated with more kindness, on the whole, than persons of their class in England, says the Boston Courier. The matrons and wardresses are Augustine nuns, whose rule, though firm, is gentler, more merciful, and more steadfastly equitable than that of lay-women could be. The female convicts are allowed the same privilege as the men in the matter of earning money and buying things at the canteen. Those of them who are young also enjoy a privilege not granted to female convicts in other countries-that of having husbands provided for them by the State-only these husbands must be of convicts. Every six months a notice is circulated in the female penitentiaries calling upon all women who feel minded to go out to New Caledonia and be married to make an application to that effect through the Governor. Elderly women are always very prompt in making such applications, but they are not entertained. The matrimonial candidates must' be young and exempt from physical infirmities. Girls under long sentences readily catch at this method of escaping from the intolerable tedium of prison life and the pretty ones are certain to be put on the Governor's list, no matter how frightful may be the crimes for which they have been sentenced. The only moral qualification requisite is to have passed at least two years in the penitentiary. The selected candidates have to sign engagements promising to marry convicts and to settle in New Caledonia for the remainder of their lives. On these conditions the Government transports them, gives them a decent outfit, and a ticket-of-leave when they land at Noumea. Their marriages are so arranged for them by the Governor of the colony, who has a selection of well-behaved convicts ready for them to choose from; and each girl may consult her own fancy within certain limits, for the proportion of marriageable men to women is about three to one. Of course, if the girl positively declares that none of the aspirant bridegrooms submitted to her inspection has met with her approval the Governor can only shrug his shoulders in the usual French way. It has happened more than once that pretty girls have been

They Have Come to Stay.

wooed by warders, free settlers, or time-expired soldiers and sailors, in-only on condition that the female convict's free lover shall place him-man and undertake never to leave

Those of the Russian-Jewish immigrants now in this city who desire to get back to Russia will be unable to do so. The Russian Government recently issued an order that those of its Jewish subjects who left the country would not be permitted to return. The order has already been enforced in a number of instances by the military police upon the Western frontier of Russia.

reason or another, the Czar is exceedngly desirous of excluding the Jewish people from his empire. The exodus of the last few years has but slightly reduced the number of them there. He has still six or seven millions of them to deal with, and they are an important element of the population. The Jews are a strong race; they have held their ground in the world since the days of Abraham; they are more numerous at the close of the nineteenth century than they ever were at any previous period of their his-They live under a hundred flags, representing all forms of government, and are powerful wherever

The Russian consulate in this city has given notice that it cannot aid those of the Russian-Jewish immigrants who desire to return to the country of their birth. Our own advices are that very, very few of them desire to return; and we are assured that these have been less than a score of them in any "crowd" of applicants vet seen at the consulate. - New York Doing the Best She Could. Following is a little story told by Joe Haworth, says the Minneapolis Journal: A littlegirl, not more than 4 years old, the only child of some friends whom Haworth used to visit frequently, was always puzzling her little brain about thunderstormswhat they were and what made those loud noises. One day she asked her mamma about it, and her mamma answered: "Why, darling that loud noise is the voice of God." A few noise is the voice of God." A few days later the little one was playing on the lawn with her dolls, when a dark mass of clouds rolled up from the West, and the muttering of thunder became more frequent and more pronounced. Her mother called to her to come in, and the little one collected her family of dolls in her chubby little arms and started to toddle toward the house. Just as she reached the piazza steps there was a terrific clap of thunder, and she, hastening to get to her mamma, looked up in the sky and said in a hurt tone: "Oh, Dod, 'oo needn't holler so loud; I'se hurwyin' dest as fast as I tan."

Personal Froperly.

Plumduff — Has that charming widow any property?

Ketchum—Yes, considerable.

Plumduff—Real estate or personal?

Ketchum—Personal. She has six children.—Tid-Bits. days later the little one was playing

THE SARATOGA MIRACLE FURTHER INVESTIGATED BY AN EX-PRESS REPORTER.

THE FACTS ALREADY STATED FULLY CON-FIRMED—INTERVIEWS WITH LEADING PHYSICIANS WHO TREATED QUANT -THE MOST MARVELOUS CASE IN THE HISTORY OF MEDI-CAL SCIENCE.

A few weeks ago an article appeared in this paper copied from the Albany, N. Y., Journal, giving the particulars of one of the most remarkable cures of the 19th century. The article was under the heading "A Saratoga Co. Miracle," and excited such widespread comment that another Albany paper-the Express-detailed a reporter to make a thorough investigation of the statements appearing in the Journal's article. The facts as elicited by the Express reporter are given in the following article, which appeared in that paper on April 16th, and makes one of the most interesting stories ever related: few weeks ago there was published in

A few weeks ago there was published in the Albany Evening Journal the story of a most remarkable—indeed so remarkable as to well justify the term "miraculous"—cure of a severe case of locomotor ataxia, or creeping paralysis, simply by the use of Pink Pills for Pale People, and, in complyance with instructions, an Express Reporter has been devoting some time in a critical investigation of the real facts of the case.

The story of the wonderful cure of Charles

The story of the wonderful cure of Charles A. Quant, of Galway, Saratoga County, N. Y., as first told in the Journal, has been copied into hundreds if not thousands been copied into hundreds if not thousands of other daily and weekly newspapers and has created such a sensation throughout the entire country that it was deemed a duty due all the people, and especially the thousands of similarly afflicted, that the statements of the case as made in the Albany Journal, and copied into so many other newspapers should, if true, be verifled; or, if false, exposed as an imposition upon public if false, exposed as an imposition upon public credulity.

The result of the Express reporter's investigations authorizes him in saying that the story of Charles A. Quant's cure of locomotor ataxia by the use of Pink Pills for Pale People, a popular remedy prepared and put up by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Morristown, N. Y., and Brockville, Ontario, IS TRUE, and that all its statements are not only justified but verified by the fuller development of the further facts of the case.

Perhaps the readers of the Express are not all of them fully familiar with the details of this miraculous restoration to health of a man who after weeks and months of treatment by the most skillful doctors in two of the best hospitals in the State of New York—the Roosevelt Hospital in New York—City and St. Peter's Hospital in Albany was dismissed from each as incurable and, because the case was deemed incurable, the man was denied admission into several others to which application was made in his behalf. The story as told by Mr. Quant himself and published in the Albany Journal, is nair. The story as told by Mr. Quant tumself and published in the Albany Journal, is as follows:

"My name is Charles A. Quant; I am 37 years old; I was born in the village of Galway and excepting while traveling on business and a little while in Amsterdam, have spent my whole life here. Up to about eight years ago I had never been sick and was then in perfect health. I was fully six feet tall, weighed 180 pounds and was very strong. For 12 years was traveling salesman for a piauo and organ company, and had to do, or at least did do, a great deal of heavy litting, got my meals very irregularly and slept in enough 'spare beds' in country houses to freeze an ordinary man to death, or at least give him the rheumatism. About eight years ago I began to feel distress in my stomach, and consulted several doctors about it. They all said it was dyspepsia, and for dyspepsia I was treated by various doctors in different places, and took all the patent medicines I could hear of that claimed to be a cure for dyspepsia. But I continued to grow gradually worse for four years. Then I began to have pain in my back and legs and became conscious that my legs were getting weak and my step unstendy, and then I staggered when I walked. having received no benefit from the use of patent medicines, and feeling that I was constantly growing worse, I then, upon advice, began the use of electric belts, pats and all the many different kinds of electric appliances I could hear of, and spent hundreds of dollars for them, but they did me no good. (Here Mr. Quant showed the Journal reporter an electric suit of underwear, for which he paid $124.) In the fall of 1888 the doctors auvised a cuance stead of by convicts. In such cases the Governor can assent to a marriage self in the position of a ticket-of-leave the colony. Love works wonders, and there is no instance on record of a man having refused to comply with these conditions when once he has showed the Journal reporter an electric suit of Russia.

There is no doubt that, for one cason or another, the Czar is exceedingly desirous of excluding the Jewish beople from his empire. The exodust of the last few years has but slightly reduced the number of them there. He has still six or seven millions of them to deal with, and they are an important element of the population. The Jews are a strong race; they have held their ground in the world since the days of Abraham; they are more affected my whole nervous system that I had to give up business. Then I returned to New York and went to the Roosevelt Hospital, where for four months I was treated pital, where for four months I was treated by specialists and they pronounced my case locomotor ataxia and incurable. After I had been under treatment by Prof. Starr and Dr. Ware for tour months, they told me they had done all they could for me. Then I went to the New York Hospital on Firecastly streat, where were experiment that they had done all they could for me. Then I went to the New York Hospital on Firteenth street, where, upon examination, they said I was incurable and would not take me in. At the Presbyterian Hospital they examined me and told me the same thing. In March, 1890, I was taken to St. Peter's Hospital in Albany, where Prof. H. H. Hun frankly told my wife my case was hopeless; that he could do nothing for me and that she had better take me back home and save my money. But I wanted to make a trial of Prof. Hun's famous skill and I remained under his treatment for nine weeks, but secured no benefit. All this time I had been growing worse. I had become entirely paralyzed from my waist down and had partly lost control of my hands. The pain was terrible; my legs felt as though they were freezing and my stomach would not retain food, and I fell away to 120 pounds. In the Albany Hospital they put seventeen big burns on my back one day with red hot irons, and after a few days they put fourteen more burns on and treated me with electricity, but I got worse rather than better; lost control of my bowels and water, and upon advice of the doctor, who said there was no hope for me, I was brought upon advice of the doctor, who said there was no hope for me, I was brought home, where it was thought that death would soon come to relieve me of my sufferings. Last September, while in this helpless and suffering condition, a friend of mine in Hamilton, Ont., called my attention to the statement of one John Marshall, whose case pills at a cost of only $4.00 - see !- I can with the help of a cane only, walk all about the house and yard, can saw wood, and on pleasant days I walk down town. My stomach trouble is gone; I have gained 10 pounds; I feel like a new man, and when the spring opens I expect to be able to renew my organ and piano agency. I cannot speak in too high terms of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, as 1 know they saved my life after all the doctors had given me up as in-

Such is the wonderful story which the Express reporter has succeeded in securing verification of in all its details, from the hos pital records where Mr. Quant was treated pital records where Mr. Quant was treated and from the doctors who had the case in hand and who pronounced him incurable. Let it be remembered that all this hospital treatment was two and three years ago, while his cure, by the use of Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People, has been effected since last September, 1891. So it is beyond a doubt evident that his recovery is wholly due to the use of these famous nills which due to the use of these famous pills which have been found to have made such remark-able cures in this and other cases.

Mr. Quant placed in the hands of the re-porter his card of admission to Roosevelt Hospital, which is here reproduced in further confirmation of his statements:-

ROOSEVELT HOSPITAL OUT-PATIENT. Admitted Lept 16.09 Admitted Cape 10.09

Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

To verify Mr. Quant's statement our reporter a few days ago, (March 31st, 1892,) called on Dr. Allen Starr at his office, No. 22 West Twenty-eighth St., New York city. Dr. Starr is house physician of the Roosevelt hospital, situated corner of Ninth avenue and Fifty-ninth street. In reply to inquiry he said he remembered the case of Mr. Quant very well, and treated him some, but that he was chiefly treated and under the more especial care of Dr. Ware. He said he regarded this case as he did all cases of locomotor ataxia as incurable. In order of locomotor ataxia as incurable. In order that our reporter might get a copy of the history of the case of Mr. Quant from the history of the case of Mr. Quant from the hospital record he very courteously gave him a letter of which the following is a copy:—

Dr. M. A. Starr, 22 West Forty-eighth street, office hours, 9 to 12 a. m., New York, March 31st, 1892.—Dear Dr. Vought: If you have any record of a locomotor ataxia by name of Quant, who says he came to the clinic 3 or 4 years ago, No. 14,037, of the O. D. Dept., Roosevelt, sent to me from Ware, will you let the bearer know. If you have no record send him to Roosevelt Hosp.

Yours, STARR.
By means of this letter access to the records was permitted and a transcript of the history of Mr. Quant's case made from them as follows:

"No. 14,037. Admitted September 16th, 1889, Charles A. Quant, aged 34 years. Born U. S. Married. Hoboken."

"History of the case:—Dyspepsia for past four or five years. About 14 months' partial loss of power and numbness in lower extremities. Girdling sensition about abdomen. (November 29th, 1889, not improved, external strobismus of left eye and dilatation of the left eye.) Some difficulty in passing water at times; no headache but some dizziness; alternate diarrhoea and constipation; partial ptosis past two weeks in left eye.

tion; partial ptosis past two weeks in leteye.

"Ord. R. F. Bi pep. and Soda."

These are the marked symptoms of a severe case of locomotor ataxia. "And Dr.
Starr said a case with such marked symptoms could not be cured and Quant, who was receiving treatment in the out-patient department, was given up as incurable."

"There never was a case recovered in the world," said Dr. Starr. And then said:
"Dr. Ware can tell you more about the case as Quant was under his more personal treatment. I am surprised, he said "that the man is alive, as I thought he must be dead long ago."

Our reporter found Dr. Edward Ware at

Our reporter found Dr. Edward Ware at his office, No. 162 West Ninety-third street, New York. He said: "I have very distinct recollections of the Quant case. It was a very pronounced case. I treated him about eight months. This was in the ear'y summer of 1890. I deemed him incurable, and thought him dead before now. Imagine my surprise when I received a letter from him about two weeks ago telling me that he was alive, was getting well and expected soon to be fully recovered."

"What do you think, doctor, was the cause of his recovery."

be fully recovered."

"What do you think, doctor, was the cause of his recovery."

"That is more than I know. Quant says he has been taking some sort of pills and that they have cured him. At all events, I am glad the poor fellow is getting well, for his was a bad case and he was a great sufferer."

Dr. Theodore R. Tuttle, of 319 West Eighteenth street, to whom our reporter is indebted for assisting courtesies, said of locomotor ataxia; "I have had several cases of this disease in the course of my practice. I will not say that it is incurable, but I never knew of a case to get well; but I will say it is not deemed curable by any remedies known to the medical profession."

After this successful and confirmatory investigation in New York, our reporter, Saturday, April 2d, 1892, visited St. Peter's Hospital, in Albany, corner of Albany and Ferry streets. He had a courteous reception by Sister Mary Philomena, the sister superior of St. Peter's Hospital, and when told of the object of his visit, said she remembered the case of poor Mr. Quant very distinctly. Said she: "It was a very distressing case and excited my sympathies much. Poor fellow, he couldn't be cured and had to go home in a terrible condition of helplessness and suffering." The house physician, on consulting the records of St. Peter's Hospital, said he found only that Charles A. Quant entered the hospital March 14th, 1890, was treated by Dr. Henry Hun, assisted by Dr. Van Derveer, who was then, 1890, at the head of the hospital, and that his case being deemed not possible of cure, he left the hospital and was taken to his home, as he supposed to die.

Such is the full history of this most remarkable case of successful recovery from a heavetefore supposed to die.

supposed to die.

Such is the full history of this most remarkable case of successful recovery from a heretofore supposed incurable disease, and after all the doctors had given him up, by the simple use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pilis for Pale People. Truly it is an interesting story of a most miraculous cure of a dreadful. story of a most miraculous cure of a dreadful disease by the simple use of this popular remedy.

A further investigation revealed the fact that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are not a patent medicine in the sense in which that term is generally understood, but are a scientific preparation successfully used in general practice for many years before being offered to the public generally. They contain in a condensed form all the elements necessary to give nearly life and rickness to the blood and condensed form all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, that tired feeling resulting from nervous prostration; all diseases depending upon vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularito females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood and restore the glow of health to pale or sallow cheeks. In the case of men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising whatever nature.

On urther inquiry the writer found that these pills are manufactured by the Dr. Willisms Medicine Company, Brockville, Ontario, and Morristown, N. Y., and are sold in boxes (never in loose form by the dozen or hundred) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams Medicine Company, from either address. The price at which these pills are sold makes a course of treatment comparatively inexpensive as compared with other remedies or medical treatment.

Frank J. Cheney makes oath that he is the senior partner of the firm of F. J. Cheney & Co., doing business in the City of Toiedo, County and State aforesaid, and that said firm will pay the sum of $100 for each and every case of catarrh that cannot be cured by the use of Hall's Charrh Cure.

Frank J. Cheney.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence, this 6th day of December, A. D., 2826.

A. W. GLEASON,

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Send for testimonials, free.

F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O.

Sold by Drugglets, 75c.

A Brillian.

A Brilliant Discovery in Dematelogy. A Brilliant Discovery in Demartelogy. It is said that superfluous hair can be permanently removed without pain. An interesting and valuable discovery has recently been made by John H. Woodbury, of 125 West 42d street, New York City. It is a romedy for the permanent removal of superfluous hair, consisting of a fluid which is applied to the hair follicle by means of an electric needle. It is designed to be used by patients at their homes, and is said to be fully as effectual as electricity. Full particulars in reference to this valuable remedy are found in a little book of 128 pages, which is sent to any address for 10 cents on application to the discovere.

To be a successful liar one must possess a quick brain, a good memory and an oily

Brown's Iron Bitters cures Dyspepsia, Malaria, Biliousness and General Debility. Gives Strength, aids Digestion, tones the nerves—creates appetite. The best tonic for Nursing Mothers, weak women and children.

Shakespeare evididently didn't take into account the price of drugs when he wrote, "Throw physic to the dogs!"

When Traveling

Whether on pleasure bent, or business, take on every trip a bottle of Syrup of Figs, as it acts most pleasantly and effectively on the kidneys, liver and bowels, preventing fevers, headaches and other forms of sickness. For sale in 50 cents and $1 bottles by all leading

There is good reason for thinking that the Indian is a failure.

IF your Back Aches, or you are all wors out, cood for nothing, it is general debility. Brown's Iron Bitters will cure you, make you strong, cleanse your liver, and give a good appetite—tones the nerves.

Bad habits flourish where beans won't

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD? These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, BEAUTIFULLITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE.

Mr. A. B. Laforme, Boston, Mass., says: "I ordered and distributed one dozen large bottles Bradycrotine among my friends afflicted with headache, and in every case it has afforded almost instantaneous relief." Fifty cents.

The worst cases of female weakness readily yield to Dr. Swan's Pastiles. Samples free. Dr. Swan, Beaver Dam, Wis.

lr you will he truly happy keep your blood pure, your liver from growing torpid by using Beecham's Pills. 25 cents a box.

If afflicted with sore eyes use Dr. IsaacThompson's Eye-water. Druggists sell at 25c a bottle A good time to ask a man for a loan or other avor is just after he has had a good feed.

COPYRIGHT 189

The best thing to do is this: when you're suffering from Sick or Bilious Headaches, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, or any derangement of the Liver, Stomach, or Bowels, get something that relieves promptly and cures permanently. Don't shock the system with the ordinary pills—get Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

They're the smallest, for one thing (but that's a great thing), and the easiest to take.

They're the best, for they work in Nature's own way-mildly and gently, but thoroughly and effectively.

They're the cheapest, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned. You pay only for the good you get.

What more can you ask? But don't get something that the dealer says is "just as good." It may be better for him, but it's pretty certain to be worse for you.

"August Flower"

"What is August Flower for?" As easily answered as asked. It is for Dyspepsia. It is a special remedy for the Stomach and Liver.-Nothing more than this. We believe August Flower cures Dyspepsia. We know it will. We have reasons for knowing it. To-day it has an honored place in every town and country store, possesses one of the largest manufacturing plants in the country, and sells everywhere. The reason is simple. It does one thing, and does it right. It cures dyspepsia@

Catarrh--Remove the Cause.

I was afflicted from infancy with Catarrh, and for ten years with eruptions on my face. I was attended by the best physicians, and used a number of Blood remedies with no permanent relief. MY LIFE BECAME A BURDEN TO ME, for my case was declared incurable. I saw S. S. S. advertised, and took eight bottles, which cured me entirely, and I feel like a new person.—MISS JOSIE OWEN, Montpelier, Ohio.

I was the victim of the worst case of Catarrh that I ever heard of. I was entirely deaf in one ear, and all the inside of my nose, including part of the bone, sloughed off.
No sort of treatment benefited me, and physicians said "I would never be any better." As a last resort I took Swift's Specific, and it entirely cured me and restored my hearing. have been well for years, with no sign of return of the disease.—Mrs. Josephine Polhill, Due West, S. C. S. S. S. cures Catarrh, like it does other Blood diseases, by eliminating the poison which causes it. Treatise on Blood and Skin mailed free.

SWIFT SPECIFIC COMPANY, ATLANTA, GA.

DOUGLAS $3.99 SHOE

$4.00 Hand-Sewed Welt Shos. $3,50 Police and $2.50 Extra Value Calf Shoe. $2.25 Working-man's Shoe. $2.00 Goodwear

For LADIES. 53.00 Hand-$2.50 Best Dongola $2.00 Calf and Done Dongola. $1.75 MISSES. For BOYS' & YOUTH'S. *2 & *1.75

SCHOOL SHOES.

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTES. IT IS A DUTY you owe to yourself and your family, during these hard times, to get the most value for your money. You can economize in your footwear if you purchase W. L. Douglas' Shoes, which, without question, represent a greater value for the money than any other makes.

W.L. DOUCLAS' name and the price is stamped on the bottom of each shoe, which protects the consumer against high prices and inferior shoes. Beware of dealers who acknowledge the superiority of W. L. Douglas' Shoes by attempting to substitute other makes for them. Such substitutions are fraudulent, and subject to prosecution by law, for obtaining money under false pretences. W. L. DOUGLAS, Brockton, Mass.

If not for sale in your place send direct to Factory, stating kind, size and width wanted. Postage free. AGENTS WANTED. Will give exclusive sale to show dewlers where I have no agent and advertise them free in local paper.

ED PUGS -Will you drive out the BED BUGS or will the Bed Bugs or will the Bed Bugs or will be bed Bugs of the Bugs DUTCHER'S DEAD SHOT es a leaf; is a sure preventive of return, and omoter of "Sleep in Peace." Price 25 Cents, at stores or by mall.
FRED'K DUTCHER & SONS,
St. Albans, Vt.

CATARRH

E. T. Hazeltine, Warren, Pa.

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Me.

We furnish five H. P. Upright was and Steel Boller for $100 muplete. Other sizes in propo-m. Andress Amstrone Baos., Springfield, Oslo-

As You Go Through Life. Don't look for the flaws as you go through life; And even when you find them It is wise and kind to be somewhat blind And look for the virtue behind them. For the cloudiest night has a hint of light Somewhere to its shadows hiding; It is better by the to hunt for a star

Than the spot, on the sun abiding.

The current of life runs ever away To the bosom of God's great ocean. Don't set your force 'gainst the river's course.

And think to alter its motion. Don't waste a curse on the universe-Don't butt at the storm with your puny forni-

But bend and let it go o'er you. The world will never adjust itself To suit your whims to the letter, Some things must go wrong your whole life-

And the sooner you know it the better. It is folly to tight with the infinite, And go under at last in the wrestle. The wisest man shapes into God's plan, As the water shapes into a vessel.

—[Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in the Weekly.

GOLD-HEELED SHOES.

BY GEORGE I. PUTNAM.

"A million a minute! Gold heels on my shoes!" A tall spare woman bobbed up from the blueberry patch and looked around half guiltily, then drew a reassured breath, for no one was within ear-shot. "True as I stand here," she said, addressing a mingled multitude of ferns, rocks and berry bushes, "some day I'll do it. And when I'm worth a million a minute, I'll have gold heels to my shoes."

She shut her lips tightly, defying more thoughts to escape; but even then the line of her mouth was pleasant. She knelt and industriously stripped the low bushes, holding her pail beneath with an experienced hand to catch the dropping berries. She had 15 quarts to deliver at sunset, and the terms of her contract left no time for monologue.

This was Abby-"Miss" Abby to the children, "Aunt" Abby among the sick, simply Abby to ordinary adults. People did not trouble themselves about her surname. They did not even think much about her, but accepted her as their just due from a friendly Providence. Children discovered her living in a little house in the edge of Pomfret, and spoke of Miss Abby as an acquisition. Then some sick man, yearning for herb remedies, was gratified by her and thereafter declared Aunt Abby had saved his life. The wise-those who moiled with an eye single to the inrolling dollar-began by mistrusting her sincerity, and ended by questioning her mental balance. They did not perceive how one could live by works non-resultant in a stipulated wage.

Abby moved towards a competency as steadfastly as did the wise, but by a different path, pleasanter and as direct. There were happy, kindly faces along her way. And if they did not always comprehend her, they at least nodded and smiled encouragingly as she passed. To such a one, brightening some dark turn of the path, she

"You wait till I get my gold-heeled shoes. Then I can smile for you."

"Real gold, Abby?" inquired the practical one.

"Yes, indeed. Why not? When you're worth a million a minute, you can do that sort of thing."

At sunset she walked, fatigued, to the village store, and delivered the berries.

"And here's your pay," said the storekeeper. "Eight cents a quart, fifteen quarts, dollar twenty. What you going to do with so much money, Abby?" with an expectant oblique glance for the benefit of some dozen

"It all goes towards those goldheeled shoes," said Abby, cheerily. Then the loungers followed the storekeeper in a laugh.

"Abby's all right," said he, after she went out. "You don't have to measure her berries. But .she's a little queer. A fel ow has to laugh at her now and again."

Abby ploughed her way homealong the dusty July road. "One twenty, one twenty," she repeated. "There's a day's work for you. There's another peg in your gold-heeled shoes. They're coming, coming."

body, by this alchemic formula. "Gold-heeled shoes" to the storekeeper diversion. To Abby the words were all her money from the bank. The mere quantative signs.

The widow Barker, with her wayward son Jim, were Abby's nearest neighbors. Barker pere had served in the navy. After his death a small pension came regularly, affording the to pay for them, didn't it?" widow a meagre living. It was her sole support, for Jim was a thorn. Upright mothers quoted him to children as a warning. He even pricked Abby until she was half minded to report his lapses to his mother, when herself roundly.

"Gold shoes, indeed! I don't deserve leather. As if that woman didn't have trouble enough without its being piled on free! Providence has been too good to me; there's nobody to mourn over; nobody to worry over. A little cross like this will do me good."

Abby had intended to stop for a moment's chat with the widow, but the house appeared deserted, and she

"It's pension day," she thought. "I know where she is. Upstairs crying for him that's gone. Blue-blue as she can be. H'm! I'm blessed that my past don't sorrow me, nor my future either. There it is now! Million a minute! Gold-heeled shoes! Keep it up!"

Abby spoke of wealth with rich exaggeration. Her ideal independence was simply freedom from debt. She had one desire that ruled her life -and that, to possess a home. The knowledge that her landlord might, on a lapse of payment, turn her out, rode her as a sense of inferiority. Her material standing seemed as insecure as her credit. But to own the ground she walked on, that was to wear goldheeled shoes. Every step left the impress of wealth's equality. All her efforts, then, were directed to the reduction of the insufferable mortgage that threatened her home.

She labored hard in every channel known to her countrywomen. She picked and sold berries. She gathered and cured sweet-flag. She had a patch of garden with many herbs in it, and others she gathered wild and sold in bunches for the druggists and medicine-makers. She stitched boots when that seldom work offered. She knit and sewed. She did not know an idle moment the year round.

By years of patient toil Abby had reduced the amount of the mortgage to one hundred dollars. And one night, when she looked at her bankbook and counted the day's receipts, she found enough to cancel the debt. It was a matter of verification only, for she knew to a cent the state of her Pardonably she wept a little that her work was accomplished. The goal was reached she had set, and beyond which she had not before looked. Now she was brought face to face with blankness. Whither should she wander through it, and what should she strive for? She asked herself these questions, for it was borne in upon her that the old desire was a thing of the past, being gratified, and that she must discover a new one. Through anticipation, her hope had mirrored brightly, but now she found its reverse side dull; and with the disappointment mingled a bitter surprise that it was so.

The widow broke in upon this conjured-up sadness with real living sorrow of her own. She was crying, and all Abby's heart-tenderness went out to her at once, for the widow was a proud little woman, and had kept her griefs at home until now, fairly driveh for consolation to Abby's kindly arms. And there she lay and sobbed her story-how Jim had been placed under bonds and had broken them, and could not pay and must go away to some prison. Little by little she laid bare the trial of desolate years, and Abby listened sympathetically.

"Jim could get away," said the widow, "he would go into the navy, as his father did. Jim always wanted to, but I couldn't let him go; he is all I have. He can do nothing else, and I would not let him go. I was so selfish-I kept him against his leaning-and now he must go to prison. It's a judgment on me."

And Abby consoled her distress and She invigorated herself, mind and lulled her to rest as gently as she would a grieving child.

and his ilk was a vagary for their white rode to the village, and drew several gas wells.

cashier joked her upon extravagance. "Going to buy gold-heeled shoes now, Abby?" She looked up smiling. "Yes, my gold-heeled shoes. Took a long time

"I wish we might all get them if it would make us look as happy as you do now," said he.

Abby marched from the bank into the presence of the town officials sitting on Jim Barker's case. The conshe would fall in a temper and rate stable was there, ready to conduct him to the state reformatory.

"What will it cost to get Jim off?" she demanded.

"One hundred dollars," said the Abby counted the amount on the table, while all the room stared. 'Come, Jim,' said she.

Jim came from his constable-guarded corner, and followed her out. He was amazed. His malodorus coreer had not brought him many acts of kindness at the towns-people's hands. "What does this mean, Miss Abby?" he said, huskily.

She smiled at him reassuringly. "Just this, Jim-gold-beeled shoes. And, Jim, go home now, and say good-bye to your mother. Then be a good sailor-and a man."

Quickly he stood bareheaded. "Before God, I'll try," he said.

That night the widow again lay in Abby's arms. "Jim's gone; he told me all," she whispered. "How could you? Abby, Abby, here I've lived beside you for years, and I never knew

"I haven't changed a speck," said Abby, in affected grimness, her face turned away.

"Abby, don't turn away; you've saved Jim. You've saved me. And think what it cost! Oh, Abby, your gold-heeled shoes!"

"There, don't mind. Leather is good enough the rest of the way."

"I can never pay you back, Abby, but while I have a crust - Oh, Abby, I can't tell you all I think," she cried, for the event bore a poetic fancy into her plain-furnished mind. "But I do believe your gold-heeled shoes are laying up for you to walk the streets of Paradise."]-Harper's Weekly.

Not so Long, but Quite as Wide.

It is customary for railroads to issue annual passes to the highest officials of other railroads in the same section of the country. A while ago the president of a little lumber railroad in Minnesota—a line only four miles long and built solely for the transportation of lumber-called at the general office of the Great Northern Railway at St. Paul, presented his card and said that he had issued an annual pass to President James Hill of the Great Northern and would like a similar courtesy. The office employes were thunderstruck by this display of nerve and politely refused to honor the request. The caller grew indignant and demanded to see "Jim" Hill personally. Being ushered into President Hill's private office he again stated his case and asked for an annual pass.

"But, my dear sir, your road is not a passenger line, and a pass over it is worthless," said Mr. Hill.

"I know it," replied the insistent caller, "but it is customary to honor requests for courtesies. We railroad magnates cannot afford to discriminate against each other, you know. It's a matter of regular form-discipline. It's part of the railway business, you see, and we ought not to violate any of the regular usuages of reputable lines. See?"

"Yes-perhaps; but don't you see that you have no real railroad lines? Your is only a 'jay' freight line about four miles long, beginning at a lumber camp and ending the Lord only knows where.

"Well, Mr. Hill, I'm willing to ad. mit that my road isn't as long as yours; I never claimed it was. But my road is just as wide as yours, sir, and I want you to keep that fact in view. Don't you forget it, sir,"

"By George! I never thought of that," cried Hill, and a minute later the caller left the office with an annual pass over the entire Great Northern system .- [Chicago Mail.

Hunker-What a talker Miss Trotter is! Spatts-She comes by her loqua-The next day Abby strode down the city very naturally. Her father owns DIRT ROADS.

Best Methods of Maintaining Country Thoroughfares.

Proper Drainage is the Essential Feature of Improvement.

By this term (dirt roads) is meant those roads which are formed of the natural soil found in the line of the roadway. They are so common as to be almost and especially on the lines of crossroads which connect the main highways. Dirt roads, at their best, are greatly inferior to Macadam and Telford roads in every essential of a good highway; in durability, cost of maintenance, drainage, tractive qualities, and, in many locations, in point of economy also. But the dirt road is here, and the public hand must be directed to its treatment. The first and most important thing necessary for the a seat in a corner, and after a few blush? Annette-Please, mum, she's maintenance of a dirt road may be words had passed between them they stated in a single word-drainage. It began singing a hymn. She had a is the one thing that can neither be dispensed with nor neglected. Most dirt is soluble and is easily displaced under the softening influence of rain, and this process is hastened in the dirt | by a full choir, accompanied by the road by the passing of heavy wagons strains of a grand organ, but you over the wet surface. On every mile of roadway within the United States there falls each year an average of 27,000 tons of water-a heavy, limpid and there was a quaver in the old fluid, always directing itself to the man's bass which saddened you. They hers. nearest outlet and seeking the lowest sang low and soft, and they had not level. Water is hard to confine and finished a verse when half of us were boy, a very bright little boy, who easy to release, and yet, through sheer neglect of the simplest principles of drainage, water is the most active destroyer of our country roads.

dirt road we should first consider the material of which the roadway is composed. If a heavy, viscous clay predominates, the ordinary sideditches should be of good depth, and will even then, in many cases, be inadequate for thorough drainage without the addition of a centre-drain running midway between, and parallel with, the side-ditches. The centredrain should of course be filled with loose irregular boulders, cobblestones, broken bricks, or similar filling, covering a line of tiles or fascines with the side-ditches by cross-drains carrying the water outward from the centre-drain at proper intervals along the length of the roadway. Centredrains, though often greatly needed for the improvement of country roads, are not in common use. They add somewhat to the cost of the roadway, but, in most cases, considerably more to its value, and should be employed in all situations where sand or gravel cannot be had to relieve the heaviness and water-holding properties of the clay. If gravel, sand, or other porous material can be conveniently or cheaply obtained, the centre and cross-drains may often be dispensed with by mixing the gravel or sand in plentiful quantities with the clay roadway, so as to insure as nearly as possible a porous and selfdraining surface layer, which should not be less than ten inches in depth, and should be laid on the rounded or sloped sub-soil so as to insure easy drainage into the side-ditches.

In locations where the prevailing material is of a loose, sandy nature, the difficulties of drainage are more easily overcome, and side-ditches, if found neceasary at all, may be made of moderate depth and left open, withont incurring risks and dangers of travel that prevail where the deeper open ditches are use for draining heavier soils. But, on the other hand. the light and shifting nature of sandy road-material destroys its value as a surface layer for an earth roadway, and its deficiency in this respect is most easily remedied by the addition of a stronger and more tenacious substance, such as stiff clay. When mixed with sand in proper proportions (which in each case depend upon the nature of the clay and sand used, and which can best be determined by experiment), this composition affords many advantages which make it superior to a roadway composed of either sand or clay when used alone. The sand serves to quicken the drainage and to destroy the sticky, tenacious qualities of the clay. | Courier.

while the clay supplies the quality of cohesion in the substance of the road- We soothe the child for some withholden surface, counteracting the shifting qualities of the sand, and making the roadway more easily packed and rolled, and more likely to retain its proper grade and slope .- [Century

As the Flame of the Candle.

One who looked the crowd over as we waited for the train would not, writes M. Quad in the New York Sun, have set us down as hard hearted and our only roads outside of town and indifferent; but so we proved to be, as city limits, and will for many years a young girl not over 13 years of age, be used largely in country districts, leading an old man who was stone blind and very feeble, passed slowly around the room soliciting alms-They got a penny here and there, but and yet people are all the time talking even those coins seemed to be given against them. grudgingly, and those who gave nothing consoled themselves with the rich lumberman's daughter, see that reflection that the pair were frauds you look spruce. and really needed no financial assist-

When they had made the tour of the room the girl led the old man to wonderful voice for a child, clear and sweet, and his was a deep bass. The hymn was that entitled "Nearer, My God, to Thee." You have heard it never listened so intently as we did standing up to see them better.

at her feet. The sightless eyes of the mother asked. "Because it would be old man-her father-were raised to such a joke on the lion. He would In providing for the drainage of a the ceiling, and over his wrinkled face think I was inside of him and I should crept a glad smile as they finished the be up in heaven." chorus:

Nearer, my God, to Thee-Nearer to Thee.

The hymn was not finished when every man began feeling for a contriwere no longer frauds and every one was glad to give something. Two or deaf as a post. three were ready to move about to take up a collection, but they waited for the end of the hymn. When it came to the chorus of the last verse the old man was singing bravely. Half way through his voice suddenly choked and the last two lines were sung by the girl alone and died away in a sob and a cry. All of us saw the old man's head drop forward and his body lurch. He would have fallen to the floor had not the girl seized and held him up. A dozen of us were there in a moment, but we were too late. The old man's life had gone out as you breathe upon the flame of a candle and on his ashen lips still trembled the sacred notes of the re-

Nearer to Thee!

A Remedy That Never Failed.

His history is briefly told. After sevreal days of thought he to try it.

He made haste to insert an advertisement something like the following in several country weeklies:

"Sure way to kill potato bugs; send twenty 2-cent postage stamps to X. Y. Z. -, for a recipe that cannot fail.

Then he hired a dray to bring his mail from the postoffice, and had 10,-000 of his recipes printed. Inside of the result I do not know, had I not two weeks something like 6000 or 7000 heard in the distance the ring of axfarmers had contributed twenty 2-cent blows, and seen the spectral smok-

Then several hundred of them bought clubs and railroad tickets and his future home. I soon came upon started out to interview the advertiser. three stalwart young men who were At his office they were informed that hewing at a giant log; two horses he had left to attend to some business in Europe, and he was not expected back. All he had left was a package of 3000 or 4000 slips of paper, on which were printed the following:

"Put your bug on a shingle. Then hit it with another shingle."-[Chicago Tribune.

Plenty In It.

Bulfinch-How is that little mining scheme of yours getting along? Any money in it?

Wooden-Any money in it! Well, I should say so! All of mine, all of my wife's, and about fifty thousand which the traveler through colonial that I got from my friends.—[Boston

At Night-Time.

Till sweet eyes smile that were fain to

Tomorrow-only wait until tomorrow-After you sleep.

So we are soothed with solemn dreams of heaven, When earthly days no further solace keep; Fiope tells us there shall be a happy mor-

After we sleep. -[Anne Reeve Aldrich, in Picayune.

HUMOROUS.

Music seems to be organic with

Telephones are a great convenience,

If you pine to be introduced to a Friend-Is your new play a go?

Dramatist (sadly) - Yes, but I had hoped it would be a stay. Boston Mother-Why does Priscilla studying improper fractions. He-Upon my word, I think I've gone through every experience except hanging. She-Cheer up! there's a chance for that yet. Papa-Johnnie, I heard that you were a bad boy at school today. Did you break some rule and the teacher have to there. There was a plaint in that whip you? Johnnie-No, papa, 1 girl's voice which touched a chord, didn't break any rule, but the teacher she hit me so hard that she broke

He must have been a very bright said to his mother: "I wish a lion The girl kept her eyes on the floor would eat me up." "Why?" the

Mrs. Sanso-I trust that we shall see a great deal of your friend when he comes to the city. My daughter will be back from the country by the time he comes. She's a wonderful monnaies. It was different now. They pianist, you know. Mr. Rodd-Oh, my friend won't mind that. He is as

> The world is like a crowded 'bus; A few good men perhaps ! May find a seat, but most of us Must hang on by the straps.

Lost in the Australian Woods.

At first sight it would seem impossible for one to lose himself in these sparse, open woods, wherein long avenues open and through whose feathery gum trees the sky can always be seen. I can vouch by personal experience, however, that nothing is more deceptive than the apparent security of the Australian bush. All the trees are alike and afford no landmarks; the monotonous gray color of the trees and leaves is without accent or change for miles and miles, and the hazy atmosphere that fills the place from decaying vegetation and the sweating balsam of the eucalyptus add to the unsubstantial effect of one's surroundings. Straying a little out discovered a sure way to make money, of the beaten track through a very and, like other men, he was in a hurry open stretch of woods, in chase of a flock of cockatoos, I once became in five minutes so bewildered and turned about as to plunge every moment into deeper labyrinths, while confident that I was returning to the road.

It was a cloudy day and night was coming on as I wandered for half an hour amid new perplexities and in an awful silence. What might have been stamps each for the printed recipes. 3 | carling up, which show the work of the squatter in cutting a clearing for were hobbled in a grass plot near by, and before a canvas-covered wagon a woman was cooking the evening meal over a brush fire.

Apprised of my predicament, one of the men left his work to set me right, turned in the direction which I thought to be less likely to be the right one, and in five minutes put me in the road to the station from which I had set out. My experience had been a mild one and with a fortunate issue, but it gave me an insight into the causes of some of the mental wrecks wilds so often encounters .- [New York Times.

CALERA SATURDAY, MAY 28.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

McMillan as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject for the benefit and education of his to the action of the democratic county friends who have strayed off after county convention.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic and conservative party.

JOHN A. CAMPBELL.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for representative in the General Assembly of Alabama, subject to the action of the Democratic County Convention.

GORDON DUBOSE.

The friends of Col. Jno. P. West announce him as a candidate for the Lower House of the Legislature. Subject to the action of the Democratic convention born in 1848, died in 1852. The Southern States Right the action of the Democratic convention born in 1852 and the same of Shelby county.

The friends of D. Y. Wyatt' authorize us to announce him as a candidate for County Superintendent of Education of Shelby county, subject to action of the born 1872, died the same year. democratic convention.

We are authorized to announce J. T.

SLAUGHTER as a candidate for the office of Sheriff of Shelby county subject to the action of the democratic convention. action of the democratic convention.

JUDICIAL CONVENTION.

Pursuant to instructions of the democratic executive committee of 1875 and died in 1880. the 7th judicial circuit, which met at Talladega on February 29, 1892, I tional party, was born in 1876 and has been dying a slow death ever vention to nominate a candidate for since. judge of said circuit will meet at Talladega on Wednesday, June 15, 1878 and died the same year. 1892, at 10 o'clock, a. m. The foldowing compose the circuit:

Cleburne..... 6 Shelby14 St. Clair 8 Talladega 16 "T. S. PLOWMAN, Chairman.

MR. BROWNE, in his speech Monday night, spoke a parable when he said that of five hundred democrats two hundred and fifty-one should rule. What they say in the primary caucus should be the law for the made myself very scarce and allowwhole five hundred.

Adams was up one day last week to Calera is a pretty smoothe little give the editor a whipping, but was place in most things, I think that prevented from doing so. We have an Anti-poke-your-nose-into-otherheard the gentleman threaten to do people's-business Society would find all sorts of desperate things, but he a splendid field for operation. I is always prevented. is always prevented.

of the independent politician is that than after our own. I have always the majority should rule. This is well met by the fact that one hunwell met by the fact that one hunbut and twenty five white men be dred and twenty-five white men be- world for some folks to discover long to the democratic club in this that a certain young man stays out Jones or Forney in 1890 are entitled or it will be sent to any address by prebeat. These are a majority of the late at night, or that a certain white men in this beat, and yet who are not willing this young man drinks entirely too have, through misapprehension of there are those who are not willing much or that one plays cards; that to abide their action at the beat this young lady is a little too gay meeting. Independentism means or that one has not a due regard for personal dissatisfaction and indi- the proprieties. A few of these vidual prejudice, for which there is knowing people keep the rest well posted, so well that there should be ic party at heart, to participate in never good cause.

has one hundred and twenty five the best methods of running their it now behooves us to lay aside all highest bidder, on members. There are at least that own personal affairs, for in some bickerings and join hands, standing Monday, 6th day of June, 1892, many democrats in this beat who way or other these profligate ones will support the nominces of the for whom they seem so much concounty convention. They will be themselves. in the beat meating to-day to see that they and their wishes are fairly represented, and what a majori- dog which his best girl wanted. ty of them, in conjunction with oth- He said that who got the dog must. ers who participate, do in that take him. She said she wished the OF THE SHELBY BAPTIST ASSOCIATION. meeting will receive the support of all. This is the democratic theory marks were a compliment to him or of acquiescence in the views of to the dog. I am sure I can't say, tha majority, and the result of it but at any rate he was fortunate in will be harmony, peace, good will, having a means of making himself cises, 30 minutes. C. W. O'Hara. which only assures success.

charges have been spring on Mr.

Kolb at the last moment. He has

We are told that it is ordained of long been regarded as posing the Most High. It is an estate for a possible bolt, and now it is of uncertain results, and yet it may given out that he has written a let- be entered with bright hopes. It ter boldly declaring that he is in is expected to lead to a life of happy the race until August. In writing days, but it may bring disappoint-ment and sorrow. Only the brave this letter it seems that he did so can enter therein, and only the upon the usual presumption that faithful can make it a success. as his confidante was an alliance- is the highest mission of humanity, man he was in full sympathy with and well performed makes life more man he was in full sympathy with nobly lived. Here's to all them all his methods. But his confidence that seek its mysteries to unfold. was betrayed and his intention ex. "May they live long and been happosed. It will be well for the dem- py. ocratic party that Mr. Kolb bolt its convention, for only that will draw the line that is to rid the PHYSICIAN & SURGEON party of that element which is continually stirring up discord.

THE CALERA JOURNAL THIRD PARTY BIRTHS AND DEATHS.

An editor way over in the state of Texas has been looking over some political histories and as a result of his researches finds some facts in reference to the birth and death of We are authorized to announce D. R. third parties, which he publishes the People's party of which so We are authorized to announce John S. Leeper as a candidate for the office of Probate Judge of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county footing in this state we republish footing in this state, we republish We are authorized to announce Wm.
R. A. Milner as a candidate for the office of Circuit Clerk of Shelby county, subject to the action of the democratic county convention. movement may be benefitted:

The Clinton Democracy born 1812 and died the same year.

The anti-Masonic party, born in 1826 and though men as Seward, Filmore, Weed, Clay and Wirt were identified with it died in 1832.

The Liberty party, born in 1840,

The Free Soil or Abolition party,

The Southern States Right party born in 1852 and the same year.

The American or Know Nothing party, born in 1853, died in 1860. The Liberal Republican party,

The Temperance party's birth and American National party born in 1875 and died in 1876. The Greenback party was born in

The Prohibition party, as a Nahas been dying a slow death ever

The National party was born in

The National Liberty party breathed its first and last breath in

The Greenback Labor party was born in 1882 and died so quietly that the exact time of its demise is not known.

Since 1882 probably a dozen different parties, all more or less tinctured with communism or socialism, have flourished for short times.

GOSSIP OF THE CRITIC.

Well, for several weeks I have ed others to do the gossiping. The business has not lacked for at-THE Chronicle says that Mr. tention during my absence. While convince me that some of us spend One of the stereotyped arguments more time looking after otheraffairs

A friend of mine once had a fine something of a necessity.

Some very great and damaging The two or three marriages that

HUGH T. CAFFEY,

CALERA, ALA.

feb12-1y.

The Best Place to Secure a Business Education is at the

NEW YORK

OLLEGE COMMERCE

BIRNING HAM. ALA

Send for Circular,

M. M. FIELDS, Vice President

LEONARD LIPPMAN, President.

G. F. HART, Secretary and Treasurer.

A CALL

As the time for holding the county democratic convention is rapidly approaching, I deem it proper, as chairman of the executive committee to urge all the democrats of the county to attend the beat meetings county to attend the beat meetings on May 28th and participate in the selection of delegates to the county convention to be held on June 3rd. I especially desire to call your attention to the following resolution of our county executive committee, prescribing the eligibility of partici pants in the beat meetings, which is as follows:

Resolved, That any white person who voted the democratic ticket in the last state and federal elections, or who having been prevented from or failing to vote in said elections and has heretofore habitually voted the democratic ticket; any who have become of age since the last election and are in accord with and intend to support the nominees of the party, will be entitled to participate in the beat meetings, and in the county convention as delegates.

From the above resolution, facts, followed opposing committees except those who voted for Butler.

This being the case I earnestly urge all those who have the interno room for them to err. I would the beat meetings and county con-THE Democratic Club of Calera as one hundred and twenty five the confidence of the control of th shoulder to shoulder, and work in unison for a solid and reunited demonstrate a solid and reunited legal hours of sale, the following dedemocratic party in Shelby county. J. R. WHITE, Chair'n. Dem. Ex. Com.

CENTENNIAL MEETING

To be held with Calera Baptist Church May FRIDAY 10 A. M.—Devotional Exer-

10:30-Importance and best means of Bible study among our members? F. M. Woods.

7:30—Sermon, Dr. E. B. Teague. SATURDAY 9 A. M .- "Devotional exercises 30 minutes! N.T. Lucas.

9:30—Centennial movement explained. Dr. W. C. Cleveland. 2:30 P. M.—Signs of the times as bearing on the progress of mission work? E. B. Teague. 7:30 P. M.—Sermon. J. W. Mitchell. SUNDAY 10 A. M.—S. S. exercises, conducted by T. M. Fancher. 11 A. M -Missionary Sermon followed by a collection for missions, Dr. W C. Cleveland.

It is earnestly hoped that each church in the association will be represented in this meeting. Everybody invited to attend.

J. G. LOWRY, Chairman.

DEMOCRATIC CLUBS.

To the Democratic Voters of Shelby To the Democratic Executive Committee of Shelby County:

Feeling convinced that thorough orparing our people for effective work in behalf of the principles of our party, and successful resistance to the efforts of whatever opposition we may have to

I urge this, believing that if the members of the committee, aided by the democrats of our county, will at once begin the organization of these clubs in their respective beats, when the first Monday in August is past victory shall be our reward and the time honogred principles of the Democratic party violented.

the Democratic party vindicated.
J. R. White, Ch'n. Dem. Ex. Com., Shelby Co. Columbiana, Ala., May 2, 1892.

on all their circulars, wrappers, printed matter, and through the newspapers events. erywhere. It will work wonders, one will be readily observed that all democrats who did not vote against druggist has not got it, he will order it, to vote in the beat meetings, and Drummond Medicine Co., 48-50 Maiden

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF A vention. There being but one recognized democratic organization, legal hours of sale, the following described real estate, to-wit:

The south lift of section 6: the north lift of section 7; the north-west qr of section 8; the west half of the north-east qr of section 8; the north-west qr of the south west qr, section 8, all in town 22, range 1, west; and the east lift of southeast qr of section 1; the south-east qr of the north-east qr of section 12, township 22, range 21, west, containing in all ship 22, range 21, west, containing in all 1280 acres.

MARY A. DEDMAN, Mortgagee.

W. W. QUARLES, Att'y. may7-tds

K. of P.

Calera Lodge No. 51, Calera, Ala., 2:30 P. M .- "How may we best meets every second and fourth Friday guard the doctrine of a regenerate evening at Masonic Hall.
membership?" C. W. O'Hara.

W. R. OLIVER, C. C. I. W. BAILEY, K. of R & S.

of each month.

Those in need of blanks will be supplied upon application to me. W. S. DuBose, M. D.

Health Officer.

This would be a comparatively happy world if every pury knew the virtues of SMITH'S BILE BEANS as a family medicine, and acted upon that knowledge. One half the misery of the world comes from allments which arise from a bad stomach or a bad liver. Chiefest among these are dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache and Neuralgia.

BILE BEANS will cure all of these, besides all missinglig diseases. Dose One Bean. One Bean.

--FINE MILLINERY--

Mrs. S. H. McCauley's,

NEAR THE DEPOT,

Montevallo. - - Ala.

A Splendid Line of Trimmed and Untrimmed Hats in the Latest Styles, and at Reasonable Prices.

HANDKERCHIEFS & HOSIERY. Saturday Sales at $1

For any case of Rheumatism which can not be cured by Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy. The proprietors do not hide this offer, but print it in bold type on all their chealars, wranners, printed Harness Saddles.

DEALERS IN

HARDWARE & TINWARE, 我有你可 那可由国土甘思。

mortgage, executed to the undersigned by Mary M. Baker and Hope H. Baker, and recorded in Mortgage Book No. 17, Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded Shells always on Hand.

118 19TH STREET, BIRMINCHAM.

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA. Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans,

Notice to Physicians and Midwives

All physicians and midwives in Shelby county, will please report to me all births and deaths by the 10th of each property of the formula of each property of the formula of each property. merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

" 2, North Bound,

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter Register in Chancery—D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. H. Kidd.

County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland. Superintendent of Education-T. N.

County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. Dyeey, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

Shelby county teachers will 1

AT THE CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m. METHODIST-Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

Baptist Church--Rev. J. G. Lowrey, pastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy. RICHARD K. FON, Square. New York City.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the storms of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old sge should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a gormon by the Rey. T. Detract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-

ONE DOLLAR WEEKLY

tem. Our 14-karat gold-filled cases are warranted for 20 years. Fine Elzin or Waltham movement, stem wind and set. Lady's or gent's size. Equal to any $50 watch. To secure agents where we have none, we sell one of the hunting case

J. L. PETERS. HENRY WILSON, E. S. LYMAN Montevallo, work. Columbiana. PETERS. WILSO & LYMAN,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW,

Will practice in the courts of Shelby and adjoining counties, in the United States courts and in the Supreme court | urday with the following

"Any Port in a Storm."

That's a good maxim, but it will not work as a rule in the purchase of a remedy for Rheumatism. Any of the cheap nostrums will not effect a cure—in fact, none of them will. Don't trifle with life and prolong agony. Get Dr. Drummond's Lightning Remedy, and a speedy cure is certain. It costs $5 per bottle, but a bottle is worth a hundred of anything else, and for that reason is cheapest when a cure is wanted. Sent to any address by prepaid express on receipt of price. Dr. Drummond Medicine Co., 48-50, Maiden Lane, New York. Agents wanted.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES

Sir—I made use of your Philotoken with my last child, in order to procure a safe and easy travil. I used it about two months before my expected time, and I had a very quick and easy confinement. Nothing occurred to protract my convalescence, and I got about in less time than was usual for me. I think it a medicine that should be used by it a medicine that should be used by every expectant mother, for should they but try it as I have, they would never again be without it at such times. I am yours respectfully,
Mrs. ELIZABETH DIX.

Anymerchant or druggist can procure
Risley's Philotoken for $1 a bottle.
CHARLES F. RISLEY, Wholesale
Druggist, 62 Cortlandt St., New York.
The boot.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for Cuts, ed. Price 25 cents a box.

TOWN TOPICS.

Go to Wilson's school house Monday night if you want to laugh.

If you want to laugh go to Wilson's school house Monday night.

Take all the children to see the 10:05 p. m. Liliputian family at Wilson's school 7:15 p. m. house Monday night.

4:35 p. m. Liliputian family appear at Wilson's Caldwell, and at that famous hotel night. school house Monday night.

> Everybody should see the great trance scene by Mollie Weston at Wilson school house Monday night.

Capt. R. H. Pratt, of Six Mile, was up yesterday in attendance up-Baptist church.

Prof. Wilson closed his school yesterday with appropriate exercises. Mr. Wilson has given entire time State Superintendent Palmer will be present.

ed at the Journal office.

Owing to an unexpected rush of work, Russell, the photographer, will be detained in Calera for sev-

Age-Herald and is a jolly good fellow. We wish him all the good and there was some cutting in pricture. things of life.

Mr. F. A. Vaughan, President of the Bank of Roanoke, Ala., and proprietors of the Chewacla Lime Works, and Mr. E. A. Turner, the general manager of the latter inlustry, were in Calera Thursday. They were enroute to Birmingham, to attend a meeting of Alabama, Tennessee and Georgia lime manufacturers at which the general interests of the business will be dis-months ago he traded for a pair of day. gave his name as Lewis. Yester- nessee, Georgia and Alabama. day Mr. Trimble, a livery man from Buys a good gold watch by our club systen from him by one Lancaster, who hired the team to drive to Mississippi. Proof was made to the team and Mr. Duran will sustain the loss.

watches for the club price, $28, and send
C. O. D. by express with privilege of examination before paying for same.

Our agent at Durham, N. C., writes:

'Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how you can furnish such works is strictly moral and processed they don't the first the meeting.

A plan for concert of action in slightly raising the price of lime was agreed upon, and will be submitted to all the manufacturers who mitted to all the manufacturers who were not present. Wilson's school house will be at the meeting. know how you can furnish such works is strictly moral and unobjectionour agent at Pennington, Texas. writes "Am in receipt of the watch and am pleased without measure. All who have seen it say it would be cheap at $40." very low, 35 cents for adults and an effort at self protection. One good reliable agent wanted for very low, 55 cents for childen. Part of the each place. Write for particulars. 15 cents for childen. Part of the EMPIRE WATCH CO., New York proceeds will be donated to the cemetery fence fund, so that in attending you will aid this good

BASE BALL GAME.

The second nines of Calera and Columbiana played a game last Sat

Runs

	Tettiis	Ours
McKibbon 2nd b	2	4
Onderdonk p	2	3
Campbell r f	3	3
Bristow c	5	1
Crim 3rd b	1	4
	î	3
McLendon s s
Duran 1 f	2	3
Aldridge 1st b	3	3
Moss c f	0	3
	-	_
	19	27
COLUMI	BIANA.
	Runs	Outs
Jackson 1 f	1	3
Greeks s	1	3
H. Nelson 2nd b	1	1
DuBose p	1	4
Cromwell 3rd b	1	3
C. H. Jackson c	1	4
Spencer c f	0	3
Milner 1st b	2	2
Seale r f	$\overline{2}$	3
	_	_
	10	27
SCORES BY		27

63 13 2 0 1 0 3-19 5 0 0 2 0 0 0 1 2-10

The beat meeting to-day selected the following delegates to the county convention: W. R. Oliver, W. D. Huggins, R. M. Pilgreen, Bruise, Sores, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, W. M. Armstrong, J. S. Bridges, S. Chilblains Corns, and Skin Eruption, H. Gist, Sam. Bristow, A. C. Wade, and positively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give ran, F. M. Vance. They were inperfect satisfaction, or money refund- structed to vote for Col. West for representative.

LIME MEETING.

CONFERENCE OF MANUFACTURERS IN TWO EXCELLENT SPEECHES LISTENED BIRMINGHAM.

The Age-Herald of yesterday conthe lime manufacturers:

Frank and Mollie Weston and the of the manufacturers are at the evening and addressed the club at leader an:ongst those men seems to gathered at the school house when be Mr. John A. Denie, of Memphis, Vice President W. H. Duran called bert county, Alabama, on the line duced the speakers in a few appro-of the Memphis and Charleston priate remarks. railroad, and large works in Tenon the Centennial meeting at the nessee. Other leading men are E. gan by explaining the loss of his W. Ranscher and W. H. Rugers, of own delegation, which he did very

Erin, Tennessee. is to arrive at an agreement where-politicians have acted in very bad by the price of lime will be mate-faith. From this he proceeded to rially increased. Lime is now sel- a line of pure democratic doctrine, Shelby county teachers will hold ling at a price that is too low to ad- making a splendid appeal for the an institute at Columbiana on the mit of any profit to the producer. perpetuation of white supremacy. 24th and 25th of June, at which In Birmingham, for instance, the He counseled the strictest faithfulretail price of lime is about 75 cents ness to party lines, but urged the a barrel. The actual cost of pro- harmonious settlement of local dif-Hon. Mac. A. Smith, of Pratt- ducing lime is 45 cents a barrel. ferences. He received hearty apville one of the candidates for the So, when the railroad freights are plause when he declared that he circuit judgeship in the 5th district taken into consideration it will be had rather see Jones and Kolb and was in town last Monday, and call- seen that there is left but little every other man of prominence dead

> A leading member of the confer- democratic party. ence said to an Age-Herald report-

es. As I stated the average price supply the lime at 65 cents. This plauded. offer was accepted, but it can be A letter from Hon. Gaston A. readily understood that there is no Robbins was read by the secretary, profit in it at that figure. It costs in which he said he could address us 45 cents to produce the lime. the club any time after Thursday. Add to that the freight charges and An invitation was extended for it will be seen that profits are al- Friday night. most nothing. This state of affairs | Some additional names were enhas existed quite long enough. We rolled, swelling the number to 125. desire a change.

The first session of the conference | Friday night. Our townsman J. H. Duran, who began at 2 o'clock yesterday afteris in the livery stable business, has noon and lasted until supper time, the sympathy of all in a heavy loss but no agreement was reached. he has just sustained. Some three Another meeting will be held to The manufacturers present circuit judge. horses and a buggy from a man who represent the line interests of Ten-

The proceedings of the second of Longview, vice-president.

1,000,000 barrels was represented the measures of reform he dwelt

"We desire it distinctly understood," said President Vaughan, speech was highly enjoyed. "that this is not a movement to

The association adjourned to meet at the Caldwell house June 15, to take final action as to the formal Mortgage Sale. adoption of the plan that is to be immediately forwarded to all man-

MATED AND WEDDED.

BEAUTIFUL MARRIAGE CEREMONY AT THE BAPTIST CHURCH.

On Wednesday night Miss Ella Lowrey, of this place, was married

The wedding was had at the Baptist church and was witnessed by a large crowd of friends.

The couple were attended to the altar by Mr. Walter Boyd and Miss Lula Jones, Mr. E. Mattison and Miss Sallie Dial. The groom came bride came in on the arm of her father. Meeting at the altar the were said by Rev. C. W. O'Hara.

The bride was dressed in white crepe with lace and cape-jasmines. with roses.

Miss Dial wore white albatros, lace and roses. The ushers were Messrs. Scott and Dial. The wedding march was excellently rendered by Mrs. George Wright. Decorations of flowers and evergreens made the altar a bower of

The happy couple left at ten o'clock for their future home at Blocton, attended with the best wishes of all of us for their happiness and success.

WANTED —A lady in each town to take orders for something new that every lady wants; we may $2.50 for first 5 hours! work; sample and instruction, 10 cents. Mas. Harry Fant, Lock Box 698, Birming ham, Ala.

DEMOCRATIC CLUB.

TO MONDAY NIGHT.

In response to invitations from tains the following of interest to the Young Men's Democratic Club Hon. L. W. Gaant, of Calhoun, and There is a secret conference of Hon. Cecil Browne, of Talladega, leading lime manufacturers in pro- both candidates for congress from gress in this city. Seven or eight this district, arrived here Monday the conference is being held. The Quite a nice little crowd had who owns large lime works in Col- the meeting to order and intro-

Mr. Grant spoke first. He besatisfactorily, showing conclusively The real object of the conference that some of the Calhoun county than to hear of a division in the

Mr. Browne spoke of the victory achieved for himself in his own "The price is absurdly low. We county. He gave a lucid definition Cumberland Preserver Thursday.

Cumberland Preserver Thursday.

Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Pand meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3.

Mr. W. E. Drinkerhoff went up to Birmingham Wednesday night to attend the marriage of Mr. Phil.

Friday evening at 3.

Comingly and is still ready for customers. He is doing an exellent class of work and everybody is pleased.

Mr. W. E. Drinkerhoff went up to Birmingham Wednesday night to attend the marriage of Mr. Phil.

Geomingly and Miss Lulu Brewster.

Both speeches were well received was 80 cents a barrel. After the and the mention of the names of cutting of rates began I offered to Jones and Cleveland was loudly ap-

The club adjourned to meet again

The club was visited last night by Gaston A. Robbins, of Dallas, candidate for congress, and R. B. Kelley, of Calhoun, candidate for

Mr. Robbins delivered an able speech of some length upon the general issues of the day. He pictured the condition of his county, Pratt Mines, came in and laid claim day are given out as follows:
to the property. It had been stol
F. A. Vaughan, of Roanoke, was tured the condition of his county, where there are 40,000 negroes and showing in strong elected president, and J. B. Adams, 8,000 whites, showing in strong terms the great need of help from An annual production of nearly the white counties. In discussing largely upon taxation and currency,

Mr. Kelley captured the audience mitted to all the manufacturers who with his humorous comparisons, especially that in which le described the birth of the third party. His

A letter was read from Hon. Jno. exact exorbitant prices; it is simply F. Burns, expressing his regret at not being able to be present.

UNDER AND VIRTUE OF A MORTgage executed to the undersigned by Mary M. Baker and Hope H. Baker, and recorded in Mortgage Book No. 21. Probate, of Shelby county, I will proceed to sell at public outcry to the highest bidder, for cash, at Shelby Springs, in said county on

The 20th day of May, 1892, to Mr. Andrew Handberry, of Bloz- within the legal hours of sale, the following described personal property, to-wit: Furniture, including beasteads, washstands, tables, chairs and mirrors.....$

Springs for bedsteads and spring repe with lace and cape-jasmines. Bath Tubs. 30 oo Miss Jones wore white crepon Water Works. 150 oo Diningroom Tables and Safe..... 45 oo Iron Safe in Office....... 50 oo Billiard Table.....

Bed Room Sets..... 100 00
 Stove in Store......
 5 00

 Lamps for Rooms.....
 15 00

W. W. Quarles, Att'y. april30 3t

The above sale is hereby postponed until Thursday, June 30th, 1892.

MARY A. DEDMAN, Mortgagee.

W. W. Quarles, Att'y.

The Calera Journal,

A Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as twill have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of he state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will contain the fourth district.

to Birmingham Wednesday night to attend the marriage of Mr. Phil. Cosminsky and Miss Leiu Brewster. Cosminsky and Miss Leiu Brewster. Mr. Cosminsky is connected with Age-Herald and is a july good fall of barrels of line will be required.

Quikly, Neaty and Cheaply Done

and Legal Printing a Commercial

THE JOHRMAL will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

Now is the time for everyone who cherishes good health, to pay particular attention to the condition of their blood and its proper circulation. Nearly all diseases that flesh is heir to are caused and agravated by an impure condition of the blood and a sluggish circulation.

THE KING OF BLOOD PURIFIERS Possessing Extraordinary Cleansing Powers

Restoring and Strengthening the whole System, Enriching the Blood producing increased vitality by restoring an impaired digestion and bringing back the bloom of youth to the cheek of the enfeebled and emaciated. Price, $1.00 per Bottle-6 Bottles for $5.00.

NABERS, MORROW & SINNIGE,

SOLE CONTROLERS,

Birmingham.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION. Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers -12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these depapers.

It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.

It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.

6. Bill Arp, Plunkett, and Uncle Recheer to the fireside and happiness to mus and a host of other special writers news center in the world. 1. Its Agricultural Department alone is worth many times its subscription price to every farmer. This department is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, wnose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

For Sale by All Druggists.

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

8. It pays more money for its special features and for its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers of the south, and much more than any weekly newspaper in America.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One Dollar ser year, each paper at the price of a postage stamp. Think of it! Every time a hen lays an egg she pays for one issue of the greatest weekly newspapers in the world.

ure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

8. It pays more money for its special

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information.

THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

CHANGING THE NEGRO'S SKIN. An Attempt to Demonstrate That Man's | Original Color Was Not Dark.

The scientific world is curiously awaiting the results of an experiment now being made by Dr. John Ege, a prominent physician of Reading, Pa. If successful Dr. Ege expects to accomplish the miracle of turning the negro white and the white man black. He will also establish, at the same time, the original color of mankind. The process by which the wonderful revolution in changing the color of the skins of the human family is to be brought about is by skin grafting, an operation which has been known and performed throughout the civilized world for ages, but which Dr. Ege, by his experiments, hopes and expects to very materially

He has been treating for some time Joel Saul, a young man residing at No. 239 Mulberry street, Reading, who for over two years has been troubled with an obstinate ulcer, involving almost the entire lower portion of the left leg. As a last resort to effect a permanent cure he decided upon grafting a new skin on the sore Having obtained permission from Mr. Saul to graft the skin of a colored man it opened up to him an opportunity for experiment which he had long been looking for, and he at once entered into the project with a spirit and zeal born of a determination to advance the cause of science if possible. After considerable effort he finally, by the aid of money, secured two healthy negroes of ebony black, who consented to part with a certain portion of their skins, and the process of grafting, under both of the prescribed methods, was accomplished. To await the result of the operation, and to watch for any change in the color of the black skin, was attended with considerable anxiety on his part; and when, after a few days of patient watching, he was rewarded by observing that the skin of the black was gradually but surely turning white, he at once determined to further pursue his scientific investigation, and ascertain if it was possible to change the skin of the Caucasian to correspond with that of the Ethiopian. Accordingly Tuesday last he secured James Lewis, a healthy negro of 35 years, who consented to undergo the operation for the benefit of science. The doctor used a large knife resembling the blade of a razor, and cut bare on the negro's arm a space two inches by three-quarters of an inch. In this place he planted twelve pieces of skin from his own arm and twenty-five pieces from the arm of an intimate friend. The ingrafted skin appeared whiter than before, possibly by contrast, and it will require possibly four or five days longer to determine what the result will be.

Should the color change to correspond with the black's skin, the doctor will pursue his investigation still further, and the intermixing of the skins of the Caucasian and Mongolian will be his next attempt.

Dr. Ege says: "If this white ingrafted skin continues to grow and remain white on the black man's arm it will show the constancy of the white race as well as the originality of color. Should white skin thus ingrafted change to black, scientists could argue that black was the original color of mankind.—Philadelphia

Mr. Clarence O. Bigelow Prescription Druggist, 102 6th Ave., N. Y. City, says

The People's Confidence

Sarsaparilla

In a Manner Never Equalled. "Iam, on general principles, aversed to expressing my views, pro or con, in respect to any proprietary article, but in the light of Hood's Sarsaparilla being the product of a brother apothecary, will say, Hood's Sarsaparilla has secured a place in the any proprietary medicine that I have handled during an experience of more than twenty years in the drug trade. It Must Possess True Merit as a remedial agent to retain its increas ing popularity as a household remedy. The sale of Hood's Sarsaparilla exceeds that of all similar preparations combined, of which I keep in stock some fifteen or twenty.

Praises are Proclaimed

daily at my counter by those who have been benefited by it, many of whom are personal acquaintances. CLARENCE O. BIGELOW, Apothecary. Hood's Pill's cure liver ills, constipation, biliouaness, jaundice, sick headache.

REV. DR. TALMAGE

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUN-DAY SERMON.

Subject: "The Greatest Name of All."

TEXT: "The name which is above every ame."—Philippians ii., 9.

Paul is here making rapturous and en-thusiastic description of the name of Christ. There are merely worldly names that some-times thrill you through and through. Such was the name of Henry Clay to a Kentuck-ian, the name of Daniel Webster to a New Englander.

By common proverb we have come to be-lieve that "there is nothing in a name;" and so parents sometimes at the baptismal altar gives titles to their children reckless of the fact that that title, that name, will be a life-time hindrance or a lifetime help. You have no right to give your child a name lacking either in euphony or moral meanit is a sin to call a child Jehojakim or It is a sin to call a child Jehoiakim or Tiglath-pileser—or by anything that is disagreeable. Because you have had an exasperating name yourself is no reason why you should inflict it upon your progeny. And yet how often it is that we see a name full of jargon rattling down from generation to generation simply because a long while ago some one happened to be afflicted with it. Institutions and great enterprises some-times without sufficient deliberation take nomenclature. Mighty destinies have been decided by a name. While we may by a decided by a name. While we may by a long course of Christian behavior get over the misfortune of having been baptized with the name of a despot or a cheat, how much better it would have been if we could have all started life without any such incum-

When Paul, in my text and in other passages of Scripture, burst forth in aspirations of admiration for the name of Christ, I want to inquire what are the characteristics of that appellation, "The name which is above every name." In the first place, speaking to you in regard to the name of Christ, I want to tell you it, is an easy name. "You are you in regard to the name of Christ, I want to tell you it is an easy name. You are sometimes introduced to people with long and unpronounceable names, and you have to listen cautiously to get the names, and you have to hear them pronounced two or three times before you risk trying to utter them, but within the first two years the little child folds its hands and looks upward and save "locus".

nd says "Jesus."

Can it be that in all this church this morning there are representatives of any household where the children are familiar with the names of the father and mother and brother names of the father and mother and brother and sister, yet know nothing about "that name which is above every name?" Sometimes you forget the name of a quite familiar friend, and you have to think and think before you get it, but can you imagine any freak of intellect by which you should forget the name of Jesus? That word seems to fit the tongue in every dialect. Down to old age, when the voice is tremulous and uncertain and indistinct, even then this regal word finds potent utterance.

When an aged father was dying one of word finds potent utterance.

When an aged father was dying one of the children came and said, "Father, do you know me?" and in the delirium of the last sickness he said, "No, I don't know you." Another child came and said, "Father, do you know me?" "No," he said. "I don't know you." Then the village pastor came in and said, "Don you know me?" the said, "No; I don't think I ever saw you." Then said the minister, "Do you know Jesus?" "Oh, yes!" said the dying man, "I know Jesus; Chief among ten thousand is the, and the One altogether lovely." Yes, for all ages and for all languages, and for all conditions is an easy name.

Jesus, I love Thy charming name,

Jesus, I love Thy charming name,
"Tie music to my ear;
Fain would I sound it out so loud
That heaven and earth might hear.

But I remark further in regard to this ame of Christ, that it is a beautiful name. name of Christ, that it is a beautiful name. Now you have noticed that you cannot disassociate a name from the character of the person who has it. There are some names, for instance, that are repulsive to my ear. Those names are attractive to your ear. What is the difference? Why, I happened to know some persons of that name who were cross or sour, or queer or unsympathetic, and the persons you have happened to know of that name were kind and genial. Since then we cannot dissociate a graph. Since, then, we cannot disassociate a name from the character of the person who has the hame, that consideration makes the name of Jesus unspeadably beautiful.

I cannot pronounce the name in your presence, but you think of Bethlehem and Cathername and Ca Gethsemane and Golgotha, and you see His loving face, and you hear His tender voice, and you feel His gentle touch. As soon as I proncunce His name in your presence you think of Him who banqueted with heavenly think of Him who banqueted with heavenly hierarchs, yet came down and breakfasted on the fish which the rough man hauled out of Genesaret; you think of Him who, though the clouds are the dust of His feet, walked footsore on the road to Emmaus.

I cannot speak His name in your hearing this moring, but you think right away of the shining one who restored the centurion's daughter, and who helped the blind man to sunlight, and who made the cripple's crutch useless, and who looked down into the laughing eyes of the babe until it struggled to go to Him; then, flinging His arms around it, and impressing a kiss upon its beautiful brow, said. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

and impressing a kiss tipol its beautiful brow, said. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Oh, beautiful name, the name of Jesus, which stands for love, for patience, for self sacrifice, for magnanimity, for everything that is good and glorious and tender and sympathetic and kind! It is aromatic with all odors. It is accordant with all harmonies. Sometimes when I look at that name of Jesus Christ it seems as if the letters were made of tears, and then they seem to be gleaming crowns. Sometimes that name seems to be twisted out of the straw on which He lay, and then it seems to be built out of the thrones on which His people are to reign. Sometimes I sound that word Jesus, and I hear in it the sob of Gethsemane and the groan of Calvary, and then I speak His name and it is all a ripple with gladness and a ring with hosanna. Glorious name!

Take all the glories of bookbindery and put them around the page on which that name is printed. On Christmas morning wreathe it on the wall. Let it drip from harp's string and let it thunder out in organ's dispason. Sound it often, sound it well, until every star shall seem to shine it, and every flower shall seem to breathe it, and mountain and sea, and day and night, and earth and heaven acclaim in full chant, "Blessed be His glorious name forever." "The name which is above every name."

Have you ever heard in a Methodist church, during a time of revival, a score of souls come to the altar and cry out for mercy under the power of just two lines of glorious old John Wesley?

Jesus, the name high over all, In heaven, or earth, or sky.

Jesus, the name high over all, In heaven, or earth, or sky.

In heaven, or earth, or sky.

To the repenting soul, to the exhausted invalid, to the Sunday-school girl, to the snow white octogenarian it is beautiful. The aged man comes in from a long walk, and he tremulously opens the door of his home, and he hangs his kat on the old nail, and he puts his cane in the usual place, and he lies on his couch, and he says to his children and his grandchildren, "My dears, I am going away from you." And they say, "Why, where are you going, grandfather?" "Oh," he says, "I am going to Jesus," and so the old man faints away into heaven.

And the little child comes in from play.

faints away into heaven.

And the little child comes in from play and she flings herself in your lap, and she says, "Mamma, I'm so sick I'm so very sick;" and you put her to bed, and the fever is worse and worse, and some midnight, while you are shaking up the pillow and giving the medicine, she looks up in your lack the invalid.

Same all SOLDIERS:

The laws A.W. Mocornick

The congruence of thim who brought you out of the wilderness world into the sheepfold, and you wilderness world into the sheepfol child heard that her playmate was dying, and she went to the house, and she clambered upon the bed for her dying playmate. "Where are you going to" and the dying girl said, "I'm going to Jesus." Then said the little girl that was well as she bent over to give the parting kiss 'to her dying 'playmate, "Well, then, if you are going to Jesus, givo my love to Him." It is a beautiful name, whether on the lips of childhood or on the lips of the old man. When my father was dying the village minister said to him quoting over his pillow this passage, "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation—that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners," and there he stopped. Then my father finished the quotation by saying, "of whom I am chief."

But I remark again, in regard to this name of Christ, that it is a mighty name. Rothschild is a name mighty in the commercial world, Silliman is a name mighty in the scientific world, Irving is a name mighty in the literary world, Washington is a name mighty in the political world. Wellington is a name mighty in the political world, Wellington is a name mighty in the political world, Wellington is a name mighty in the political world, Wellington is a name mighty in the political world, wellington is a name mighty in the political world, wellington is a name mighty in the political world, wellington is a name mighty in the political world, wellington is a name mighty in the political world, wellington is a name mighty in the political world, wellington is a name mighty in the scientific world, why the sound of that one name unhorsed Saul and threw Newton on his face on ship's deck, and that one name to-day, while I speak, holds a hundred mil-on his face on ship's deck, and that one name to-day, while I speak, holds a hundred million souls under omnipotent spell. That name in England to-day means more than Victoria. In Germany that name to-day Victoria. In Germany tuat man. means more than Emperor William.

mighty name!
I have seen a man bound hand and foot of the devil and captive of all evil habits, at the sound of that name dash down his shackles and march out forever free. I have shackles and march out forever free. I have seen a man overcome of misfortune and trial, every kind of trouble had he; but at the sound of that name the sea dropped, and the clouds parted, and the sunburst of eternal gladness poured upon his soul. I have seen a man hardened in infidelity, defiant of God, full of jeer and scoff, jocose of the judgment day, reckless of eternity, at the sound of that name blanch and cower and groan and kneel and weep and repent and groan and kneel and weep and repent and pray and believe and rejoics and triumph.

Oh, it is a mighty name. Under its power the last temple of superstition will come down and the last Juggernaut of iniquity. down and the last Juggernaut of iniquity will be shattered to pieces. The red horse of carnage, spoken of in apocalyptic vision, and the black horse of death must come back on their haunches, while the white horse of victory goes forth mounted of Him who hath the moon under His feet and the stars of heaven for His tiara. Mighty name! It will make the whole earth tremble, and then it will make all the nations sing. Mighty name!

Other dominions seem to be giving way; France had to give up some of her favorite provinces; Spain has lost a great deal of her power; many of the thrones of the world are being lowered; many of the scepters of the world are being shortened, but every tract distributer, every Bible printer, every Christian institution established spreads abroad the mighty name of Christ. It has already been heard under the Chinese wall, and in the Siberian snow castle, and in the Brazilian grove and in the eastern pagoda. That name will swallow up all other names. That crown will yet cover up all other That crown will yet cover up all other crowns. That empire will yet compass all

All crimes shall cease and ancient frauds shall fail, Returning justice lift aloft her scale; Peace o'er the world her ölive wand extend, And white-robed innocence from heaven descend.

But I remark again, taking a step forward But I remark again, taking a step forward in this subject, that the name of Christ is an enduring name. You get over the fence of the graveyard and you pull the weeds back from the name that has nearly faded from the tombstone, and you wish that Walter Scott's "Old Mortality" would come along and rechisel it so that you might really find out what the name is. Why, that was the name of the greatest man in all the town, in all the country, in all the State now almost all the country, in all the State, now almost faded from the tombstone.

And so the greatest names of this world

Aid so the greatest names of this world either have perished or are perishing. Gregory VI., Saucho of Spain, Conrad I. of Germany, Richard I. of England, Catherine of Russia. Those names were once mighty, and they made the earth tremble. Who cares for them now? None so poor as to do them reverence. But the name of Christ is enduring forever. It will be preserved in the world's fine art. There will be other Bellinis to sketch the Madonna, and other Ghirlandaajos to present the baptism of Christ, and other Bronzinos to show Christ visiting the spirits in prison, and other visiting the spirits in prison, and other Giottos to appal the vision with the Crucifixion. It will be preserved in the world's Giottos to appal the vision with the Crucifixion. It will be preserved in the world's literature.

There will be other Alexander Popes to write the "Messiah," and other Dr. Youngs to celebrate His triumph, and other Cowpers to sing His love. It will be preserved in the world's grand and elaborate architecture, and Protestanism shall yet have its St. Mark's and its St. Peter's. It shall be preserved in the world's literature, for there will be other Paleys to write the "Evidences of Christianity." More than all, it will be embalmed in the hearts of all the good of earth and all the great ones of heaven. Shall the emancipated bondsman ever forget who set him free? Shall the blind man ever forget the Divine Physician who gave him sight? Shall the lost and wandering ever forget who brought them nome?

Why, to make the world forget that name would be to burn up all the Bibles and burn down all the churches, and then in the spirit of universal arson go through the gate of heaven and put the torch to all the temples and mansions and palaces until in the awful conflagration all heaven went down and the people come out to look upon the charred ruins; but even then they would hear the name of Christ in the thunder of falling towers and in the crash of temple walls, and see it interwoven into the flying banners of the world's grand and elaborate architecture, and there were account of how Longfellow's precoccious poetic ability was discovered: When the great poet was nine years old, and attended school, his teacher one day asked him to write a composition. Little Henry, like most all school boys, shrank from the undertaking.

Wise most all school boys, shrank from the undertaking.

Wise most all school boys, shrank from the undertaking.

Wise account of how Longfellow's precoccious poetic ability was discovered: When the great poet was nine years old, and attended school, his teacher one day asked him to write a composition. Little Henry, like most all school boys, shrank from the undertaking.

Wise account of how Longfel name of Christ in the thunder of failing towers and in the crash of temple walls, and see it interwoven into the flying banners of flame, and the redeemed of heaven would say, "Let the temples and the palaces burn; let them burn; we have Jesus left." Blessed be His glorious name forever. "The name which is above every name."

which is above every name."

My friends, have you made up your mind by what name you will accost Christ when you see Himin heaven? Nowthat is a pracyou see Him in heaven? Now that is a practical question. For you will see Him, child of God, just as certainly as you sit there and I stand here. By what name have you made up your mind to call Christ when you first meet Him in heaven? Will you call Him "Anointed One," or "Messiah?" or will you take some one of the symbolic terms which you read in your Bible on earth—terms by which Christ was designated?

Some day perhaps you will be wandering which Christ was designated?

Some day perhaps you will be wandering among the gardens of God on high, the place abloom with eternal springtime, infinite luxury of lily and rose and amarath, and perhaps you will look up into the face of Christ and say, "My Lord, Thou art the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley." Some time there will be a new soul come into heaven to take its place in the firmament and shine as the stars forever and ever, and the luster of a useful life will shine forth tremulous and beautiful, and you will look up into the face of Christ and say, "My Lord, Thou art a brighter star, the Morning Star, the Star of Jacob, the Star of the Redeemer."

Star, the Star of Jacob, the Star of the Redeemer."

Some day you will be walking among the fountains that toss in the sunlight, falling in crash of pearl and amethyst into golden and crystalline urn, and wandering up the round banked river to the place where the water first tinkles in silver on the rock, and from chalices of love you will be drinking to honor and everlasting joy, and you will look up into the face of Christ and say, "My Lord my Lord, Thou art the Bountain of Living Water." Some day you will be wandering among the lambs and sheep of heaven feeding by the rock, rejoicing in the care of Him who brought you out of the wilderness world into the sheepfold, and you will look up into His face and say, "My Lord, my Lord, Thou art the Shepherd of the Everlasting Hills."

But there is another name by which you sions all full. Heaven full. The sun will set aftre with its splendor the domes of the temple, and burnish the golden streets into a blaze, and be reflected back from the solid pearl of the twelve gates, and it will be noon in heaven. Noon on the river. Noon on the hills. Noon in the valleys. High noon. And then you will look up, gradually accustoming your vision to the sight, shading your eyes at the first lest they be extinguished with the insufferable splendor, until after awhile you can look upon the full irradiation, and you will cry out, "My Lord, my Lord, Thou art the Sun that Never Sets."

my Lord, Thou art the Sun that Never Sets."

But at this point I am staggered with the thought that there may be persons in this house for whom this name has no charm, though it is so easy, though it is so beautiful, though it is so potent, though it is so enduring. Oh, come to-day and see whether there is anything in Christ! I challenge you to test with me this morning whether God is good, and whether Christ is precious, and whether the Holy Ghost is omnipotent.

Come, my brother, I challenge you.

Come, and we will kneel at the altar of mercy. You kneel on the one side of the altar and I will kneel on the other side of the altar of mercy, and we will not get up from our knees until our sins are pardoned and we are able to ascribe all honor to the name—you pronouncing it and I pronouncing it—

"the name which is above every name."

His worth if all the nations knew,

His worth if all the nations knew, Sure the whole earth would love him too.

I pray God that He may move upon to.

I pray God that He may move upon this assemblage now, that we may see Him walking through all these aisles, that the Holy Spirit may spread His wings over this auditory. Now is your time for heaven. Oh, my friends! meeting once, perhaps never again until the books are opened, what shall we say of this morning's service? Have I told you the whole truth? Have you listened to the whole truth? Now is your time for to the whole truth? Now is your time for heaven. Come into the kingdom. If you never had an invitation before. I give it to what your wandering. That is not pertinent to the question. The only thing is whether you want Christ. Come in the whether you want Christ. Come in, the farthest off. Come, the nearest by. "Where sin abounded, grace shall much more abound." Is there in all this august assemblage a man who feels he is too wicked to come? You are mistaken. Come now. "Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation" of salvation.

"Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation."
""O ye who are young, come now! It is no gloomy religion that I preach. It will take no color from your eye. It will take no spring from your cheek. It will take no spring from your step. I know what I am talking about. I have felt the consolation of this grace in my own heart. It is not a theory with me. I know in whom I believe, and He has been so good a friend to me, I have a right this morning to commend His friendship to all the people.

Oh, come into the kingdom! Do not say you are too bad. "Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts." "Look unto Me, all ye ends of the earth." How is He going to do—drive you into the kingdom? He will not do it. If you get in at all it will be because you are drawn in by His love. What does He say? "Look unto Me, all ye ends of the earth." He was lifted up. What for? To drive? No! lifted up to draw. Oh, come now, come now into the kingdom of our Lord Jesus!

You have heard of that warrior of ancient times who went into battle against Christ.

Lord Jesus!
You have heard of that warrior of ancient times who went into battle against Christ. He hated Christ and he went into battle fighting Christ, but in the battle he got wounded, he was struck by the arrow and fell, and as he lay with his face up to the sun and the life blood was oozing away, he put his hand to his heart and took a handful of blood from the wound and held it up to the sun and cried out, "Oh, Jesus! Thou hast conquered."

conquered."
And if to-day, my hearer, struck through And if to-day, my hearer, struck through by the arrow of God's gracious Spirit, you realize the truth of what I have been saying, you would surrender yourself to the Lord who bought you, you would say: "I will no longer battle against Christ's mercy. Lord Jesus, Thou hast conquered." Glorious name. I know not what you will do with it; but I will tell you one thing before I stop—I must tell it. I will tell you one thing here and now, that I take Him to be my Lord, my God, my pardon, my peace, my comfort, my salvation, my heaven. Blessed be His glorious name forever. "The name which is above every name." which is above every name.

Longfellow's First Poem.

The following has long been accepted a fine turnip growing up, he thought he knew what it was, what it was for, and what would be done with it. A half hour had been allowed Henry for his first undertaking in writing composition. In a half hour he carried in his work all accomplished neatly, and his teacher is said to have been affected almost to tears when he saw what the boy had done in so short a time. The composition had been written in a poetic form, and was as follows:

Mr. Finney had a turnip, And it grew, and it grew.
And it grew behind the barn,
And the turnip did no harm.

And it grew, and it grew, Till it could grow no taller; Then Mr. Finney took it up And put it in the cellar.

There it lay, there it lay
Till it began to rot;
When his daughter Susie wasted it
And put it in the pot.

Then she boiled it, and boiled it, As long as she was able; Then his daughter Lizzie took it And put it on the table.

Mr. Finney and his wife Both sat down to sup; And they ate, and they ate, Until they ate the turnip up.

Horse Running Forty Miles an Hour!

Few horses have made a mile dash in less than 1:40; Salvator, in 1890, I believe, made it in 1:351, which is something truly wonderful. Let us analyze these figures To begin with, it is nearly forty miles an hour—a speed averaged by few railway trains. There are 5280 feet in a mile, so that for every one of the ninety-five seconds he was in making that mile he had to get over fifty five and three-tenths feet of ground. Just think of the wonderful speed he was moving at-a half a hundred feet for each beat of a man's pulse!—St. Louis

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh Thas Contain Mercury,

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Half's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

No MATTER how prompt actors may

No matter how prompt actors may be at rehearsal there is always one man who is prompter.

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words altke except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Ut. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name or the word and they will return you BOOK, EXAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE.

It is gentle manners which prove so irre-

LADIES needing a tonic, or children who want building up, should take Brown's Iron Bitters. It is nleasant to take, cures Malaria, Indigestion, Biliousness and Liver Complaints, makes the Blood rich and pure.

It is not always the man who looks like

I. R. Branham, editor Christian Index, Atlanta, Ga., writes: "I have used Bradycrotine with unfailing, prompt, decided relief for headache." All druggists, fifty cents.

Manners are the final and perfect flower of MANY persons are broken down from over work or how-chold cares. Brown's Iron Bit-ters rebui ds the system, aids digestion, re-moves excess of bile, and cures malaria. A spendid tonic for women and children.

No man can be a hero when his liver is out

B. F. Allen & Co., 365 Canal street, New fork, are sole agents in the United States for Beecham's Pills. 25 cents a box.

No man ever loved a woman while he was

ONE ENJOYS

Both the method and results when Syrup of Figsistaken; it is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and cures habitual constipation. Syrup of Figs is the only remedy of its kind ever produced, pleasing to the taste and acceptable to the stomach, prompt in its action and truly beneficial in its effects, prepared only from the most healthy and agreeable substances. its many excellent qualities commend it to all and have made it the most popular remedy known.

Syrup of Figs is for sale in 50c and $1 bottles by all leading druggists. Any reliable druggist who may not have it on hand will procure it promptly for any one who wishes to try it. Do not accept any substitute.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL, LOUISVILLE, KY. NEW YORK, N.Y.

Kennedy's MedicalDiscovery

Takes hold in this order:

Bowels. Liver. Kidneys. Inside Skin. Outside Skin. Driving everything before it that ought to be out.

You know whether you need it or not. Sold by every druggist, and manufactured by

DONALD KENNEDY. ROXBURY, MASS.

have used German Syrup for six vears successfully for Sore Throat, Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Pains in Chest and Lungs and Spitting-up of Blood. I have tried many kinds of Cough Syrups in my time, but let me say to anyone wanting such a medicine—German Syrup is the best. We are subject to so many sudden changes from cold to hot, damp weather here, but in families where German Syrup is used there is little trouble from colds. John F. Jones. @

AM. N. U. -

A spell of sickness is due when the system's weakened, and the blood impure. It's what you must expect.

But it's what you must prevent, too. And Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery prevents as well as cures. It invigorates the liver and kidneys, purifies and enriches the blood, sharpens the appetite, improves digestion, and restores health and strength. For Dyspepsia, "Liver Complaint," and every form of Scrofulous, Skin, or Scalp Diseases, as Salt-rheum, Tetter, Erysipelas, or any blood-taint, it's an unequaled remedy.

It's not like the sarsaparillas, which claim to be good for the blood in March, April and May. At all seasons alike, and in all cases, the "Discovery" alone is guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

It's the cheapest blood-purifier, no matter how many doses are offered for a dollar, for you pay only for the good you get. But it's the best, or it couldn't be sold so.

"MOTHERS" FRIEND"

Colvin, La., Dec. 2, 1886.-My wife used MOTHER'S FRIEND before her third confinement, and says she would not be without it for hundreds of dollars. DOCK MILLS.

MAKES CHILD BIRTH EASY,

Sent by express on receipt of price, $1,50 per bote. Book "To Mothers" mailed free. BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO.,
BY ALL DRUGGISTS. ATLANTA. GA.

Beautify complexion by purifying blood. PURELY VEGETABLE.

The dose is nicely adjusted to suit case, as one pill can never betoo much. Each vial contains 42, carried in vest pocket. like lead penell. Business man's great convenience. Taken easier than sugar. Sold everywhere. All genuins goods bear "Crescent."

00

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878. W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa from which the excess of oil Is absolutely pure and

No Chemicals are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Etarch, Arrowroot or Sugar, nomical, costing less than one centa cup. It is delicious, nouriehing, strengthening, EASILY DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalida as well as for persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere. W. BAKER & CO.. Dorchester, Mass.

SHORTHAND.

Cents, at stores or by mail.

Cents, at stores or by mail.

FRED'K DUTCHER & SONS,

St. Albans, Vt. RIPANS TABULES regulate the stomach, liver and bowels

100-Page Chicken Bock It teaches you how to detect and cure Diseases; how to feed for eggs and also for fattening Sent postpaid for 25c. Book Pub House, 134 Leonard st., N. Y City.

PATENTS W. T. Fitzgerald, Washington, D. C.

Eraul Clem

THE CALERA JOURNAL.

VOL. I.

CALERA, ALA., SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1892.

NO. 32.

Warmth the South Wind Bringeth. Shadow on the valley resteth But sunlight gleams on the hill. Mute are the stones and pebbles, But music dwells in the rill And warmth the south wind bringeth To drive away winter's chill.

The nest on the bough is empty, And you sigh for the nestlings still, But songs of the erstwhile fledglings The woodlands with melody fill. Ah! warmth the south wind bringeth To drive away winter's chill.

The dream of your youth hath vanished, But deeds now your busy days fill, When the voice of the thrush is silent The mocking bird sings on the hill. Ohl warmth the south wind bringeth To drive away winter's chill.

Grieve not for vanished pleasures, There are others their places to fill, When light of day hath departed Night bringeth the star-shine still. And warmth on the south wind cometh To drive away winter's chill. -[Louise T. Hodges, in Atlanta Constitu-

DAISY'S MILKING-STOOL

BY ANNA SHEILDS.

Daisy Metcalf and I made our appearance in this world of care upon the same day, and our mammas being old friends we became from wee childhood fast friends and companions. We went to school together; we dressed each other's dolls; we entered society together, but under different circumstances. In the eighteen years during which we had grown from infancy to womanhood, Saul Metcalf, Daisy's father, had made one of those mammoth fortunes that result from successful modern speculation. My dear father, on the contrary, had been treading the path that leads downward in the race for fortune, and we were poor folks compared to the Metcalfs. Daisy, being an only child and a little beauty, entered society as a belle and heiress; her costumes imported from Paris, her jewels of the most costly description, her carriage, horses, surroundings of every kind those that only wealth can procure.

When I say we were poor folks, I do not mean that we were reduced to suffering poverty, but we lived in a very quiet way, kept only two servants, and while I economized in the housekeeping department, Fred my only brother, worked at clerking in a wholesale drug store, and helped my overworked father in the family expenses. We were invited out and had our share of gayety, but my costumes were the work of my own fingers, the same material often serving for two or three dresses, and my jewel-box was my inheritance from my mother, and but a slender stock of pretty trinkets.

I don't know when I first suspected that Fred was in love with Daisy. We three had been so much together, Fred being only three years older than Daisy and myself, that it was a matter of course for both of us to depend upon Fred as an escort, and to fulfill the duties of a brother to Daisy as well as to his own sister. One block only lay between our modest dwelling all my pretty trifles, until I led him to and the superb brown-stone front of a most elaborate affair in hand-painted Saul Metcalf's stately house, and not a satin, plush bands and chenille fringe. day passed that Daisy's feet or mine did not trip over that block to bring us together for girlish chat and ex- guess that was only a common woodchange of confidences.

both "came out" at a party given by in the country years ago. Did you Mrs. Metcalf, to introduce me as well ever see lovelier painting, and such as Daisy to society, that I first noticed fine embroidery as there is on the a change in Fred. He began to plead | plush bands?" another engagement quite frequently wanted him to act as Daisy's escort as seem interested. well as mine. He no longer hurried home when Daisy came to dine and spend a quiet evening at our house. The duets they had learned together lay untouched for weeks upon the music-rack, and I no longer saw Fred's name upon Daisy's ball-programmes for four or five dances. And as he grew graver and some of the boyish delight died out of his eyes, Daisy, danced and sprang as if from mere not actually want to help her." overflow of joyousness.

I might have noticed more if my his voice sharp with pain. own heart had not gone out of my keeping during that winter, and the did you not?" manly fascinations of Harry Wilmer engrossed my own dreams. This is in some or the letters that were lost not my love story, so it suffices here while I was in Japan." to say that at Easter I became Mrs.

Henry Wilmer, and took possession of said. "I surely wrote it to you. We a handsome house and shared the large income of a wealthy husband. Daisy was one of my bridesmaids, fancied a look of pain came into her soft brown eyes at the formality with which Fred filled his position of best man, avoiding rather than courting the opportunities offered to pay especial attention to Daisy.

It had hastened my wedding a little that my father and Fred had a most favorable offer to go together to Sacramento to open a branch business for the firm who employed Fred. There seemed to be every opportunity for making money, and they were both anxious to avail themselves of the offer. So the old home was broken up, and a week after my wedding father and Fred started for their new home.

On the last evening, Fred took me a little into his confidence, not frankly and fully as he had in many less important matters, but letting me guess much of the love filling his heart, the pride binding him to silence. By such half-confidence, I felt sure that Saul Metcalf's great wealth and his own uncertain prospects kept him from letting Daisy see the love he cherished, almost without hope, for he thought she only felt the sisterly affection of long intimate friendship for him. Even this little he would not have told me, but he did not dare to trust himself to make a farewell call, and intrusted to me his message of imperative business preventing his saying good-bye in per-

"Daisy will think you very unkind not to spare her five minutes," I said.

"You do not understand," he answered, impatiently. "I am not unkind; I am only miserable. There! I don't want any pity. It is all right; but there are some things a fellow cannot stand and not betray himself. To bid her farewell, for years, perhaps, calmly, quietly, as a mere friend, is beyond my strength."

"But why not tell her you love hunter. Just tell Daisy I cannot get round, and say good-bye for me."

And before I could answer Fred

my father and brother good-bye for Tuesday, and Harry escorts her home necessary adjunct to farm life. an indefinite time, and, as it proved, my parting from my dear father was a final one. Two years later he died, and it was six years before Fred revisit to me, in the winter.

It was at the very height of the fever for art embroidery, and my parlors were crowded with specimens of work-gifts, many of them; some the result of my own industry, though most of my own efforts went to adorn the persons of my first-born, Harry, and my wee baby girl, Nettie.

I challenged Fred's admiration for "This," I said, "is the gem of my lot of art work. You would never en milking-stool, would you? Just I think it was the winter when we such a stool as our grandmothers used

"Who gave it to you?" Fred asked, when I was going to Metcalf's, or trying with brotherly good nature to

"I bought it."

"I should think you had enough without purchasing any," my brother said, laughing.

"Yes; but this was to help an old friend. I bought it of Dalsy Metcalf. You remember Daisy?" I continued, not noticing the sudden pallor in Fred's face. She does this sort of work for a store in New York, but too, lost something of the old girlish they do not half pay her, and her old quest. Harry gave the silver tea serbrightness, and her step no longer friends order pretty things they do

"What do you mean?" Fred cried,

"You knew Saul Metcalf was dead,

"It was just about that time," I sure I could if you gave me a quarter. curious discovery led the explorers to World.

all felt so sorry for Daisy. Her mother died a few weeks before her father and was spared the trouble that | Heavy Losses Entailed by Badly and looked lovely in cream-white followed. Mr. Metcalf's fortune, that cashmere and richest lace, though I was supposed to amount to millions, did not cover his debts when the estate was settled. Everything was sold, even Daisy's jewels and grand piano.

"Why is she not here?" Fred said, walking up and down the long rooms, to the infinite peril of my spindlelegged tables and fragile bric-a-bric. "You professed to love her. Why do you not give her a home?"

"Because she won't take it! You monster, Fred! I tried every way to make Daisy come here. I even offered her a salary to come as nursery governess for Harry and Netty, and made her laugh out as merrily as she did in our old girlish days when she had not a care. But she is as proud as-assome other folks I know, and would not take charity, even from me."

"Where is she?" "She is boarding at 427 L-street." "L--- street!" my brother cried,

'There is not a decent house in the street!" "They are small, poor houses," I said. "but they are respectable. Most of them are boarding-houses for clerks, shop-girls and needle-women."

"Aud Daisy lives there! Daisy, who never knew a want in her whole petted life!"

"Poor little Daisy!" he said, presently. "Think of her wasting her eyesight upon such work as this, while

"Yes," I said, after waiting some time for the conclusion of the sentence -- "vou?"

"I not a millionaire, as Saul Metcalf was supposed to be," Fred said, "but I am on the road to wealth, and I am already a rich man. And it is solid money, not gained in speculation, but laid up dollar by dollar in fair, honest, commercial business. Our business is flourishing and I am at the head of the branch house in Sacramento, as you know, with every op-"Who said I loved her? Don't be portunity to push my own fortune, as romantic. I am not going to figure in that of the firm. What time is it? Saul Metcalf's eyes as a fortune- Nearly eleven! Too late to call anywhere now."

"I should say so." I said.

"Tomorrow-" said Fred.

"To-morrow Daisy dines here," I The next morning Harry and I bade said. "She comes to dinner every in the evening. He might, however, be persuaded to resign that duty, for once, to-morrow."

We chatted a few minutes longer, turned home, and then only for a brief and then Fred went to his room, car-Wether he sat up all night comtemplating that work of art, I am unable to say; but I do know that the next afternoon, when pale, little Daisy, in deep mourning, came into my sitshe had no reason to complain of Fred's coolness. Long, long before I guessed the secret of her rejected suitor, and the interest she took in my ed at my suspicions, and I looked on at that rapturous meeting and said nothing, even to Fred, of the added color on Daisy's cheek, or the new brightness in her eve.

drawer of old music, and at ten o'clock Harry made no movement when Daisy went to my room for her hat and

"The course of true love" ran very smoothly for the next month, the time of Fred's visit to me; and when he returned to Sacramento, it was not alone. Daisy put her pride aside and let me provide her tronsseau, and the wedding, at my house, called together all her old friends.

There was a very handsome show of wedding presents, but mine was most carefully packed by Fred's own hands, and was presented at his revice I had selected as my gift, for Fred begged that I would give them Daisy's milking-stool .- [The Ledger.

Every Man Has His Price. Mrs. Brown-Do you think you

"No. You must have written that could learn that lesson if I gave you ten cents?

Little Johnnie-No, ma. But I'm

COST OF BAD ROADS.

Kept Highways.

Farmers and Country People the Chief Sufferers.

We have in the United States someupon our farms, and at the moderate estimate of 25 cents as the cost of feed and care of each of these animals, we' see at a glance that the aggregate exneed not look at me as if I were a pense of maintaining them is about $4,000,000 per day. If, by a similarly moderate estimate, we say that they are kept in the stable in a condition of enforced idleness by the deep mud of spring and fall for a period averaging 20 days in each year, we may easily compute that the loss, in this respect alone, will amount to $80,000,000 per year, a sum sufficient to build 16,000 miles of excellent highway. Of course, considering the great variety number of factors to be regarded, it is impossible by mathematical formula to compute the loss entailed on any community by the continued toleration of these dirt roads in their present condition; but the error in the result of any computation is more likely to show a loss smaller than actually exists, and in whatever way the matter be regarded, it is certain that with the imposed burden of extra help and extra draft-animals, loss of time, wear and tear of wagons and harness, the drawing of light loads, and the depreciated value of farm-lands, we are pursuing a shortsighted policy in permitting the present system to continue. Besides the actual loss, which a moment's reflection will serve to show, we are gaining nothing and saving nothing in that great department of agricultural industry to which the condition of the

By dwellers in cities the actual condition of these country roads during the wet season is scarcely known; while with farmers, to whom all roads are dirt roads, and who have never seen nor known of a highway better than that which they have used from ingly small. boyhood, the dirt road is an accepted fixture, which long habit and use have impressed upon them as a natural and

New York the country newspapers were printing long editorial complaints of the hopeless condition of the rural highways, and the conserying Daisy's milking stool with him. | quent paralysis of country trade, while commercial reports were the earth, or over 20,000,000,000 published from week to week, in which business embarrassments and failures were charged directly to the impassable condition of the country ting-room, expecting to find me alone, roads. Half-loaded farm-wagons were stalled in deep mud almost in the shadow of the magnificent twentymillion-dollar capital at Albany, while, as if to show to what ridiculous ends Sacramento letters. But I never hint- the perversity of the human mind will sometimes lead us, the good farmers of Albany county were actually sending telegrams to the Legislature, asking for the adjournment of a committee hearing, because the roads of After dinner, the old duets were Albany county were too bad to perrummaged out of a long-closed mit them to get to town in time to oppose a bill which promised to make them better!- The Century.

A Queer Place for a Fish.

streams. One day, however, when a show sad facial expression. detachment of the Cameron expedi- These may be found hitched to make an investigation, whereupon every ball of hardened earth, whether large or small, was found to contain an odd-shaped specimen of the finny tribe. These spherical mud "houses," which on account of their likeness to the earthen eases fabricated by many species of caterpillars and other insects and worms have been called "cocoons," are perforated by many small holes and lined with a mucous from the thing like 16,000,000 of horses and fish's body, the mucous keeping the mules above the age of two years dried ball damp upon the inside, the holes being used for breathing pur-

> For want of a more euphonious name this queer species of piscus has been dubbed "mudfish," which is expressive of the fish's curious habits if not a musical and high-sounding cog-

The remarkable instinct which causes the mudfish to roll himself in a ball of mud when the dry season approaches is a wonderful provision of nature, intended soley, it would seem, to prevent the extinction of the species. The most interesting fact about stir in society is the well filled pocketthis fish is that it breathes by means book. of conditions, and the consequent of gills when in its native element and by means of lungs during its vol- baby, but generally you can't get the uutary imprisonment in the mud cocoon. - St. Louis Republic.

How Star Distances Are Ascertained

The mathematical principles involved in determining the distance of a star are essentially the same as those employed by a surveyor when he wishes to measure the width of a stream which he cannot cross, only with the astronomer the problem is rendered much more difficult by the fact that he is unable to secure a baseline of sufficient length to meet his requirements; even the diameter of the earth's orbit is not great enough, except in rare instances.

In determining these vast distance astronomers make it a point to firss ascertain what is known as the star's parallax, or, in other words, its angle of direction when viewed from the dirt road is of such marked im- two opposite points in the earth's orbit. This is what renders the problem so extremely difficult, nearly every star so far selected as a base of operation having failed to show any parallax whatever, and the few instances where the parallax has been recognized showing it to be exceed-

The star which gives the greatest parallax of any ("fixed" stars are those now under consideration), and which in consequence is believed to In the spring of 1891 in the state of be nearest the earth, is Alpha Centauri, a star which is never visible in this latitude. But even this star's parallax is only the .92 of a second, which corresponds to a distance of 221,000 times the sun's distance from miles .-- [St. Louis Republic.

How to Tell a Good Horse.

"I never ask about a horse's traits," said a horse buyer the other day. "All I want is a good, square look in the face. One in a hundred times I may mistake the head, but not oftener than that, I believe." It doesn't require an expert to read horses' faces, either. A person who has never handled a horse can saunter down Broadway any afternoon and point out the good, docile family carriage horses, the biting horse, the treacherous animal, the one likely to kick or run at any moment, or the proud, high spirited horse that may be dangerous and yet not vicious in the least.

The kicking horse can nearly always be singled out by the vicious gleam Travellers in Central Africa during in his eye, which stamps him a born the hot season often follow the dry kicker. Of all horses, though, the beds of rivers and creeks for miles to miserable looking horse attracts most obviate the necessity of cutting their attention. This is the horse perseway through the heavy jungles which cuted by the check rein. Like women everywhere abound. Africa is well and men who wear shoes a size too known to be the native land of many small, he shows the outward evidence extraordinary things, animate as well of misery. Many good natured as inanimate. This being the case, horses, horsemen say, have been made the first explorers paid no attention to fretful and vicious by being enslaved the thousands of balls of hardened by the infamous and cruel check rein. mud which were strewn about in all There are horses broken down by long profusion in the beds of these dried up and continued service for man, which tion were exploring what in the wet drays around town, to rickety wagons season would have been a tributary of peddlers and ragpickers, and occaof the Nile a woodman cracked one of sionally to wagons of contractors and the balls and was surprised beyond teamsters. Once, perhaps they were measure to see a live fish tumble out full of buoyancy of youth, but conof the centre of the ball and fall gap- stant drudgery has made them mere ing and floundering in the sand. This tools, barely animals .- [Sporting

The Hoary Head. Ah, calm old age, come to me soon With all thy rest and sweet content, When out of fervid glare of noon Peace grows with evening's shadows What promise of the mourning day, When flames the east with lurid red,

Is like the twilight's blessed gray In halo round the hoary head? Ah, calm of soul and strong of heart, Whose age is youth in duty done, May we at noon so play our part,

As thou at setting of thy sun. I would my life as thine were spent, That I when evening comes, heaven sped Might find my years, as thine are, blent In halo round the hoary head.

HUMOROUS.

-[St. Louis Republic

fligh water-The source of profit on milk.

It is a rapid musician who can beat time by several seconds. Some talk is made with the bark on it and other talk has the bark in it. The book that makes the greatest

You can get somebody to mind the baby to mind anybody.

When the old gentleman of ninety proposes to the old lady of eighty-five it is the "court" of final resort. Sorricus-A widow usually has a hard row to hoe. Funnicus-That is on account of her weeds, of course. The dress coat may be the proper thing for a prosaical wedding, but for an elopement there is nothing like a Carrie-What would you do the first thing if you were a woman, George? George-Wish I was a man,

I suppose. With guns that "weren't loaded" 'round.

And microbes never sated, It is a wonder that the world Is not depopulated.

Miss Yellowleaf-This new bonnet just matches my complexion. It cost seventy-five. Miss Costique-What -the complexion?

If everything would continue to look as attractive as it does in the shop window, there would be no more pessimists in this world.

Noddy-There goes Waitman, kiting along like a deer; I wonder if he is training for a run? Oddie-No; on the contrary he is running for a

> She is as fair as mortals are, But still she'll never do for me, Because in conversation oft I hear her interjecting "See?"

Inspector-What is your idea of a model tenement house for the poor? Capitalist-One that will pay its owner thirty-five per cent. on his investment.

One of the peculiar facts about human nature is that after a man has lost everything he has himself he begins to feel competent to give his friends sure tips.

Wife-I used to enjoy those little dinners so much we had before we were married. Husband-I'm not surprised they seemed nice after the ones you give me now.

"Father," she said, "don't you think we need some new gas burners?" "No," he answered positively. "That young man that comes to see you every evening is a gas-burner that's enough and to spare."

"Your daughter is a very substantial girl," said the proprietress of the young ladies' school. "She has no liking for what is light or frivolous." "It seems so," replied her mother, regretfully. "Even her bread is heavy."

Let your ideal be a high one. By following the directions of the cook book you may not produce a cake as light as thistledown, as therein promised, but you will doubtless succeed in getting one of less specific gravity

The Salvation Army Uniform. According to Mrs. Bramwell Booth, the salvation Army dress was devised bit by bit. It was not in the early days so distinctive a uniform as it is now. The bonnet used to be small and had white strings; but these soiled easily. A large bonnet was found better suited to elderly persons and those with large faces. It also protected the hair, which was a point to be considered. The dress at one time could be blue or black. Blue is now obligatory. - [New York Sun,

THE CALERA JOURNAL.

FRANK W. GI-T.

CALERA, SATURDAY, JUNE 4.

JUDICIAL CONVENTION.

at Talladega on February 29, 1892, I hereby give notice that the conwention to nominate a candidate for to break down the institutions of a 1892, at 10 o'clock, a. m. The following compose the circuit:

Calhoun 16 delegates Cleburne......16 St. Clair 8 Talladega 10 and their convenience suited.
T. S. PLOWMAN, Chairman.

by sly and stealthy methods the erat sending of a delegation to the judicial convention for Judge himself the guardianship of Shelby Cobb. The man who is so thor- county democracy, and cried fraud oughly devoid of county pride as to when the party tribunal refused attempt a thing like this is lacking him admission, lands squarely into in the principle of manliness and the third party ranks. A. P. Longintegrity, to say nothing of his shore, who sought and obtained lack of appreciation of the merits of recognition at the hands of a weakso good a man as Judge Cobb.

BEFORE the Peoples party is two days old, we find a break in the organization. Mr. John A. Smith, of Butler, one of the appointed executive committeemen, has tele- and strike fast and hard at every the world's greatest Jersey cow graphed the Montgomery Advertis- approach of this political nondeer, under date of June first, the fol- script. lowing: "Please say that I am no Third Party man, and the use of my name as a committeeman is unau-And now the young babe is deprived of one teat that Captain Kolb were to suddenly 1042 pounds. The test was made that we will hear of others.

ence, recently in session at Omaha, ance with democratic usage." would ited at the World's Fair. action in that conference in slander. loyal democrat if he did? Would a has produced for her master four qr of section 8; the north-west qr of the ing the south and waving the bloody man supporting Jones under such hundred and sixteen dollars and south west gr. section 8, all in town 22 and the cost blf of south shirt in the face of their southern circumstances be entitled to recog. eighty cents, to say nothing of the east qr of section 1; the south-east qr countrymen, being a base for our nition as a loyal democrat? We milk. This added would swell the ship 22 tange 21, west, containing in a judgment. Remembering as we present this matter to our readers, amount—estimating it at two gal- 1280 acres, do, however, that Northern Metho- not as to race for governor alone, lons per day, which is a low estidists are radical partisans first and but on the opinion that a rule that mate—to four hundred and eighty-Christians last, and this being na- holds good in a district, state or a nine dollars and eighty cents. A tional election year, we can account National election should hold good great deal better than raising cotfor such ungodly action. The same county election, where they submit ton. application can be made to the their claims to a nominating conto the third partyites, they being vention. Taking this view of the LET US BE WISE AS SERPENTS better kickers than democrats and political situation, and believing republicans, it is easy for them to a majority of Capt. Kolb's followers cratic states and vice verse, in re- of their following him in a bolt or members of the state, and district publican states.

THE Savannah News, one of the ablest democratic papers in the South, has this to say about the would be dictators of the democratbrainy men who have tried to turn the democratic party from its purpose. Naturally the alleged brainy men are a good deal disgusted and say that if the democratic party won't be guided by them it can follow its own judgment and take the responsibility. That's exactly what it is going to do." The News is century, and despite all the kicking he mourneth. and bickering of disappointed office seekers and self-appointed leaders it is yet one of the two great political parties of the nation. And toto bear all the "responsibility."

THE THIRD PARTY.

The party of hybred principles unknown and unknownable policies Entered at the Post Office in Calera as has been born. It grew as a natural sequence out of the labor conference held in Birmingham on May 30, and has for its declaration of principles the St. Louis and Ocala Pursuant to instructions of the platforms. The means it will adopt democratic executive committee of will be unreasonable and unintellithe 7th judicial circuit, which met gent abuse of the democratic party. Its efforts will be a tendency judge of said circuit will meet at republican government. Its result Talladega on Wednesday, June 15, will be to blacken the political record and destroy the integrity of those who engage in it.

S. M. Adams, more than any other man, is responsible for its birth. In the promulgation of his fanatic and fallacious theories he has imbued the minds of his blinded followers with prejudical ideas which they find can only be propagated in In this issue will be found a com- a third party platform. He called munication from Gurnee setting out a conference, the only result of a complaint against the commis- which could be the formulation of sioners court. It seems that the a third party, and after fanning court had granted them a seperate into a flame the insulted and wild voting precinct at that place, but desires of his hearers, he sat quietat the last term of the court re- ly by and saw the child of his efforts scinded the order. The resolutions brought forth. He took no voice or are rather strong, but the wishes part in the matter, and yet not a of these people should be heeded, word did he utter against the formation of democracy's deadly enemy. Too shrewd to commit himself, he WE learn that an attempt was was too cowardly to go with his demade in a certain beat to prevent deluded people. He is not a demo-

> J. W. Pitts, who arrogated to need legislature, is found squarely AN ALABAMA JERSEY BREAKS THE in the new party.

The time for action is at hand.

FUT YOURSELF IN HIS SHOES.

was to give it suck. It is probable change positions, or in other words suppose Kolb had two-thirds of the delegates in the convention Jones, THE Northern Methodist Confer- and Kolb "be nominated in accord was evidently composed of members | Jones be justified in contesting his | who are endowed with more religion (Kolb's) nomination? Would Kolb's butter is always quoted at 40 cents than Christianity. The disgusting friends look upon Jones as a good, as a third party candidate.

convention next week, and it is now | The writings and sayings of a few selfalmost certain that he will, he is constituted "little" fellows who prosure to be beaten, and that by a pose to speak for the great democracy ic party: "The democratic party larger majority than any candidate will do harm. We are not dealing hasn't paid any attention to alleged for governor in the history of the with radicals and free negroes. Men state. It will also prove him a been lightning democrats all through falsifier of the deepest die, and re- the dark days and who have stood at sult in placing him in his proper the ballot boxes time after time withsphere, among the cohorts of repubfew of these have been selected as licanism and negrodom, where he nominees, or placed upon the delega truly belongs, and will enjoy that tions. They are in no humor to be degree of congeniality and social taunted especially by sucklings who have never even comprehended, much prominence which he deserves, less been exposed to danger.-Selma Farewell, Reuben! You will soon Times. right. The party's principles have be where you can't hear the owl kept it together for more than a holler, nor the whangdoodle when and formerly of Florence, and a

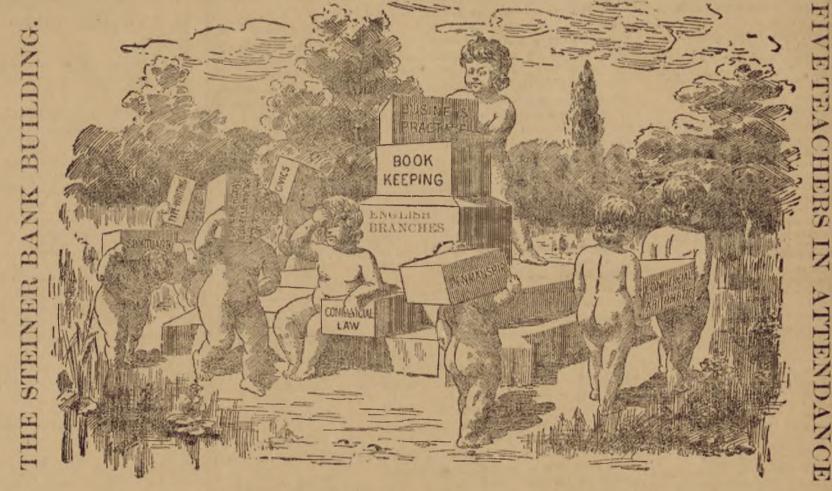

The above is our "devil's" first effort at political editorial.

T. C. McKibbon and Walter Boyd, day, Watterson pulling one way and were driving to Montevallo last Satall the Ocala demagogues pushing urday in a buggy, and the horse from the other, democracy is following some cause ran away, taking to the press of Shelby. The Chronicle is its own judgment, and that judg-turned, throwing these gentlemen out, ment indicates the nomination and resulting in a fracture of T. C. election of Grover Cleveland. And McKibbon's collar bone, and giving when this is done, we will be able Walter Boyd a considerable shaking. Mr. McKibbon has so far improved as

The Best Place to Secure a Business Education is at the

MENN WORK

PRINCIPALINE CHERRY.

Send for Circular,

M. M. FIELDS, Vice President

LEONARD LIPPMAN, President.

G. F. HART, Secretary and Treasurer.

MUCH BUTTER.

HUNTSVILLE, May 29-Special-Democracy must not be put on the Lilly Flag of the Monte Sano dairy defensive, but should draw the line at this place surpassed last night or it will be sent to any address by prebutter producer, with four days yet to go on. Bisson's Belle, that led the record in one year, made 1028 pounds and 15g ounces of butter, while Lilly Flag has reached 1029 pounds and Isa ounces, and her by a representative of the American Jersey Cattle Club, which also selected four of the Monte Sano dairy to highest bidder, on be that many of fifty Jersy cows Monday, 6th day of June, 1892, from the United States to be exhib- at Columbiana, in front of the Court

When it is remembered that this

Much depends upon the words and coalesce with republicans in demo- are true democrats we have no fears actions of our leaders, especially the committees and the delegations, who will control the several conventions as to the course of those democrats, Ir Mr. Kolb bolts the democratic who are sore under disappointment.

> Mr. Coburn, late of Birmingham typo called to see us Tuesday morn ing while waiting for a train to Columbjana, where he takes a situation with Mr. DuBose on the Chronicle. Mr. Coburn comes to Shelby highly recommended and is a strong and uncompromising democeat, and we are glad to welcome him to the worthy a gentleman on his staff.

> DIED, in Calera Wednesday of

$500 Will be Given

For any case of Rhenmatism which can not be cared by Dr. Drummond's Light-ning Remedy. The proprietors do not hide this offer, but print it in bold type on all their circulars, wrappers, printed matter, and through the newspapers ev-erywhere. It will work wonders, one bottle will cure nearly every case. If the paid express on receipt of price, $5. Drummond Medicine Co., 48-50 Maiden Lane, New York. Agents wanted.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF A Suppose that Governer Jones and nesday, when she will reach at least by Mary M. Baker and Hope II. Baker, and recorded in Mortgage Book No. 17, page 518, in the office of the Judge of Probate of Shelby county, Alabama, I will proceed to sell, for cash, to the House door, in said county, within the legal hours of sale, the following described real estate, to-wit:

The south hif of section 6; the north per pound, we find that Miss Lilly hif of section 7; the north-west qr of secship 22, range 21, west, containing in all

MARY A. DEDMAN, W. W. QUARLES, Att'y.

The Cure For

touch of royalty. To-day, many grateful people know that the "sovereign remedy" is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This powerful alterative extirpates "the evil" by thoroughly climinating all the strumous poison from the blood. Consumption, catarrh, and various other physical as well as mental maladies, have their origin in

SCROFULA

When hereditary, this disease manifests itself in childhood by glandular swellings, running sores, swollen joints, and general feebleness of body. Administer Ayer's Sarsaparilla on appearance of the first symptoms. "My little girl was troubled with a painful The physician being unable to effect a cure, I gave her one bottle of

Ayer's

-W. F. Kennedy, McFarland's, Va "I was cured of scrofula by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."-J. C. Berry, Decrheld, Mo. "I was troubled with a sore hand for over two years. Being assured the ease was scrofula, I took six bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla and was cured."-H. Hinkins, Riverton, Neb.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Aver & Co., Lowell, Mass. Bold by all Druggists. Price and six bottles, $6. Cures others, will cure you

SHELBY SPRINGS.

This popular summer resort will open on the first day of June 1892 for the entertainment of guest. These Spring are the most popular resort for to be congratulated in obtaining so families and health seekers in Alabama Delightful shades, ten pin alleys, lawn tennis, and all other health and pleas ure giving games. For full particulars write to H. H. Baker, Shelby Springs Ala.

--FINE MILLINERY--

Mrs. S. H. McCauley's,

NEAR THE DEPOT.

Montevallo. - - A a. A Splendid Line of Trimmed and Untrimmed Hats in the Latest Styles, and at Reasonable Prices.

HANDKERCHIEFS & HOSIERY. Maturolay Siales at 1

Harness & Saddles,

DEALERS IN

HARDWARE & TINWARE, TYAGON WELFINGAR

Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded Shells always on Hand.

118 19TH STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans,

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York Louisville and Birmingham at regular rates cyarged by the larger cities.

We transact a general banking business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike

Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms

ALABAMA MINERAL. No. 85, Arrives at 86, Departs at

COUNTY OFFICERS. Probate Judge-R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter Register in Chancery—D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. 11.[Kidd.

County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland.

Superintendent of Education-T. N. County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. Dyeey, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

AT THE CHURCHES.

Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a. m. METHODIST-Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

Baptist Church-Rev. J. G. Lowrey. pastor. Preaching every first and second ers for favors. Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

Friday evening at 3.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the Franklin Square. INSURE YOUR LIFE.

Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the stoams of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old see should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in a convention was called to order by J. R. White, chairman of the executive committee, who called J. Witt Talmage.

ONE DOLLAR WEEKLY

Buys a good gold watch by our club system. Our 14-karat gold-filled cases are warranted for 20 years. Fine Elgin or Waltham movement, stem wind and set labeled and set labeled as a labeled and the temporary officers made permanent.

All the beats were represented ex-Lady's or gent's size. Equal to any $50 watch. To secure agents where we have none, we sell one of the hunting case watches for the club price, $28, and send C. O. D. by express with privilege of examination before paying for same.

Our agent at Durham, N. C., writes:

UR 2. P. West, Gordon DuBose and W. R. Turman were placed before the convention for representative

"Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how you can furnish such works First ballot—West 53, DuBos

Our agent at Pennington, Texas, writes "Am in receipt of the watch and am pleased without measure. All who have seen it say it would be cheap at $40."

One good reliable agent wanted for each place. Write for particulars. EMPIRE WATCH CO., New York

J. L. PETERS. HENRY WILSON, E. S. LYMAN Columbiana.

PETERS, WILSO & LYMAN.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW,

Will practice in the courts of Shelby and adjoining counties, in the United States courts and in the Supreme court

IMPORTANT TO LADIES Sir-I made use of your Philotoken with my last child, in order to procure a safe and easy travil. I used it about two months before my expected time. and I had a very quick and easy confinement. Nothing occurred to protract my convalescence, and I got about in less time than was usual for me. I think it a medicine that should be used by very expectant mother, for should they

yours respectfully,

Mrs. ELIZABETH DIX.

Anymerchant or druggist can procure
Risley's Philotoken for $1 a bottle.

CHARLES F. RISLEY, Wholesale
Druggist, 62 Cortlandt St., New York:

DEMOCRATIC CLUBS.

To the Democratic Executive Committee of Feeling convinced that thorough or ganization is absolutely essential for the advancement and maintainance of the select delegates to the various con-Democratic Party in Shelby county, I carnestly urge the Executive Committeemen of each beat to immediately organize Democratic Clubs, thereby preparing our people for effective work in behalf of the principles of our party, and successful resistance to the efforts of whatever opposition we may have to meet.

State delegation—T. H. Hopkins, W. R. Oliver, H. C. Reynolds, T. J. Martin, J. L. Peters, J. E. Ruffin, and W. T. Smith. Instructed for Jones.

Methodology of the successful farmer of Chilton, found time from his arduous plantation work to visit Celera Wednesday of this week.

Little Maud, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Atkins, while playing about the yard on Thursday last, fell and broke her arm. A physi-

I urge this, believing that if the members of the committee, aided by the democrats of our county, will at once begin the organization of these clubs in their Huey, J. P. West, instructed as a unit respective beats, when the first Monday in August is past, victory shall be our re-ward and the time honored principles of the Democratic party vindicated. J. R. White, Ch'n. Dem. Ex. Com., Shelby Co.

Columbiana, Ala., May 2, 1892.

We have been back to Bibb, and returned unharmed. We met many friends and were well treated. We son, J. S. Farrell. 10:05 p. m. of candidates, both claiming to be J. F. Pope, W. S. Cross, and J. P. 7:15 p. m. the regular democracy. The out- West, instructed for R. W. Cobb. look for a large amount of scratch-4:35 p. m. ing is very strong, and much depends upon which does the most of son, for circuit solicitor.

it. Contesting delegations to the state and congressional conventions mittee, the convention adjourned. with credentials, affidavits, etc., are ready and geting ready for the

When we arrived in Centrevillewhich, by the way, is the hardest place to get to in the state-court was in session, Judge Dowdell presiding and Ben Fitzpatrick prosicuting attorney. None of the capital offences were tried as the jail was torn down and the new not completed, the prisoners being off at other places for safe keeping. Quite a number of misdemeaners were tried, PRESBYTERIAN—Services on the 4th some acquitals and some convictions being rendered, The coal mines will be reinforced by some four or five convicts.

Our thanks are due and are hereby tendered to the families of Judge Smitherman, Dr. Schoolar, Mrs.

Kennedy and Mrs. Suttle, and others for favors.

Of course we called to see the Express, and—as is always the ease in a country newspaper office—we found Bro. Connelley busy, and was CUMBERLAND PRESENTERIAN-J. C. a country newspaper office—we Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first found Bro. Connelley busy, and was Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting quite unwell. Frank placed us un-Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's der obligations for favors in the way Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother of replenishing our "Exchequer," which favor we hope to be able to return some day.

After our "case" was decided in world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon the companion of Mr. Frank Bald-win, the promising young attorney afford to be without it. It always makes from Chilton who was assisting the from under the yoke the present County commissioners are attempting to place around our necks.

Resolved 4th. That we will take an ac-Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy. RICHARD K. FOX.

New York City.

Maj. A. P. Howison, where everything is always prepared in the best of style. Meeting several of our old friends in Randolph from whom we learned move about the political stand in our behalf in the hour patriotic acres of campus. Board, lights, fuelsituation, we boarded the train at a late hour and arrived at home at 2 a. m., Sunday, a little weary and sleepy, but well pleased with our trip to "Old Bibb."

Resolved 6th, That the Shelby Chronicle, Shelby News, and Calera Journal be furnished a copy of these resolutions with the request that they be published.

Respectfully submitted,

THOS. E. EVANS, Chairman. trip to "Old Bibb.

K. Milner to the chair.

H. E. Reynolds was elected sec-

The delegates were enrolled and

All the beats were represented except Nos. 5 and 12.

The convention went into the nomination of county officers.

J. P. West, Gordon DuBose and

First ballot-West 53, DuBose

33, Turman 11. J. P. West was nominated, and

All the nomination made unanimous Jno. S. Leeper and D. R. Mc-Millan were nominated for probate judge, The first ballot stood, Leeper 50½, McMillan 47½. Leeper's nomination was made unanimous. For Sheriff, Slaughter, Nelson Montevallo, and DeShaze, were voted for. First ballot, Slaughter 134, Nel. son 43\frac{1}{3}, DeShazo 40\frac{1}{3}.

Second ballot, Slaughter 0, Nelson 49½, DeShazo 48½ Nelson was nominated.

W. R. A. Milner was nominated by acclamation for Circuit clerk. For Tax Assessor, J. H Hammond, J. E. Ruffin and S. F. Dill were voted for. First ballot, Hammond 58, Ruffin 61, Dill 281, nominating Hammond. For Tax Collector-Smith. 50,

Davis 48, Smith nominated. For Treasurer, S. F. Dill, A. V. Wortham, Thompson and Davis. Thompson was nominated on third but try it as I have, they would never again be without it at such times. I am For Superintendent of Education, E. O. Dawson, C. C. Oliver and D. Wyatt

First ballot, Dawson 54, Oliver 17½, Wyatt 26½. Dawson nominat-

For commissioners the following were nominated: 1st-District Mc-Gowan. 2nd-District Walker. 3rd-Dristrict Griffin. 4th-District Jones. The convention a committee to other business.

Congressional delegation-W. B. Huey, J. P. West, instructed as a unit for Cecil Browne of Talladega amid great enthusiasm.

O'Brien. H. E. Reynolds, B. H. Sam- er little one has gone to join its moth-

Chancery delegation-W. S. Cary W. R. Oliver, J. S. Bridges, D. R. McMillan, H. E. Reynolds, E. T. Daw-found the people badly divided po-Henry Wilson, A. C. Wade, E. S. Lylitically, but in a great degree it is man, Frank Nelson, Jr., J. R. White, 5:10 a. m. confined to preference in local or W. R. A. Milner, J. E. Ruffin, T. J. county offices. They have two sets Martin, J. H. Weldon, J. P. Christain, ham. was in town.

The representative and senator were instructed to vote for B. F. Wil-

After electing a new executive com-

GURNEE, May 27, 1892.

At a mass meeting of the citizens of Gurnee held at the School house today Mr. H. Bonsfield, chairman of the Demof fifteen was appointed by the chairman | present season a delightful one. to draft resolutions the of sentiment of the of the Commissioners court of Shelby few days longer. county in attempting to abolish the ballot box at this place.

The resolutions as reported were unanimously adopted: Whereas—The partisan board of County Commissioners of Shelby county have by a resolution passed at their last meeting attempted to destroy the voting box at Gurnee in this county, and Whereas-The inaliganble right of suffra, e that is guaranteed to us by the constitu-tution of Alabama is invaded, and a parmissioners in attempting to rob us of our liberties and to distranchise us as voters.

Resolved 2nd, That we deprecate the action of the Commissioners in attempting to array one class of citizens against another, believing that each is essential to the other. Resolved 3rd, That we appeal to the patriotic citizens of Shelby county irrecommissioners are attempting to place stairways carpeted. Accommodation around our necks.

Resolved 4th, That we will take an active part in the coming campaign in this county for the establishment of honest local government, and for the purpose of placing representative men at the head of our county affairs.

we learned more about the political stand in our behalf in the hour of need.

J. D. Mills, Charles Lellich, R. A. Straiham, Mike Keys,

T. A. Hatcher, Jerre Lawley, J. D. Gallaway, Joe. McMullen, Pink Lawley, F. P. Dunham, Jas. McDonough,

W. S. Meroney, William Mills.
On motion the meeting adjourned to meet at 7:30, p. m. June 10th. 1892.
HARRY BONSFIELD, Cha'n E. Lowe, Sect.

THE CANDIDATES

WHO WILL BE BEFORE THE NEXT STATE CONVENTION.

GOVERNOR.

iomas G. Jones. R. F. Kolb.

SECRETARY OF STATE. James D. Barren of Clay. L. C. Ramsay of Macon.

AUDITOR. John G. Bass of Jefferson. W. S. Ford of Montgomery. W. Booker of Perry. John W. Purifoy of Wilcox. J. S. Williams of Bullock.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL. W. L. Martin of Jackson. Loxla Thornton of Jefferson. W. E. Richardson of Montgomery

Daniel Collier of Fayette. TREASURER. John L. Cobbs of Montgomery. J. Craig Smith of Dallas. SUPERINTENDENT OF EDUCATION. John G. Harris of Sumter. R. E. Pettus of Madison.

COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE. H. D. Lane of Limestone. Hiram Hawkins of Barbour.

James H. Norwood of Montgomery. CHIEF JUSTICE. George W. Stone of Montgomery.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES. Thomas N. McClellan of Limestone. R. W. Watker of Madison. Thomas W. Coleman of Greene. James B. Head of Jefferson. Jonathan Haralson of Dallas. W. E. Clarke of Marengo. James R. Dowdell of Chambers.

Hon. W. D. Caddell, of Centreville, called to see us a few minutes on Wednesday last. He was on his way to Montgomery on official and fell and broke her arm. A physician was summoned immediately, the bone set and splinted, and the child was resting easy.

Died-In Ca'era on Wednesday Sepatorial delegation—J. S. Bridges, June 1st 1892. Will'e, infant daughter W. B. Reynolds, Henry Weldon, R. E. of Mr. W. M. Aldridge. Thus another, in heaven.

very good one, and the crowd was well pleased.

Col. W. D. Bulger, of Birming-

Mr. F. M. Gaines, of Nashville, the most popular and widely known drummer on the road, was in town this week, suffering from the effects of a severe cold.

The famous Shelby Springs have een opened to the public, and is quite ready to receive guests. The accommodations are excellent and the rates are reasonable. Mr. W. ocratic Club presided and J. E. Lowe H. Baker, will continue the manacted as Sec-'y. On motion a committee agement, and endeavor to make the

Remember that Russell the only voters of this place as regards the action | photographer will be in Calera only a > Children's Day, was celebrated at he Presbyterian church on the 29th ilt. The church was filled to overlowing at an early hour, the exercises, ousisting of recitations and music mmoncing at S p. m. The children acquitted themselves nice y, showing a high degree of training.

SOUTHERN FEMALE UNIVERSITY

Pail Terms begins September 15, Spring Term begins Janua-

Over 125 boarders, 20 teachers and officers. Full University curriculum. Five distinct courses, three which lead to the degrees. M. A., B. A., and at the best Universities. Handsomin the South. All the rooms halls and for four hundred boarders. Smead's improved system of heat and ventila tion. Lighted with gas and electricity Hot and cold water throughout Abundance of bathrooms and closets Parlors, library, reading rooms and Resolved 5th, That our earnest thanks gymnasium conveniently located $64.50; tuition, $25. Send for cata-

REV. L. D. BASS, D. D., Florence, Al:

Ayer's Pills

May always be relied upon as a certain cure for liver troubles, constipation, sick headache, biliousness, dyspepsia, jaundice, and rheumatism. Unlike most cathartics, Ayer's Pills strengthen the stomach, liver, and bowels, and restore to these organs their normal and regular action. Taken in season, they check the progress of colds, fevers, and malaria. Being purely vegetable and sugar-coated, Ayer's Pills are family medicine, while travelers, both by sea and land, find them to be indispensable. "We sell more of Ayer's Pills than of all other kinds put together, and they give perfect satisfaction."—Christensen & Haarlow, Druggists, Baldwin, Wis.

The Favorite

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years, and consider them an invaluable

Family Medicine

I know of no better remedy for liver troubles and dyspepsia."—James Quinn, Hartford, Ct. Capt. Chas. Mueller, of the steamship "Felicia," says: "For several years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else in the medicine chest, to regulate my bowels, and those of the ship's crew. These Pills are not severe in their action, but do their work thoroughly. I have used them, and with good effect, for the cure of rheumatism, kidney troubles, and dyspepsia."

Ayer's Pills

Dr. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass. Every Dose Effective.

sed.

Inavings and specifications prepared and filed the Patient Office on short notice. Terms very sonable. No charge for examination of models drawings. Advice by mail free tatents obtained through Munn&Co.arenoticed he SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, which has est circulation and is the most influential or of its kind published in the world antages of such a notice overy patentee unds.

urge and splendidly illustrated newspaper thed WFEKLIV at $3.00 a year, and is 1 to be the best paper devoted to science, inventions, ongineering works, and apartments of industrial progress, pub-1 any country. It contains the names of such in any country. It contains the names of il patentoes and title of every invention patented ach week. Try it four mouths for one dollar, old by all newedcalers. If you have an invention to patent write te lann Co., publishers of Scientific American, Broodway, New York.

Handbook about patents moiled free.

This would be a comparatively happy world the a comparatively happy world if everyoney knew the virtues of 3-HTH'S BILE BEANS as a family redicine, and acted upon that knowledge. One half the misery of the world comes from allments which arise from a bad stomach or a bad liver. Chiefest among these are dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache and Neuralgia.

BILE BEANS will cure all of these, besides all missmatic diseases. Dose besides all miasmatic diseases. Dose:

HUGH T. CAFFEY,

CALERA, ALA. feb12-1v.

The sum of two dollars was added to the cemetery fence fund from the proceeds of the Weston Show last Monday night. The show was a

A Weekly Newspaper.

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as lead to the degrees. M. A., B. A., and B. L. Special attention to Music and Art. Thorough Business Course. The scheme of study is framed with a view of offering to young women such that the scheme of study is framed with a view of offering to young women such that the scheme of study is framed with a view of offering to young women such that the scheme of study is framed with a view of offering to young women such that the scheme of study is framed with a view of offering to young women such that the scheme of study is framed with a view of offering to young women such that the scheme of study is framed with a view of offering to young women such that the scheme of study is framed with a view of offering to young women such that the scheme of study is framed with a view of offering to young women such that the scheme of study is framed with a view of offering to young women such that the scheme of study is framed with a view of offering to young women such that the scheme of study is framed with a view of offering to young women such that the scheme of study is framed with a view of offering to young women such that the scheme of the scheme of the state in a condensed form. It will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county, and the will be an especially valuable source.

facilties for obtaining a liberal education as are enjoyed by the young men at the best Universities. Handsomest and most complete school edifice every point in the county. We also want a correspondent at servant's attendance etc., five monhst Quikly, Neaty and Cheaply Done

≪JOB PRINTING>>

Commercial Printing a and Legal

THE JOURNAL will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets will be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

Now is the time for everyone who cherishes good health, to pay particular attention to the condition of their blood and its proper circulation. Nearly all diseases that flesh is heir to are caused and agravated by an impure condition of the blood and a sluggish circulation.

THE KING OF BLOOD PURIFIERS

Possessing Extraordinary Cleansing Powers Restoring and Strengthening the whole System, Enriching the Blood producing increased vitality by restoring an impaired digestion and bringing back the bloom of youth to the cheek of the enfeebled and emaciated.

Price, $1.00 per Bottle-6 Bottles for $5.00.

For Sale by All Druggists.

NABERS, MORROW & SINNIGE.

SOLE CONTROLERS,

8. It pays more money for its special

Birmingham.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION. Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT. 1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these deapers. a household word papers.

2. It is invaluable to the farmer and throughout the south.

the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to mus and a host of other special writers.

the household.

3. It covers the news of the whole world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thorough news service from every important news center in the world.

3. It is the People's Friend, and is the sturdy champion of the agricultural interests of the south. news center in the world. 4. Its Agricultural Department alone features and for its news service than is worth many times its subscription any other four of the weekly newspapers price to every farmer. This department of the south, and much more than any price to every farmer. This department of the south, and much more than any is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the lead-weekly newspaper in America. ing agricultural authority of the south, 9. It is the cheapest, being only One

ure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasone issue of the greatest weekly newsparation.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information.

THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

In the Spring
Nearly everybody needs a good medicine. The impurities which have accumulated in the blood during the cold months must be expelled. bracing air is lost, the body is liable to be overcome by debility or some serious disease. The remarkable success of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and the universal praise it has received, make it worthy your confidence. It is the "ideal Spring Medicine."

"It Is Invaluable."

"I have used Hood's Sarsaparilla in my family for the past four years, and for a thorough blood purifier it has no superior. It is invalu able as a spring medicine; it invigorates the whole system and tones up the stomach, and since I became acquainted with Hood's Sarsa parilla I always take several bottles in the

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures

Where other preparations fail. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is Peculiar to Itself.

HOOD'S PILL'S cure liver ills, constipa-

Mrs. E. J. Rowell, Medford, Mass., says her of four bottles of ment, and being much other treat.

after having had much other treat.

ment, and being reduced to quite a low condition of health, as it glass is gleen," "The lose is led," and Hindu's indifference in this regard.

cured my little boy tary scrofula which appeared all over his face. For a year I had givenup all hope of his recovery, when finally I was induced to use A fewbo ttles cured him, and no S.S.S. symptoms of the disease remain.

MRS. T. L. MATHERS, Matherville, Miss. Our book on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free. SWIFT SPECIFIC Co., Atlanta, Ga.

"August Flower"

Eight doctors treated me for Heart Disease and one for Rheumatism, but did me no good. I could not speak aloud. Everything that I took into the Stomrch distressed me. I could not sleep. I had taken all kinds of medicines. Through a neighbor I got one of your books. I procured a bottle of Green's August Flower and took it. I am to-day stout, hearty and strong and enjoy the best of health. August Flower saved my life and gave me my health. Mrs. Sarah J Cox, Defiance, O. @

CHILD BIRTH ... · · · MADE EASY!

"MOTHERS' FRIEND" is a scientifically prepared Liniment, every ingredient of recognized value and in constant use by the medical profession. These ingredients are combined in a manner hitherto unknown

"MOTHERS"

WILL DO all that is claimed for it AND MORE. It Shortens Labor, Lessens Pain, Diminishes Danger to Life of Mother and Child. Book to "Mothers" mailed FREE, containing valuable information and voluntary testimonials.

Sent by express on receipt of price $1.50 per bottle BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO., Atlanta, Ga.

for (Only 25c.

Book Publishing House,

DUTCHER'S DEAD SHOT Cents, at stores or by mail.

FRED'K DUTCHER & SONS,
St. Albans, Vt.

0000000000

SHORTHAND.

Address John J. Squier, Out out this adv.) Box 668. Eureka Springs. Ark

CHINESE ENGLISH.

Some Migtakes That Are Made by Writers of Dialect Stories.

It is well known that the Chinese cannot master the sound of the letter 'r," but this has proved the rock on which many professed writers of the Chinese dialect has come to grief. They do recognize the fact that while John Chinaman cannot make the "r" sound he is fertile in expedients to avoid it. Two illustrations will show how easy it is to blunder on this point. In an early edition of one of Bret Harte's stories-altered we believe in later editions-he makes a Chinese servant call himself "Ah Ri," which is a manifest impossibility. tongue, but not at all. But in the Chinaman call his employer "Mr. Fostel," his name being Foster. Now, no "Chinese person," to quote the restriction act, would ever say "Fostel." In the country police stations, He would soften the last syllable of where the European division of the the name and call it "Fostah," just as the name "Porter" in his mouth negro pronunciation of the same

The authoress of "A Summer in a Canon" has given a very good examwho wants to learn English. The "The grass is green," "The rose is red," and the like. Of course, they whose article we have gleaned, tells an amusing story to illustrate the an amusing story to illustrate the so on. The whole scene is a excellent study in broken China, says the San Francisco Chronicle, and is com-mended to ambitious Eastern writers convince the natives that a train alwho want to try their hands at English as she is spoken by the Chinese in California.

The letter "j" is another which presents difficulties to John, which, however, he usually resolves by making it into "ch." It may be slightly exaggerated to say that Chinese scholars in Sunday-school know the author and founder of the Christian faith as "Chee Cly," but it is not very far out gry commissioner. of the way. An American of this language, whose given name is "Jerome," is usually known among the goes from there!" Chinese as "Chee Loam," they, perhaps, imagining that that is all the name that belongs to him.

It should be noted, too, that the Chinese in California do not use the lingua franca called "pigeon English," which is employed in China. Such an expression as "My b'long topside," meaning "I live higher up, is never heard here. The Chinese in this State try to talk English, and some of them succeed fairly well, although the "r" and "j" are too much for them.

This is not an attempt at an exbut rather a note of warning to am- she looked to see tramp No. 2. bitious dialect from books. If they genuine "r" sound, and that such a looking object—a cur of low degree. word, for example, as "Berkley" is but something more nearly resembling "Bahkley," they will be saved No. 2 with them. from blunders which make their sketches and stories rather ludicrous called aloud: customed to the dialect.

Queer Facts About Eels.

the Fish Commission at Washington delicate-like in his appertite, and for a consignment of eels' eggs, to there's somethin' tells me, marm, stock a pond or stream, and the re- ain't got long to live. You don't quest is invariably refused. This is mind, marm, do yer, if I goes withnot due to any intentional desire to out to give it to my pard?" be disobliging, but because nobody knows whether eels lay eggs or not.

the question has been a puzzle to learned and unlearned for centuries.

Some authorities have contended that eels grow up from horsehairs, which, in some strange manner bethat they were generated spontanehave gravely advanced the belief that eyes. they came from the skins of old eels, or similar exuviæ of water snakes.

get their living from the water, however, is the theory that eels are the progeny of various other fishes. The Sardinian fisherman assert that they are produced by a certain kind of waits eggs in the sea, where no one has a chance to observe the process. Other fishes, like the shad, leave the ocean to spawn in fresh water streams, but this curious and slippery customer does precisely the reverse.

The young eels, newly born or hatched, leave the salt water and make their way in armies up the rivers. Obstacles apparently insurmountable they use the utmost ingenuity in passing, even traveling a considerable distance on dry land in order to get around an obstruction.

In the spring and summer any visitor at Niagara Falls, who descends than the others. beneath the great sheet of water at the foot of the falls, will see literally hundreds of cart-loads of small eels wriggling over the rocks and squirm-gon; Temeswar, Hungary; 'Trieste, ing over the whirlpools. Of course it is impossible for them to go over the falls, and thus it happens that, although eels have always been plentiful in Lake Ontario, there were none think of putting Montreal and Ottawa in Lake Erie until they had been planted in the latter body of water artificially.

Inasmuch, therefore, as eels must | Somework says experience is a comb go to the sea in order to propagate that you find after you have lost all their species, they are found not to your hair.

multiply at all when placed in ponds that are landlocked, although in such places they will grow rapidly and be healthy. It costs so little to purchase young ones by the quantity that this is no great obstacle to theusefulness of stocking inland waters with

In all probability eels lay eggs, just as do nearly all other fishes. only difference is that they deposit them in the sea instead of in fresh

The Hindu places a clock in his show-rooms, not because he ever desires to know what the hour is, but because a clock is a foreign curiosity. Instead, therefore, of contenting him His name would certainly have been self with one good clock, he will per-"Ah Li," for the initial "R" would haps have a dozen in one room. They not only come trippingly from his are signs of his wealth, but they do not add to his comfort, for he is so same or another story he makes a indifferent to time that he measures it by the number of bamboo-lengths the sun has travelled about the horihours is observed, time is measured by placing in a tub of water a copper would become "Potah," very like the pot in which a small hole has been bored. It is supposed that it will take one hour for the water to leak into the pot so as to fill and sink When the policeman sees that ple of the difficulties of the Chinese the pot has disappeared he strikes the with the letter "r." She makes one hour on a bell-like gong. If he is of heroines, a mischevious girl, select smoking or dozing, the copper pot a reading lesson for the Chinese cook, may have disappeared several minutes before he discovers the fact—but the

When the railway was first opened in a new part of India, it took a long time and many bitter experiences to ways started on time. Shortly after the opening of the new line, a Deputy Commissioner sent his native servant with his letter-bag to put on board the mail-car. Presently the man returned with the bag, having missed the train.

"You had not half a mile to go, and you knew that the train left the station at three o'clock," said the an-

"Yes, truly," answered the native, city, an interpreter of the Chinese in an aggrieved tone; "but, sahib, when it strikes three here, the train

Such sharp practice the native had never known before, and he did not think it creditable to the company.

Her Fellow Creatures.

"I'm very hungry, marm. Will ye please gimme somethin' to eat?"

The woman on Brainard street, at whose door the tramp knocked, gave him a piece of bread and some cold meat, and closed the door on him. Then she went to the window and saw him disappear in the alley, from which issued along, low whistle.

"Ha, conspirators," said the woman haustive study of Chinese English, aloud, "accomplices, no doubt;" and

And he came, slinking along from will but bear in mind that "r" does between the buildings on the opponot become '?" unless it carries the site side of the street, a sorry enough She watched and saw the tramp not "Beikley" in the Chinese tongue, breaking the bread and meat into small fragments, and feeding tramp

The woman raised the window and

I don't give away Hello, therei good vittles to feed a dog." "Oh, marm," said the tramp, humbly, "he's my pard, and he's Occasionally some one applies to more hungrier than me, an' he's kinder

The woman slammed down the window, sniffed a minute, then went As to breeding, the eel is the most into the pantry and gathered up all mysterious animal in existence, and the loose pieces of breac and meat and cheese and pie she could find.

Then she called to the tramp: "Take these, and what you can't eat you can carry along. I don't go should not adore Him, if we could much on dogs as a general thing, but come vitalized. Others have held you might be in worse company. Anyhow, I'm not going to see two of ously from slime, while others still my fellow creatures starve before my

And she resumed her interrupted work with a blessed consciousness of Most popular among people who having done the duty that lay nearest to her.—Free Press.

Footprints on Ancient Sands.

There was recently received at Denver a piece of a rock which was once ter beetle, which for this reason is called mother of eels.

tramped on by several pairs of small and well formed feet. The rock All this mystery about the eel, as must have been soft at that time, for science has learned in the last few the impress of two sandals is plainly years, is due to the fact that it lays outlined, just as if a cast had been made to show the inhabitants of the coming ages how artistically beautiful were the feet of those who wandered in the mountains before the invasion of the white men. The rock was found near the brickyards at Golden, Col. It seems to be of an ordinary limestone formation, except the surface where the prints are, which resembles sandstone which has been worn smooth by water. One indentation is particularly noticeable. Although similar in size and contour to those made by sandals, it has a heel-mark which is sharp and deeper

Wouldn't Think It, Would You?

St. Johns, Newfoundland; Montreal and Ottawa, Canada; Portland, Ore-Austria, and Venice, Padua, Verona, Mantua, Milan, and Turin, Italy, are all situated between 45 and 46 degrees of north latitude. Who would in the same latitude as Venice and Verona?

FIGS AND THISTLES.

Weekly Winnowing of the Epigrammatic

MALL people like to be made much of.

THE candle is not seen until it is lighted. "HE that covcreth his sins shall not prosper. THE man who buries his talent buries him-

Nobody can be happy without first being useful.

Every big devil was once an innocent-looking imp. PEOPLE who claim to love God should not hate soap. God is dead to us until we find out that he loves us. WHEN children get hungry they cry for bread, not pie.

"Every one of us shall give account of himself to God." IF your burden is heavy it is not the burden of Christ. Every step we take in grace makes our Bible bigger. Our best successes are built upon a foundation of failures.

THE cross we pick out for ourselves is always the heaviest. To REJECT God's word means that you have rejected his Christ. An optimist is a man who believes that all eggs will hatch. "To HIM that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." THE only people who love the world are those who do not love Christ.

God is not in the revival that winds up with a church entertain-UNTIL you can see God in your own heart you can not see Him anywhere. CHRIST only had to say, "It is written," three times to make the devil

"THE eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the

God is a stranger in the world where He can not prove that He can

THE nearer a Christian gets to Christ the more charity he has for A PESSIMIST is a man who believes that all the chestnuts have worms in them.

"HAPPY is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he al-THE worst thing about some business men's failures is the failure of conscience. It is only in a world where there is suffering that God can prove that He

As sure as you undertake to fight the devil with fire you will get the worst of it.

THE Christian is the only man who can go straight forward while looking straight up.

THE devil's power over us is destroyed when we find out that God loves us.

THE money that is the root of all evil is the money that is in another's

THE children of a millionaire never get much acquainted with their father. THE Christian army divided, is beaten as Napoleon defeated his enemies—in detail. "God is a Spirit; and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

HEAVEN means more to those in it because of what they see of God's doings on earth.

THE less religion there is in a church the more oysters and ice cream it takes to run it.

God does nothing for which we know the whole truth.

A Hirsute Humbug.

The American Analyst is a journal published in New York, and is of very modest, unpretentious size. But the character of its contents more than compensates for this disadvantage, if indeed it be a disadvantage. The Analyst is each week a veritable gold mine of reliable information. From it we quote the following:

"Ladies should be careful how they use vaseline on the face, for the result of a number of experiments has induced the suspicion that a persistent use of it will cause hair to grow on almost any part of the face. There have been instances known of ladies inducing a heavy growth of hair on the upper lip and chin by using vaseline to drive away pimples Like some other medicaments, vaseline is too new to allow of all its properties being yet fully known, but the fact that it will induce a growth of hair, if persistently used, seems to be fairly well settled." The above clipping is going the rounds of the press, and being seemingly valuable information, is extensively copied. It is really an advertisement in disguise for the concern which manufactures vaseline, and claims to have the exclusive right to sell pumpwax under that name. The worst of it is that it contains an unmitigated untruth. Vaseline will not make the hair grow, but not being a true fat acid is really injurious to the scalp. Our advice is to avoid it. This bubble about the virtues of vaseline must be pricked. Some time ago a similar squib went the rounds of newspapers, wherein vaseline was recommended as a good application for shoes and leather. Every currier can tell you that it is absolutely injurious. Let it alone.

We offer One Hundred Dollars reward fixe any case of catarrh that cannot be cured by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & Co., Props., Toledo, O. We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last is years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions, and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm. ligations made by their firm. WEST & TRUAX, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo.

O.
WALDING, KINNAN & MARVIN, Wholesale Druggiste, Toledo, O.
Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, actfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free,
Price 75c. per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD? These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, EMAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE.

It is reported that 100 tons of exhibits for the exposition have already been collected and are awaiting shipment at Lima and

A Racine, Wis., firm is planning to have a complete tannery in operation at the exposi-

When Traveling

Whether on pleasure bent, or business, take on every trip a bottle of Syrup of Figs, as it acts most pleasantly and effectively on the kidneys, liver and bowels, preventing fevers, headaches and other forms of sickness. For sale in 50 cents and $1 bottles by all leading Chauncey M. Depew has been elected president of New York's world's fair board.

MALARIA cured and eradicated from the system by Brown's Iron Bitters, which en-riches the blood, tones the nerves, aids diges-tion. Acts like a charm on persons in general ill health, giving new energy and strength.

The woolen manufacturers have resolved to make a united exhibit at the fair

Under all circumstances, under all conditions, under all influences, Bradycrotine will promptly cure all headaches. All druggists, fifty cents. BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on the vital organs, restore lost complexion and bring back the keen edge of appetite.

If afflicted with sore eyes use Dr. IsaacThompson's Eye-water. Druggists sell at 25c a bottle

Scott's Emulsion of codliver oil is an easy food—it is more than food, if you please; but it is a food-to bring back plumpness to those who have lost it.

Do you know what it is to be plump?

Thinness is poverty, living from hand to mouth. To be plump is to have a little more than enough, a reserve

Do you want a reserve of health? Let us send you a book on CAREFUL LIVING;

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, 132 South 5th Avenue, New York. Your druggist keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil—all druggists everywhere do. $1.

In the place of a woman who's weak, ailing, and miserable, why not be a woman who's healthy, happy, and strong? You can be. You needn't experiment. The change is made, safely and surely, with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

It's a matter that rests with you. Here is the medicine—the only one for woman's peculiar weaknesses and diseases that's guaranteed to help you. It must give satisfaction, in every case, or the money is promptly returned. Take it, and vou're a new woman. You can afford to make the trial, for you've nothing to lose.

But do you need to be urged?

You don't want size in a pill-it means disturbance. You want results. With Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, smallest, cheapest, easiest to take, you get the best results. Sick Headache, Biliousness, Constipation, Indigestion, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels are prevented, relieved, and cured.

RELIEVES all Stomach Distress. REMOVES Nausea, Sense of Fu. mess. Congestion, Pain. REVIVES FAILING ENERGY. RESTORES Normal Circulation, and WARMS TO TOE TIPS.

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, No.

Best in the World for the price.

For GENTLEMEN. $5.00 Genuine Hand-Sewed. $4.00 Hand-Sewed Welt Shoe. 53.50 Police and Farmer.

$2.50 Extra Value Calf Shoe, $2.25 Working-man's Shoe $2.00 Goodwear Sho

$3.00 Hand $2.50 Best Dongola.

$2.00 Calf and Dongola. $1.75 MISSES. For BOYS' & YOUTH'S. $2 & $1.75 SCHOOL SHOES.

For LADIES.

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTES. IT IS A DUTY you owe to yourself and your family, during these hard times, to get the most value for your money. You can economize in your footwear if you purchase W. L. Douglas' Shoes, which, without question, represent a greater value for the money than any other makes.

CAUTION. W.L. DOUGLAS' name and the price is stamped on the bottom of each shoe, which protects the consumer against high prices and inferior shoes. Beware of dealers who acknowledge the superiority of W. L. Douglas' Shoes by attempting to substitute other makes for them. Such substitutions are fraudulent, and subject to prosecution by law, for obtaining money under false pretences. W. L. DOUGLAS, Brockton, Mass.

If not for sale in your place send direct to factory, stating kind, size and width wanted. Postage tree. AGENTS WANTED. Will give exclusive sale to show dealers where I have no agent and advertise them tree in local paper,

A Song for Her. Sing for her, mockingbird,

Your warm breast heaving in the sunbright blossoms: Sing sweeter songs than we have ever heard. Until the wild heart of the world is stirred. And love wakes wondering in a thousand bosoms!

Sing for her, lark of dawn, When on your breast the lofty light is gleam-

Sing sweet, and bear the message on and on-Higher and higher, till the world is gone, And at God's gates the melody is dreaming!

Sing for her, whip-poor-will, Your sweet voice ringing from the twilight covers.

Where stars stream splendid over vale and hill;

Sing sweet, until your melting notes shall thrill And throng the wide, awakened world with lovers! Sing, mockingbird! Sing, lark!

Sing, whip-poor-will--your songs in concert

Sing in the dewy dawn-sing in the dark; But while ye make your sweetest music. bark!

A sweeter song to her my soul is singing! -[Frank L. Stanton, in Atlanta Constitution.

Miss Vervain's Mistake.

BY AMY RANDOLPH.

March in the mountains! Freshets roaring down the ravines; great thickets of pines tossing their green crests to and fro in the rush of the tempestuous wind; snow shining off on the plateaus, and pink clusters of trailing arbutus breaking into bloom in southern nooks and sheltered places not yet drifted away. And Lucy Vervain, standing in her russet walkingdress on the porch of the little mountain inn, wondered if the famous Bernese Alps were grander than these same Catskill heights.

Lucy Vervain was small and slight pardon any shortcomings." and brown-skinned, but she had large, wistful eyes of so dark a hazel that they seemed to melt into black around the iris, and there were quick roses said she, haughtily. ready to deepen in her cheeks if any one spoke to her. She was pretty, in her way, like a wild-flower, or a little brown-winged bird, and she looked around with a troubled air, as the man in a snuff-colored suit, who sat sound of an excited feminine voice at the head of the well-spread board. floated out from the one unpretentious little "best parlor" of the inn.

Vervain.

"I'm very sorry, ma'am," said Mr. Mixit, who kept the house.

"Unendurable!" declared Miss Ver-vain.

"It does happen, sometimes, ma'am, when the streams is high, at the spring of the year," the landlord pleaded. "You see, there ain't no bridge that will stand the freshets,

"And we have got to stay here, in this horrid hole of a place, until your tumble-down bridge is mended?"

"I don't see any other way for you, ma'am," said Mr. Mixit, meekly. "It's the most provoking thing I Vervain.

She stalked about the room like a second Lady Macbeth, as she spoke. For Clara was as unlike her blushing, shrinking little sister as the tall poppy is to the humble corn-flower. She was handsome and stately, and wore long trains to her dresses and bangles on her wrists, and used perfume on after the latest fashion-plates. "It ain't my fault, ma'am," said the landlord, driven to the very confines of despair. "I can't stop the freshet, nor yet I can't build a new her handkerchiefs and "did" her hair to be so annoyed," soothed Lucy, are not favored with many travelers." coming like a noiseless little gray shadow into the room. "We shall only be detained a day, after all, and I am sure it is very pleasant here."

1 "I am not accustomed to delays," said Miss Vervain, loftily. "I know, dear, but-"

bridge."

"And if I am compelled to remain In such a place as this," added Clara, glancing superciliously around her, "I must really insist upon privacy."

"Eh?" said Mr. Mixit. "That old person in the snuff-colored mean to hurt your feelings, and-" coat." said Miss Vervain, with a royal tant window, "I dare say he will do very well in your kitchen or barroom, and I prefer this apartment to myself."

"Oh, Clara!" pleaded Lucy, crimsoning to the very roots of her hair.

The landlord looked puzzled, but it. the old man himself folded his newspaper, returned his spectacles to their case, and rose slowly to his

"Certainly, miss," said he; "certainly. If I'm intruding, I'll go to the kitchen. There's always room for me there. Eh, Mixit?"

And he trudged with alacrity out of the room, followed by mine host.

"I'm afraid you've hurt his feelings, Clara," said Lucy, piteously. "Who cares for his feelings?" said

Miss Vervain, sniffing at her scent bottles. "Mine are much more to the purpose. And I don't choose to associate with every farmer in the Catskills."

"Clara, dear!"

"Well?"

"We are only a bookkeeper's daughters ourselves."

"As if that signified," said Miss Vervain, scornfully. "We are going to our aristocratic ralations, aren't we?"

"But perhaps they won't care to keep us." "That is neither here nor there," said Miss Vervain, "but you never had any proper pride, Lucy."

Little Lucy Vervain was still pondering, with a puzzled brow over the distinction between proper pride and pride that was not proper, when the landlord's wife, a buxom dame in madder-red calico and a frilled white | chamber. where last winter's dead leaves had apron, came to summon the guests to

> "We've only a roast fowl, with bread sauce and a little cranberry jelly," said Mrs. Mixit; "but it ain't often as folks stop here over a meal, and I hope, ladies, as you'll kindly

But Miss Vervain stopped short on the very threshold of the dining room. "I should prefer a table to myself," "Ma'am !" said Mrs. Mixit.

"Dear Clara," pleaded Lucy, in an agony of distress, as she saw the red flush rise to the forehead of the old

"I prefer dining with my sister, only," insisted Miss Vervain, delight-"It's outrageous!" said Miss Clara ed with an opportunity of asserting "Really, I cannot ner exclusiveness. imagine how people can obtrude themselves in this sort of way."

> The old man rose quietly. "Do I understand, young woman," said he, "that you object to me!"

"Yes, sir, I do object to you-if you compel me to put it in that way," said Miss Vervain.

"Indeed!" The old man lifted his grizzled brows. "I may not be one of vour fashionable fops-"

"That is easily to be seen," contemptuously interpolated the young

"But I am clean and decent," added the stranger. "However, I dare say ever knew in my life," said Miss Mrs. Mixit can accommodate me with a plate and knife and fork in another room, if my presence is really obnoxious to these young women."

> "Young ladies, sir, if you please," said Miss Vervain, with a toss of her head.

> He smiled a shrewd, sagacious

"As to that," said he, "opinions may perhaps differ." And he followed Mrs. Mixit into the kitchen.

Clara Vervain took her seat complacently at the table.

"These people will begin after awhile to comprehend the difference between a lady and a shop-girl," said "Clara, dear, don't allow yourself she. "It is quite evident that they

> Half an hour afterward, as the old man in the snuff-colored suit was stepping into his plain, little carriage, a soft hand touched his sleeve, and turning, he found himself looking into Lucy Vervain's troubled brown

"Well, my dear," said he, kindly, "what is it?"

"I-I only wanted to beg your pardon, sir," faltered the little brunette. "I am sure my sister did not

"I am sure, at all events, that you motion of her head toward an old did not," said the old man, kindly. gentleman in a wig and spectacles "And I dare say that your sister who was reading the paper by a dis- will be wiser one of these days!"

And thus speaking, he nodded goodhumoredly, and drove away.

It was nearly dark, however, before the clumbsy carryall which was to convev the two New York ladies to their destination arrived, and they entered

"To Cliff Hall," said Miss Vervain. haughtily, as she leaned back in the seat, and settled her skirts languidly around her.

"Cliff Hall!" said Mr. Mixit

"You don't mean as you're going to Cliff Hall?" echoed Mrs. Mixit.

"I think we have considerably astonished these good people," said Miss Vervain, with a smile, as they rattled away from the door,

"I only hope our Uncle Cliff will receive us kindly," sighed poor Lucy. Cliff Hall was a substantial old mansion built of gray stone, with a succession of terraces falling down the mountain's side, and exquisite groups of statuary half-hidden in the forest trees; and the lights were already beginning to gleam hospitably along its front as they drove up. An old manservant opened the outside door just far enough to reveal the cheery glow of a wood fire, and the deep tints of a crimson Axminster carpet within.

"Is my Uncle Cliff at home?" said Miss Vervain, with an air and a

"Mr. Cliff is-ay, mem," answered the servant, with a strong Scotch ac-

"Tell him his nieces from New York are here-the Misses Vervain," said Clara, as she swept into the ante-

As she entered, an old man dressed in snuff-brown rose from before the blazing logs.

"My nieces from New York, eh?" said Caleb Cliff. "They are wel-

And to Miss Vervain's surprise and dismay, she found herself face to face with the old man of the Catskill way-"You are astonished?" said he.

slightly arching his brows. "So am 1. It is not always best to judge by appearances. Sit down. Sanders," to the servant, "let dinner be served."

Miss Clara Vervain left Cliff Hall the next day, with all her bright anticipations shattered to the dust. But little brown-faced Lucy stayed to keep house for her uncle.

"She's too genteel for us, isn't she?" chuckled old Caleb Cliff as the cariage drove away which was to carry Miss Vervain to the New York station.

Clara went back to her teaching, and if the bitter tears of repentant mortification can wash out the past that day in the Catskills would have been erased long ago.

"If I had only known who he was," said Miss Vervain.

Alas! this world is full of "ifs!"-The Ledger.

The Dutch Stove.

I am a convert to the German system of house heating. The "Dutch stove" has been regarded as an expression so contemptous as to be derisive. It is an institution possessing the largest merits. The usual stove in Berlin is a tower of porcelain, bound in brass, extending nearly to the ceiling, and an article of furniture pleasant to look upon. Stoves are artistic and not fantastic. They get the most out of fuel, and are clean. Within a few inches of the floor is a thin brass door, not larger than a sheet of foolscap paper. It has a light latch, and, open, discloses a solid iron door of the same size, and on a button hangs the key to a screw. Apply the key and open the door, and within is a third door with air-holes. Open that and there is a chamber for

The Germans have kindling in small lumps, that make a fire a sure thing, and little black bricks of compressed slack, stuck together with a tarry paste. Start the fire and close the inner door, and when the bricks are glowing shut the second door, screw it up tight, swinging the outer door into its place, and you need no more fire for twenty-four hours. The porcelain tower becomes warm, but not blistering hot, and diffuses warmth that is wholesome and comfortable. It is magical that so much heat can be evolved from so little fuel, and that the process should be one of absolute cleanliness.

SALMON CANNING.

A Prominent Industry on the Pacific Coast.

Cutting up. Packing and Cooking the Fish.

When one comes to think of it it seems quite wonderful that one should be able to buy a pound of salmon in a can from the Pacific coast for 25 cents. The frozen fish costs 40 cents ty of being shot on sight. Therefore a pound at least, while the unfrozen they do not fish .- [Washington Star. article ranges in Eastern markets from $1 up. Besides, the manner in which each can is made to contain a segment of salmon perfectly fitted into it appears most surprising, the bones, even to the larger vertebræ, melting in the mouth without requiring so much as a crunch between the teeth and the red flesh separating in beautiful, clean flakes.

Yet salmon would be very much cheaper than at present were it not that the great cannors of Alaska have formed a combination to restrict the product. This is unfortunate for consumers, pershaps, but lucky, certainly for the fish, which would be wiped out altogether within five years at the most if the companies engaged in their capture had a market for all they could produce at profitable rates. The methods employed are the most destructive conceivable, inasmuch as the fishermen stretch seines across the mouths of the rivers and take the fish which are going up the stream to spawn. There is a law against this sort of thing, but it is not enforced. Eventually, doubtless, the supply of this valuable finny game will run out and artificial propagation will have to be resorted to. The salmon caught in the seines and gill nets are brought to the caunery wharf, counted and thrown into heaps. Chinamen, their labors being cheaper, are mostly employed for subsequent operations. They take each fish, cut off the head, tail and fins, remove the entrails and throw the rest of the animal into a big tub. Next the fish is washed and placed in a trough, where several knives, acting after the manner of a feed cutter, slice it into sections exactly as long as the height of the can. These sections are set on end and split into three pieces eachone piece large enough to fill the can, while the others are smaller. The fragments are then placed on tables and the Chinamen fit them into the cans. Next the covers are put on the cans and soldered.

After being soldered the cans are put into hot water and watched in order to see if any bubbles rise, indicating leaks. Those which indure this test successfully are placed in an iron tank and boiled in salt water. Salt water is used in preference to fresh, because it can be raised to a higher temperature. After boiling for one hour and a quarter each can is "yented." This means that a hole is punched in its top to permit the expanded air to escape. Then the hole is soldered up, and the cooking is finished by further boiling in salt water for an hour and a half. If they were not "vented" this second cooking would burst the caus. Finally, each can is tested by tapping it on the head with a big nail. If leaky, it will usually give back a "tinny" sound. Great care is taken to avoid leaky cans, because any which are not hermetically sealed will envariably burst. The meat decays, pushing up the top of the cans. One so affected is called "swell-head." If it bursts, it is likely to ruin the whole case. Three salmon will ordinarily fill forty-eight one-pound cans, making one case. The cans are made on the premises out of sheet tin.

Within the last few years the manufacture of oil from salmon heads has been undertaken with profit. The heads are bought from the canneries at the rate of 1000 for $1. One factory produces as much as 18,000 gallons a year, worth 24 cents a gallon. The heads are cooked by steam and the oil is run off the tops of the vats. One thousand heads make from thirty to thirty-five gallons of oil. It is not disposed of by itself as a commercial article, but is mixed as an adulterant with other and more costly oils. Salmon intended for smoking are first scrubbed and dried, after which they are hung pass. - [New York Dispatch.

up in the smoke house, where a slow fire is kept burning. One week is re- You fellers from the country-you keep quired for the smoking process. Seal and sea lions are a great nuisance to the salmon fishermen. At the mouth of the Columbia River they watch the gill nets and grab the caught salmon by the throats, devouring those parts which they regard especially as tidbits. Bears are very fond of salmon aud catch a great many of them in the streams. They eat only the heads. Chinamen are forbidden to fish for salmon in the Columbia River on penal-

Contrich Mr.

Spontaneous Combustion.

The theory of spontaneous combustion of the human body in former times was held by almost every expert. French scientists, in particular, supported it, and several of them published pamphlets in which numerous cases of alleged spontaneous combustion of the human body were described at length, but there are three very significant points to be noticed in connection with such reports.

One is the invariable admission that there was a light or fire in the room where the catastrophe occurred; another, that the alleged instances always happened in families composed of ignorant persons, and another, that in no case was there any actual witness of the occurrence. Something like seventy-five per cent. of the human body consists of water. This fact in itself is sufficient to discredit any of the allege: tinstances of spontaneous combustion.

It is just conceivable that persons who drink an enormous amount of spirituous liquors may become so saturated, as it were, with this inflammable material that their bodies burn more easily than would those of people who do not overindulge in this way, but it is perfectly certain that the fire would have to be applied from without, for no such thing as spon- jail. "Yes," was the doleful reply, taneous combustion could be pssible iu | "an' most of 'em convictions." an article containing so great a preponderance of the liquid elements as does the human body .-- Boston Trans-

Switched Off the Track.

The next time you meet a succeedsful man ask him if he succeeded in just the way he expected to succeed when he started on his career in life. His answer is practically certain to be in the negative. Mr. Gladstone, the famous British statesman, started out as a theological student, and expected to become a clergyman. Mr. Morse, who invented the electric telegraph, was a painter. Artemas Martin, one of the greatest of mathematicians, began life a market gardener. Mr. Carnegie, the iron manufacturer. started as a telegraph operator. Geo. du Maurier, who is one of the greatest of caricaturists-men able to make work." pictures in which the peculiarities of a person, the oddities of a thing, or the fad of the time are so exaggerated as to make them appear ridiculouswanted to become a musician, both of his parents being accomplished musicians. The latter did not wish him to be a musician and so they undertook to make a chemist of him. George tried chemistry and went so far as to graduate and have one or two commissions. But he could not succeed. So he left retorts and music, and like most other successful men, won success in a field of work that neither he nor his parents had at first mapped out for him .- [Harper's Young Peo-

Pass of St. Bernard. The Pass of St. Bernard over the mountain of the same name, is famous in military history, two great armies at widely different periods of time having marched over it. Under the shadow of its great peak Hannibal led the Carthagenians, and by the same route 2000 years later, Napoleon's army marched to Marengo. The mountain takes its name from the monastery of St. Bernard, still to be seen on the summit. This is one of the oldest religious establishments in the world, having been founded A. D. 962, and kept up ever since by successive generations of monks. The railroad tunnel between Italy and France have left the Pass of St. Bernard desolate, but a few monks still remain to entertain travellers who, from whim or caprice, prefer the toilsome passage through the

A Dream of the Fields.

away from town, If you don't want to unsettle things and get us up-side down;

For you always leave a memory of the meadows and the streams, An' I straightway get to wishin' and to tishin' in my dreams.' You fellers from the country-when you strike me at my desk The room begins to blossom an' the street looks picturesque! And the roarin' of the city with its engines an' its bells.

Seems to melt into the music of the mountains and the dells

You fellers from the country-you get so much of life-So little of its sorrow of its tears and of its

That I want to get off with you and just riot in your joy, And wade in your cool branches, like I used to, when a boy!

- [Atlanta Constitution.

HUMOROUS.

The question of the hour-"What time is it?"

Teacher-When does rain return to the sky? Scholar-In dew sea-It is usually a man who has a head like a cork who gets along best in the He (mysteriously)-Can you keep a secret? She (ingenuously)-I don't know; I never tried to. "Now that I have my brand-new train," She said, with joyous smile;

"I think I'll take a little walk And clean the streets awhile." A dog is more sensible than a man. He will speak before eating, but he never indulges in post prandial elo-

Mrs. Gay-How do you like your new home? Fine landscape, I suppose? Mrs. Glum-No; but there are two fire 'scapes.

"Life is full of trials, you know," said the missionary to the man in

The plagiarist should not be scored, Though he's a sorry elf; You'd probably be vastly bored By what he thought himself.

Bagby-I have often wondered how a blind man can tell what sort of food he is eating. Leslie-Easy enough if he has an eyetooth.

Johnny-I do wish that I were grown. Mother-What for? Johnny -So I could get a shave instead of aving my face washed. Dust, according to Home and Farm, of Louisville, was defined by a precocious child as "mud with juice squeezed out," and snow as "popped rain." "I'll give you this fountain pen," said the old gentleman to his son. "Thank you." "It's the most fitting Girls, never throw yourselves at men. Or you may learn too late That girls may throw and throw again-

But never can throw straight.

gift I could think of." "It won't

"Look here, barber, you nearly cut my throat," roared Hicks. "I admit I told you I wanted a close shave, but I didn't mean a narrow escape by a good deal." Ethel-What did you mean by telling Jesse I was the biggest flat you ever knew? George-I meant that er -vou were the most level-headed girl in town. A woman had a secret which-The tale is true; pray note it-Although 'twas full of gossip rich She nevertold. She wrote it.

Visitor (to little Johnny) -Are the students in your class very bright? Johnnie-Guess you'd think we ought to be if you'd see the polishing off some of us get every day.

Alarmed Wife-Surely they don't suspect you of having been bribed? Alderman from the 'Steenth Ward (righteously indignant) -- My reputatation for honesty, Alvira, is-h'maway beyond suspicion!

How a Camel is Loaded. The ordinary load for a camel is 600 pounds for a long journey, though if the journey is to last only a week or ten days, 1000 weight is frequently placed on the back of an average animal, but not without strenuous objection on the part of the beast, which watches the process of loading with great anxiety, and frequently interrupis it by rising and refusing to kneel to receive more.

THE CALERA JOURNAL. FRANK W. GIST. EDITOR.

CALERA SATURDAY, JUNE 14.

FOR GOVERNOR, THCMAS GOODE JONES. FOR SECRETARY OF SLATE,

J. D. BARRON, of Clay. ATTORNEY GANERAL, W. L. MARTIN, of Jackson. EOR AUDITOR.

J. W. PURIFOY, of Wilcox.

FOR TREASURER,
J. CRAIG SMITH, of Dallas. SUPERINTENDENT OF EDUCATION, JOHN G. HARRIS, of Sumter. COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE. HECTOR D. LANE, of Limestone.

For Chief Justice of Snpreme Court. GEORGE W. STONE, of Montgomery Associate Justices, T. W. COLEMAN, of Greene.
THOS. N. McCLELLAN, of Limestone.
JAMES B. HEAD, of Jefferson,
JON. HARRALSON, of Dallas.

COUNTY DEMOCRATIC TICKET For Representative, JOHN P. WEST. For Probate Judge, JOHN S. LEEPER. For Sheriff, HENCEY W. NELSON. For Tax Assessor, JOHN H. HAMMONDS. For Tax Collector, AB. F. SMITH. For Treasurer, — THOMPSON. For Supt. Of Education.

For County Commissioners, 1st. Dist.-JAMES McGOWAN. 2nd. Dist.—RUFUS WALKER. 3rd. Dist.-RICHARD GRIFFIN. 4th. Dist.-A. M. Jones.

F. O. DAWSON.

THE People's Advocate, A. P. Longshore's third party organ at "Coontown," smacks of Baltzellism this week. Wonder if the editor hasn't been taking some lessons from the Alliance Herald?

Gov. Thos. WATTS-the grand old man- in the Cleveland meeting Thursday night, moved to change Grover Cleveland of New York, to Grover Cleveland, of America. We move to amend by adding Thos. G. Jones, of Alabama, instead of Thos. .G. Jones, of Montgomery county.

THE democratic state convention made a good selection in appcinting Walter R. Oliver, of this place, as alternate elternate elter for the 4th district. Me. Oliver is an educated he has his cars; the law protects man, a fluent speaker, and Calera him when he obeys it, and only diswith the honor so worthily confer-

THE action of L. C. Ramsey in refusing to accept the nomination of the Kolb "rump convention," and going before the democrats to whom he had submitted his claim in the beginning, was no surprise to us. Our knowledge of Mr. Ramsey as a man and as a democrat, lead us to that faith in his loyalty to democracy keeps him out of such political farces. Mr. Ramsey is our choice for secretary of state when Mr. Barron serves this term.

Burn-his-arm-off Adams, has been rewarded with the last place on a ticket that can make no show for claims on the democratic, republican or third party. A fitting place for a demagogue who has assumed to control and lead one class against other classes. He should now begin his preparations for a long absence from the home of his birth, for he is now in the "Kaboos" and Kolb, Collier & Co. have started on his long looked-for "excursion to the moon." The special train will not stop till it arrives at Salt Lake.

THE People's Advocate, a promoter of politics, published in Columbiana, jumps upon the Journal with the old charge that the democratic party has brought no relief to the people, and challenges us to the proof, You will have to ex- dent, to dampen his ardernt zeal for cuse us from attempting to prove the democratic ticket, and to preanything to the satisfaction of a vent his opposition to the third blinded and wilfully ignorant advocate of third party principles. The You'll hear from Mr. McMillan in man who knows the history of this the campaign. state for the past thirty years, and says that the democratic party has

THE STATE CONVENTION.

No one is surprised at the turn things have taken in the State cam-Entered at the Post Office in Calera as paign. Every one expected Kolb Second Class Matter. to bolt the democratic convention and he did so. He stands today in the light of a disaffected demo-DEMOCRATIC STATE TICKET, erat, and presents to the world the ridiculous spectacle of an independent state ticket.

> The executive committee gave him a fair deal in the matter of contests, even setting aside the claims of good democrats for the sake of that fairness, but not satisfied with justice he went away into the worship of strange idols. He and the men who follow him are worse than enemies to the state's interests than the republicans. Theirs is the policy to rule or ruin, and only the fidelity of the people can keep the latter from being the result.

Alabama is in the throes of a political revolution such as has only ceen parralled by the Mahonizing of Virginia. It must be handled in the same way; brave, true and sensible men will come to the front prouder still that its ranks have been freed from the turbulent element which seeks its destruction.

Gov. Jones and the true democracy have won a victory which is a tribute to manhood, intelligence and honest administration. ticket will be elected. In the meantime there will be battles to fight, breaches to heal, and the de mocracy must be on the aggressive. In council she has been conservative and just, in battle she must be bold and fearless, showing no quarter to them who dared to set up an altar to a false god.

WE favor the protection of the colored race in their legal rights, and should them encouragement and aid in the attainment of a higher civilization and citizenship, so men. that through the means of kindness, fair treatment and just regard for them, a better understanding and more satisfaciory condition may exilt between the races.

The above is a plank in the Kolb platform, and is a specimen of the democracy which emanates from such a source. What rights is due the negro but is given to him already? He has the right to worship God and he has his churches; he has the right to educate his children and he has schools; he has the right to public transportation and and the entire district are pleased obedience brings punishment. What else would they give him? Probably they would have force bills passed, or have him sit on juries, or enter your hotels, or visit your homes. This plank is a bid for the negro vote, and they who stoop so low may have it. Democracy is white, white supremacy, and so long as southern manhood and intelligence lasts, democracy need make no such bid for help from the masses of ignorance and crime. God forbid that the Journal will have to record any white man in Shelby county as forgetting his decency and manhood to support such a

> "Just let me ask a question there," said a level headed farmer the other day to a third party man who was talking about the corruption of the two old parties and the necessity of forming a new one, "where are you going to get your members for your new party?' "From the two old parties, of course," was the answer. "But how are you going to make a good thing out of two old rotten things?' was next asked. It was a stunner and has not yet been answered .-Newton Enterprise.

> THE new People's porty organ has quite an eulogistic article on Hon. R. D. McMillan's democracy and crow-eating, hoping, it is eviparty movement. It won't do Bro.

Kolb at the head and Adams as brought no releif is either blind or the tail, makes a flaming (?) ticket a fool. In either case he could not for sovereigs of our great state on a presidential year.

The Best Place to Secure a Business Education is at the

NEW YORK

OLLEGE: COMME

HERETVINING FRANKA, PARAFA,

Send for Circular,

LEONARD LIPPMAN, President.

G. F. HART, Secretary and Treasurer.

THE NOMINEES.

M. M. FIELDS, Vice President

The Democratic convention of Shelby county has been held and a tried democrats is ample recomfor representative, is one of the ticket. oldest citizens in the county, is evwants, his experience as a legisla- support him in August. tor, and his large and influential families in the state, besides his ex- vote of the party. perience in business, the utmost place, and no man, without regard most important of the local offices. to political opinion, can be hurt or hurt Shelby county by supporting J. S. Leeper.

sary for us to state that he is well on it. qualified, and if elected he will make the people a good, honest and faithful officer.

W. R. A. Milner, the candidate for circuit clerk, is too well known to need commendation at our hands. The fact that he was nominated by acclamation for the responsible office which he has so faithfully fill ed for six years is sufficient evidence that he is fitted for the position, and being an invalid he needs

John H. Hammond, the one-leged exconfederate soldier, and nomihimself the reputaion of a successful school teacher, and is a democrat of the Jeffersonian stripe—with all the qualifications it takes to make up a true man. As we hear the cry daily from the reformers for 'the best men for office," we can promise that the call is answered in the convention's choice for assessor, John H. Hammond.

Notwithstanding, Ab. F. Smith, the candidate put forth by the convention for collector, is a native of "lawless Bibb," his character as a man is that of his father-'Zeke Smith—above reproach. This add- 20th 1892.

ed to the endorsement and nomination of a convention of true and ticket has been nominated, all of mendation to secure the vote of whom, so far as we know are good every good man in the county, and we take pride in placing his name Col. John P. West, the candidate in the column with the rest of the

W. A. Thompson came before the ery way qualified to take the inter- convention and come out of it as ests of the county before the lower the nominee for treasurer. This is house of our general assembly. an endorsement, though a stranger His long residence in the county, to us, to insure our support toward his close observation as to her his election. Let every democrat

E O. Dawson, selected to be the acquaintance all over the state, superintendent of education, is a makes him, probably the best, man young man, full of energy, a good that could have been selected for face, with a fare education—and the fact that he was nominated over John S. Leeper, the candidate two such men as Dr. C. C. Oliver nominated for probate judge, be- and Rev. Dave Wayett is sufficient longs to one of the most notable to insure for him the unanimous

McGowan, Walker, Griffin and confidence of everybody in his hon- Jones, the four nominees for comesty and integrity as a man and missioners, are all unknown to the his well known attentiveness to Journal, but they are good men, whatever business he has ever en- and every way competent to fill the gaged in, makes him a man for the places they seek, and they are the

These compose the ticket for this county, and when headed by a state H. W. Nelson, nominated for it behooves every man who loves sheriff, is a good man and a good harmony democracy and white sudemocrat, and as he is well known premacy to make an aggressive all over the county it is not necces- fight for the election of every man

> MIXED up with other bait thrown out to catch penitents, is a call in the "organ," promising the support of the third party to Maj. Randall for representative. It's no go, gentlemen, Maj. Randall's vote will be cast for John T. West for representative, unless he has changed his

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF A mortgage, executed to the undersigned by Mary M. Baker and Hope II. Baker, and recorded in Mortgage Book No. 17, page 518, in the office of the Judge of man, a fine pensman, has gained for will proceed to sell, for cash, to the highest bidder, on

House door, in said c unty, within the legal hours of sale, the following described real estate, to-wit:

The south hlf of section 6; the north hlf of section 7; the north-west qr of section 8; the west half of the north-east gr of section 8; the north-west gr of the south west qr, section 8, all in town 22, range 1, west; and the east hlf of southeast qr of section 1; the south-east qr of the north-east qr of section 12, township 22, range 21, west, containing in all 1280 agrees 1280 acres.

MARY A. DEDMAN,

W. W. Quarles, Att'y. may7-tds

The above sale is posponed until June

--FINE MILLINERY--

Mrs. S. H. McCauley's.

NEAR THE DEPOT,

Montevallo. - Ala. A Splendid Line of Trimmed and Untrimmed Hats in the Latest Styles, and at Reasonable Prices.

Handkerchiefs & Hosiery. Saturday Sales at $1

Harness Saddles.

DEALERS IN

HARDWARE & TINWARE,

科罗巴O对 斯特斯姆思工智工

ticket, which we place above them, Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded Shells always on Hand.

118 19TH STREET, BIRMINCHAM.

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.

CALERA; ALABAMA.

Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans.

Monday, 6th day of June, 1892, at Columbiana, in front of the Court House door, in said c unty, within the merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CITY PROPERTY AND FARM LANDS

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

ALABAMA MINERAL.

No. 85, Arrives at  86, Departs at 10:25 a. m.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-

Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. II. Kidd. County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland.

Superintendent of Education-T. N. County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. Pyeey, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, train Monday. D. C. Davis.

AT THE CHURCHES.

PRESBYTERIAN-Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a.m.

METHODIST-Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30.

▶ Baptist Church—Rev. J. G. Lowrey, pastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday.

CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN—J. C.
Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Rend meets 3:30 p. m. each let and 3rd A very prominent People's party man Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother Friday evening at 3.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensa-tional and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.60. Send five cents for sample copy. RICHARD K. FOX, Square. New York City. Franklin Square.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the stoums of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old sge should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-Witt Talmage.

ONE DOLLAR WEEKLY

Buys a good gold watch by our club system. Our 14-karat gold-filled cases are warranted for 20 years. Fine Elgin or Waltham movement, stem wind and set. Lady's or gent's size. Equal to any $50 watch. To secure agents where we have none, we sell one of the hunting case watches for the club price, $28, and send know how you can furnish such works for the money,"

Our agent at Pennington, Texas, writes "Am in receipt of the watch and am pleased without measure. All who have seen it say it would be cheap

One good reliable agent wanted for place. Write for particulars. EMPIRE WATCH CO., New York

J. L. PETERS. HENRY WILSON, E. S. LYMAN

Columbiana. Montevallo. PETERS. WILSO & LYMAN. ATTORNEYS AT LAW,

IMPORTANT TO LADIES

Sir-I made use of your Philotoken young men and boys, and essays by the with my last child, in order to procure a young ladies and girls, and a concert safe and easy travil. I used it about two months before my expected time, and I had a very quick and easy confinement. Nothing occurred to protract music. my convalescence, and I got about in less time than was usual for me. I think it a medicine that should be used by every expectant mother, for should they but try it as I have, they would never again be without it at such times. I am

yours respectfully,
Mrs. ELIZABETH DIX. Anymerchant or druggist can procure Risley's Philotoken for $1 a bottle. CHARLES F. RISLEY, Wholesale Druggist. 62 Cortlandt St., New York.

DEMOCRATIC CLUBS.

To the Democratic Executive Committee of Shelby County.

Feeling convinced that thorough organization is absolutely essential for the ganization is absolutely essential for the advancement and maintainance of the Democratic Party in Shelby county, I earnestly urge the Executive Committeemen of each beat to immediately organize Democratic Clubs, thereby preparing our people for effective work in behalf of the principles of our party, and successful resistance to the efforts of whatever opposition we may have to whatever opposition we may have to respective beats, when the first Monday in August is past, victory shall be our re-ward and the time honored principles of the Democratic party vindicated.

J. R. White,

Ch'n. Dem. Ex. Com., Shelby Co. Columbiana, Ala., May 2, 1892.

The Base Ball craze is still on in Cale-

Col. J. W. Pitts, of Cresswill, was a visitor at this office Monday.

The Railroads in and out of Calera changed schedules last Sunday. We learn that the Calera club has recieved the sad inteligence that base ball is dead in Montevallo. The Journal has not recieved those vegetables for which it offered premiums a few weeks ago.

We were pleased to make the acquaintance of Judge Tally of Jackson county, last Tuesday. He was on his way to the state convention.

The railroads have done a good business this week transporting the great have been made. statesmen of Alabama to and from the state democratic convention.

says this is what I. W. Bailey did on the Charlton G. Smith of Briefneld was in Calera Tuesday last, on business, and called to see the Journal force. He incitizen of Anniston.

F. M. Fancher, tax assessor of Bibb county, and Joe Davis, merchant of Randolph, were seen here Tuesday waiting for trains to take them, Mr. F. to Montgomery and Mr. D. to Birmingham.

Now that all the Sabbath Schools of Calera have held "Childrens Day" exercises, it is our pleasure to announce was over heard pursuading one of Calera's negro democrats to join the newparty a few days ago. The sable son of Ham replied that he always had to go to the "white folks" for favors and that he intended to vote with "white folks".

The mailing clerk of the Advertiser seems to forget the News or the JOURNAL one every Sunday morning. Come, brother, notwithstanding we work in the same building, we are at our respective homes on Sunday, and one copy is not sufficient for both families.

It is painful to have to call attention to unbecoming conduct of young people of a community on any occsion, but the reporter of the JOURNAL, was unusually mortified on Sunday night at the bad behavior of some youngsters at the C. P. church during "Childrens Day" exercises. Young men and young ladies should remember that churches are built for the worship of God, and all levity and fun should be defered for other and more worldly occasions.

Monday morning last to learn that some | fell in the water two feet deep. He died boys and young men had, while on their instantly. The community deeply symway from services the night before resorted to the ugly and unlawful conduct are sorely afflicted by the loss of their of throwing rocks and brick-bats at the beloved son. house of one of Calera's inoffensive old colored women. If we have a city counsel they should take steps to catch these offenders, and let them know that every C. O. D. by express with privilege of examination before paying for same.

Our agent at Durham, N. C., writes:

Our agent at Durham, N. C., writes:

Our agent at Durham, N. C., writes:

Beat 1. W. B. Browne, ded be black and the offenders be white they are equally entitled to protection under the law.

We have recieved an invitation to attend the commencement exercisees of Prof. R. H. Pratt's school, at Six Mile, gram. Harry Bonsfield. Bibb county. We will certainly be the.e in person or Proxy. It has been our pleasure to attend the commencement at Six Mile every year for ten years past and we have always been highly entertained. The commencement Ser- J. S. Ferrell. mon will be preached by Rev. W. A-Hobson, of East Lake, Ala., on the 19th. inst. Monday will be the examination Will practice in the courts of Shelby of primary classes, under the supervisand adjoining counties, in the United ion of Mrs. Arvezena Pratt, the very States courts and in the Supreme cour best primary teacher in the state. Tuesday will be the closing exercises, consisting of speeches and dialogues by the

JUDICIAL CONVENTION.

Pursuant to instructions of the democratic executive committee of by state executive committee. After inevitably lead to idleness and ruin. the 7th judicial circuit, which met a vote of thanks to the officers the at Talladega on February 29, 1892, | convention adjourned sine die. I hereby give notice that the convention to nominate a candidate for udge of said circuit will meet at C. H. FLOREY. Talladega on Wednesday, June 15, 1892, at 10 o'clock, a. m. The following compose the circuit:

Calhoun......16 delegates Clay..... 8 Cleburne......16 Shelby.....14 St. Clair 8 Talladega......16 "T. S. PLOWMAN, Chairman.

$500 Will be Given For any case of Rheumatism which can whatever opposition we may have to meet.

I urge this, believing that if the members of the committee, aided by the democrats of our county, will at once begin the organization of these clubs in their respective beats, when the first Monday erwhere. It will work wonders, one matter, and through the newspapers everywhere. It will work wonders, one bottle will cure nearly every case. If the druggist has not got it, he will order it, or it will be sent to any address by president express on receipt of price, $5.

BASE BALL GAME.

A PRETTY GAME ON LAST SATURDAY.

The rivalry which has existed between Calera and Montevallo culminated last Saturday in a very pretty game, played on Calera grounds.

The game was colled at 2 o'clock, and was played in a little over two hours, resulting in a score of 20 to 16 in Calera's Calera presented Stocking and Bristow in the first four innings, and they did good work. In the latter part of the game Tally and Whatley had the points.

The field work was very good only a few errors being made. To all these were charged some runs that should not Montevallo presented Kroel and Rhodes, who did very good work. In Mr. John Ozley says it is a new dodge the fifth inning Cox, an imported pitchfor a man to attempt to make a mash by er from the Birmingham Arms club, throwing chewin; gum at a girl. He was put in box for Montevallo, but was batted all over the field. He only lasted two imings, but succeeded in throwing a way the game in great shape.

A correspondent from Montevallo to the Chrouicle says the boys threw the formed us that he is soon to become a game off in order to encourage the Calera team. This is amnsing. The fact is team, and was beaten by supesior play-

Calera has a strong team for their practice, and is ready to play any local clup in this section.

Thursday last a reporter stepped up to the "crossing" to see who came in on the trains, and run up on two former Bibb county boys,-Thos. Moore and A. G. Spinks. The former had been up to A very prominent People's party man Birmingham working for a situation. Not so with the latter, afrer talking with Aus. a moment and as we were preparing to say good bye, he informed us that he had a new wife with him. He introduced us to his fair bride, and we learned that the nuptials had taken place six cattle are given to one cowboy. hours before, the maiden name of the bride being Miss. Maud Hollingworth.

The Journal has long known Mr. spinks, and as he is worthy of succees, we hope he and his fair life partner may enjoy long lives with nothing to mar But the trouble is we object to hustling, their happiness.

ACCIDENTALLY KILLS HIMSELF.

tle Willie and Alice Walburn were drivwas sitting on a stump near a skiff. He informed the children that the hogs the load of bird shot was lodged in his the government furnishes it. breast, ranging upward, breaking his The Journal reporter was pained on neck. He exclaimed, "Oh, Lord" and pathize with the bereaved parents, who

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The following were elected members of the county executive commit-

Beat 1. W. B. Browne, J. F. Mc-Beat 2. N. N. Mosteller, Hosea Pear-lington?

son, Dr. H. I. Williams. Beat 3 W. R. Oliver, J. H. Gunn, J.

Beat 4. J. M. Reynolds, A. C. In-

J. A. Griffin Jr. Beat 7. R. E. O'brien, J. D. Adams,

Beat 8. E. S. Martin, Wm Jackson,

Beat 9. J. F. Pope, J. L. Roy, J. W. Beat 10. T. J. Martin, G. W. Thompson, D. W. Kidd. Beat 11. J. E. Adams, G. W. Dye, Ino. M. Moore.

Beat 12. Not represented in con-Beat 13. D. N. Lee, B. F. Dawson, R. M. Deshazo. Beat 16. Chas F. Elliott, E. P. Chandler, J. M. Tate. Beat 17 W. C. Denson, James Benton, Taylor Ferrell. On motion J. R. White was authorcounty executive committees at Mont-

J. K. MILNER, Chairman H. E. REYNOLDS, Secretaries

The first and second nine of the Calera Base Ball Club, played a game Tucsday evening last. When the game began, very few of the second nine were on hand, but the kids undaunted tackled the first nine, while convention last Tuesday. the latter had two of their own nine as umpires and of course, had the game in a sling on the kids, however after playing the several innings the absent members of the second nine put in an appearance and the score blotted out and a new game was started with Col A R. Scott. General Manager of the secpaid express on receipt of price, $5. he was making a home run to his Drummond Medicine Co., 48-50 Maiden place of business with two of the first Lane, New York. Agents wanted.

PRESS PARAGRAPHS.

The democratic county convention which convened last Friday, was a magnificent gathering of patriotic citizens of old Shelby. It was composed of intelligent, enthusiastic democrats, men of nigh moral and political standing.

On an other page will be found a condensed report of the proceedings. You will find that in all their deliberations they acted with prudence, and in every instance did what they considered their plain duty. There is nothing left for us to do but to accept the result gracefully. It is not possible for all to have their preferences, and there is always some dissatisfaction, but it is an undeniable fact that a strong ticket was nominated and we should support it with all the vim and energy at our command. And we believe that every democrat in the county will do so cheerfully. A better ticket has rarely ever been nominated by a convention in this county, and there is every reason why the work of that body should meet with a hearty approval.-Chronicle.

Age-Herald: In this day of combina. tion it is strange that all the mothers in one neighborhood do not combine and that Montevallo brought her strongest employ one nurse for all the children. This would be a great saving in the way of economy, and would prevent much o the trouble now experienced in getting servants. It would also result in good in a social and political sense, for the children being thus thrown together under one government would imbibe democrotic principles, and could more readly comprehend the declaration that "all men are born free and equal." As it is now, children reared under different nurses are like men reared under different governments-they can never become homogeneous. The idea of one governing many is not new, for in olden one shepherd, and in these days many every point in the county.

Mountain Home: The constitution guarantees to every man the "right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Having these guaranteed there is also the right of every man to hustle. we object to pushing our business, whatever that business may be, and the re-Shelby, Ala., June 7.-(Special.)-Lit- straightway we rush to "Uncle Sam" for aid in our distress. We want moning hogs out of the field near a pool, ey! money!! money!!! no matter where John Crosett, aged 14 years, the whether we are deserving of it or note only child of M1. and Mrs. Wm. Crosett, No matter what may be the burden laid upon us a decade hence, give us plenty of money now and let the future take were out, attempting at the same time care of itself. How that money is obto lift his shot gun from the boat, when tained is of but little moment so long as

> The worst feature in political affairs, is the tendency to paternalism, a child of the Republican party, having as its beginning the tariff with all its attendant evils. From giving special favors to a few the idea has grown until it seems as though every citizen wants to be fed with pap from the government teat. Does a cammunity or a class desire spe cial favors, an appeal is made to the gov ernment. Do we want to elect a Congressman, the question is asked, What will he do for me when he gets to Wash-

An other cause and the chief cause is unjust taxation. There is not a year goes by that we do not hear a good deal in referance to burdensome taxation, blood and a sluggish circulation. Beat 5. Not represented.

Beat 6. J. M. Powers, Albert Fell, but what of the indirect? Is it not Referring of course to direct taxation, equally as burdensome? Where do "billion dollar Congresses" get their money? Do they by fiat of law make it? No! Do they coin the gold and silver to make it? No! Where then do they get it? there is only one other resourse, and monly known as the tariff.

What we need is true Const ional Democracy, guaranteeing to no man anything more than 'life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and to worship God according to the dictates of his heart." We do not need government aid for special classes or cases. We need the protection removed or reduced on certain industries and a more ecoized to meet the chairman of the nomical administration of government, instead of a farther removal from the gomery on June 8th as recumended policy of our fathers. Paternalism will enough to look into the future, and see if it will pay you to lend your influence to a movement from which evil and only evil can come to those who come

We were pleased to meet John Williams and James Nunnellee two brothers of the press on their way to the state

This would be a comparatively happy world if everyoody knew the virtues of SMITH'S BILE BEANS as a family medicine, and acted upon that knowledge. One half the misery of the world comes from ailments which arise from the state of the second comes from all the second comes from the second comes from the second comes from all the second comes from all the second comes from the second comparatively happy world in the second comparatively happy world comparati a bad stomach or a bad liver. Chiefest among these are dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache and Neuralgia.

BILE BEANS will cure all of these, besides all miasmatic diseases. Dose:

HUGH T. CAFFEY,

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON CALERA, ALA,

feb12-1y,

The Calera Journal,

Weekly Newspaper.

ONLY

THE JOURNAL will give the news of Calera and of Shelby county each week, as t will have correspondents from every portion of the county. It will contain the atest news of the State in a condensed form. It will give the political news of he state from an impartial standpoint, and will be an especially valuable source of information concerning the coming campaign in the fourth district. It will con tain the latest market quotations on all products of interest to its readers. It will contain a choice selection of miscellaneous reading of interest to all.

We solicit the patronage of those who desire this class of information, and governing many is not new, for in olden times many sheep were placed under agents, and we want one in every community. We also want a correspondent at ever that business may be, and the result is our business hustles us and straightway we must to "Uncle Sam" Quikly, Neaty and Cheaply Done

Printing a and Legal

THE JOURNAL will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets wil be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

PURE BLOOD GOOD HEALTH

Now is the time for everyone who cherishes good health, to pay particular attention to the condition of their blood and its proper circulation. Nearly all diseases that flesh is heir to are caused and agravated by an impure condition of the

 \bigvee : \bigvee : \bigvee . THE KING OF BLOOD PURIFIERS

Possessing Extraordinary Cleansing Powers that is taxation. Indirect taxation com- Restoring and Strengthening the whole System, Enriching the Blood producing increased vitality by restoring an impaired digestion and bringing back the bloom of youth to the cheek of the enfeebled and emaciated.

Price, $1.00 per Bottle-6 Bottles for $5.00.

For Sale bg All Druggists.

NABERS, MORROW & SINNIGE,

SOLE CONTROLERS,

Birmingham.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION. Democrats, pause a moment, long Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers -12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT. 1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these de-

papers.

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.

3. It covers the news of the whole itable sketches appear each week. world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thorthesturdy champion of the agricultural ough news service from every important interests of the south.

a. It pays more money for its special
4. Its Agricultural Department alone features and for its news service than is worth many times its subscription any other four of the weekly newspapers price to every farmer. This department of the south, and much more than any is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the lead-weekly newspaper in America.

ure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

household word the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to the household.

6. Bill Arp, Plunkett, and Uncle Remus and a host of other special writers are engaged by the year, and their iniming agricultural authority of the south, whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasure to every family, and the name of persint the world.

Weekly newspaper in America.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One to a postage stamp. Think of it! Every time a hen lays an egg she pays for one issue of the greatest weekly newspaper.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

Peru and Spain became involved in a very serious difficulty in March. 1864. It arose out of a claim for damages made by the European nation. Some colonists who had been imported from Spain were killed in a local fight at Talambo with their Peruvian landlords. The matter was carried into the courts, where it was still pending when a Spanish commissioner named Mazarredo arrived at Lima. He demanded that the Peruvian Government should recognize him as a royal commissioner and make restitution for the affair at Talambo. To this the South American Republic demurred, whereupon Mazarredo, in company with the Spanish Admiral, Pinzon, proceeded to the Chincha Islands, the surrender of which they demanded. They gave the Governor fifteen minutes' time to come to a decision and declared that if he did not at once submit they would bombard the Island and destroy all the vessels of war. The Governor was powerless to resist and had to content himself with a protest against such a flagrant abuse of power. The Spaniards landed, arrested the Governor and Captain of the fort, and hoisted the colors of Spain. When this outrage was reported the wildest excitement was produced throughout the whole of Peru. Preparations were at once made to defend the country, all classes of people offering their services and giving other proofs of their ratriotism. Even the priests offered to take up arms if necessary. The American residents in Lima and Callao met and passed a series of resolutions protesting againts the seizure of the Islands and offering all the assistance in their power to the threatened Republic. War seemed imminent for several months, but the matter was finally adjusted by means of diplomacy. Spain's original demands were for the most part acceded to, but Peru retained the valuable Chincha Islands.

NEVER borrow trouble if you can avoid doing so. But in case you must corrow it, try and get it without in-aging effect in spring and early summer, when the days grow warmer and the toning effect of the cold air is gone. Hood's Sarsaparilla speedily overcomes "that tired feeling," whether caused by change of climate, season or life, by overwork or illness, and imparts a feeling of strength, comfort and self-confidence.

THAT

Kidney Trouble.

"I have been troubled with kidney difficulty for several years. It had assumed an alarming condition. I commenced the use of Hood's Sar saparilla, and in a short time a change for the better came that seemed almost incredible. I would recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all that are suffering with the same disease, which causes such great suffering." L. M. STANLEY,

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures

Where other preparations fail. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is Peculiar to Itself. HOOD'S PILLS cure liver ills, constipa-

My acquaintance with Boschee's German Syrup was made about fourteen years ago. I contracted a cold which resulted in a hoarseness and cough which disabled me from filling my pulpit for a number of Sab-baths. After trying a physician, without obtaining relief I saw the advertisement of your remedy and obtained a bottle. I received quick and permanent help. I never hesitate to tell my experience. Rev. W. H. Haggerty, Martinsville, N.J. ® even if you merely keep them as a diversion. In or der to handle Fowls judiciously, you must know something about them. To meet this want we are selling a book giving the experience of a practical poultry raiser for the twenty-five years. It was written by aman who put all his mind, and time, and money to making a success of Chicken raising—not as a postime, but as a business—and if you will profit by his twenty-five years' work, you can savo many Chicks annually, and make your Fowls earn dollars for you. The years' work, you can save many Calcks annually, and make your Fowls earn dollars for you. The point is, that you must be able to detect trouble in the Poultry Yard as soon as it appears, and know how to remedy it. This book will teach you.

It tells how to detect and cure disease; to feed for eggs and also for fattening; which fowls to save for breeding purposes; and everything, indeed, you should know on this subject to make it profitable.

Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents in ic. or 2c.

Book Publishing House, 135 Leonard St., N. Y. City.

ED BJG S will you have been sure out the BED BJGS or will the Bed Bugs drive out you? This query increases in in-DUTCHER'S DEAD SHOT a leaf; is a sure preventive of return, and oter of "Sleep in Peace." Price

PINEIONS - Due all SOLDIERS: A disabled. 22 fee for increase. 25 years ex-perience. Write for Laws. A.W. McCormick BOMS, WASHINGTON, D. C. & CINCINNATI, Q.

CIDER (any kind) kept perfectly sweet. A new discovery, Send stamp to A. H. Swank, Fremont, O

No. 21 1892

Many sheep-fatteners give their sheep clover hay, and it is a good food for them. But it ought to be remembered it contains a large percentage of nitrogenous food matter. We do not say this to prevent them using the clover hay, but to remind them that when they increase the quantity they increase the quantity of nitrogen supplied, and an allowance for this should be made when arranging the amount of corn or cake. Except for this, clover hay is one of the best rectifiers as well as best foods that can be given to sheep. As a means of lowering the quality of the blood, Epsom salts are a mild aperient .-- New York

FRESH MEAT FOR FARMERS.

Some of the advantages of old-fashioned farmers' lives are not so common among farmers of to-day as they once One of these is having a taste of fresh meat when desired, by killing a sheep and perhaps changing with a neighbor so as to use the mutton while it is fresh. If circumstances do not favor keeping sheep, the supply of fresh meat may be easily obtained by killing young poultry once a week or oftener, and sometimes varying it by killing a young pig. Some farmers may object to this last as wasteful. After all, counting the speculative value of the pig after it has grown into a hog, its meat does not cost any more than the city resident pays for much poorer cuts from the butcher's And on the farm the owner of the pig can afford to take it for his own use at what it has cost him, taking his profit in the extra enjoyment he will get from eating fresh young pig rather than salted pork from the barrel. It is by indulging in occasional luxuries of this kind that farmers show to others the advantages of their position, and induce their children and others to appreciate the possibilities of a farmer's life .-Boston Cultivator.

VEGETABLES AND FRUIT FOR HOMES.

Too many farmers neglect to supply their own tables with any suitable va riety of vegetables and fruit. By a small outlay of money and labor every farmer can keep his table supplied with a succession of fresh vegetables through the whole season. Spinach planted as soon as the weather is suitable will furnish the finest greens before other vegetables come on, but if it had been planted in the fall it would have come into its use this month, under ordinary conditions. Then radishes, lettuce, cucumbers, tomatoes, peas, beans, sweet corn, summer squashes, beets, melons and turban squashes will furnish a welcome and wholesome addition to the farmer's fare throughout the season. If, in addition to these there are a few oots of rhubarb, a bed of asparagus, a bed of strawberries and a small collection of small fruits, a farmer may live in luxury and health, such as his cccupation ought to afford, instead of the tiresome monotomy and scarcity of the good things of the farm that many farmers put up with from sheer carelessness, thoughtlessness or laziness. - American Farmer.

DOUBLE CHOPPING OF CABBAGES.

One of my neighbors by manuring good if they are given proper treatment. liberally and omitting the cabbages on every third row of his cabbage piece, and planting this to squash at the proper time, succeeded in raising two excellent crops the same season. To succeed in this arrangement the cabbage must be one of the very earliest sorts, such as Early Wakefield, so that the ground may be entirely cleared at an early day, and the soil between the squash rows be cultivated until it is thoroughly light and fine. The market gardeners close by large cities on their thousand-dollaran-acre land must and do raise from two to four crops annually, by aid of hotbeds to start their stuff, and the stimulus of a near and large market in which they can dispose of products on a large scale, which would be worthless if raised on an ordinary farm; still, farmers at large can do with profit more than they now think possible in this direction. Squashes and peas can be raised profitably on the same land. I grew over 200 bushels of green peas and five tons of squasnes on the same piece three years ago. Beets, cabbages, rye, barley and Hungarian are all crops which the farmer can grow as second crops. er can grow as second crops. But when we attempt to double-crop our land there is one essential we must never forgetwe must manure accordingly, for no one ever succeeded in cheating his land out of a crop. - Massachusetts Ploughman.

CABBAGE WITHOUT TRANSPLANTING.

Of all the crops raised on the farm none depends so much on naturally rich land as cabbage. The best soil is a deep, black, loose loam, well drained, such as is found in the valleys of the smaller streams. It is plowed in the fall, eight or ten inches deep, in narrow lands. The first ten days of April is our time for sewing the seed. The ground is harrowed only to level it, as the action of frost during winter has reduced it to the fineness of ashes. It is then marked off three feet each way with a corn marker. With a hoe enough soil is drawn up at each crossmark to make a small, flat bill, a little above the general level. A dozen seeds are dropped on each and pressed down by the foot to bring the seed in close contact with the soil, no covering being necessary. A day or two before the plants appear above ground we press twice through the rows with a small tooth cultivator as close as possible without throwing any soil on the hills. This seventy-five, they would receive just as. can be easily done as the tracks of the much money, and save the extra barrels marker serve as a guide.

The second cultivation is given when the plants are an inch high, and should be crosswise of the first plowing, once in a row. The field should be thoroughly cleaned of weeds by the time the plants are two inches high. Discretion must be exercised in thinning the plants, If cut worms are numerous the hills should not be thinned to one in a place until the plants are four or five inches high, but at no time should they be allowed to crowd one another in the hill. Some hills will be wholly missing. These should be reset from the thinnings, selecting the stockiest plants that come up with good roots. The oftener cabbage is cultivated the better will be the crop. The ground should be kept loose and mellow to a depth of four or five inches. Twenty times is not too often to cultivate cabbage for the best results. Two or three hoeings only are necessary, and the first is the only one that will take much time if thoroughly done and the cultivator is used as it should be. Breaking off the lower leaves is no detriment, and their being in the way should not deter the plowman from running the shallow-cutting shovels of a horse-hoc close up to the plants. Cultivation should cease before the heads begin to get solid. I am aware that but fews cabbage growers recommend to sow the seed where the plants are to remain. But most of the writers on cabbage live where the crop is not so often affected by hot, dry weather in midsummer as it is here. The cabbage plant has a long tap root,'so long that the plant cannot be removed without breaking it, and when once broken it will never penetrate the soil so deeply as before. In 1885 I had two and a half acres of Late Flat Dutch cabbage, grown without trans-planting, that yielded 16,000 marketable heads. Another acre of just as good land was planted with the best plants thinned out on a large field. The returns from this acre were not over six hundred good heads, and the results have been with more or less variations, the same through succeeding years Of course this plan is advisable for late cabbage only, as the early kinds are transplanted, and have usually headed before dry weather commences. -- American Agriculturist.

FARM AND GARDEN NOTES. Dig around the rhubarb plants. Be on the lookout for early farrowing

Make a second planting of carly garden crops.

Milk and grasslarethe best feeds for young pigs.

Trees should be rest out before they start to grow.

No hog is quite so ravenous as a sow that is suckling pigs. At first give a sow brantand milk, and and then add corn meal. Keep all colonies strong. This is the secret of keeping bees for profit. Gladialusus come true when propagated from the small bulblets.

There is no special advantage in setting out strawberry plants early. Any of the leading breeds of hogs rare

The only safe plan of being sure of saving all of the pigs is to be ready for them

The Dawson rose, it is claimed, is a valuable addition to the list, of hardy

Seeds of hardy flowers tought to be sown as early as the ground, can be put

Good pasturage of any'kind will help the brood sows materially, to give a good flow of milk.

The flat cover is the best for all bee hives. It costs less than the gable cover and is more convenient. Do not take the winter packing out of the second story of the bee hive till time to put in section boxes. When stock are first turned out to grass care should be taken that they have access to all of the salt and water they want. Sheep may be rid of ticks very satis.

If the acreage in meadow is not sufficient to furnish a full supply of hay for winter feeding it will pay to sow millet or Hungarian for hay.

In nearly all cases it will pay to harrow the potatoes thoroughly before the plants make their appearance above ground; it will help kill out the weeds.

The fat in the milk is the most potent factor in determining the yield and quality of cheese, and the quality of cheese is largely affected by the amount of fat contained in it.

Let the bees alone as much as possible. Decide upon some method and adhere to it. The double hive method is the best, and will give the best results, if properly carried out, if there be any honey in the fields.

When cattle are turned in on clover it will be best to turn in for one or two hours the first day, two or three the second, so that they may be somewhat accustomed to it. In this way the risk of bloat may be greatly reduced.

A Rochester commission merchant. addressing the Western New York Horticultural Association on "Points in Shipping," said that if growers would sort each one hundred barrels down to and freight.

HEAVEN IN THE STARS.

Curious Faith of the Ansairee-They Believe in a Previous Existence.

The belief in metempsychosis is very curious among the Ansairce. Ordinary Mussulmans, they say, pass into jackals after death; and it is a common saying among them, when the jackals howl at night. "Listen to the Mussulmans calling to prayer.' Bad men after death have to "walk in low envelopes" as their expression goes, making use of the Arabic word "kamees" for the envelope of the body, which exists among us in the word "chemise." For what reason I know not, Christian doctors are supposed to go into very low envelopes, indeed, and become swine when this life is over. Jewish rabbis become apes, and so forth, writes a traveler. The stars, they say, are "envelopes of light," the destination of the great and good Ansairee who have distinguished themselves in this life by their charity and integrity; and there are 50,000 of them who form the great 'light word," or the inhabitants of the seventh heaven vip surround Ali, and are perpetually illuminated by his presence.

Most Ansairee present to a knowledge of what they did in a former existence, whether as animals or men; and at Tarsus it is a common theory amongst them that the Frankish travelers, intent on archæological research, come to look for treasures which they remember to have seen in these spots during a former existence.

A man, they say, who has not acted rightly in this life may be punished in the next existence by being born a woman, and a woman who does her duty in this life may be rewarded in the next by being born a man. Womankind is considered by them a sort of probationary step between the animal world and the lords of creation, and their women are treated by them with great contempt and never permitted to participate in the sacred mysteries of religion.

One of the most curious features of the Ansairee faith is their belief in the Trinity: Ali, the Father; Mahomet, the Son, and Salman el Fari, the Holy Ghost. Ali, the Father, became man through his veil or representative, Mahomet; and Mahomet appointed Salman to superintend the affairs of this world after his return to his father's kingdom. This mystery of a Trinity is the second item in the Ansairee religion, and is universally believed in by all the four sects: it is called "the mystery of the A. M. S.," from the initial letters of the three individuals of their

An Ansairee-or a Nasari, as their sect is more commonly called in the North-when taking an oath, will always swear by his "faith in the mys tery of Ain, Min, Sin;" and one of the most common forms of prayer among them is to say the words "Ain, Min, Sin," 500 times in succession.

The Feople of the Earth.

Exactly how many people there are n the world it is impossible to say, since no census is taken of many populace countries, like China, while the number of people who live in the jungles of Africa can only be guessed

As long ago as 1866, Behm, a leading German authority, estimated the population of the earth at about 1,400,000,000.

In 1880, the same authority set the igures at about 100,000,000 more. He did not base this new estimate on the natural increase of the people of the world, but explained that more accurate figures and estimates had enabled him to guess more closely.

Two years later Mr. Behm estimated the earth's population at 22,-000,000 less than in 1880, the de-crease being accounted for by the fact that new investigations had compelled the reduction of the estimated population of China from something over 400,000,000 to about 350,000,000.

Probably the estimate for the year 1891, made by a learned German statistician, is the most nearly accurate of any yet made--1,480,000,000.

It is believed that the world's population is increasing at the rate of nearly 6,000,000 a year.

The most populace count " in Asia, which contains two countries--China and India-whose swamma millions outnumber the people of all the other countries of the continent.

The most densely peopled continent is, of course, Europe. The number of people in Europe is known with a great degree of accuracy. There are about 360,000,000; and the continent which accomodates all these people is so small that there are upon it an average of ninety-three people to the square mile.

The people upon the two continents of North and South America, without the Artic regions, are less than 122,000,000 in number, or only eight to the square mile.

When America is as densely peopled as Europe, this half of the world will have a population of nearly 1,400, 000,000—practically the same as that of the whole world at the present time.-Youth's Companion.

The Facts in the Case.

He was up before a Western justice for playing poker for money. "So you were playing cards?" queried the court, sarcastically.

'No, your honor, I was not," was the prompt reply.

'(Not playing cards?" and the court's amazement was plainly visible. "Why, the officer arrested you

"I know it, your honor."
"Then why do you say you were not playing?" "Because I wasn't, your honor. The other fellow was doing all the playing."-Detroit Free Press. THE CREEDE miners get $3 a day.

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, theafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

F. J. Chenney & Co., Toledo, O., Sold by Druggists, 75c. Denfuess Can't be Cured

The Only One Ever Printed.

Can be counted on to cure Catarrh - Dr. Sage's Catarrh

Remedy. It's nothing new. For 25 years it has been doing that very thing. It gives prompt and complete relief - but you want more than that. And you get it, with this Remedy—there's a cure that is perfect and permanent. The worst chronic cases, no matter of how long standing, yield to its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties. "Cold in the Head" needs but a few applications. Catarrhal Headache, and all the troubles that come from Catarrh,

You can count on something else,

You can count on it, but it's

The proprietors of Dr. Sage's

Remedy, in good faith, offer that amount for an incurable case of Catarrh. Don't think that you

They'll pay you, if they can't ure you. That's certain.

But they can cure you. That's

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

from which the excess of oil

Is absolutely pure and

No Chemicals

are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one centa cup. It is delicious, nour-ishing, strengthening, EASILY sare, speedy care. Recorders, beautifies Complexion.

DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as for persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO.. Dorchester, Mass.

more than doubtful whether you are at once relieved and cured.

too - $500 in cash.

have one, though.

just about as certain, too.

Can you ask more?

earn it.

cure you.

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, BEAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE.

In spite of the low prices for iron, nearly every southern furnace is in blast

For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and Stomach disorders, use Brown's Iron Bitters. The Best Tonic, it rebuilds the system, cleans the Bood and strengthens the muscles. A splendid tonic for weak and debilitated persons.

Reports from the Delaware peach belt are promising for a fair crop.

Dr. T. J. Williamson, Eustls, Fla., says: "The bottle of Bradycrotine you sent hie was given three ladies who were suffering from headache. They said the effect was instantaneous and very satisfactory." All druggists, fifty cents.

The young King of Spain is said to be developing a tendency to fits.

For impure of thin Blood, Weakness, Malaria Neuralgia, Indigestion, and Billousness, take Brown's Iron Bitters—it gives strength, making old persons feel young—and young persons strong; i-leasant to take.

Russia is massing troops on the Polish

BEECHAM'S PILLS are a painless and effectual remedy for all bilious and nervous disorders. For sale by all druggists.

Martial law has been proclaimed in Brazil.

ONE ENJOYS

Both the method and results when Syrup of Figs is taken; it is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and cures habitual constipation. Syrup of Figs is the only remedy of its kind ever produced, pleasing to the taste and acceptable to the stomach, prompt in its action and truly beneficial in its effects, prepared only from the most healthy and agreeable substances, its many excellent qualities commend it to all and have made it the most popular remedy known.

Syrup of Figs is for sale in 50c and $1 bottles by all leading druggists. Any reliable druggist who may not have it on hand will procure it promptly for any one who wishes to try it. Do not accept any substitute.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. E, KY. NEW YORK, N.Y.

Kennedy's MedicalDiscovery Takes hold in this order:

Bowels,

Liver. Kidneys. Inside Skin, Outside Skin. Driving everything before it that ought to be out

You know whether you need it or not. Sold by every druggist, and manufactured by

DONALD KENNEDY, ROXBURY, MASS.

many women suffer from Excessive or Scant Menstruction; they don't know who to confide in to get proper advice. Don't confide in anybody but try Bradfield's

Every Month

Female Regulator a Specific for PAINFUL, PROFUSE. SCANTY, SUPPRESSED and IRREGULAR MENSTRUATION.

Book to "WOMAN" mailed free. BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO., Atlanta, Ga. Sold by all Druggists.

enable the dyspeptic to eat whatever he wishes. They cause the food to assimilate and neurish the body, give appetite and develop fiesh. Price, 25 cents. Exact size shown in border.

d everywhere. All genuine goods bear escent. '' Send us 2 cent stamp for 32-page DR. HARTER MEDICIME CO., St. Louis, Mo.

SHORTHAND.

"Society of the Friends of Trees" is the name of an organization in France, its object being the restoration of the

It is proposed to erect a monument to Lindley Murray, the English grammarian, who was born in Lancaster County, Penn. Murray's grammar of the English language was published in

Thomas A. Edison has taken out more patents than have been given to any other inventor in the United States, and probably in the world. He is credited at the Patent Bureau in Washington with more than 600 inventions, mostly in electrical appliances, and during one week eight sets of letters-patent were issued in his name. It is said that so great is the proportion of patents taken out in Connecticut that one citizen out of every 700 is an in-

The St. Louis Republic makes these astonishing comparisons: Three tons of steam coal represent a man's labor for a period of twenty years; one square mile of a seam of coal having a depth of four feet only represents as much power as a million able-bodied men could exert in a quarter of a century of active labor!

The printing of an Arabic paper in New York marks a new departure in journalism, remarks the New York News. It is the first of its kind ever published in the Western Hemisphere, and the fact that the type and the compositors have been brought across the sea shows the earnestness of the purpose of the projectors.

The New England Homestead suggests toat animals awarded first premiums at our agricultural fairs should be placed on a platform, and judges made to give their reasons for such action to the public. This, recalls the New York World, is what ex-Governor Hoard, of Wisconsin, advocated at some of the Farmers' Institutes last winter.

The following, which is said to be an actual incident in California housekeeping is called to mind by the Chinese exclusion act. "John," said the mistress, "I can't have you smoking opium in the kitchen whenever I am out of the house. When you want to smoke you must go out of doors, or at least to your own room in the wind mill." And John replied: "Melican lady too muchee talkee. One day Chinaman come in heap big ship and smoke allee Melican lady and allee Melican man whizz-zz-zz!" "You don't mean that you will shoot us, John?" "Whizz-zz-zz, bang!" returned John. imperturbably. "Allee Melican a' Callaforna dead; Chinaman heap boss here by'm'by."

The allusion in President Diaz's message to the expansion of Mexico's fruit trade gives a timely interest to the import figures of the United States. The value of our fruit imports last year reached $18,310,007, of which bananas constituted the largest single item, amounting to $4,653,779. Binanas, cocoanuts and pineapples go mainly from the West Indies, Central and Souta America; oranges and lemons from Sicily, Spain and Italy; almonds from France, Spain and Italy; prunes from Austria, Hungary and France, and raisins from Spain. Columbia supplies more than one-fourth of the cocounuts. Against these we export fruits fluctuating in value between $2,000,000 and $5,000,-000, mostly dried and green apples to Europe and Australia.

Of the 569,000 immigrants who came in last year 3431 were persons having professional occupations, such as actors, artists, clergymau, lawyers, musicians, physicians and teachers. The number having skilled occupations, such as blacksmiths, bakers, butchers, carriage-makers, miners, shoemakers, tailors, etc., was 54,951. Those with miscellaneous occupations numbered 253,302, while those without occupations numbered 247,596. Of the professions, clergymen seem to have been the most numerous, as the records of the year show the arrival of 564 clergymen as immigrants, while the next highest number was 512 teachers. Among the skilled occupations tailors were in the lead, the number which cane in among last year's immigrants being 5864, the next highest being carpenters. who numbered 5244. Among those classed under the head of miscellaneous occupations were 326,598 servants, 2099 pedlers, eleven jockeys and seven dog THE SOULS RIDE.

"Horseman, springing from the dark, Horseman, flying wild and free, Tell me what shall be thy road, Whither speedest far from megu

"From the dark into the light, From the small unto the great, From the valleys dark, I ride O'er the hills to conquer fate!"

"Take me with thee, horseman mine! Let me madly ride with thee!" As he turned I met his eyes-My own scul looke I back at me!

-Lilla Cabot Perry, in Atlantic Monthly. UNEXPECTED BUSINESS

BY W. GRENVILLE MURRAY.

UMBLE was director of a railway company, and Thumble had some business to transact with him. They were both bound to Oxford that night, and so decided that they an express which does the distance in two hours. They according discussed and both wondered, with an apprehension the lighter topics during the snug dinner | too hideous for words, how the madman which they took together at the Great Western Hotel, and strutted into the station some five minutes before the start, just in the humor to look at their business from a jolly point of view. Now, as business is not jolly, the point of view of men just dined is pretty certain to be the wrong one, and as we British plume ourselves on doing much of our business after dinner, this may explain how railroad directors in their jollity often come to queer decisions about us. But this is only a note in passing.

Rumble and Thumble were not destined to do much business that evening. When they arrived on the platform the engine was getting up steam, the porters were hurrying to and fro, and it seemed to be a full train. Rumble and Thumble, trotting down the line of carriages to look for a compartment in which they should be comparatively alone, were unable to find one, and the stationmaster, who, sighting Rumble, bustled up to touch his hat and assist them in their search, was not more successful-a result which gratified Rumble as director, though it disappointed him as a man. As last a first-class compartment was perceived, out of the window of which leaned a stolid man in a felt hat, and with a briar-root pipe in his mouth. His arms were folded on the windowframe, and this is always suspicious. Rumble, climbing on the foot-board, glanced through the side pane, and saw that there was one other man inside, who appeared to be sound asleep in a corner. He instantly laid his grasp on ing, whereupon he drew from his pockets

"Excuse me, this is taken," expostulated the briar-root man, rather eagerly. "Reserved?" asked Rumble, with sudden politeness. "No, but we should like to keep it to servant Jones will play the calf."

This impudence amazed and digusted Rumble. He was a conscientious director, who set his face against all breaches of the by-laws on the part of the public. People who smoked in compartments not appointed for the purpose, ladies who introduced dogs into the carriages, were abominable to him; but passengers who tried to usurp more places than they had paid for were his special abhorrence. "I am a director, sir." he said, severely, and the stationmaster cried, with still greater severity. "This gentleman is a director." Thumble would have put in his word, too, but and thumb of the other, he ssid: after a renewed protest from the briarwood man the carriage door was wrenched open, Rumble and Thumble clambered moved off. won a victory. They were in corner seats, and would be able to talk business; but first Rumble thought it would be fitting to address a temperance rebuke to the man who had endeavored to keep him out, and this for the double reason that he was retaining his pipe alight though not in a smoking-carriage. He had scarcely uttered a syllable, however, before the transgressor, who had been bending his eyes anxiously on the face of his sleeping companion, turned, laid a finger on his lips, and said, "Hush-h-h!" His appearance and manners were those of a confidential servant. He crept noiselessly down the carriage to where Rumble Thumble were, and whispered, and "Excuse me, gentlemen, for trying to prevent you coming in, but that geatleman is mad, and I am taken him to an asylum. We did not reserve a whole compartment because of the expense, and I lose I'll sing a song for you with my because he is quiet enough when alone mouth full or tobacco; if I win we'll because he is quiet enough when alone with me. But the society of strangers is apt to excite him; so if he awakes I entreat you to do whatever he may ask you, or else there'll be a row."

At the self-same moment the speaker awoke, the altercation about the seats and the commotion of starting had disturbed him. He gave a vawn not unlike a growl, and, as he unfolded himself from | not have effected the unfortunate direchis reclining position, developed a stature more than six feet high. There seemed to be no end of him. His head almost touched the umbrella net, his countenance was swarthy and brutish, his eyes were small, but had a gleam in them like a wolf's, and his long arms were terminated by a pair of hands of monstrous was too much to be bourne. Thumble, Monthly.

passengers, grinned to them.

The tongues of Rumble and Thumble The tongues of Rumble and Thumble (Really, sir—my lord—this is to-om-clove to their palate. They were both foolery," stuttered Rumble, indgnantly, fat men, and not combative, except on paper or in law courts, when people wanted to get money out of them.

Rumble had a double chin, and his waist
"What, hav coat stretched tight over his lower man like the skin of a drum. His eyes peered shyly over little puddings of flesh like small pincushions, and Thumble was in all points like him, except that he was two sizes smaller, Rumble being five-footsix or so, and he five-foot-four. To say that these two smug gentlemen were horrified at finding themselves in company with a madman, just when they had been dining and wanted to settle husiness, is to use a weak term. Their digestion stopped; their dinners turned to hard brick inside them, and their busmess pozed utterly out of their heads. Rumble resolved, with choking wrath, that he would insist on the lunatic's adfrom Birmingham dress as soon as the train stopped, and prosecute his relative. Thumble mused that if he were molested nothing should deter him from bringing an action could talk over their affairs in the train, against the railroad company, although his friend Rumble was a director of it, would behave toward them.

They were not kept long in doubt. The lunatic eyed them rather affably than otherwise, and when he had taken stock of them, left his seat smiling to shake their hands.

"How do you do?" he said. "You are going down to look at my estates?"

"Yes, my lord," interposed the servant; "these gentlemen asked leave to travel with your lordship, and I thought you would allow them.'

"What, is he a lord?" whispered Rumble to the servant. And this railway director felt his respect much increased for a lunatic who might also be a peer; indeed, he was prepared to find him not so mad after all.

"You must call him 'my lord,' or else there'll be a row," was the servant's answer. And at the same time the lunatic, having shaken hands with Rumble and Thumble, said: "I don't object at all to your traveling with me, for you seem honest fellows, but tell me your names."

Rumble and Thumble both gave their names, adding, "my lord," as directed.

for they neither wanted a row. "Rumble and Thumble," repeated the lunatic. "Well, I put you down on my visiting list, and now we'll have a game. What shall it be, Rumble? Do you know Frogs in the Pool?"

"Oh, not 'Frogs in the Pool'" my lord," protested the servant, in evident

"I will have 'Frogs in the Pool," cried the madman, raising his voice and glara copy of the Daily Telegraph and a glass sherry flask with a cork stopper. "Now come and sit opposite me, all three of and bawled: "Slap Thumble," Rumble, you," he added. "Rumble, you shall be scarcely knowing what he did, slapped

"Please do what he tells you, gentlemen!" whispered Jones to the hesitating director and his friend. And the two gentlemen, grimacing with pardonable uneasiness, took their seats facing the madman and watched his doings.

He had torn up his Daily Telegraph and was converting the paper into goodsized pellets. When he had manufactured twenty he stopped and removed the cork from his flask, asking Jones for a light. Jones struck a match and the lunatic carefully charred the end of his cork. Then, with the pellets in the palm of one hand and cork between the finger

"Now we'll begin. You, Rumble, will open your mouth wide and I shall take shots at it with these pellets. The in and almost immediately the train pellets are frogs and your mouth is the pool. All the frogs that get into your Rumble and Thumble counted they had mouth you'll swallow; those that fall on your lap or on the seat will be eaten by Thumble, who is a cow and will bellow 'Moo-oo-y!" all the while; those that drop on the floor will be for Jones, the calf, who will have to bleat."

A clammy perspiration broke out on the foreheads of Rumble and Thumble. The lunatic was quite close to them, his hot breath and wild eyes almost touched theirs as he gave his explanations, and those hugh hands of his looked as if they could strangle both of them if they resisted. They felt an inclination to resist, but dared not. He meantime counted over his pellets and continued:

"Now about the scoring. I'll draw a circle round your chin with the burnt cork, Rumble, and that will mark the boundaries of the pool. Every pellet that falls within the circle or inside your mouth will count one to me, and those that miss will be scored to you three. If have hot pancakes all round. We'll mark the points on your cheeks, Thumble, concluded he, laughing; "they're pudgy cheeks, like dumplings, by George!

Having said this the lunatic stooped and laid a fist heavily on Rumble's chest, approaching the burnt cork to his nose. The shock of a galvanic battery would tor more fearfully. He turned pale as a stone and trembled, while the lunatic, intent on his work, drew a broad, black circle round his upper lip and the highest fold of his double chin. Rumble had not the courage to stir; but when the circle was traced he felt the indignity size-brown, horny and supple. This for all his fears about himself, could not unprepossessing lunatic sat up, rubbed help smiling at the figure which Rumble his eyes, and noticing his new fellow cut with his smudged face, and the lunatic laughed outright.

> as he felt for his handkerchief. But the lunatic immediately ceased laughin; an hour.

"What, have you got into the train on false pretenses? If I thought so, I would fling you out on the line!"

"No, my lord; the gent'e nat will play all right," intervened the servant Jones, in a flurry; and under his breath he repeated: "For heaven's sake, gentlemen, do as he tells you. He is like a mad bull when he gets into a passion.'

"Well, don't get making difficulties again," growled the lunatic, eying the now horrified Rumble with mistrust. Take off your hat, sir, and rest your head on the back of the seat, then open your whole mouth as wide as it will go. That's not wide enough. Yes, that will about do. Now we'll begin."

The game began-and how to describe it? Jones, the servant, bleated with frenzy, and Thumble, by his directions, did likewise. It was even fine to hear the way in which Thumble bellowed Moo-oo-o!" putting his whole soul into it and keeping his eyes fix on the luna-tic in abject fear of offending him. Rumble meantime, leaning back with his jaws agape, remained passive while the luna. tic took shots at him. Every time a pellet fell into his mouth he was obliged —with what wry contortions heaven knows!—to swallow it, and the madman with his burnt cork marked a line on Thumble's right cheek. When the pellet's fell it was either Thumble or Jones who gulped them down, and then Thumble's left cheek received the scores. This delightful pastime lasted as far as Leamington, but the train did not stop; it sped on and on, the lunatic raising shricks of laughter and throwing his pellets each time with greater force. At last the pellets were exhausted, and it turned out that Rumble had swllowed eleven pills of Daily Telegraph, and Thumble and Jones nine between them, so the lunatic had by his rules won the game. He clapped his hands and yelled, 'I'm winner; now we'll have hot pancakes all round!"

"No, my lord, not hot pancakes," prayed Jones, who had probably had a taste of these dainties before and remembered them.

"Yes, yes, hot pancakes," insisted the lunatic, with maniacal glee. "Rumble, I'll slap your face; you'll pass the slap on to Thumble; Thumble to Jones, and Jones to me. We'll hit as hard and as fast as we can till we've done eleven slaps, which is the number of my score. Now, look alive!" W-Whack!

And before Rumble could even see what was coming he received on the cheek, with all the might of the lunatic's brawny hand, a slap which seemed to loosen all his teeth in their sockets. Roaring with pain and fury he jumped up, but the lunatic was standing, too, pool, Thumble will be the cow and my servant Jones will play the calf."

Thumble, and Thumble, with a howl of anguish, passed the blow on to Jones, who, on trying to hit the lunatic, as per convention, received a kick in the stomach which sent him to the other end of the carriage. W-whack! down came the slap the second time on Rumble's face, and was passed on, and then a third time. At the fourth deal the agony of the situation became unendurable. Rumble and Thumble, their cheeks as red as steaks, consulted each other with the eye, and by common accord sprang together on the madman, yelping despairingly to Jones to assist them.

When, at ten o'clock, the train steamed into Oxford, woful cries were heard emerging from a first-class carriage, and the porters, on opening the door, descried three bruised and bleeding passengers sitting in a row on the prostrate body of a man, who was tearing up the drugget with his teeth. Their faces were battered out of all recognition, their noses were swollen to turice their natural size, and their torn coats and shirts were literally drenched in blood. It caused a pretty hubbub in the station; the more so when Rumble and Thumble, on being extricated, took to reviling each other on the platform, and calling each other pusillanimous curs. The truth is, for some cause or other bad blood had arisen up between these two, and it has not been appeased yet. Thumble threatened the company with an action, and had to be paid off. Rumble wished to indict the madman's friends, but on being menaced with a cross action for using "more violence than necessary" toward an afflicted man, desisted, and even disbursed money. On the whole, however, this little tiff proved beneficial to the community, for Rumble, disliking superfluous expense, had always dissuaded his company from establishing effective communication between passengers and guard; but after his journey with the unatic he thought better of it. His line is now provided with excellent alarm bells, and whenever Director Rumble travels he takes care to be seated beneath one of them .- London World.

Almonds.

The almond is simply a peach with a leathery coat instead of the juicy flesh of the peach. This often splits open when the nut is ripe. Those who don't know get varieties that do not open, and then find "almond culture not profitable." It takes brains to run even so simple an affair as an almond orchard. - Meehan's

WORDS OF WISDOM.

Light is the life of truth. Love is always the gainer by being

It won't do to trust your feelings for

No man can be truly brave who is not seeking to be truly good.

The man who knows he is wrong is the biggest coward on earth.

A little weed has no more right to be in the garden than a big one. The man who does wrong suffers, but those who love him suffer more. The train needs the airbrake more than it needs the whistle of the engine. Between thinking wrong and doing wrong there is not much difference.

The crookeder a man can make other people look the straighter he thinks he s himself.

The world is full of trouble because here are so many folks who would cather have ten cents now than ten dollars after awhile.

Blind people nearly always look happy, but if their eyes could be opened for one minute and then closed they would be miserable forever.

Every one who every amounts to anything for good has to be hid for a season beside some little brook where he can be taught how to win victories on the mountain top.-Indianapolis (Ind.) Ram's Horn.

Caudles Made From Plants.

"Several very curious substances of an inflammable nature are produced by plants," said a naturalist to a Washington Star writer. "Many vegetable species bear wax, which, in the form of minute scales on the surface of the plum and other stone fruits, makes what is called the 'bloom.' It exists so abundantly in the fruit of a Virginia myrtle that the latter has received the name of 'candle berry.' These berries are collected in great quantities for their wax and caniles made from them burn with remarkable brightness and freedom from smoke, at the same time giving out pleasant fragrance. A wax-bearing tree exists in South Africa the berries of which yield a substance which is made into candles by the Durch. There are several species of wax palms in South America. One of them has its leaves covered with scales of wax, while the trunk of another kind is covered with the wax as with a varnish.

"A substance very like tallow is yielded by a tree in China, the seed ves-sels of which are hard brownish husks. Each of them contains three round white kernels, about the size and shape of hazel nuts. These kernels have small stones inside them, around which the fatty matter lies. From the pit of the stone an oil for burning in lamps is pressed. Almost all the candles used in the south of China are made from this vegetable tallow. A tree abounds on the Malabar Coast of India, called the 'piney,' which bears a pulpy fruit that lds a great quantity of approaching wax in firmness and superior to animal fat for the manufacture

"Another remarkable inflammable sub. stance secreted by plants is camphor. It is chiefly obtained from a species of laurel native to the East Indies. In preparing it pieces of the root are put into an iron vessel tightly covered. When the vessel is neated the camphor rises in the form of vapor and is condensed on the cover. That is the primitive method at all events, though I believe that it is improved upon by newly invented processes. In old trees the camphor is some times found, when the trunks are split opea, in a very pure state, forming small concretions or 'tears.'"

A Clock Visible For Fifty Miles. An invention by which an ordinary clock is practically mignified to such a size as to permit of its being seen for a radius of fifty miles around, says the Electrical Engineer, London, is a recent invention of Mr. H. Y. Dickinson of London. The actual time-indicating clock-work is the same size as in an or dinary turres clock, but connected with it there is a second train of clockwork which is controlled by the clock proper, and is put in motion every minute, when it whizzes around (regulated by an ordinary fan governor) and actuates an electric flashing lens in much the same way as the striking mechanism of an ordinary clock acts. The beam of light reflected into the sky goes through the movement of a striking hammer when the clock is ndicating the even hour. Tais is, however, only one signal made by the apparatus. Another symbol is used for every complete interval of five minutes, and yet another for odd minutes. Thus, supposing the time to be 7:27, this would be denoted by the seven beats in the first instance, then five other signs (indicating 5x5 minutes), then two short sharp flashes for the two odd minutes. This operation is gone through every minute, the signalling taking on an average about ten seconds. Of course it will be evident to anyone that the system of signals used can be modified to suit any conditions, and further, that the code has only to be understood to enable anyone with a little practice to read this sky clock with ease. Such apparatus placed in the centre of this great city might be a great boon to the inhabitants, and, after a little practice, the time would be read off as easily as from an ordinary dial.

THE OLD SPRING HOUSE.

Among its mossy stones there crept A lizzard small whose eyes shone bright, An aged frog by day who slept And croaked through all the summer night. A rusty cup hung on a nail Within the reach of every hand; A spider spun its filmy veil

To lure the unsuspecting, and To scare the youngster, who, at noon Stopped by the springhouse, quaint and

To listen to the riv'let's tune And drink the water clear and cold. Twas in the old delightful times

When life and love were filled a-brim With gladsome songs and joyful rhymes, When on the west horizon's rim No future shadows laid their sea

When all the sky was set with gems

And all of hope was true and real, As bright as angel's diadems. 'Twas there beside the spring-house door At noon the farmer smoked his cob;

Twas there the maiden bended o'er Her soldier's letter with a sob And counted all the days that were

And all the days to come ere he Would stand again beneath the fir. Or lean against the balsam tree.

Twas there the youngest used to play About the grass that used to grow Along the babbling riv'let's way That gushed so placidly below. Ah! all is changed, the stones have droppel

In one by one to choke the spring; The waters, once alive, have stopped To man or beast their offering; The fir is blasted by the gate, The balsam tree is rent in twaiu;

No more a pair of lovers meet To greet and kiss and part again, Old ghosts of times long dead, they come To send the mind to far off days;

Their forms are smoke, their lips are dumb, Their footsteps tread in shadow ways. -H. S. Keller, in Chicago Sun.

PITH AND POINT

A collective noun-Taxes.

Get off the earth, as the cyclone said to the barn .- Philadelphia Record. There are not many people who grow old without beginning to look greasy .--Atchison Globe. "How is things in your business?" "Dull, I am glad to report." "Glad to report!" "Yes, I'm a saw sharpener."—

Kate Field's Washington. Big—"The Roman soldiers must have been very well drilled." Bug—"Why?" Big—"Because they had augurs for chaplains."-Yale Record. "Mercy!" cried Juliet. "This glove is tight." "I too should be intoxicated, rapturously responded Romeo, "were I a glove upon that band."—Harper's "Don't you think that Mr. Gilder's voice has a very metallic ring in it?" "Very naturally so, my dear; all his teeth are crowned with gold."-Harvard Lampoon.

This would be a pleasant world in some respects if wemen had as much confidence in their husbands' word as they have in the word of a peddler .--Atchison Globe.

Tommy-"Paw, w'y do they call taking a man's money from him 'bleeding him?'" Mr. Figg-"Because it robs him of his circulating medium."-Indianapolis Journal.

Jones-"So you could never understand a woman?" Smith-"No. Before marriage I occupied my time making myself out worse than I was; now it takes me every minute of my time to make myseif out better than I am."--

She-"If you don't let go my hands, sir, I'll ring for the servants." Hering?" She (thoughtfully) -"That's so -and-and poor mamma's got a head-ache, so I dare not scream."—New York

Little Edith's mother was explaining a map. "These," said she, "are mountains, this is a river, this a lake, and these little dots are the towns and cities." "And these, mamma," said Edith, referring to the lines of latitude and longitude, "these are the telephone and trolley wires."—Boston Transcript.

Harpoons for Two.

An English officer found his match in an American duclist in 1835. The American was the captain of a whaling ship, and, when in a West India quarrel forced upon him by a rude bully, h happened also to be a British officer stationed there. The American accepted the challenge offered and chose as the proper weapons harpoons, with which he was an expert.

Forced to assent, the officer had to station himself opposite his now formidable antagonist, who stood poising the long spear in his right hand, while his left held the coil of rope attached to it. Though greatly troubled, shame and desperation kept up the courage of the Britisher, till the whaler cast his coil of rope into the hands of his second mate. exclaiming in a gruff voice: "Stand by, to haul the critter in.

"Aye, aye, sir," was the ready response. But before it was well uttered the "critter" was far beyond the reach of harpoon or tackle, and he never again troubled a Yankee whaler. - New York

The origin of the pony express in Utah is credited to Brigham Young.

FRANK W. GIST,

Entered at the Past Office in Calera as Second Class Metror.

CALERA, SATURDAY, JUNE 18.

DEMOCRATIC STATE TICKET.

FOR GOVERNOR. THOMAS GOODE JONES. FOR SECRETARY OF SLATE, J. D. BARRON, of Clay. ATTORNEY GANERAL.

W. L. MARTIN, of Jackson. J. W. PURMON, of Wilcox.

FOR TREASURER. J. CRAIG SMFTH, of Dallas. SUPERINTERMENT OF EDUCATION, JOHN G. HARRIS, of Sumter. COMMISSIONER OF AGRICURTURE. HECTOR D. LANE, of Lonestone.

For Chief Justice of Sni reme Court. GEORGE W. STONE, of Montgomery. Associate Justices, T. W. COLEMAN, of Greene. THOS N. McCLELLAN, of Limestone. JAMES B. HEAD, of Jefferson. JON, HARRALSON, of Dallas.

For Judge of the 7th Judicial Circuit. LEROY F. BOX.

COUNTY DEMOCRATIC TICKET

For Ecpresentative, JOHN P. WEST. For Probate Judge, JOHN S. LEEPER. For Sheriff, HENCEY W. NELSON.

For Tax Assessor, JOHN II. HAMMONDS. For Tax Collector, AB. F. SMITH. For Treasurer.

--- THOMPSON. For Supt. Of Education, F. O. DAWSON.

For County Commissioners, 1st. Dist -JAMES McGOWAN. 2nd. Dist.-RUFUS WALKER. 3 d. Dist.-RICHARD GRIFFIN. 4th. Dist .-- A. M. Jones.

NOTICE-CHANGE.

With this issue Mr. S. H. Gist assumes the direct management of the Journal. There will be no supervision of the editorial and publication department.

people "Bowmancsque Democrats."

AND now S. M. Dinkins is a candidate on the third party ticket for congress. Life is too short. Dinkins, for such feolishness.

The Clay county people's party has nominated a full county ticket, and endorsed Kolb and his bolters It was done in the late council at for their state ticket.

sentiment, an extract from Gover- the state should don his munitions of nor Jones acceptance speech. It is war and enter the field. After the worthy of close perusal and attentive study.

claim to be democrats, but they effort on the part of every patriot the relief that the people need. Our have all sorts of planks in their is necessary, and all true democrats main reason for publishing it is the platform. Even the negro is bid will enlist under the banner with hope that some voter will see it and WHITE supremacy should be and Kolb-Adams platform, notwithstanding.

CHARLIE LAKE is perfectly satis fied with the nominations of the late convention, notwithstanding his townsman, Judge Walker, was defeated for a place on the Supreme nomination for Commissioner of Agriculture!

after. A good natured third party junets." If these rules are follow- clause in the law, whether he be a has since the unfortunate split and man suggested that Adams shipped ed the victory will be won, and evthe Kolb platform to his address ery man on the democratic ticketover the L. & N. road, and that it from governor down to constablefailing to arrive, he was at Calera will be elected. hunting it.

THE CALERA JOURNAL. FORCE BILL—HOLE WANTS IT.

ONE J. H. Lockwood, one of the Kolb followers, came home from the Capitol City, and in giving an account of his stewardship at the Opera House meeting that opposer of the organized democracy had this to say: "I don't know that I understand the Force bill, but it is to give a man a fair chance to vote, I think it is right, and I wish to God that Uncle Sam could put bayomets around the ballot boxes in the Black Belt on the first Monday in August so that the negro could get a fair vote." This shows the way the wind blows: Kolb and his deluded following would now resort to any measure that has a semblance of defeating Thes. G. Jones and democracy in Alabama. They would have United States soldiers stationed around the polis to intimidate the white democrats into sul mission to the overthrow of good officers and good government, replacing these by the rag-tag and kangaroo followers of Macuneism, Simpson-Pefferism and notty scraps from the two great parties. Democrats of Shelby when these apostles of third party. ism come among you descanting uafair counting of votes, Kolb's bad treatment by the bosses, the oppression of the farmer, and all that sort of rot-don't be deluded into the folly of supporting dissatisfied and ignorant office-spekers, but be firm, be men. Remember the battle of 1874, that battle when Cen. S. Houston led and the democrats followed. The time when young warriors like Lon Grant and R. E. Boyd and others from the mountains stood by the patriots of the try. Remember that a force bill is every nook and corner-in the call. just the same as it would to largest wilt thou have us do?" Let every negro precinct in the black beit. It member of a club go to the commitform of the Kolb contingenta

THE conservative part of the present campaign has been exacted. Montgomery. This was right and ELSEWHERE will be found a noble proper, but now every democrat in plans are laid, when the representais no time for sluggards.

2s .- Gov. Jones acceptance speech. beat, in every village, in every town al leader.

The Best Place to Secure a Business Education is at the LATERAL DE CONTRE DES

WERCE

PRETAINED AND ALLE

Send for Circular,

LEONARD LIPPMAN, President.

M. M. FIELDS, Vice President

G. F. HART, Secretary and Treasurer.

In this issue we make room for tives of the party have met in har- the democratic platform adopted at monius convention, adopted a plat- the late state convention. It is an WILL the Peoples party support form, passed its laws, nominated its able document and excellent platthe ticket inscribed upon it, and read it that would not have othermarch to battle, and to victory. It wise had the pleasure of knowing what this great and conservative is the rule of the democracy, and The generals have held the council. party is proposing to do. The parsense-be sounded, with the enemy to be gathered up by republicans, before us, and drive them with hot iscalawags, mugwumps, yea bolters, bench. But, then, Hector got the Pursuit toward the republican camp and let them run it. We have givwhether they are traveling via the en it space that every reader of the are captured let them be paroled ty to read and know what the party S. M. Adams was in Calara day on the promise that they abandon law is, and we are assured all who

It is not probable that the state Ruler laid the hand of death at the paper men's honesty and loyalty to ALL that is good and noble in our and county campaigns will be form- threshhold of the disorganized ele- party and principle. civilization, all that is high and ally open until after the Chicago ment, and before its national conpure in aspirations, all that is com- convention has made its nomina- vention had assembled removed L. mon in our traditions, and sacred tions. During this interval the L. Polk, the only man capable of them will come back to the fold, memories of the past, and all hopes state and county executive commit- leading them to anything like suc- more of them will go squarely into of the future, ery out to those who tees should be busy enrolling can-cess. Mr. Polk was the only man, would leave us to turn back, and vassers, compiling documents and north or south, who has sympathizstand again with our father's house, otherwise preparing for an aggress- ed with the movement, with a shadagainst the foes who would destroy ive campaign. Democrats in every ow of hope or capacity as its nation- the fold before the election, and the

to the season of the

Black Belt. Remember that the and in every city should be prepar- Errour our next issue goes to passage of a force bill means return paring to do something. This appress the national democratic couto the incarceration of statesrights- peal includes every democrat in the vention will have met, and most men; men who love peace and coun- state. Shelby county is included -- likely have nominated candidates for president and vice president of the nothing but a law to turn elections | Every democratic club is expected | United States. | Who will these canover to hired soldiery to run as dic- to do its share of the work. The aidates be is on the mind of every change in the policy or business tated by dishonest and radical office Calera Young Men's Democratic democrat. And the desire of every control, Mr. F. W. Gist retaining holders, and would apply to the Club is not exempt. The campaign democrat is that the most available white precincts of Shelby county committees should enquire, "What men should be selected. The ticket put out by the opposition is not a remarkably able one, but in our THE Age-Herald calls the Kolb would apply to the democratic city tee for orders. When these orders judgment a very strong one, and of New York just as it would to the are given out let each one hurry the democracy will need all the inmost densely negro populated city to perform his part, return and ask fluences that it can command to gain in the south. These are some of for semething else. The old grey- a victory. Mr. Harrison is not a curses that would result from the haired veteran, the young voter, great statesman like Blaine and carrying out or adoption of the part- the yearth, the tow-headed boy, the a few others of his party; but he is orator, the quiet debater, the jour- undoubtedly the strongest man in nalist, the banker and the pauper, that pary, and one of the shrewdest the man of leisure and the laborer, politicians in the government. A the merchant and the farmer, the mistake in the selection of a strong professional man and the mechanic, candidate, a candidate that can not all, can do something. If every carry New York and Indiana will one will do his best, the victory is insure another defeat for the demo-

Ir comes to us from a reliable source that the crowd claiming to be the organized democrats in Bibb county, and whose delegates were Kolb, Collier, Adams & Co.? They candidates, united and determined form of principles, promising all advitted to prima facia seats in the state convention, only one of whom went io, one going with the belters-are now in the confines, by their own signatures, of the third party. A mass meeting was held under the auspices of Tom. Seale, Shelby county's avowed Inare as fixed in this state as the rocks formulated plans, furnished the am- ty law is attached, and we ask that dependents. Tom. told them he was of Gibralter, the negro plank in the munition, and the battle is with the all real and study that, also, and a peoples partyman, was not a demoyoung democracy. We believe they if there is any democrat that can lerat, not a republican, never had will win. Let the column be form- object to a single clause, ofter care- been either; now if you want to ed, the flag unfurled, the charge ful and unbinsed study, then we join that party, come and subscribe made, the cry-down w the bolters, shall pronounce such a one ready to your names, and they came forward Manningites and people 'party non- throw the organization to the wind; and "signed." These are the men believe anything the "dear people" want is democracy, and that it muttered not how they voted or what Kolb route. Whatever prisoners Journal might have an opportunit doctrine they advocated they were

The Athens Courier, one of the before yesterday. The curious "St. Louis Resolutions, Ocala Plat- realize the necessity of party or strongest supporters of Capt. Kolb were anxious to know what he was forms and other nonsensical ad- ganization cannot object to a single for the nomination for Governor, bolt, taken his name down and sutparty. In his wisdom, the Great of the Journal's defense of news-

> THE leaders of the Kolb revolt the republican party.—Age Herald.

> Youv'e got it down wrong, broth. er, the democrits will get back in republicans won't have what's left.

-FINE MILLINERY-

Mrs. S. H. McCauley's,

NEAR THE DEPOT,

Miontevallo. - - Ala.

A Spleudid Line of Trimmed and Untrimmed Hats in the Latest Styles, and at Reasonable Prices.

Handkerchiefs & Hosiery. Saturday Sales at SI.

Harness A Saddles.

DEALERSIN

HARDWARE & TINWARE, 全区包型 近点过速或工

Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded Shells always on Hand.

113 19TH STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

Banking House of

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.

CALERA; ALABAMA.

Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans,

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and sell exchange on New York It does look like Providence has This action on the part of Mr.

Taken a hand against the Peoples' Rauls is another evidence in support the part of Mr.

This action on the part of Mr.

Rauls is another evidence in support merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

CATY PROPERTY AND FARM

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms

THE editor makes the excuse of one of the invited guests, to the Lord's feast. "I have married me a wife, therefore I can not come." It is hoped he will be here next week. The weather and the campaign are getting very warm for an old man to stand at the helm all the time. We have employed a "kid" to do our fighting, however and will "pull through" on the old democratic line, unless the imported editor of the Advocate should knock us out on the first round.

WHAT THE GOVERNOR SAID.

The present movement against the for several months. party, in whatever shape it may be disguised, in essence and spirit is an effort to weild and mould into one compact That there are great and needed reforms demanded in the interest of the people in financial and economic questions has long and sturdily been maintained by the Democracy throughout the length Privett the ushers, and little Terhave failed of accomplishment is not the fault of Democracy, but the work of its enemies, for the party has not had the power to legislate in the last quarter of pend upon federal legislation, our only lent harmony to the scene. hope lies in the triumph and aggressive Democracy, A Democrat who seeks the road to these referma by joining a his own party is only firing into the friends, back of his friends in the hour of battle. Who shall affirm with truth that the Democratic party in this State has fallen short of its high duty to the people? Partisan rhetoric and declamation may assert in glittering generalties that the party has not snet the just expectation a success. The proceeds were apof the people, but like breath upon the pane of glass their aspersions pass quietly away in the light of the truth. Who can point to a line of legislation of our party in Alabama that has been un- home at Siluria, Shelby county, on just to any class within the broad limits the 15th. inst., after a lingering lot secretly and without fear or conof this State? What interest of the farillness of paralysis. The deceased straint.

14. We favor the election of Railroad and any other class or pursuit in life engaged in the ministry for the has not received just and fair recogni- Methodist church for a number of tion and consideration at the hands of years. the party? Let these whe complain point to some specific fault. He who truthfully reads the legislation and platforms of the party cannot find a trace of Journal office. unfairness nor fail to perceive that it has i matured with arxious care every interest which concerns the I, 500,000 people whose webtare and prosperity are inseparably interwoven with men's Democratic club. the success of the Democratic party -June 10, 1892.

Come what may, we will conquer. for the organized democracy bears grove Thursday night. aloft the white flag of pesce. It stands for harmony between the in Calera. races, good will and fraternity weign of law, the education of youth, the city last Thursday night. the improvement of our system where the state deals with crime or misfortune; for wisdom and econogeneraly for the maintenance of that place. wise government. -Gov. Jone's acceptunce speech.

Two MORE withdrawals from the Kolb bolters. First comes Mr. J. O. Purner, of St. Clair, the nomiand in a nice card informs the bolt- will be a benedict. ers that he is a democrat, cannot, as he is a democrat, accept the up to witness the marriage of the ed-In the same issue of the Age-Herald is the intelligence that Dr. Cameron, of Sumter county, refuses to was in Calera on Monday of this week. serve on the executive committee. Col. Quarles is a young attorney of the party This as no more than was expected. Black Belt, and will be before the next and we look for all square thinking general assembly for the position of men to follow as fast as they understand the facts concerning the situation and study the democratic plate every way worthy. form. When thinking men have time to form just conclusions they will break away so fast that Kolb tion of the parrot: "Where was you when the cyclone passed?"

THE prediction that S. M. Adams would go into the Peoples' party as soon as he had the opportunity to publican system of government.

That in the administration of the participate in the State democratic Federal Government the reserved rights convention, is no longer a question His thirst for disorganization bore elections of members of Congress or too heavy upon his weak democracy, and he concluded that he could and liberties of the people of the several travel faster on his journey towards the moon by another soute, so he their servants; and we therefore dejumped clear over the Peoples' party and landed on the tail end of lican party to pass what is known as the Rolb's 'rump' ticket, leaving the kanga-poo crowd and the party that ciple of Democratic faith that no more was fostered on his own lap to its father and mother—the Knights of payment of the national debt and for son ought not to do that way.

ORANGE BLOSSOMS

TWO MARRIAGES IN A DAY.

On last Monday two couples were That equal justice to all and of hearts are beating in unison.

In the afternoon Mr. W. E. Ida K. Avery, at the Vanderbilt They left for Montgomery at once, from where, after a short trip, they have returned to their home here. Mr. Brinkerhoff is the popular and successful banker of Calelady, who has been ttopping here

In the evening at 8:30 Mr. F. W. Gist and Mrs. Minnie Hardy were calation of the State banks. force all the scattered elements of oppo- married at the Cumberland church sition to the further rule of Democracy. by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, in the presence of a large crowd of their friends. Miss Lula Jones was the maid of honor, Messrs. Scott and and breadth of this union. That they rell Bridges and little Miss Watson were the tiny tots who led the plication of offices, but we layor the control and regulation of lines of transparty to the altar. The efforts at decoration were a great success, a century. So far as these seforms de- while the music by Mrs. Bridges

Mr. and Mrs. Gist at once took up their residence at West Calera Third Party or promoting division in where they will be at home to their

> The Gypsy Carnival held in the Teague grove Wednesday night and all necessary laws shall be enacted which consisted of music and other to forever prevent such competition. innocent amusements, a quantity of refreshments, was in every way propriated to the funds of the Base Ball teams of Calera, and amounted to about $35.00.
>
> 13. We favor the passage of such electo about $35.00

Rev. M. G. Foust died at his Job Printing line, you can do no better than give your orders to the administration of the affairs of the State.

The grand Ratification meeting on Thursday night will be under on Thursday night will be under the integrity of the party organization the auspices of the Calera young and to this end they shall have power All kinds of commercial and pam-

Governor Jones speech of acceptance, phlet work done on short notice at the Jouanal job office. Ratification meeting at Teague's

Russel the photographer is still

Harry G. McCall, formally a citizen among classes, a wise and just and a newspaper man of Calera was in

Mr. Adcock, of Tuscumbia, a former newspaper man was in to see us a few

Miss. Joanna Farkington, of Brierfields my in laying public burdens, and was visiting the Misses Hendrics of this

> The Methodist Bistrict Conference is in session at Leeds. Rev. Z. A. Dowling of this place is in attendance.

Charlie Gist, a brother of the senior of the JOURNAL, spent a few days in Calera this week. Charlie, like all young men, neo for superintendent of education, is looking forward to the time when he place to which he had been assigned, itor. Jimmie is an "old chum," and the JOURNAL was glad to see him in the family again.

Col. W. W. Quarles, of Dallas county, State Solicitor, and if that body should elect him it will make no mistate, but bestow an honor upon a man who is in

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

1. That the assumption and exercise will open his eyes and ask the ques powers than those specifically granted in the constitution is usurpation and oppression; that a strict construction of the powers of the Federal Government is essential to the protection of the people of the several States in their do-mestic affairs, of life, liberty and property, and to the preservation of our re> of the States must not be impaired; and that Force Bills by Congress to regulate electors for President and Vice-President will be destructive of the rights always subsist between the people and nounce as unconstitutional and revolutionary the recent attempt of the Repub-

3. We declare as a fundamental prinrevenue shall be raised by the Federal Labor and the Alliance. The par- (the support of the Government, honesty Judge for the seventh judicial cir and economy administered; and that in laying duties on imports, any discrimicuit.

nation in favor of one interest or busi ness, or of one section of the union to the detriment of others, finds no sup-port in the constitution and none from a just regard of the rights of the people. married in Calera, and two pairs privilege tomone is the bed rock principle of the Democratic party-the parry of the people. We are therefore, opposed to all manner of bounties, sub-sides and paternalism in the govern-Brinkerhoff was married to Miss ment, and we demand that the McKin ley bill be repealed, and that the tariff Hotel, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling. as to subjects, that necessaries and such every member of the committee to be articles as the masses consume shall be as lightly taxed as possible.

4. That the Democratic party of Alabama expresses its condemnation of the Republican party for their administration of the figance of the country, under which the demand of the people for a sufficient circulating medium has been ra and his bride is a sweet little ignored, and silver has been driven from its time-honored and rightfu place and uses under the Constitution of the United States, where it was maintained so long as our party had control

5 We demand that Congress repeal all laws authorizing rational banks to issue notes to circulate as money based upon the credit of the Government

6. We demand that all money appropriated by the Federal Government for the payment of pensions shall be raised by a gradual income tax.

7. We are opposed to the ownership Bolin.
of railroad and telegraph lines by the Bea Federal Government, and to the multiportation and communication so that only a fair and reasonable rate shall be exacted of the people.

8. That public offices is a public trust to be administered for the good of the whole people, and not spoils to be dis-tributed as rewards to unscrupulous partisan favorites.

9. We indorse the administration of Grover Cleveland and recognize in him one of the ablest living exponents of the true principles of the Democratic party. 10. We demand that free labor shall be relieved of competition with convicts, 11. We favor legislation that will provide a more efficient system of public

12. We favor such further legislation

tion laws as will better secure the gov-ernment of the State in the hands of the intelligent and the virtuous, and that Commissioners by the people.

15. We indorse the wise and able administration of Thomas G. Jones, who has followed in the footsteps of his Democratic predecessors in redeeming

Resolved, That it is the duty of the State Executive Committee to preserve and authority,

1. To prescribe the qualification of voters at the primaries of the party.

2. To prescribe such rules in respect to the primaries as will insure a fair and free expression of the will of every Democrat, and give to each one his due and proper influence in the selection of delegates and candidates

3. To consider, and if they deem wise, to petition the Legislature to pass laws regulating the primaries of the pirty, shing any traud or wrongful conduct therein.

4. To provide so that the primaries for the selection of delegates to State and Congressional Conventions shall be held in every precinct on the same day.

That wherever any nominee of a State shall refuse or fail to support the nominees of this Convention, ail Democrats are absolved from supporting him and that the Executive Committees of the several counties of this State, accord with this Convention, be and are hereby authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to nominate others in lieu of the se thus refusing. If a committeeman refuses to support the nominee of the party, then the democrats of such county may reorganize, upon the advice of the State Executive Committee, after an application in writing, signdet. The state of such county. The State Executive to witness the marriage of the edmanner of effecting the reorganization that whoever refuses to support the nominees of this Convention is not a loyal member of the Democratic party, and is not eligible to the nomination for any office at the hands of the party nor to membership in any committee of the facie right of delegates claiming seats in the State Convention. 7. Whenever any contest as to any nomination shall arise after the adjournment of the nominating convention or after the result of any primary has been declared, the committee of the party in the territory affected, or if there be no such, the State Executive Committee shall have authority to settle such con- precint." test, and to declare who is the regular

Even the CALERA JOURNAL has not the audacity to assert that John P. West is a democrat.—People's

We didn't think it necessary, Mr. Advocate. Col. West's character as required by law. The court of of men don't have to be heralded to county commissioners may change or prepares his palate for a dish of terms for refusing to violate law and crow, John P. West will not fill the praise Hon. R. W. Cobb, who fai ed to bill of fare.

THE Judicial convention at Talla dega, after ballotting for nearly two days, nominated Judge Box for re-election to the office of Circuit COMMITTEE MEETING CALLED.

To the members of the democratic executive committee of Shelby county

You are hereby called to meet in o'clock a. m.

Business ef vit.l interest to the party will be brought before the meeting be so reduced in rate, and so reformed and I therefore earnestly urge upon

> The following members of the executive committee by beats:

Beat 1. W. B. Browne, J. F. Mc-Lane Sr., J. A. Cameron. Beat 2. N. N. Mosteller, Hosea Pear-on, Dr. H. I. Williams. Beat 3 W. R. Oliver, J. H. Gunn, J.

S. Bridges. Beat 4. J. M. Reynolds, A. C. Ingram, Harry Bonsfield, Beat 5. Not represented.

Beat 6. J. M. Powers, Albert Fekl. A. Griffin Jr

Beat 7, H. E. O'brien, J. B. Adams, J. M. Roy. Boat 9. E. S. Martin, Wm Jackson,

Beat 9, J. F. Pope, J. L. Roy, J. W. son, D. W. Kidd. Beat H. J. E. Adams, G. W. Dyc

Ino. M. Moore. Beat 12. Not represented in con-

Beat 13. D. N. Lee, B. F. Dawson, R. M. Deshazo.

Beat 16. Chas F. Elliott, E. P. Chandler, J. M. Tate.

ton, Taylor Ferrell. J. R. WHITE, chairman.

Columbiana, June 13, 1892. Mr. J. E Dykes on the Gurnee Box. Matter.

Editor of the People's Advocate.

Please allow me space in your paper to reply to some partisan resoluions.cdopted at Gurnec, May 27, 1892 denouncing the commissioners' court for attempting to abolish the ballot box at that place. One would think trom reading the proceedings of that mass meeting it was composed of constitutional lawyers. If the people of Gurnee will pluck the mote out of their own eyes, they could see that they are more partisan than the board of of commissioners' in trying to force the court to violate the law.

I want to say here that I have taken no part in the Gurnee matter, for or against, still I am denounced as bitterly as if I had. I accept my part of it, and am ready to help defend the action of the commissioners in regard to the Gurnee box.

Section 345 of the code requires that three months' notice to be posted up at the court house door before the commissioners court has any legal right to establish a voting place in the Section 346 of the code say ' the several courts of county commissioners, in their respective counties, may establish two places of voting in the Commencial ame election precinct." "May estabwhether they do or do not establish a n this line. bex at Gurnee, unless the court establishes it without legal notice being giving both before and after the order was made.

The fifth resolution of the Gurnee meeting is as follows:

Resolved, That our carnest thanks are due and are hereby tendered the

Now, let us see if there is not something partisan in the above resolution. Section 350 of the code provides:

by the court of county commissioners To settle and determine the prima in the number or boundaries of a precinct or ward, or in the places of voting therein, it shall be the duty of the judge of probate within five days bub for a patron saint. The people of thereafter to give notice of such Shelby county are their own judges. change, to be posted at the court house High courts can be partisan as well as THURSDAY NIGHT, JUNE 22, door and two public piaces in such low courts, and there is more to induce

The order was made by the court in January for the establishment of a voted after the matter in April, three around to visit you soon. months after the order was made, and found there had been no notice given establish a voting place if they see the probate judge shall give notice of comply with the law, if not for partisan

Does not having a voting place at Garnee disfranchise the voter of precinct 4? If so, they have been dis franchised along time. This partisan court did not disfranchise them. Do the people of Gurnee imagine that the

URE BLOOD GOOD HEALTH

Now is the time for everyone who cherishes good health, to pay particular Columbiana at the court house on tention to the condition of their blood and its proper circulation. Nearly all dissaturday June the 18th, 1892, at 11 blood and a sluggish circulation.

THE KING OF BLOOD PURIFIERS Possessing Extraordinary Cleansing Powers

Restoring and Strengthening the whole System, Enriching the Blood producing increased vitality by restoring an impaired digestion and bringing back the bloom of youth to the cheek of the enfecbled and emaciated.

Price, $1.00 per Bottle-6 Bottles for $5.00.

For Sale by All Druggists.

NABERS, MORROW & SINNIGE.

SOLE CONTROLERS,

Birmingham.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION. Beat 10. T. J. Martin, G. W. Thomp- Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers -12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these de-

papers.

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.
the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to mus and a host of other special writers. the household world, having its correspondents scat-Beat 17 W. C. Denson, James Ben-tered over the globe, and having a thor-the sturdy champion of the agricultural ough news service from every important interests of the south.

news center in the world. is worth many times its subscription any other four of the weekly newspapers price to every farmer. This department of the south, and much more than any rousehold.

are engaged by the year, and their inimIt covers the news of the whole itable sketches appear each week. 7. It is the People's Friend, and is

It pays more money for its special 4. Its Agricultural Department alone features and for its news service than price to every farmer. This department of the south, and much more than any is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, whose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

The Calera Journal,

A Weekly Newspaper.

Printing a Specialty. and Legal

THE JOURNAL will be prepared to do all kinds of job work. Letter and Note regular Democratic Convention in this lish" leaves it discretionary with the Heads, Envelopes, Statements, Cards, Posters, Legal Blanks and Pamphlets wil be done at the lowest prices. We solicit the patronage of all who have any work

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

rest of the citizes of the county are fools? Beat 4 has got a voting place, and no one is disfranchised. I would say to the good people o

Gurwee, you have kick the wrong dog. There is a vast difference between the meaning of the words, "may" and 'shall." May is discretionary. Shall is mandatory. I am ready to help defend the acts of the present commis-"Whenever a change has been made sioners' court, or compare and meas- the ure them by the law partisan or honesty, with those of any of your pets. If you want to cast out devils in this county, you had better not take Belze- CALERA YOUNG MEN'S DEMOthem to be partisan.

I hope the people at Gurnee will quiet down, and if this is not satisfacing place at Gurnee. The court look- tory regarding the box, I will be make every arrangement for a grand

> Will the Shelby Chronicle, SHELBY News and Calera Journal please copy.

> > $500 Will be Given

little local exception, his loyalty to proper, after legal notice is given, but For any case of Rheumatism which can not be cured by Dr. Drummond's Light. the party and its principles for "a little less than 114 years," has been unquestioned, and when a democrat prepares his palate for a dish of druggist has not got it, he will order it, or it will be sent to any address by prepaid express on receipt of price, $5. Drummond Medicine Co., 48-50 Maiden Lane, New York. Agents wanted.

PETERS, WILSO & LYMAN, ATTORNEYS AT LAW,

GELARID Ratification!!!

There will be Grand Ratification Meeting under the Supervision of

CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE

-OF RHE-CRATIC CLUB,

AT TEGUE'S GROVE.

The Campaign Committee wilg time, speakers and candidates for the various offices are expected. By order of the CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES

Sir-I made use of your Philotoken

with my last child, in order to procure a safe and easy travil. I used it about two months before my expected time, and I had a very quick and easy confinement. Nothing occurred to protract my convolescence, and I got about in less time than was usual for me. I think it a medicine that should be used by every expectant mother, for should they but try it as I have, they would never again be without it at such times. I am

J. L. PETERS. HENRY WILSON, E. S. LYMAN YOURS respectfully,
Mrs. ELIZABETH DIX.
Anymerchant or druggist can procure Risley's Philotoken for $1 a bottle. CHARLES F. RISLEY, Wholesale Druggist, & Cortlandt St., New York,

As a Drowning Man

Clutches at a Straw So Mr. Powell Took Hood's Sarsaparilla

And It Rescued Him From Danger. "A year ago I was in very bad condition. I run down to 125 lbs. The trouble was dyspepsia in its worst form, accompanied by Nervous Prostration I could not eat, I could not sleep, and at times I could scarcely move my hands. I felt that unless I could get relief soon that I should surely die. I at length concluded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, for

Like a Drowning Man I could catch at a straw. When I began taking it my face and hands were covered with sores, which are all gone. After I had been taking it a couple of weeks I could not denythat I felt better. I have now taken 3 bottles and as a result I weigh 150 lbs., am able to work again and feel a thousand times better. I am certain that in a short time by continuing the medicine I shall be completely cured as I am now so near it. My friends all express surprise to see such a change.

Hood's Sarsaparilla claims are fully justified in my experience." B. C. POWELL, Bigelow, N. Y.

Hood's Pills are the best after-dinner

YOU WANT PAY THEIR WAY der to handle Fowls Judichusly, you must know something about them. To meet this want we are selling a book giving the experience of a practical poultry raiser for unity 25 twenty-five years. It was written by a man who put all his mind, and time, and money to making a success of Chicken raising—not as a pastime, but as a business—and if you will profit by his twenty-five years' work, you can save many Chicks annually,

Book Publishing House, 135 Leonard St., N. Y. City.

6 6 6 6 6 6 6

SHORTHAND.

FRED'K DUTCHER DRUG CO.,

ACENTS WANTED on LARGE COM-mission to sell a lemonade crystal; does not contain tartaric acid; territory given Davis & Hatch, New Bedford, Mass.

AGENTS 33 to $5 per day. Outfit FREE.

No. 22 1892

DEVELOPINGTHEHORSE

HOW IT HAS BEEN DONE IN AMERICA.

Early Spanish Settlers Were the First to Introduce Equine Flesh Into This Country-The Larger European Breeds Now in Popular Favor.

Development of the American Horse. Owing to such a variety, and so many different countries as the originals came from, in making up the horses of the present day in America, it has been impossible to create a single homogeneous breed, that could, with any propriety, be called American, writes A. B. Allen, in the American Agriculturist. We must, therefore, take them as they are known under their present names, and improve each class by itself in the best manner to adapt them to the purpose for which they may be required. This can be done, first, by the use of judleious se-lections from those now in America; and, second, by taking crosses from foreign horses which are superior in some points to our own, which we wish to improve. By these methods we should, in process of time, come to as near perfection as is attainable, and in a cheap and rapid way. Such a course would be attended with a general increased advantage to the public, and add much to the beauty of the animals, and, when offered for sale, an increased price for them would be easily obtainable without an increased cost of rearing.

The Spaniards were the first to introduce horses into America, which was done in their earliest settlements. These were undoubtedly descendants of the Barbs, brought over to Spain from Morocco by the Moors, when making their conquests in that kingdom. They were cognates of the Arabians, and quite like them in all respects, except being slightly larger in size and stouter in build. They multiplied rapidly here in this genial climate, and on the abundant nutritious grasses. Soon exceeding the requirements of the settlers, the surplus animals were turned out to breed wild on the vast plains, extending in great length on each side of the Andes Mountains. Here they became so numerous as to be of no value beyond their hides, and were then killed by the thousands for these, to be shipped off and sent abroad to be converted into leather, and for other purposes. This stock is now well spread over South and Central America, into Mexico and Texas, with a scattering along the northwestern coast up to and beyond California. There, horses vary in size, from thirteen-hand ponies up to fifteen hands or more, of a serviceable sort for all kinds of work, and especially for that under the saddle. They show a free, easy action, sufficiently fast for all ordinary purposes, and possessed of good constitution, hardy and enduring.

The next horses introduced into America were by the French, in the com-mencement of their settlement of Can-These also were much like the Spanish, though somewhat stronger and of a little heavier build. The winter climate there is too cold for horses to run out wild to breed as in South America, consequently they have increased but little beyond the wants of the settlers. The stock descended from them have proved extra hardy and sound; many excel as trotters, and are consequently good roadsters. The use of them is increasing for light work, heretofore given to larger horses. It is found now that such work can be more cheaply done by ponies, and they cost less, as they can be reared on short pastures, where larger horses would starve. But the latter of a good class were bred to advantage by the farmers, and are yet used for the heavier work. Small, promiscuous importations of horses occasionally followed the foregoing, while the farmers continued their annual breeding at home, but this was too generally done at haphazard, and often from old mares worn out with work, and totally unfit to breed and mature vigorous colts, but they ignorantly thought the contrary, and have so continued in their error. The main thing which has governed them in the selection of a stallion was the amount of his fee. They regarded not the pedigree nor the superior powers and make-up. If he was only tolerably good-looking, and very cheap, that was sufficiently satisfactory. What result could one expect from such a course? Why, nothing but horses too often not worth the cost of their results of their results. their rearing. But there were many exceptions, and the general farming stock reared in America has been fairly good. The most valuable horses used America for the improvement of coach and trotting stock were Messenger and Mambrino, imported from England. (A portrait of the latter, who was the handsomer of the two, is presented.) Within the past fifty years the form and style, as well as the pace of the trotting horse have been greatly improved. These early breeders cared less for looks than for pace, and the question with them was: How fast can the go? Now, a fine form must be coupled with a fast pace. The latter, as a general, thing, has marvelovsly increased from a mile in three minutes to two minutes and eight and one-fourth seconds, and many are sanguine that a few years hence the mile will be done in two minutes. The general public will never care to ride at so fast a pace, and the chief object in breeding a horse up to it is to render him certain, when crossed on common mares, to increase the pace of his offspring, it being desirable to obtain a natural easy gait from them of eight to ten miles within the hour, and, if obliged at any time to be pushed, this may be increased to twelve or thirteen miles for a short time without distress to the horse.

THE TROTTING STALLION MAMBRING.

For twenty years or more past the larger European breeds have come into unexpected favor in America, for they are now much more than ever before wanted for heavy farm work, city truckage, mining, quarrying, and lumbering. Considerable numbers have been imported, and, aside from being used for edited.

this heavy work, they are carefully bred together here, male and female, each in its own distinct class. The stalllons are also numerously bred to our largest native mares, and their progeny are turning out well for the heaviest kind of work carried on in the country. They can be advantageously put to this a year younger than common stock, owing to their greater strength. This is a considerable extra advantage in rearing them, and often pays the cost up to three years old, when they can be sold at a high price or turned out to heavy work without danger of over-straining.

Saddle and Sulky.

DETER trotted eighty-seven heats better than 2:20, which is more than any other son or daughter of Hambletonian

THE shah of Persia is the owner of a Shetland pony which is but 12½ inches high. This papered pet of royalty wears gold shoes worth $20 each.

To cultivate a horse's speed and at the same time preserve a sweet temper and a disposition to do his best taxes the trainer's skill to the utmost.

J. G. DAVIS has insured the stallion Alcantara against death by disease or accident for $40,000. The premium on this amount, it is said, is $8,200 a year.

THE measurements of two great horses follow: Sunol, 2.081, 16 hands in front, seant 161 hands behind; Maud S, 2:083, 152 hands in front, 16 hands behind.

ACCORDING to Jockey Fred Taral his income this year will be over $20,000, of which $12,000 will come from Walcott & Campbell, $5,000 from Mike Dwyer and $5,000 from outside sources.

THE $125,000 that Senator Stanford received from the sale of Arion was divided up into 125 equal portions, to be given to that number of destitute boys to educate them at his new university.

A FARMER near Amite, La., owns a horse that will not drink from the watering trough if any of the mules drink first. He does not seem to object to drinking after horses, but draws the line at mules.

SUCCESSFUL horse-trainers, professional base-ball players and United States Senators each get about the same salary. Each requires a peculiar talent to be successful, and who shall say which is the greatest?

A DOWN hill kite track is to be built at This Sedalia, Mo., that is expected to "beat South the world." Instead of the track crossing itself at the starting and finishing points, the starting and finishing stretches will run parallel and about ten or fifteen feet apart.

> THE well-known breeder, J. F. Martindale, assists in the musical department of the First Presbyterian Church, Independence, Iowa, and the voice of J. W. Mercer, the driver and trainer of Incas, $2:14\frac{1}{2}$, is heard in the choir at the Methodist Episcopal Church.

FOR staying qualities, nothing wil beat the thoroughbred. A forty-mile race was recently run at Maronas, Montivedeo, to see which was the fastest and could stay the longest. There were natives, half-bred, three-fourths-bred and thoroughbred, sixteen in all, and a thoroughbred won easily.

A Boy with a Purpose.

Cornelius Vanderbilts's real education was gained in working on his father's farm, and in learning to sail a boat, and drive a horse. He showed in boyhood the very quality which distinguished him as a man-the power of accomplishing things in spite of difficulty and opposition. When he was twelve years old, his father took a contract for getting the cargo out of a vessel stranded near Sandy Hook, and transporting it to New York in lighters.

It was necessary to carry the cargo In wagons across a sandy spot. Cornelius, with a little fleet of lighters, three wagons, their horses and drivers, started from home charged with the management of this difficult affair.

After loading the lighters and starting them for the city, he had to conduct his wagons home by land-a long distance over Jersey sands.

He left the beach with only six dol. lars, and reached South Amboy penniless, with six horses and three men, all hungry, still far from home, and separated from Staten Island by an arm of the sea half a mile wide, that could only be crossed by paying the ferryman six dollars.

This was a puzzling predicament for a boy of twelve, and he pondered long how he could get out of it. length he went holdly to the only innkeeper of the place, and said:

have three teams here that I want to get over to Staten Island. If you will lend me the money to pay the ferryman, I'll leave you my best horse, and if I don't send you back the money within forty-eight hours you can keep the horse.

The innkeeper looked into the bright, honest eyes of the boy for a moment, and said: "I'll do it."

He gave the boy the money, and a horse was left in pawn, but he was redeemed within the time promised.

The Trained Nurse. In the training school: Matron-

What is the common name for an abscess, Miss Smith? Miss Smith (bewildered, as usual)-

Matron (willing to encourage)-What did Job have?

Miss Smith-Patience.

I don't know.

Tableau. - Exchange. To Harden Iron.

Ox hoofs and leather are soaked in French nut oil, and are then burnt, pulverized, and mixed with sea salt and potash. The following proportions are used: Thirty per cent. of hoofs, thirty per cent. of leather, thirty per cent. of sea salt, ten per cent. of potash.

Compressed Air for Cleaning.

Compressed air for cleaning cars is used on the Union Pacific Railway at its Portland shops. The air, under a pressure of 50 pounds per square inch, is delivered from a flexible hose with a small nozzle, and is used as water would be.

THE Emperor of Germany needs a first-class editor with a long blue pen-

Red stockings are to be all the rage in Soft, flimsy silk scarfs are a fashion of the hour.

Veil-pins are now quite necessary to women's toilets.

The Queen of England never goes to bed before midnight.

In these days of many kinds of gloves the women who wear "real French kid" are the exception. Handkerchiefs are very much to the front, and women are spending their incomes upon them as of yore.

The average age at which women marry is 25.5. Married women live two years longer than single women. Miss Moody, daughter of the well known evangelist, is traveling in the Orient. She writes vividly of the scenes and scenery of Egypt. The little turbans with one inch crowns are intended for the tall girl. The short girl is provided for in the high-brimmed poke bounet. Women's "councils" we the fashion in Southern cities. The ladies gather to discuss points of philanthropy, education and politics in which they are

The Queen Regent of Spain has again shown her generosity by donating $20,-000 out of her own private resources for the relief of the impoverIshed inhabitants of the flooded districts.

Fancy combs for the hair are growing smaller and narrower. Those of gold are noted with emcralds, sapphires or diamonds set in them; these, of course, are only intended for evening wear.

An English governess who asks $200 for her services can teach common-school branches, at least one foreign; language, music and fine needle work. Then, too, she sings, goes in for field sports and is "good form."

Miss Amelia Edwards, the late Egyptologist, was accustomed to walk half a mile before and after breakfast every day and a mile every afternoon. It was her invariable practice, regardless of the weather.

The American bride, imitating her French sister, has her wedding gown made high in the throat and long in the sleeves, and she carries, instead of a bouquet, a white kid prayer book elaborately mounted in silver.

Caroline Eschard pays more taxes than any other woman in her county in Ohio, is a director of a bank and is connected with several other euterprises. She is one of the leaders of the movement for school suffrage in her State.

The Princess Misel of Schwarzenberg has entered the Convent of the Sacred Heart in Riedenberg, Austria, as a novice. The aristocratic circles of Vienna are wondering why so young, beautiful and popular a lady should have renounced the world.

Miss Louise McDonald is only thirtythree, but she has already won a grand record as a classical scholar, and, better still, she has had that record acknowledged by being elected Principal of the University College for Women at Sydney, South Australia.

Exquisite invalids are partial to pink and blue printed silk nightgowns, elaborately trimmed with lace and ribbon, and insertion interthreaded with ribbon, intended to be worn over the ordinary nightgown for sitting up. They are pretty and light.

It was in the Congregational Church that women were first permitted to preach. One of the pioneer women preachers in America was Antolnette Louise Brown, who, in 1853, was or dained pastor of the Congregational Church of South Butler, N. J.

As this will be the year of Russian blouses, so will it be the season when the summer girl may make a collection of belts and girdles accordingly. woman who, large of girth, looks like a bed-tick with a string tied about the middle, will wish she had never been born.

Some of the French pattern bonnets have the strings fastened on the back with a small rose, dahlia, chrysanthemum or a closely made ribbon rosette. This will do well enough for the women with the slender, long head, but it is a dangerous fancy for the rl with the big head to indulge.

In Hungary and Bulanny the young girls assemble on certain fete days, wearing red petticoats with white or yellow borders round them. The number of borders denotes the portion the father is willing to give his daughter. Each white band, representing silver, denotes $20 per annum, and each yellow band denotes gold, betokening $200 a year.

A prominent lady novelist asserts that she receives many sad letters from husbands, who claim that their domestic happiness is being undermined because their wives devote their attention to study instead of to housework. It will be interesting to classify and arrange these complaining husbands. It is highly probable that they are the same who used to grumble over the lack of good housekeepers, and refer to "our grandmother's day."

America has five women students at Zurich, one in the medical department, four taking up the study of philosophy. In the department of medicine there are also nineteen Russian women, twelve German, three from Austro-Hungary, one from England and one from Servia. Three women are taking up the law-Russian, one German and one Italian. cil. He would not get into half the In philosophy each of the countries trouble he does if his speeches were named, with the exception of Italy, has representatives.

A STRIKING design for a new style of sleeve for ladies' dresses has been printed in the fashion magazines. Viewed from the side it resembles the Tower of London inverted, surrounded by two rows of gigantic frills, and finished off at the top with the dome of the Mosque of Omar. Name of the architect not given.

To Cleanse the System

Effectually yet gently, when costive or hilious, or when the blood is impure or sluggish, to permanently cure habitual constipation, to awaken the kidneys and liver to a healthy activity, without irritating or weakening them, to dispel headaches, cold or fevers, use Syrup of Figs.

Russia is massing troops on the Polish

Brown's Iron Bitters cures Dyspepsia, Malaria, Biliousness and General Debility. Gives Strength, aids Digestion, tones the nerves—creates appetite. The best tonic for Nursing Mothers, weak women and children.

In spite of the low prices for iron nearly every southern furnace is in blast.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Chency & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from Diop; to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer $100 for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. CHENEY & Go., Toledo, O.

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD? These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look forit, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, EXAUTIBUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE.

The young king of Spain is said to be developing a tendeucy to fits.

IF your Back Aches, or you are all worn out, good for nothing, it is general debility. Brown's Iron Bitters will cure you, make you strong, cleanse your liver, and give a good appetite—tones the nerves.

Reports from the Delaware peach crop are promising for a fair crop.

I feel it my duty to write you in regard to the benefit your Bradycrotine has been to my wife. Ever since a child she has been subject to the most dreadful headaches, usually several times a month. She has tried doctors from Maine to California but none could prevent these spells running their course. Bradycrotine has not falled to effect a cure in a single instance, one dose usually being sufficient. Oscar F. Prost, Monmouth, Maine. All druggists fifty cents.

Paris is now the best lighted city in the world, and a model for all cities that are bent on introducing electric lighting on a grand scale.

BEECHAM'S PILLS quickly cure sick headache, weak stomach, impaired digestion, constipation, disordered liver, etc. If afflicted with sore eyes use Dr. IsaacThompson's Eye-water. Druggists sell at 25e a bottle.

They all Testify To the Efficacy of the World-Renowned Swill's Specific.

Books on "Blood and Skin Druggists Sell It.

SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga.

$15 A WEEK can earned by any or the control of the

On the road to health—the consumptive who reasons and thinks. Consumption is developed through the blood. It's a scrofulous affection of the lungs-a blood-taint. Find a perfect remedy for scrofula, in all its forms - something that purifies the blood, as well as claims to. That, if it's taken in time, will cure Consumption. Dr. Pierce has found it. It's his "Golden Medical Discovery." As a strength-restorer, blood-cleanser, and flesh-builder, nothing like it is known to medical science. For every form of Scrofula, Bronchial, Throat, and Lung affections, Weak Lungs, Severe Coughs, and kindred ailments, it's the only remedy so sure that it can be guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back.

"You get well, or you get $500." That's what is promised, in good faith, by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, to sufferers from Catarrh. The worst cases, no matter of how long standing, are permanently cured by this Remedy.

'August, Flower'

"For two years I suffered terribly with stomach trouble, and was for all that time under treatment by a physician. He finally, after trying everything, said my stomach was worn out, and that I would have to cease eating solid food. On the recommendation of a friend I procured a bottle of August Flower. Itseemed to do me good at once. I gained strength and flesh rapidly I feel now like a new man, and consider that August Flower has cured me." Jas. E. Dederick, Saugerties, N.Y.

Beautify complexion by purifying blood. Purely Vegetable.

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo Piso's Remody for Catarrh is the

the best leather produced in this country. There are no tacks or wax threads to hurt the feet, and is made as smooth inside as a hand sewed shoe. It is as stylish, easy fitting and durable as custom-made shoes costing from $4.00 to $5.00, and acknowledged to be the Best in the World for the price.

For GENTLEMEN. $5.00 Genuine Hand-Sewed. 4.00 Hand-Sewed Welt Shoe. $3.50 Police and Farmer. 82.50 Extra Value Calf Shoe. $2.25 Working-man's Shoe.

$2.00 Goodwear

For LADIES.

$3.00 Hand-Sewed. $2.50 Best Dongola. $2.00 Call and Dongola. $1.75 For MISSES.

For BOYS' & YOUTH'S. $2 & $1.75 SCHOOL SHOES.

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTES. IT IS A DUTY you owe to yourself and your family, during these hard times, to get the most value for your money. You can economize in your footwear if you purchase W. L. Douglas' Shoes, which, without question, represent a greater value for the money than any other makes.

CAUTION. W.L. DOUGLAS' name and the price is stamped on the bottom of each shoe, which protects the consumer against high prices and inferior shoes. Beware of dealers who acknowledge the superiority of W. L. Douglas' Shoes by attempting to substitute other makes for them. Such substitutions are fraudulent, and subject to prosecution by law, for obtaining money under talse protected. W.L. DOUGLAS. Proceeding Mass. false pretences. W. L. DOUGLAS, Brockton, Mass.

If not for sale in your place send direct to Factory, stating kind, size and width wanted. Postage tree. AGENTS WANTED. Will give exclusive sale to shoe dealers where I have no agent and advertise them free in lucal paper, Earth's Tribute.

First the grain, and then the blade-The one destroyed, the other made: Then stalk and blossom, and again The gold of newly-minted grain.

So Life, by Death the reaper cast To earth, again shall rise at last; For 'tis the service of the sod To render God the things of God. -|John B. Tabb, in Youth's Companion.

With the Prussians at Metz.

BY CHARLES A. COLLMAN.

Twenty years ago, when the Prussians, like a ring of iron, drew their invincible army slowly around the fortifications of Metz, I found myself in a little French village that had just been taken possession of by the Germans. I was correspondent for a Cincinnati paper during what the French persist in calling the Franco-Prussian, and the Germans persist in calling the Franco-German war.

A low stone coping ran along the road at the end of the village, and one sunny day I stood here leaning against the wall, beside the sentry.

For several days only some slight skirmishes had taken place between the two armies engaged at this point. They were separated here by a diminutive valley, whose sides were covered with that most delicious fruit for which this region of the Moselle is famous-bunches of glowing autumn grapes.

These grapes, as I gazed down upon them, tempted me wonderfully. I knew the sentry beside me; he was a huge Pomeranian, who, in the capacity of his calling, had shaved me a number of times in the capital of Prussia. But as I expressed an inclination to descend the hillside and secure some of the fruit, the sentry shook his head.

Down there, said he, in the midst of that thicket of trees and vines, the place was swarming with Frenchmen only too eager to get a shot at a man.

I langhed at his words. "Why, what can you see down there, Moritz?" I said. And, in truth, as we gazed down, the scene seemed peaceful enough.

Two peasant women, in gaudy cositumes, were gathering grapes in little baskets. Beyond, on the other side of the valley, ran a wall, upon which we could catch a glimpse of the red trousers of the French sentry lolling suddenly over the coping and ran Rightly down the hill. Moritz cried the words of a hasty warning after me, but the sounds fell unintelligibly upon my ears. The two French peasant women dropped their baskets and ran hastily away at the sight of what they took to be the approach of one of those dreaded Prussians.

In another moment my parched gums were feasting on those famous grapes. They were delicious. I can taste them yet.

My pleasure was of short duration. From some close quarter a shot came suddenly and tore away a bunch a few inches from my outstretched hand. I thought at first that this was a joke on the part of my friend, the sentry, and was just turning about to protest against such grim humor, when another shot came in as close proximity, but fortunately without harm-

The bright sun dazed my faculties for an instant. What should I do? I could not ascend that steep and unprotected hill behind me and reach the stone coping alive.

I plunged into the thicket where probably the very danger was lurking; and yet it was my only refuge.

I slipped carefully through the rows of vines until I found myself in the bottom of the valley. A little stream ran past here, and the wood, though small, was very dense.

What troubled me most was that the crackling twigs ceaselessly betrayed my footsteps. The whole ground was covered with dead branches. I halted and listened, after every step, for another sound or sign of the enemy.

Of a sudden a grumbling voice broke upon my ears so close so me that it was startling.

"On 'est il done?" inquired the grumbler, in a voice that was intended for his companion only, but which reached me distinctly, so near were twe to each other.

The other answered, but his words escaped me. They spoke together in lowered tones as they stood there, and from what I overheard, they seemed to think that I, not being in uniform, was a spy trying to creep through the French lines.

A sudden crackling of the twigs made me retreat to the stream, and covered the sound of my progress.

"Ah," I muttered to myself, "there come the two grape-pickers." I thought that the two Frenchmen were approaching to investigate my position, but here, instead, the noise was caused by the heavy sabots of the two peasant women, who advanced, peering through the trees, as if they were also seeking the whereabouts of the fugitive Prussian.

There was something odd in their appearance, and, though I could gain but a passing glimpse of them, I made a discovery.

The two women were carrying muskets in their hands!

Those, indeed, were masculine forms and faces. And their voices! Fool that I was, not to have recognized

I retreated softly and quickly, half along the sandy bed of the stream, half along the white stones that lay in the shallow water. Thus I threaded the bed of the stream until the voices of my pursuers grew fainter. I had proceeded some distance, and now, through the thinning trees, I saw that I had come within shooting distance of the red-trowsered sentinel lying upon the wall, sunning himself.

There were, in fact, two sentries there; one lolling upon the wall and the other leaning against it with but head and shoulders visible. I observed them very distinctly; I heard their voices now and then, and the lazy yawning of the one that lay in the sunlight.

I saw their chassepots gleaming in the sun and in such close proximity they wore an ugly look.

I was safe, however, as their attention was not attracted toward me, and so I turned my thoughts to my two pursuers again. I had heard them hunting and cursing for a while far in my rear, but now all noise of them had died away.

Happening to turn my glance up to the stone coping, to which I longed to return, I saw, to my surprise, that the two grape-pickers had given up my mer occupation again. But now they were much nearer to the coping than they had been before, and under the cover of their pretended employment they were still slowly but surely advancing. I well perceived ther ob-

Here was a predicament, truly. The sentinel, not possessed of an abundance of wit, would let the two approach unchallenged, until they were near enough to turn suddenly and shoot him with their hidden weapons; and yet were I to attempt to warn him, swift and sure retribution would be upon my own head, both from before and behind me.

But this was not all. At the place where I stood in hiding the foliage that sheltered the stream grew scarce and ended. Before me was a wide plot of unprotected turf.

On the other side of this open space the thicket there began to stealthly be stirred. I saw the tops of the bushes nod. What other foe lay crouching there? Was there one who eould see me and was aiming at me even now perhaps? Was the thicket full of soldiers who would rush forth when the death-shot of the sentry above should ring out?

This train of nervous fancies, however, was not interrupted. Rising shelter of the trees that covered the carefully from the midst of the bushes I saw a well-known pointed helmet. A head rose, too, and a hand that waved a greeting.

It was Moritz, who, grown uneasy at my non-appearance, had stolen down to ferret out the cause.

Immense as was the figure of the Pomeranian, yet he concealed himself very ably. I noticed from his actions that he guarded himelf only from the view of the two sentries by the wall, seeming to think that screened from them he would be safe.

As he crawled carefully out into the open, therefore, I attracted his attention to the two masculine females who had gradually stolen close to the

The Pomeranian knelt in the grass and looked up. As he noted the two figures and the intentions which their movements betrayed, his face became "Mate" is Its Name, and South transfixed with rage. So terrible was the wrath depicted upon it that I was glad to see it turned towards others than myself.

One of those figures up there, in his gaudy costume, had already reached the coping and with his chassepot to his shoulder ready for firing, to locate the sentry.

At this act and those costumes of duplicity, the large Pomeranian, regardless of all consequences, leaped with rage. It seemed to infuriate him beyond reason that those two rogues above should have thus deceived him. A sudden flash from his gun thordier at the coping.

side toward the other. Somehow his actions aroused me to a like fury, and we both tore madly up the hill toward the skirted soldier who, turning, seemed struck as if by a thunderbolt at our sudden approach.

The shot of Moritz had sent the echoes reverberating among the hills. The French outposts leaped up, as if electrified, from their sunny wall; innumerable others started up from the surrounding thickets. A rain of bullets fairly peppered the grassy slope. But our sudden on-rush had carried us in advance of this hail.

So quickly was the Pomeranian upon his foe, that the latter had no time to recover from his surprise, not even to raise his gun. The onslaught of the huge fellow bore the little Frenchman to the earth, and the Pomeranian picked him up, neck and crop, and dragged him over the wall.

The red-trousered grape picker was then led, jeered and booted at, through the village—a most dejected skir-

The chassepots across the way yelped angrily at us throughout the rest of the day; but two days afterward, that hillside over there was swarming with Prussians, and the iron ring had closed more closely about Metz .-Detroit Free Press.

An Epic in Embroidery.

Probably the only epic in embroidery the world contains is treasured in the Hotel de Ville of Bayaux. France. Miss Strickland says of this piece of work: "It is beyond all competition the most wonderful achievement in the gentle craft of needlework that ever was executed by fairland royal hands." It was done by Matilda of Flanders, wife of William the Conqueror, and the ladies of her court. It is a coarse linen cloth. 214 feet long and twenty inches wide, on which is worked in woolen thread of various colors a representation of the invasion and conquest of England Ly the Normans. It contains the figures of about 625 men, 200 horses. fifty-five dogs, forty ships and boats, besides a quantity of quadrupeds, all executed in the proper colors, with names and inscriptions over them to elucidate the story. It is a valuable historic document, as it gives a sorrect and minute portraiture of the Norman costumes and their manners and customs.-[New York Press.

Looked Confused.

Mother (in her daughter's bondoir) -I like that young man exceedingly. While he was in the parlor waiting for you, I happened to go in, and surprised him reading the Bible. The silly boy looked dreadfully confused. just as if true piety were something to be ashamed of. I soon set his mind at rest on that point, and he seemed quite relieved.

The Young Man (at the club)-That girl is 30 years old. I saw it in

The Secret of the Glowworm.

In the glowworm, and in the firefly, especially in the splendid species which abound in Cuba, Professor S. P. Langley has found that light is emitted with no wasteful partnership whatever with rays of heat. How soon will genius, keen of eye, skillful of hand, read the secret of this tiny craftsman and translate it into an engine for the illumination of the world? -[Courier-Journal.

AMERICAN TEA.

America Its Home.

Curious Manner of Preparing It For Consumption:

"Taste that," said a tea merchant to New York Tribune reporter the peered stealthily over the stone wall other day, as he handed him a curiously shaped bowl, full of thin, brownish fiquor, with something that looked like a tobacco-pipe resting in it, bowl downward. The reporter put from the earth and fairly bellowed his lips to the stem of the pipe and sucked at it cautiously.

"What is it?" he asked. . "It tastes like weak tea."

"That's just what it is," auswered oughly annihilated be disguised sol the merchant, "but it is a brand of tea I'm pretty sure you never tasted Swinging his gun like a club and before. That's a genuine American roaring with fury, he ran up the hill- tea; grown in America, cured in America, indigenous to America and consumed in large quantities for for years by hundreds of thousands of Americans; and yet I'll be bound you you never heard of it."

"Perhaps not," admitted the reporter guardedly. "What state is it raised in? Is some four-story brick tea-farm down here in Water street responsible for it? Willow leaves. arsenic and a patent essence of theine, or something of that sort, eh?"

"Not at all," said the merchant, a little indignant. "It's a perfectly genuine and unadulterated article. Its native state is Paragnay, and that country raises enough for its own consumption, and about 5,000,000 pounds annually for export to other South American countries."

"Oh, South American," exclaimed the reporter. "You misled me by saying American."

"Did I?" said the merchant sarcastically. "And why, pray? That's one of the annoying peculiarities of this people. They're too conceited to get themselves a distinctive name, but in a lordly way dub themselves Americans. They speak of Brazilians, Canadians, Chilians, Paraguayans and the other millions of Americans as if they had no right to that title at all."

"But about the tea," interrupted the reporter apprehensively. "What do you call it?"

"Mate is the name of it," replied the merchant, unrongunced And many South Americans are very fond of it. You have just had the manner. That curious bowl is not made of papier-mache, as you might think, but is a gourd, trained into that shape while growing. The natives are experts in that line, and by binding the green gourd here and there with cords, or bending it one way and another, they make it take a diversity of shapes before it becomes ripe put in the gourd, and then boiling water is poured on it. After a few moments a pipe or tube is inserted. and the liquor is drawn off by suction.

"What looks like the bowl of the pipe," continued the tea merchant, as he lifted it from the liquid and allowed the reporter to examine it. "is in reality a strainer, which prevents the grounds from reaching the month. It is made in the shape of a bulb or ball, and this one is a curiosity in its way, for it is all woven by hand, in very fine meshes, from a species of dried grass. Metal ones are more common, and the rich have silver strainers. This is an old-style one, and I value it on that account. It is called a bombilla. The natives like their mate, as we would say, red hot. Its effect is much the same as that of the tea you are accustomed to, stimulating and restorative, and, of course, has its their family Bible .- INew York enemies, who pronounce it slow poison, and its friends, who call it the Paraguayan equivalent for the cup that cheers but not, etc."

"Is it real tea, botanically considered?" persisted the skeptical re-

"Well, if you come down to botany," admitted the merchant, "it's really a species of holly, Hex Paraguayensis, but it contains in large proportions the constituent which makes other tens useful, that of theine. Its leaves and green shoots are collected, dried and ground up unevenly: -[Chicago Tribune.

that is, some of it gets to be a fine powder in the rough method of preparation, and then again you will find twigs in it an inch long. A large number of people get employment in its growth, preparation and export, but I am not aware that it finds a market in any but South American countries."

The Menhaden Industry.

Like the search for the coy whale, the menhaden industry is becoming a disappointment and a delusion. There have been three bad seasons in succession, and that valuable product, menhaden oil, so necessary to the leather trade, is so scarce as to be worth thirty-five cents a gallon in open market.

The usual annual product is 3,000,-000 gallons, or 70,000 barrels, of menhaden oil, and 50,000 tons of fish scrap, which is valuable as guano. The menhaden fish, as many know, is what may be called a surface fish, and is, therefore, easily captured.

Food fish, when frightened, go straight to the bottom, and thus escape the seine. The menhaden is not a food fish, but it yields the cheapest illuminating o'll in the world, and the fish scrap supplies one sixth of the entire amount of ammonia used in the consumption of fertilizers in the United States. The fish guano sells at $23 a ton, and supplies the place of Peruvian guano, which formerly cost train. $80 a ton. A third use of the menhaden is as a bait when herring are

The fish laws of Maine, Massa. chusetts and other States forbid the seining of mackerel and menhaden within three miles of shore, and the fishers complain that it is for this reason that few fish are caught. A bill was presented in Congress asking that this law be abolished. The only objection to it is that the destruction of the fish might become so great as to practically extinguish the variety. This would be an extremely bad thing to do. The menhaden is too valuable to lose from our waters, and should be encouraged, even if a three-mile limit from shore must be maintained. A few scientific facts might not come him. amiss, and if they proved that the menhaden is in no danger, then the restrictions upon its capture may be safely removed. - [New York Marine Journal.

Our Oldest Preacher is a Woman

The oldest preacher in this country is the Rev. Lydia Sexton of Seattle, pleasure of drinking it in the native | Washington, a cousin of Bishop Simpson. She was born in 1799, and is now ninety-three: fifty years of this period she has been a preacher. Her grandfather was the Marquis Anthony Cozot, who came to this country early in the last century, and died at Somerset, N. J. He held a valuable grant of land on the Mississippi, but relinguished it. This his heirs are now enough to be cut, dried, scooped out and endeavoring to get restored in part used as an utensil. It will not stand The name became changed to Casad. fire, of course; but the mate is first An orphan at thirteen, Lydia Casad was taken on a long and perilous journey to Hios, as Ohio was then called. There she lived and married three times. Circumstances have taken her to the other edge of the continent, where she lives, a finely preserved old woman, whose strongly marked face shows her to be a woman of ability and experience.-[New York Sun.

The Submarine Sentry. A novel little instrument just invented is attracting great attention in English nautical circles. It is called the submarine sentry and is made of two pieces of board so shaped that when lowered overboard from a moving ship it dives under water to the full extent of the wire that holds it, and there it stays quietly enough until it touches bottom, when it rings an aların on deck. It is said to work perfectly in practice, and that no ship provided with it could get into shoal water without the officer of the deck being instantly apprised of it. - New Orleans Picavune.

Unfortunate Hankinson.

Mr. Hankinson-Here are some chocolate creams, Johnny. Do you think Miss Irene will be down soon?

Johnny (after stowing them away securely) - Yes, sis 'll be down purty soon, I reckon. I wish it was you, Mr. Hankinson, sis was goin' to marry instead of that stingy old Snagsford. "Heroes."

Speak to me not of the weary, Speak to me not of the sad. Tired am I of the dreary, Speak to me some of the glad; Lead me to some of the cheery,

Away from the moaning and raad.

Lips that are murmuring ever,
Breasts that are trembling with pain, Eyes whose tear-drops cease never, Hearts that catch up the refrain; All in their maddest endeavor, Compassion, not praise, will they gain.

Brave are those that are bearing Silently troubles that sting; Brave as the Captain that's wearing A smile while his warriors bring Tidings of battle ill-faring-Hearing his own death-knell ring.

Speak to me long of the few, Give me the tale of the dumb, Those whose last arrow sped true, Yet only brought them a crumb; They are brave warriors, 100, And noble, though silent and namb.

Let me hear of the weak, Opprest, yet hopeful and strong, Tell me some of the meek, Burdened, yet singing their song; They are the heroes I seek On life's hard journeys and long. -[Victor J. Beileau, in Picayune.

HUMOROUS.

A crying evil-A baby.

A stunning affair-A sand-bag. Take boarders if you think it will pay, only don't try to board a moving

There is a supposition abroad that the worm that never dies is made of Girl customer-What is the nicest thing in veils? Clerk (smiling)-My best girl's face.

Jimmieboy (viewing a bald-headed baby)-Papa, aren't you going to plant any hair on him? "Great snakes, Tightgrip, what use can you find for such a hard pencil?" "I keep it to lend." A lame defence may be very effective if it's in the case of a man who uses a crutch for a weapon. A miss is as good as a mile. This is probably why a man doesn't feel the distance when he's got a nice girl with

A young man can never gain favor with a pretty girl by telling her how pretty he thinks some other girl of her acquaintance is.

Old gentleman (opening parlor door just as the young man stole a kiss) -Well, I am surprised. Young man (confused)-So am I. Druggist-There you are, sir. One-twenty-five. Customer-Excuse me, but I'm in the trade. Druggist-Ob, I beg pardon. Ten cents.

The kind of love that will buy diamonds when in funds is more plentiful than the sterling sort that will saw wood if necessary. Wife (tearfully)-You have broken the promise you made me! Husband

(kissing her)-Never mind, my dear; don't cry. I'll make you another. Mr. Harrison-Why, I declare, Miss Fanny, your mamma is getting quite stout. Miss Fanny-Ah that is because we all make so much of her. Precise but impolitic-"I want a hair-cut," said the middle-aged man, as he dropped into the barber's chair.

"Yes, sir." was the answer. "Which Minister-The love of money is the root of all evil. Parishioner-That isn't the worst thing about money.

"Ah! What is?" "The difficulty of getting it." Soppy (to the kid after a long wait) -Does your sister know I'm here, Fannie? Fannie-Oh, yes, Mr. Sop-py, that's why she's taking her time about coming down. Sweet Girl (affectionately) - Pa, you wouldn't like me to leave you. would you? Papa (fondly)-Indeed I would not, my darling. Sweet Girl-Well, then, I'll marry Mr. Poorchap. He's willing to live here. Millionaire (to family lawyer)-Well, there! I've made all the begensts I care to and $5000 remains. Family Lawyer-It will probably take all of mind when you gave away the rest. Traveller (in a railway carriage) to fellow passenger-Sir, what do you mean? This is the third time you have put out my match. Fellow Passenger-Force of habit. I'm a that to prove that you were of sound member of a volunteer fire brigade.

FRANK W. GIST,

CALERA, SATURDAY, JUNE 25.

FOR PRESIDENT, GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York. FOR VICE PRESIDENT.

of Illinois. DEMOCRATIC STATE TICKET

A. E. STEVENSON,

FOR GOVERNOR, THOMAS GOODE JONES. FOR SECRETARY OF SLATE, J. D. BARRON, of Clay.

W. L. MARTIN, of Jackson. EOR AUDITOR. J. W. PURIFOY, of Wilcox.

J. CRAIG SMITH, of Dallas. SUPERINTENDENT OF EDUCATION, JOHN G. HARRIS, of Sumter. COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE. HECTOR D. LANE, of Limestone.

For Chief Justice of Snpreme Court. GEORGE W. STONE, of Montgomery Associate Justices, T. W. COLEMAN, of Greene. THOS. N. McCLELLAN, of Limestone. JAMES B. HEAD, of Jefferson. JON. HARRALSON, of Dallas.

For Judge of the 7th Judicial Circuit. LEROY F. BOX.

COUNTY DEMOCRATIC TICKET

For Representative, JOHN P. WEST. For Probate Judge, JOHN S. LEEPER. For Sheriff, HENCEY W. NELSON. For Tax Assessor, JOHN H. HAMMONDS. For Tax Collector, AB. F. SMITH. For Treasurer, - THOMPSON. For Supt. Of Education.

E. O. DAWSON. For County Commissioners, 1st. Dist .- JAMES McGOWAN. 2nd. Dist.—RUFUS WALKER. 3rd. Dist.-RICHARD GRIFFIN. 4th. Dist .- A. M. Jones.

NOTICE-CHANGE.

With this issue Mr. S. H. Gist assumes the direct management of the Journal. There will be no change in the policy or business control, Mr. F. W. Gist retaining emgogy will be so thoroughly dissupervision of the editorial and gusted that the small following he publication department.

It is gratifying to his many friends and admirers to know that SHELBY LEADS THE WORLD. Gen. John T. Morgan will be at home about the 7th. of July, Wonder if the executive commit tees of the different congressional districts will call their conventions nent part in the so-called Kolb hed to Rueben and Samuel, you on the population basis? And if so, Democratic Convention held in know. Say, Doctor wouldn't it be sees the error of his way in followwhat will be the result?

and independents who are supporting Captain Kolb, the few who imagine themselves to be straight Democrats look more and more lonesome every day.

litically, but the crops are beauti- and if you should fail to get into that, of the aforesaid club. fully promising. And the best why you can still go to the convenin the prospect.

MR. A. T. GOODWYN, whose name is appended to the call for the Fifth Congressional district covention as chairman of the executive committee of that district, went off with Kolb and was in the Opera House convention. Does this invalidate the call, or does it kaloosa, have erased the names of managers of elections, and says T. M. Barber and J. S. Yerby from nothing in regrd to their being canthe democratic ticket of that coun- didates for election. Hence it is ty, these candidates having straved presumed that they are the only off after the Kolb-Adams contin officers of the county who are eligi- tional democratic convention will gent. This is the only course that ble to perform this duty, and as be found at our mast-head. It is a a democratic newspaper can consistently pursue.

Tom Jones and organized democracy, published by a stock company at North Birmingham, is a new our exchange list.

THE SAME OLD SONG!

Independent candidate Kolb opened up his campaign up in Marshall Entered at the Post Office in Calera as Second Class Matter. ported that he sang his same old song of "fraud." He added another verse, however. The old song National Democratic Ticket was, "I was swindled out of the nomination in 1890." The addition, "I was again swinded out of it in

> Isn't this gaul unadulterated? Mr. Kolb denied before thousands of people prior to the meeting of the last convention that he had ever charged the convention of 1890 with fraud! Yet he would go to another place on the next day and cry out, "I was swindled out of the nomination, or I would not be a candidate for governer." Thus he is contradicted out of his own mouth as to convention number 1.

Now, after he went off with 97 out of a total of 466 regularly elected delegates of the party and a few disaffected democrats and republicans, giving the democratic convention no chance to nominote him, he is heard from the first stump proclaiming that he has been twice cheated out of the nomination, giving the lie to his utterances that he had often made during the campaign that he would not accept a a nomination at the hand of any save a democratic convention. This he did after all the disgraceful schemes had been resorted to which every one who has tried to keep posted knows. Where, then, can reasonable men find grounds for believing his pitiful cry of "fraudulent use of party machinery?"

Why don't Capt. Kolb come out like a man and say, as did his followers in this county: "I want office and the democrats of Alabama have twice nominated Thomas G. Jones over me, and I sever my connection with the party, and am now appealing to the people's party, kangaroo republicans independents. I want to be governor of Alabama, you must elect me!"

It is too silly for a man of Mr. Kolb's professed political knowledge to go around in an intelligent state like Alabama crying "fraud, twice defrauded!" We predict that the people to whom he talks such demhas will leave him long before the first day of August.

Shelby county enjoys the distinction of having a set of delegates, convention. They took a promi- Dave, he has been very closely al the Third Party Convention held in Birmingham on the 23rd. inst., the society of Christian Endeavor. The credentials will answer for all and for all time to come.

ARE THEY ELIGIBLE?

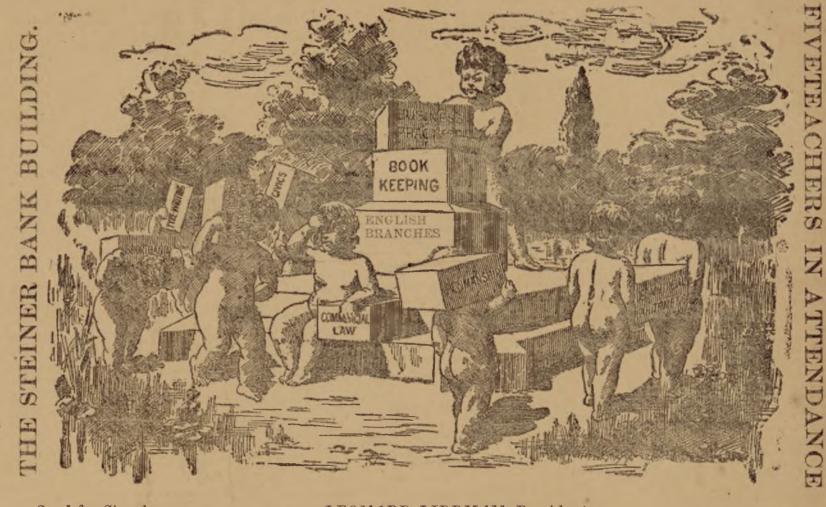

candidates for re-election, appoint-Judge, Circuit Clerk and Sheriff, or THE Weekly Argas with its one decide that managers appointed by not be legal.

candidate for patronage. The first Calera a few days ago that Rev. D3 from the great state of Illinois and Druggist, 62 Cortlandt St., New York. number has been received at this Y. Wyatt and his sons have, on a the great service he has rendered offie, and we hasten to place it on little imaginary dislike towards one makes him a strong man for vice of the nominees of the county con- President.

ILEGE: COMMERCE

Birmingham. Ala.

TO THE REAL PROPERTY.

Send for Circular,

LEONARD LIPPMAN, President.

G. F. HART, Secretary and Treasurer.

M. M. FIELDS, Vice President

vention, abandoned their democraton Tuesday morning to authorize us er thing. to'say that there was no grounds for nary politicians, but, if anything, they are democrats from principle. This being true and neither of them port to their discredit. Such disof the manufacturers of such myths.

Wender if Dave Brown, committeeman for Bibb county, and who The little episode at Longview las has called the new ninth congresstent to represent the county in any True Blues of Bibb should look after | wouldn't put a negro on the ticket. most of the candidates of that con- Jones and the organized democracy. to indicate to what convention they to boycotting the county paper, thing grows weaker every day. THE prospects may be dark po- bition convention is yet to be held and 9th committee was a member August.

> with the addition of Luis Reynolds, awant the report of the committee. The question has been sprung as of Chilton, and W. A. Fountain, of other gatherings.

THE tickett nominated by the nathese fofficer are always provided with the law on all subjects which pertains to their data. It is a two montus before my expected time, and I had a very quick and easy confinement. Nothing occurred to protract my convaiescence, and I got about in less time than was reveal for me. It is a pertains to their duty, we would conservative one. We have, for it a medicine that should be used by eight years, been a great admirer hundred eyes, all wide open for any persons other than they would of Mr. Cleveland, and we believe again be without it at such times. I am he is the most available man in his yours respectfully,

Mrs. ELIZABETH DIX. party for the position of president. It was reported on the streets of Mr. Stevenson, coming as he does

THE republican office holders in ic allegiance and gone off after the the southern states mustered suffithird or people's party ! tangent, cient strength to nominate Harri-The father was in the JOURNAL office son, but electing him will be anoth

The same application can be made such a report, that neither he nor in the case of the Kolb-Adams tickhis sons had ever uttered a word to et. Enough bolters were gathered intimate such a thing. The Wyatt in the Opera House to declare it, family are not politicians or imagi- but can enough voters be found to elect it?

WE may be a doubting Thomas, being office seekers, it is the height but we can't believe that the repubof absurdity to circulate such a re- licans will endorse the "schy-bald ticket" nominated at the Opera reputable tales may be expected, House. But wonderful things hapbut will only recoil upon the heads pen sometimes. Readers would you be surprised if the committee were to fill the two vacancies on the tick; et with two straight republicans week indicate that the new party and take part in the campaign, elected by a Third Party mass ional district committee togeth- would be giad to take the colored meting, that are perfectly compe- er, has left Kolb and Adams. The republicans in the fold. But they

AND now comes J. R. Lockwood, Montgomery, June the 18th., and well to look after all of the commit-ing Kolb and Adams, retracts the AMID the mass of Republicans again they took a leading part in tee men elected by the 8th and 9th sentiments uttered in his Bangor convention. Remember, too, that speech and turns square over to but then the mass meeting failed vention were in deep sympathy, even This is just as we predicted; the should go. So hold on to your with the River Bend "Enthusiastic We shouldn't wonder it it passed credentials gentlemen-the prohi- Club." The chairman of the Sth out of remembrance by the first of

We supporters of the regular demothing about the crops is, that hog and hominy are usually prominent sociation and to the convention of the new sociation and to the convention of the new born People's party was held at the second by Governor somes, appointin the prospect. Birmingham on Thursday last. It dies and committeemen chosen at the was the same little crowd that has convention held on the both, day o been figuring under the third party whether or not they istend to support harness for the past four months, the regular dismonstic ticket, and ad yourned over until Saturday next to

The above is a special from our to the legibility of officers who are Perry. Gaither and Manning vir- sister county Chilton, and explains tually had the meeting organized, itself. We commend the democraing managers of election. The code and the proceedings were just a cy of that county in their prompt of Alabama empoweres the Probate | matter of form. The same commit- action in regard to instructions of tees did all the work, and the same the state convention. Every exec-THE Times and Gazette, of Tus- any two of them, to appoint ail delegates were sent to Omaha con- utive committee in the state should vention that have served at all the see that this matter is attended to.

with my last child, in order to procure a safe and easy travil. I used it about two months before my expected time.

Anymerchant or druggist can procure Risley's Philotoken for $1 a bottle.

CHARLES F. RISLEY, Wholesale

Subscribe for the JOURNAL. Only $1.00 a year.

MILLINERY--

Mrs. S. H. McCauley's,

NEAR THE DEPOT.

Montevallo. - - A a. A Splendid Line of Trimmed and Untrimmed Hats in the Latest Styles, and at Reasonable Prices.

handkerchiefs & Hosiery. Saturday Sales at $1

Harness

DEALERS IN

HARDWARE & TINWARE.

科及60克 近天多远国宝工女工。

Stock of Dynamite and Fase, and empty and loaded Shells always on Hand.

113 19TH STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

W. C. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA. Receive Deposits.

Negotiate Loans,

Sir—I made use of your Philotoken Louisville and Barmingham at regular rates energed by the larger cities.

We transact a general banking business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

and Life Insurance

Written in the best companies.

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

ALABAMA MINERAL. No. 85, Arrives at 86, Departs at COUNTY OFFICERS. Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter.

Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-Tax Collector-E. F. Vest.

Tax Assessor-W. H. Kidd. County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland. Superintendent of Education-T. N.

County Solicitor-J. L. Peters.

County Commissioners—John E. Dyeey, T. B. McCiusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis. AT THE CHURCHES.

PRESEYTERIAN—Services on the 4th Sundays in each month, morning and night; pastor to be supplied. Sabbath School at 9:30 a.m. METHODIST-Services on the second and third Sundays, morning and night, by Rev. Z. A. Dowling, pastor. Sabbath school at 9:30. W Baptist Church--Rev. J. G. Lowrey pastor. Preaching every first and second Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Sunday school at 9.30 am. Prayer meeting at 7.00 p. m., every Thursday. CUMBERLAND PRESEYTERIAN—J. C. Arnett, pastor. Preaching every first Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Sunday school at 10 a. m. Prayer meeting Friday evenings at 7:30. Children's Band meets 3:30 p. m. each 1st and 3rd Sunday. Ladies' Aid Society everyother RESOLUTIONS. Friday evening at 3.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy. RICHARD K. FOX. Square. New York City. Franklin Square.

INSURE YOUR LIFE. Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the atoms of the financial world cannot thereof.
touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your qualifica family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old go should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-Witt Talmage.

HUGH T. CAFFEY,

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON CALERA, ALA. feb12-1v.

J. L. PETERS. HENRY WILSON, E. S. LYMAN PETERS, WILSO & LYMAN.

sition to the further rule of Democracy. That there are great and needed reforms demanded in the interest of the people in financial and economic questions has long and sturdily been maintained by the Democracy throughout the length and breadth of this union. That they have failed of accomplishment is not the H. Gist, this week. hope lies in the triumph and aggressive Democracy. A Democrat who seeks the road to these reforms by joining a Third Party or promoting division in his own party is only firing into the back of his friends in the hour of battle. Who shall affirm with truth that the Democratic party in this State has fallen short of its high duty to the people? is in attendance at the commencement Partisan rhetoric and declamation may at Six Mile. assert in glittering generalties that the party has not met the just expectation Mr. S. Stein this week. of the people, but like breath upon the pane of glass their aspersions pass quietly away in the light of the truth. Who can point to a line of legislation of our party in Alabama that has been unjust to any class within the broad limits of this State? What interest of the farmer, the laboring men, the wage-earner and any other class or pursuit in life has not received just and fair recognition and consideration at the hands of the party? Let those whe complain point to some specific fault. He who truthfully reads the legislation and platforms of the party cannot find a trace of unfairness nor fail to perceive that it has matured with anxious care every interest which concerns the 1, 500,000 people whose welfare and prosperity are inseparably interwoven with

Died at his home in Calera on Wednesday evening at 7:30, Mr. Calvin again soon either at Birmingham or Ca-Harrell, after a short illness.

June 10, 1892.

the success of the Democratic party.-Governor Jones speech of acceptance, RATIFICATION MEETING.

CALERA DEMOCRATIC CLUB MEET AND ENDORSE THE TICKET FROM THE PRESIDENT DOWN.

The very unpleasant appearance of the weather Thursday evening, was very unpropicious, as the meeting was appointed for the open air. About fifty men, nearly all active members of the Young Men's Democratic Clab, were present.

The prospects for a heavy rain had driven the crowd from Teague's Grove to Wright's drug store balcony. Walter Oliver called the meeting to order, and Maj. W. D. Prof. Pratt's school at the difference of the meeting Mr. W. B. Browne, of Columbiana, was introduced and meeting to order, and Maj. W. D.

speech, but to offer some resolutions, and after passing high eulogies to to the platform, he pledged his as- were almost drowned. sistance in support of the ticket. Mr. Oliver then read his resolu-

RESOLUTIONS.

Be it resolved-That we re-affim our faith in the Democratic party and de-clare our unalterable allegiance thereto. Be it further resolved—That we pledge our unlimited support to Grover Cleve-land, of New York, and Adlia E. Ste-venson, of Illinois, the presidential nomnees of the democratic party.

Be it further resolved-That we, without any reserve, endorse the public and private character of our illustrious standard bearer, Thomas G. Jones, and pledge unto him—and to the entire ticket—our unfaltering loyalty and incessant service until seated again in the world are living there, and I hope it may be my et—our unfaltering loyalty and incessant service until seated again in the gubernatorial chair of Alabama.

Resolved further—That we, in every particular, ratify the action of the Democratic State Convention lately met and adjourned in the Capitol of Alabama and pledge our suffrages to the nominees

Be it fur resolved-That without any qualification we declare our endorsement of the recent Democratic Convention of Shelby county and affirm our determina-

After these resolutions were unanimously adopted, Col. John P. West, Calera's only candidate, the nominee of the convention for representative, was called for and re-

PERSONAL.

Miss. Eliza Gist is visiting friends in Talladega this week.

Miss. Line Bell Greene of Talladega, spent two days with her aunt, Mrs. S.

Mrs. Bailey, of Empire, Ga., and Mrs. Moorer, of Birmingham, are visiting their parents Dr. and Mrs. Blevins.

The editor and his new wife attended the commencement exercises of Six Mile academy the first of the week.

Miss Vernon Hendricks, of this place

Mr. Abe Stein is visiting his father,

M. F. Gardner, the popular man on the road, was in to see us Thursday. Some of Montevallo's "fussy" ball players were up to see the quiet games on Calera diamond.

Wednesday was a pleasant day in Calera. It was the occasion of a double game of Base Ball between the J. L. W's. of Birmingham, and the first nine, of Calera, the first game was won by the Calera boys, and the second in favor of the J. L. W's. We are authorized by Mr. Postell, the manager of the home nine, to say that the visit and the amusement was enjoyed by both the teams, and the very kindest of feeling prevailed all the way through, not a prevailed all the way through, not a mounce as unconstitutional and revolutionary the recent attempt of the Republican party to pass what is known as the tionary the recent attempt of the Republican party to pass what is known as the Calera by Mr. It was the occasion of a double game of Base Ball between the J. L. W's. of Birmingham, and the first nine, of Calera, the first game was won by the Calera boys, and the second in favor of the federal Government than is necessary for the payment of the national debt and for the support of the Government, honesty and economy administered; and that in laying duties on imports, any discrimination in favor of one interest or business, or of one section of the union to the detriment of others, finds no support of the Government, stem wind and set. Lady's or gent's size. Equal to any set. Lady's or gent's size. Equal to any set. C. O. D. by express with privilege of examination before paying for same. Our agent at Durham, N. C., writes: "Our jewelers have confessed they don't know how you can furnish such works for the money," Our agent at Pennington, Texas, writes: "Am in receipt of the watch and am pleased without measure. All Wednesday was a pleasant day in

HERE AND THERE.

It is useless, I suppose, to intro-NAL as they already know me and are probably already expecting me to begin my share of the Gossiping.

It is said that women are much better fitted for that kind of busifooled-and mistake one for the

I have just returned from attending the commencement exercises of upon the credit of the Government.

of Columbiana, was introduced and spoke to the great importance of an active campaign, and referred to nominees of the party from the head of the national to the bottom and for the purpose of being bene- to be administered for the good of the of the local ticket.

W. H. Oliver was called for, and said he was not preasent to make a tendance made themselves conspiction of the administration of the beautiful to be administration of the beautiful the beautiful to be administration of the beautiful th the candidates and short refference laughter that the speakers voices

> Capt. Pratt and his excelent wife, who labor so faithfully and schools untireingly to make these exercises interesting, and their student who as will better regulate corporation than nut forth their best efforts to this tered by the State. put forth their best efforts to this end all had my deepest sympathy in these demonstrations of unappreciation on the part of so many whom it appeared only were there to see, to talk, and to eat. But bre thing I am happy to say of the citizens of Six Mile, they know how to treat their fellow nortals and guests their fellow nortals and guests.
>
> 13. We indoes the wise and able address the many statements and specific productions. one thing I am happy to say of the treat their fellow mortals and guests there, and I hope it may be my pleasure to visit them again and vous system of a weak little creature who is naturally timid and retiring, to be a bride, a stranger, and the object of curiosity and comment among several hundred peometric process of the will of every described by the comment among several hundred peometric process. ture who is naturally timid and retiring, to be a bride, a stranger, and the object of curiosity and comtion to support the nominees therof with ment among several hundred peo-unfailing fidelity. ment among several hundred peo-ple—especially when surrounded on every side with some pretty little lady who used to be admired and courted by her gallant husband (before she met him of course.) I saw one the other day, and felt sorry for her, knowing her as I do, to spended in a brief and appropriate speech.

Several gentlemen tendered their undivided support to the party and to the ticket. A vote of thanks was to the ticket. A vote of thanks was the subject she told me that she tendered by the club to the princiconsoled herself from the fact that him and that the Executive Committees is an enthusiast on "Woman's Suffrage." Glad indeed, to extend to you the right hand of fellowship. When you need any encouragement on that line can on us.

We belong to Francis Willard's member of the Democratic party, and is not eligible to the nomination for any office at the hungs of the party nor to membership in any committee of the fault of Democracy, but the work of its enemies, for the party has not had the power to legislate in the last quarter of a century. So far as these reforms deacentury. So far as these reforms decentury. So far as these reforms decentury decentury. So far as the solution of the power of the part of the pa a great many other good working women, in politics we are a demo-

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

by the Federal Government of other powers than those specificary granted in the constitution is usurpation and oppression; that a strict construction of the powers of the Federal Government For any case of Rheumatism which can is essential to the protection of the people of the several State of their domestic affairs, of life, liberty and prophide this offer, but print it in bold type

dent will be destructive of the rights and liberties of the people of the several States and of the harmony which should ONE DOLLAR WEEKLY always subsist between the people and their servants; and we therefore denounce as unconstitutional and revolutional and revo the detriment of others, finds no sup- and am pleased without measure. All jar or a hard thought existing on the part of either team. They will play again soon either at Birmingham or Calera.

They will play again soon either at Birmingham or Calera.

They will play again soon either at Birmingham or Calera.

They will play again soon either at Birmingham or Calera.

They will play again soon either at Birmingham or Calera.

They will play again soon either at Birmingham or Calera again soon either at Birmingham or Cale of the people. We are therefore, op-posed to all manner of bounties, sub-sides and paternalism in the governluce myself the readers of the Jour- ment, and we demand that the McKinley bill be repealed, and that the tariff be so reduced in rate, and so reformed as to subjects, that necessaries and such articles as the masses consume shall be as lightly taxed as possible.

4. That the Democratic party of Alabama express s its concemna on of the ness than men, and while I don't tion of the finance of the country, under agree with the people on that idea, I will do a little gossiping, then let you judge as to who is best at the business, the Critic or his rife. Look out now that you can't get fooled and mixture are to the control to uous by pacing up an down aisles, Grover Cle reland and recognize in him climbing over benches and keeping one of the absest living exponents of the up such rackets of conversation and laughter that the openhers voices 10. We demand that free labor shall be relieved of competition with convicts, and all necessary laws shall be enacted to forever prevent such competition, 11. We favor legislation that will provide a more efficient system of public

12. We favor such further legislation

13. We favor the passage of such elec-tion laws as will better secure the gov-ernment of the State in the hands of the intelligent and the virtuous, and that will enable every elector to cast his ballot secretly and without fear or con-

THE PARTY LAW.

Resolved, That it is the duty of the 'Tis very trying indeed, on the ner-

Democrat, and give to each one his due and proper influence in the selection of delegates and candidates.

3. To consider, and if they deem wise, to polyricar the Lorddates. to petition the Legislature to pass laws regulating the primeries of the party, and punishing any fraud or wrongful conduct therein.

4. To provide so that the primaries

The present movement against the party, in whatever shape it may be disguised, in essence and spirit is an effort to weild and mould into one compact to weild and mould into one compact force all the scattered elements of opposition to the further rule of Democracy.

In g so much interest to the occa. him, and it was better for her to have had him divided up among so many, and also vided up among so many, and also vided up among so many, and also that she supposed it would have taken them all to have made one force all the scattered elements of opposition to the further rule of Democracy.

In g so much interest to the occa. him, and it was better for her to have him than to have had him divided up among so many, and also vided up among so many, and also vided up among so many, and also have him than to have had him divided up among so many, and also that she supposed it would have taken them all to have made one good wife.

The good with this Convention, he and are hereby authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to nominate others in lite of those thus refusing. If a committeeman refuses to support the nominate others in lite of those thus refusing. If a committeeman refuses to support the nominate others in lite of those thus refusing. If a committee man refuses to support the nominate others in lite of those thus refusing. If a committee man refuses to support the nominate others in lite of those thus refusing. If a committee man refuses to support the nominate others in lite of these such steps as may be necessary to nominate others in lite of these such steps as may be necessary to nominate others in lite of these such steps as may be necessary to nominate others in lite of these such steps as may be necessary to nominate others in lite of these such steps as may be necessary to nominate others in lite of these thus refusing the literature of the such steps as may be necessary to nominate others in literature of the literature of the such steps as may be necessary to nominate others in literature o We have had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Fuller, of Centreville, who is an application is writing, signed by not less than twenty Democrats of such county. The State Executive Committee shall provide the mode and nomination shall a se after the adjournment of the nominating convention or after the result of any primary has been larger relative strength than they now decired, the committee of the party in have, and removes a disturbing questhe territory affected, or if there of no such, the State Executive Committee shall have authority to settle such con-1. That the assumption and exercise test, and to declare who is the regular erally we publish the table, showing

$500 Will be Given

The water in the wells of Calera is getfing low. We have had two fine showers up to this writing since our last issue.

In the water in the wells of Calera is erty, and to the preservation of our feet on all their circulars, wrappers everywhere is the reserved rights.

2. That in the administration of the Federal Government the reserved rights of the Calera is the reserved rights. of the States must not be impaired; and dauggist has not got it, he will order it that Force Bills by Congress to regulate or it will be sent to any address by pre elections of members of Congress or paid express on receipt of price, $5. electors for President and Vice-Presi-Drummond Medicine Co., 48-50 Maiden who have seen it say it would be cheap

PURE BLOOD GOOD HEALTH

Now is the time for everyone who cherishes good health, to pay particular attention to the condition of their blood and its proper circulation. Nearly all diseases that flesh is heir to are caused and agravated by an impure condition of the

THE KING OF BLOOD PURIFIERS

Possessing Extraordinary Cleansing Powers

tained so long as our party and control of the people. And we demand the circulation of the State banks.

5 We demand that Congress reneal all laws authorizing national banks at laws authorizing national banks are last the state banks.

6 Price, $1.00 per Bottle-6 Bottles for $5.00.

For Sale by All Bruggists.

For Sale by All Druggists.

NABERS, MORROW & SINNIGE,

SOLE CONTROLERS,

Berningham.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION. Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages.

REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUDSCRIBE FOR IT.

It is the best of all weekly news- "And Some the columns of those dehousehold word It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south the farmer's family, bringing each wook 6. The property and Uncle Recheer to the fiveside and happiness to mus and a heat of other special writers cheer to the fireside and happiness to

the household.

3. It covers the news of the whole world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thorough news service from every important news center in the world.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone is worth many times its subscription price to every farmer. This department is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, where service is retained by the Consultation at great expense.

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's De-

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's De-partments are a source of infinite pleasing the mean of the meatest weekly newspa-ure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

The Galera Journal, A Weekly Newspaper.

DONE ON SHORT NOTICE.

Frank W. Gist, Proprietor.

THE POPULATION BASIS.

One of the very best things done by the State Convention was the adoption Lamar...... of population as the basis of representain the vote, preserves the just import- Macon no tion from our party councils.

For the information of the public genhow the next State convention will compare with this one, and it will not be a bad ider to cut it out now and preserve it for reference when the new basis shall be attacked. Old Population

Oodiiiiioo.	20010	200 do 17 7 7 5 6
Autauga	5	4
Baldwin	2	3 •
Barbour	17	12
Bibb	4	5
Blount	5	7
Bultock	7	9
Butler	9	7
Calhoun	8	11
Chambers	7	9
Cherokee	6	7
Chilton		5
Choctaw		6
Clarke		8
Clay		5
Cleburne	3	5
Coffee		4
Colbert	5	7
Conecuh		5
Coosa		5
Covington		3
Crenshaw		5
Cullman	3	4
Dale	5	6
Dallas		16
DeKalb		7
Elmore		7
Escambia		3
Etowah	8	8
Fayette	4	4
Franklin	3	4
0.

It will be noted that in the recent convention the Black Belt, composed of the counties of Barbour, Bullock, Russell, Macon, Montgomery, Lowndes, Lee, Autauga, Wilcox, Dallas, Perry, Mareugo, Hale, Sumter and Greene, had 182 delegates, or more than 39 ber cent of the whole. In the next convention those same counties will have 152 delegates, or more than 29 per cent of the whole. The difference in the relative strength of the Black Belt will thus be or cistributed, for while Dallas, Lowndes, Hale, Perry and Marengo lose their anomalous vote, Sumter, Greene, Russell, Macon, Bullock and Lee puil up some. The white counties certainly should be satisfied, and will be. The motion for the change came from the Black Belt, and that section is pleased.-Age-Herald.

Bound to Be Forgiven.

Gustave Dore had many faults, but none so large as not to deserve excuss when one remembers his tenderness of heart. He absolutely would not and could not keep up an enmity. Life was short, according to his loving theory, and only the foolish man could afford to spend it in bitterness. Blanchard Jerrold was exceedingly angry with him at one time because, after they had worked together on a wolume of drawings and descriptions relating to London, Dore published a French edition of the book, in which Jerrold's text did not appear.

For a year the intimacy of the two men ceased, and then, on Dore's anqual visit to London, he suddenly appeared in his former friend's library, held out his hand, and said, couldn't leave without seeing you."

He owned that he had been in the wrong, and did not attempt to justify himself. The only thing he did insist upon was the fact that he could not live at enmity with one of whom he had once been fond, and after long discussion the two parted, on their old affectionate terms.

Yet Dore was an irritable man, and one day actually quarreled with a friend on the subject of art. It was not long, however, before he rushed anto the gentleman's house, saying, "Let us embrace each other! It is too stupid to quarrel with friends. We will talk no more about painting, but only of drawings. Then, you were perhaps in the right."

"We hugged each other," says the triend, in telling the story. "He had been the first to come back. He was a better man than I.

Another friend, Albert Wolff, the critic, had written somewhat severely of Dore as a painter, and the latter, who was never content to be admired as a mere illustrator, felt the cut most keenly. The two had been friends for fifteen years, but this unfortunate criticism parted them for five. Then, one summer evening, they met face to face, and it was Dore who advanced with outstretched hand, saying, "Is it all over?"

"As you please," was the cold reply. Dore hesitated. Then his better mature prevailed over pride, and, passing his arm within that of his friend, he said, "I must talk with

He talked and the other listened, with the result of healing the breach between them.

There is an amusing little story told of George Clemenceau, a conspicuous figure in French politics. His wife was an American girl, and, although she has lived in France since 1870, has retained most of her American ways and customs. That we Americans have customs peculiar to ourselves is illustrated by the following: A man once went on an errand to their house, but was not sure he had seen M. Clemenceau. "I saw," said he, "a little man with a bald head in a room where there was a rocking chair-" "That's enough," interrupted the man he was talking to. "You saw him. He has an American wife and that is where rocking chairs come from."-New York Voice.

Of Freeport, Ill., began to fail rapidly, lost all appetite and got into a serious condition from Dyspepsia She could not eat and even toast distressed her. Had to give up housework. In a week after taking Hood's Sarsaparilla She felt a little better. Could keep more food on her stomach and grew stronger. She took 3 bottles, has a good appetite, gained 22 lbs. does her work easily, is now in perfect health.

Hood's Pills are the best after-dinner Pills. They assist digestion and cure headache.

YOU WANT PAY THEIR WAY business—and if you will profit by his twenty-five years work, you can save many Chicks annually, and make your Kowis earn dollars for you. The point is, that you must be able to detect trouble in the Poultry Yard as soon as it appears, and know how to remedy it. This took will teach you. It tells how to detect and cure disease; to feed for eggs and also for fattening; which fowls to save for breeding purposes; and everything, indeed, you should know on this subject to make it profitable. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents in ic. or 2c, stamps.

Book Publishing House, 135 Leonard St., N. Y. City.

Young Mothers!

We Offer You a Remedy which Insures Safety to Life of Mother and Child.

"MOTHER'S FRIEND

Robs Confinement of its Pain, Horror and Risk. Afterusing one bottle of "Mother's Friend" I suffered but little pain, and did not experience that weakness afterward usual in such cases.—Mrs. Annie Gage, Lamar, Mo., Jan. 15th, 1891. Sent by express, charges prepaid, on receipt of BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO.,

ATLANTA, GA.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS. AM. N. U. No. 28 1892

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUN-DAY SERMON.

Subject-"The Secret Place of Thun-

TEXT: I answered thee in the secret place of thunder."—Psalms lxxxi., f.

It is past midnight, and two o'clock in the morning, far enough from sunset and surrise to make the darkness very thick, and the Egyptian army in pursuit of the escaping Israelites are on the bottom of the Red Sea, its matters hereighers are on the second. its waters having been set up on either side in masonry of sapphire, for God can make a wall as solid out of water as out of granite, and the trowels with which these two walls were built were none the less powerful because invisible. Such walls had never before been lifted.

When I saw the waters of the Red Sea roll-When I saw the waters of the Red Sea rolling through the Suez Canal they were blue and beautiful and flowing like other waters, but to-night, as the Egyptians look up to them built into walls, now on one side and now on the other, they must have been frowning waters, for it was probable that the same power that lifted them up might suddenly fling them prostrate. A great lantern of cloud hung over this chasm between the two walls. The door of that lantern was opened toward the Israelites ahead, giving them light, and the back of the lantern was toward the Egyptians, and it growled and rumbled and jarred with thunder, not thunder like that which cheers the earth after a drought, promising the refeshing shower, but charged and surcharged with threats of doom.

The Egyptian captains lost their presence of mind, and the horses reared and snorted and would not answer to their bits, and the chariot wheels got interlocked and torn off, and the charioteers were hurled headlong, and the Red Sea fell on all the host. The confusing and confounding thunder was in answer to the prayer of the Israelites. With their backs cut by the lash, and their feet bleeding, and their bodies decrepit with the suffering of whole generations, they had asked Almighty God to ensepulcher their Egyptian pursuers in one great sarcophagus, and the splash and the roar of the Red Sea as it dropped to its natural bed were only the shutting of the sarcophagus on a dead host. That is the meaning of the text when God says, "I answered thee in the secret place of thunder."

Now thunder, all up and down the Bible, The Egyptian cantains lost their presence place of thunder,"

Now thunder, all up and down the Bible, is the symbol of power. The Egyptian plague of hail was accompanied with this full diapason of the heavens. While Samuel and his men were making a burnt offering of a lamb, and the Philistines were about to attack them, it was by terrorizing thunder they were discomfitted. Job, who was a combination of the Dantesque and the Mil. der they were discomfited. Job, who was a combination of the Dantesque and the Miltonic, was solomnized on this reverberation of the heavens, and cried, "The thunder of His power, who can understand?" and he challenges the universe by saying, "Canst thou thunder with a voice like Him?" and he throws Rosa Bonheur's "Horse Fair" into the shade by the Bible photograph of a warhorse, when he describes his neck as "clothed with thunder." Because of the power of with thunder." Because of the power of James and John, they were called "the sons of thunder." The law given or the basaltic crags of Mount Sinai was emphasized with this cloudy ebullition. The skies all around about St. John at Patmos were full of the thunder of war and the thunder of Christly.

this cloudy ebullition. The skies all around about St. John at Patmos were full of the thunder of war, and the thunder of Christly triumph, and the thunder of resurrection, and the thunder of eternity.

But when my textsays, "I answered thee in the secret place of thunder," it suggest there is some mystery about the thunder. To the ancients the cause of this bombarding the earth with loud sound must have been more of a mystery than it is to us. The lightnings, which were to them wild monsters ranging through the skies, in our time have been domesticated. We harness electricity to vehicles and we cage it in lamps, and every schoolboy knows something about the fact that it is the passage of electricity from cloud to cloud that makes the heavenly racket which we call thunder. But, after all that chemistry has taught the world, there are mysteries about the skyey resonance and my text, true in the time of the Psalmist, is true now and always will be true, that there is some secret about the Psalmist, is true now and always will be true, that there is some secret about the place of thunder.

To one thing known about the thunder there are a hundred things not known. After all the scientific batteries have been doing their work for a thousand years to come and learned men have discoursed to the utwest showt attemptical electricity and come and learned men have discoursed to the utmost about atmospheric electricity and magnetic electricity and galvanic electricity and thermotic electricity and frictional electricity and positive electricity and nega-tive electricity my text will be as suggestive as it is to-day, when it speaks of the secret place of thunder.

Now right along by a natural law there is always a spiritual law, as there is a secret place of moral thunder. In other words, the religious power that you see abroad in the church in the world has a hiding place, and in many cases it is never discovered at all. I will use a similitude. I can give only a dim outline of a particular case, for many of the remarkable circumstances I have forgotten. Many years ago there was a large church. It was characterized by strange and unaccountable conversions. There were no great revivals, but individual cases of spiritual arrest and transformation.

A young man sat in one of the front pews. He was a graduate of Yale, brilliant as the north star and notoriously dissolute. Every-body knew him and liked him for his genibody knew him and liked him for his geniality, but deplored his moral errantry. To please his parents he was every Sabbath morning in church. One day there was a ringing of the door-bell of the pastor of that church, and that young man, whelmed with repentance, implored prayer and advice, and passed into complete reformation of heart and life. All the neighborhood was astonished and asked, "Why was this?" His father and mother had said nothing to him about his soul's welfare.

ished and asked, "Why was this?" His father and mother had said nothing to him about his soul's welfare.

On emother cisls of the same church sat an old miser. He paid his pew rent, but was hard on the poor, and had no interest in any philanthropy. Piles of money! And people said, "Whata struggle he will have when he quits this life to part with his bonds and mortgages." One day he wrote to his minister: "Please to call immediately. I have a matter of great importance about which I want to see you." When the pastor came in the man could not speak for emotion, but after awhile he gathered self control enough to say: "I have lived for this world too long. I want to know if you think I can be saved, and, if so, I wish you would tell me how." Upon his soul the light-soon dawned, and the old misser, not only revolutionized in heart but in life, began to scatter benefactions, and toward all the great charities of the day he became a cheerful and bountiful almoner. What was the cause of this change? everybody asked, and no one was capable of giving an intelligent answer.

In another part of the church sat, Sabbath

In another part of the church sat, Sabbath by Sabbath, a beautiful and talented woman, who was a great society leader. She went to church because that was a respectable who was a great society leader. She want to caurch because that was a respectable thing to do, and in the neighborhood where she lived it was hardly respectable not to go. Worldly was she to the last degree, and all her family worldly. She had at her house the finest germans that were ever danced, and the costliest favors that were ever given, and though she attended church she never liked to hear any story of pathos, and as to religious emotion of any kind, she thought to positively vulgar. Wines, cards, theaters, rounds of costly gayety were to her the highest satisfaction.

One day a neighbor sent in a visiting card, and this lady came down the stairs in tears and told the whole story of how she had not slept for several nights, and she feared she was going to lose her soul, and she wondered if some one would not come around and pray ne one would not come around and pray social position, her family, her all to God and the church and usefulness. Everybody said in regard to her: "Have you noticed the change, and what in the world caused it?"

Two functals after awhile—not more than two years apart, for it is zoldon that there is a change and what in the world caused it?" and no one could make satisfactory explana-

In the course of two years, though there was no general awakening in that church, many such isolated cases of such unexpected and unaccountable conversions took place. and unaccountable conversions took place. The very people whom no one thought would be affected by such considerations work converted. The pastor and the officers of the church were on the lookout for the solution of this religious phenomenou. "Where is it," they said, "and who is it and what is it?" At last the discovery was made and all was explained. A poor old Christian woman standing in the vestibule of the church one Sunday morning; trying to got her breath again before she went up stairs to the gallery, heard the inquiry and told the secret.

For years she had been in the healt of

For years she had been in the habit of concentrating all her prayers for particular persons in that church. She would see some persons in that church. She would see some man or some woman present, and, though she might not know the person's name, she would pray for that person until he or she was converted to God. All her prayers were for that one person—just that one. She waited and waited for communion days to see when the candidates for membership stood up whether her prayers had been effectual. It turned out that these marvelous instances of conversion were the result of that old woman's prayers as she sat in the gallery Sabbath by Sabbath, bent and wizened and poor and unnoticed.

poor and unnoticed.

A little cloud of consecrated humanity poor and unnoticed.

A little cloud of consecrated humanity hovering in the galleries. That was the secret place of the thunder. There is some hidden, unknown, mysterious source of almost all the moral and religious power demonstrated. Not one out of a million—not one out of ten million—prayers ever strikes a human ear. On public occasions a minister of religion voices the supplications of an assemblage, but the prayers of all the congregation are in silence. There is not a second in a century when prayers are not ascending, but myriads of them are not even as loud as a whisper, for God hears a thought as plainly as a vocalization. That silence of supplication—hemispheric and perpetual—is the secret place of thunder.

In the winter of 1875 we were worshiping in the Brooklin Academy of Music in the interregnum of churches. We had the usual great audiences, but I was oppressed beyond measure by the fact that conversions were not more numerous. One Tuesday I invited to my house five old, consecrated Christian men—all of them gone now, except Father Pearson, and he, in blindness and old age, waiting for the Master's call to come up higher.

higher.

waiting for the Master's call to come up higher.

These old men came, not knowing why I had invited them. I took them to the top room of my house. I said to them; "I have called you here for special prayer. I am in an agony for a great turning to God of the people. We have vast multitudes in attendance and they are attentive and respectful, but I cannot see that they are saved. Let us kneel down and each one pray and not leave this room until we are all assured that the blessing will come and has come." It was a most intense crying unto God. I said, "Brethren, let this meeting be a secret," and they said it would be. That Tuesday night special service ended.

On the 'following Friday night occurred the usual prayer meeting. No one knew of what had occurred on Tuesday night, but the meeting was unusually thronged. Men accustomed to pray in public in great composure broke down under emotion. The people were in tears. There were sobs and silences and solemnities of such unusual power that the worshipers looked into each other's faces, as much as to say, "What does all this mean?" And when the following Sabbath came although we were in said.

power that the worshipers looked into each other's faces, as much as to say, "What does all this mean?" And when the following Sabbath came, although we were in a secular place, over four hundred arose for prayers, and a religious awakening took place that made that winter memorable for time and for eternity. There may be in this building many who were brought to God during that great ingathering, but few of them know that the upper room in my God during that great ingathering, but few of them know that the upper room in my house on Quincy street, where those five old Christian men poured out their souls before God, was the secret place of thunder.

The day will come—God hasten it—when people will find out the velocity, the majesty, the multipotence of prayer. We brag about our limited express trains which put us down a thousand miles away in twenty-four hours, but here is something by which The day will come—God hasten it—when people will find out the velocity, the majesty, the multipotence of prayer. We brag about our limited express trains which put us down a thousand miles away in twenty-four hours, but here is something by which in a moment we may confront people five thousand miles away. We brag about our telephones, but here is something that beats the telephone in utterance and reply, for God says, "Before they call, I will hear." We brag about the phonograph, in which a man can speak, and his words and the tones of his voice can be kept for ages, and by the turning of a crank the words may come forth upon the ears of another century, but prayer allows us to speak words into the ears of everlasting remembrance, and on the of everlasting remembrance, and on the other side of all eternities they will be heard. Oh, ye who are wasting your breath, and wasting your brains, and wasting your nerves, and wasting your lungs wishing for this good and that good for the church and nerves, and wasting your intigs wishing for this good and that good for the church and the world, why do you not go into the secret place of thunder.

"But," says some one, "that is a beautiful theory, yet it does not work in my case, for I am in a cloud of trouble, or a cloud of sickness, or a cloud of persecution, or a cloud of poverty, or a cloud of bereavement, or a cloud of perplexity." How glad I am that you told me that. That is exactly the place to which my text refers. It was from a cloud that God answered Israel—the cloud over the chasm cut through the Red Sea—the cloud that was light to the Israelites and darkness to the Egyptians. It was from a cloud, a tremendous cloud, that God made reply. It was a cloud that was the secret place of thunder. So you cannot get away from the consolation of my text by talking that way. Let all the people under a cloud hear it. "I answered thee in the secret place of thunder." that way. Let all the people under the hear it. "I answered thee in the secret place of thunder."

hear it. "I answered thee in the secret place of thunder."

This subject helps me to explain some things you have not understood about men and women, and there are multitudes of them, and the multitude is multiplying by the minute. Many of them have not a superabundance of education. If you had their brain in a post-mortem examination, and you could weigh it, it would not weigh any heavier than the average. They have not anything especially impressive in personal appearance. They are not very fluent of tongue. They pretend to nothing unusual in mental faculty or social influence, but you feel their power; you are elevated in their presence; you are a better man or a better woman, having confronted them. You know that in intellectual endowment you are their superior, while in the matter of moral and religious influence they are vastly your superior. Why is this?

To find the revelation of this secret you must go back thirty or forty or perhaps sixty years to the homestead where this man was brought up. It is a winter morning, and the tallow candle is lighted, and the fires are kindled, sometimes the shavings hardly enough to start the wood. The mother is preparing the breakfast, the blue edged dishes are on the table, and the lid of the kettle on the hearth begins to rattle with the steam, and the shadow of the industrious woman by the flickering flame on the hearth is moved up and down the wall. The father is at the barn feeding the stock—the outs woman by the flickering flame on the hearth is moved up and down the wall. The father is at the barn feeding the stock—the oats thrown into the horses' bin and the cattle craunching the corn. The children, earlier than they would like and after being called twice, are gathered at the table.

The blessing of God is asked on the food, and, the meal over, the family Bible is put upon the white tablecloth and a chapter is read and a prayer made, which includes all the interests for this world and the next. The children pay not much attention to the the interests for this world and the next. The children pay not much attention to the prayer, for it is about the same thing day after day, but it puts upon them an impression that ten thousand years will only make more vivid and tremendous. As long as the old folks live their prayer is for their children and their children's children. Day in and down the most himself month out year. with her. From that time her entire demand yout, month in and month out, year meanor was changed, and though she was not called upon to sacrifice any of her amenities of li-e, she consecrated her beauty. The sons and daughters of that family are ties of li-e, she consecrated her beauty. The sons and daughters of that family are ties of li-e, she consecrated her beauty. The sons and daughters of that family are ties of li-e, she consecrated her beauty. The sons and daughters of that family are ties of li-e, she consecrated her beauty.

Two function after awhile—not more than two years apart, for it is coldon that there is more than that lapse of time between father's going and mother's going—two funerals put out of sight the old folks. But where are the children? The daughters are funerals put out of sight the old folks. But where are the children? The daughters are in homes where they are incarnations of gool sense, industry and piety. The sons, perliaps the of farmer; another a merchant, another a mechanic, another a merchant, another a mechanic, another a minister of the Gospel, useful, consistent, admired, honored. What a power for good those seven sons and daughters! Where did they get the power? From the schools, and the seminaries, and the colleges? Oh, no, though these may have helped. From their superior mental endowment? No, I do not think they had unusual mental caliber. From accidental encumstances? No, they had nothing of what is called astonoding gool lick. I think we will take a train and ride to the depot nearest to the homestead from which those men and women started. The train halts. Let us stop a few minutes at the village graveyard andsee the tombstones of the parents. Yes, the one was seventy-four years of age and the other was seventy-two, and the critical halts and the content of the says that "after a useful life that the seminant of the says that the father's tombstone, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow cut on the father's tombstone. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow

On over the country road we ride—the road a little rough, for the spring weather is not quite settled, and once down in a rut it is hard to get the wheels out again without breaking the shafts. But at last we come to the lane in front of the farmhouse. Let me get out of the wagon and open the gate while you drive through. Here is the arbor under which those boys and girls many years ago used to play. But it is quite out of order now, for the property is in other hands. Yonder is the orchard where they used to thrash the trees for apples, sometimes before they were quite ripe. There is mow where they hunted for eggs before Easter. There is the doorsill upon which they used to sit. There is the room in which they had family prayers and where they all knelt—the father there, the mother there and the boys and girls there. On over the country road we ride—the where they all knelt—the father there, the mother there and the boys and girls there.

We have got to the fountain of pious and gracious influences at last. That is the place that decided those seven earthly and immortal destinies. Behold! Behold! That is the secret place of thunder. Boys are seldom more than their fathers will let them be. Girls are seldom more than their mothers will let them be. But there come times when it seems that parents cannot control their be. Girls are seldom more than their mothers will let them be. But there come times when it seems that parents cannot control their children. There come times in a boy's life when he thinks he knows more than his father does, and I remember now that I knew more at fifteen years of age than I have ever known since.

There come times in a girl's life when she thinks her mother is notional and does not understand what is proper and best, and the sweet child says, 'Oh, pshaw!' and she longs for the time when she will not have to be dictated to, and she goes out of the door or goes to bed with pouting lips, and these mothers remember for themselves that they knew more at fourteen years of age than they have ever known since. But, father and mother, do not think you have lost your influence over your child. You have a resource of prayer that puts the sympathetic and omnipotent God into your parental undertaking. Do not waste your time in reading flimsy books about the best ways to bring up children. Go into the secret place of thunder.

At nine o'clock Wednesday morning, June 15 nezt, on the steamer City of New York, I expect to sail for Liverpool, to be gons un-

At nine o'clock. Wednesday morning, June 15 next, on the steamer City of New York, I expect to sail for Liverpool, to be gone until September. It is in acceptance of many invitations that I am going on a preaching tour. I expect to devote my time to preaching the Gospel in England, Scotland, Ireland and Sweden. I want to see how many souls I can gather for the kingdom of God. Those countries have for many years belonged to my parish, and I go to speak to them and shake hands with them. I want to visit more thoroughly than before those regions from which my ancestors came, Wales and Scotland.

cotland.

But who is sufficient for the work I under-churches, in chapels and in the fields. I will make it a campaign for God and eternity, and I hope to get during this absence a baptism of power that will make me of more service to you's when I return than I ever yet have been. For, brethren and sisters in Christ, our opportunity for usefulness will soon be gone, and we shall have our faces uplifted to the throne of judgment, before which we must give account. That day there will be no secret place of thunder, for all the thunders will be out. There will be the thunder of the bursting waves. There will be the thunder of the descending chariots. There will be the thunder of the parting heavens. will be the thunder of the parting heavens.

Boom! Boom!
But all that dim and uproar and caash But all that dim and uproar and cash will find us unaffrighted, and will leave us undismayed if we have made Christ our confidence, and as after an August shower, when the whole heavens have been an unlimitered battery canonading the earth, the fields are more green, and the surrise is the more radiant, and the waters are more onaling to the the waters are more opaline, so the thunders of the last day will make the trees of life appear more emerald, and the carbuncle of the wall more crimson, and the carbuncte of the wall more erimson, and the sunrise of eternal gladness the more empurpled. The thunders of dissolving nature will be followed by a celestial psalmody the sound of which St. John on Fatmos described, when he said, "I heard a voice like the voice of mighty thundering?" Amen

Escaped a Cloud Burst.

Cab Lee, of the Amargosa / Valley, tells of sleeping near the mouth of Furnace Creek canon one night years ago with a bug hunter, as the desert-tramping scientists are called in camp. It was so hot that the bug hunter could not sleep. About midnight hetheard a roaring noise up the canon, which, as it increased in volume, caused him to look up that way. To his surprise he saw, as he supposed, the sky that appeared between the canon walls grow suddenly white. At that moment Leevrolled over and the bug hunter asked him what ailed the sky. Lee gave one glance, and then yelled:

"Cloud burst! Climb!" They scrambled up the steep wall just in time to save their lives. Lee thinks that the foaming wall of water that had whitened the sky was not less than 100 feet high. - Goldthwaite's Geographical Magazine.

Prohibiting Marriage.

The provisional diet of Styria in Ams tria has taken a very curious step backward in the direction of medieval legislation by the passage of a law prohibiting indigent people to marry without a license to be issued by the authorities, which means that no licenses shall be

CURIOUS FACTS.

At Potsdam, Germany, there is a well that only lacks ten feet of being a mile

There are said to be 163,000 families in London, England, living in single Asia signifies "in the middle," from the fact-that ancient geographers place it between Europe and Africa. The figures of fire losses for 1891, compiled by insurance men, reach the enormous total of $140,000,000.

Fruit that drops on your ground from the branches of your neighbor's trees overhanging your land is yours. In 1835 a tame elephant could be bought in India for $225; now their prices range from $750 to $4000.

The juice of the pineapple contains both a protied digesting substance and is also furnished with a milk-cordling

$100 Reward. $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to tearn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it falls to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address

F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O.

The Only One Ever Printed.

The Only One Ever Printed

The Only One Ever Printed.

CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

There is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words allke except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name or the word and they will return you BOOK, EXAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES THEE.

Gladstone has become a frequenter of the LADIES needing a tonic, or children who want building up, should take Brown's Iron Bitters. It is pleasant to take, cures Malaria, Indigestion, Bilioaness and Liver Complaints, makes the Blood rich and pure.

General Miles is enthusiastic over the use of bicycles in the army.

"A word to the wise is sufficient," but it is not always wise to say that word to one who is suffering the tortures of a headache. However, always risk it and recommend Bradycrotine. All druggists, fifty cents.

Composer Arthur Sullivan has entirely

MANY persons are broken down from overwork or household cares. Brown's Iron Bitters rebuilds the system, aids digestion, removes excess of bile, and cures malaria. A spendid tonic for women and children.

All attempts to induce Rubenstein, the pianist, to visit America have failed.

SICK HEADACHE, chills, loss of appetite, and all nervous trembling sensations quickly cured by Beecham's Pills, 25 cents a box.

General N. P. Banks gives a good deal of attention to gardening in his old age.

ONE ENJOYS

Both the method and results when Syrup of Figs is taken; it is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, cleanses the sys tem effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and cures habitual constipation. Syrup of Figs is the only remedy of its kind ever produced, pleasing to the taste and acceptable to the stomach, prompt in its action and truly beneficial in its effects, prepared only from the most healthy and agreeable substances, its many excellent qualities commend it to all and have made it the most popular remedy known.

Syrup of Figs is for sale in 50c and $1 bottles by all leading druggists. Any reliable druggist who may not have it on hand will procure it promptly for any one who wishes to try it. Do not accept any substitute.

CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP CO. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. LOUISVILLE, KY. NEW YORK, N.Y.

Tutt's Hair Dye

critical periods in a woman's life the change from girlhood to womanhood, and, later, the "change of life" -it is a perfectly safe and an especially valuable remedial agent, that can produce only good results. It's a powerful, invigorating tonic, and a soothing and strengthening nervine; a legitimate medicine purely vegetable, perfectly harm-less—and carefully adapted, by an experienced physician, to woman's delicate needs.

—all the proper functions of wo-manhood. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the remedy. Is regulates and promotes their aotion, and removes the obstructions and suppressions which cause trouble and misery. At the two

For all the derangements, irregularities, and weaknesses peculiar to the sex, the "Favorite Prescription" is a remedy so certain that it can be quaranteed. If it doesn't give satisfaction in every case, the money is returned. No other medicine for women is sold in this way. No other medicine can be.

"German

JUDGE J. B. HILL, of the Superior Court, Walker county, Georgia, thinks enough of German Syrup to send us voluntarily a strong letter endorsing it. When men of rank and education thus use and recommend an article, what they say is worth the attention of the public. It is above suspicion. "I have used your German Syrup," he says, "for my Coughs and Colds on the Throat and Lungs. I can recommend it for them as a first-class medicine."-Take no substitute.

RELIEVES all Stomach Distress REMOVES Nausec, Sense of Fullness, Congestion, Pain. REVIVES FAILING ENERGY. WARMS TO TOE TIPS.

DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mes

FRED'K DUTCHER DRUG CO..

100-Page Chicken Book It teaches you how to detect and cure Discuss; how to feed for eggs and also for fatering Sent postpaid for 25c. Book Publiouse, 134 Leonard st., N.Y City.

THE CALERA JOURNAL.

VOL. I.

CALERA, ALA., SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1892.

NO. 36.

Repayment.

Beneath the elm-trees' arching shade, As gayly as the flowers arrayed, A little maid was straying. A boy, outside this paradise, Looked in with longing, hungry eyes, As if to join her playing.

At length she saw his earnest gaze, While springing down the grassy ways. "Poor boy, so sad and lonely, Take this," she whispered, low and meek, With lips close pressed against his cheek, "For I have kisses only."

Years passed away. The child of eight Became a maiden tall, sedate, With lovers in a plenty. Again she in the garden stood; Beside her, in a happy mood. Lingered a youth of twenty.

"Dear May," he said, with solemn face, "I trust myself to your kind grace, And humoly crave your pardon. I must return without delay A gift that you bestowed one day On me in this same garden.

t'I've treasured it for many years, My ray of hope 'mid doubts and fears: I hope you never missed it." She turned her face in mute surprise To his; the rogue with smiling eyes Bent down and kissed it.

-[Harper's Weekly.

THE BLACK LACE DRESS.

BY AMY RANDOLPH.

"And you're not going to the dance, after all, Katie Carleton?"

Henrietta Lacy was sitting in the modest little third-story back-room. which was all the home that Katie Carleton had; a square room, with one bulging window, looking out upon the roof, and the walls covered with a coarse, zigzag pattern of crimson on a pea-green ground, while the carpet, well worn in spots and carefully darned, was of a nondescript here. And I didn't tell anything but color and design-great sprawling leaves and scrolls bursting out in a tangled complexity which would have made a designer's head swim.

But Katie Carleton, humble little photopraph-colorer though she was, was young and pretty, with yellow hair waving away from her low, square forehead, arched brows, and deep hazel eyes, while the confinement and monotony of city life had not yet stoien all the fresh roses from her cheeks.

For Katie Carleton, like many another, had left a comfortable, if not a luxurious, farm-house home, with the idea that fortunes were to be picked up in the city as readily as blackberries on a sunny stone wall. Poor girl! She had found out her mistake soon enough, yet she had Itoo much pride to return, a useless burden to the honest old uncle and his six daughters, who made cheeses and raised poultry in the venerable precincts of Elderberry Farm. Nobody wanted a governess; her little poems were returned, labelled "Respectfully declined," from the neswspaper offices; and the water-colored drawings, whereby she had expected to take the artistic world by storm, hung in the circulating library window until their margins were smoke-blackened and their bright colors hopelessly tarnished, without anyone ever taking the trouble to ask the price. And at last, just as Katie was beginning to wonder whether death by starvation was really such a painful end, some kindly soul told her of a chance to get employment from a great photograph establishment in the Bowery.

Hetta Lacy was employed there, too -not exactly in Katie's humble capacity, but as the smart young lady who received the customers, helped them with their bonnets and wraps, and answered general questions. She considered it quite a condescension on her part to patronize Katie; and Katie had too few friends to be specially particular about their quality. And now, as Miss Lacy sat opposite her, in a lilac poplin dress, and with an artificial bird in her hat, one could but think of a paroquet that had somehow fluttered down into a dove-cote.

"No." said Katie, "I am not going." "I know why," said Henrietta, spitefully. "It's because Evan Merris doesn't approve of fancy balls."

"Mr. Merrie ought to be a better judge of what is and what is not proper than a mere country girl like me," said Katie, mixing a little more ultramarine blue for the sash of a pudding-faced little boy with a cat in his arms.

"Oh, I dare say!" said Henrietta, her embarrassment.

tossing her head. "And you're really determined not to go."

"Yes, quite."

"Then perhaps you wouldn't mind lending me the black lace dress you pasted the gold stars on when you did mean to go. I find that the lower flounce is completely torn off my white tarlatan, and I really haven't time to plan any new costumes."

"You are quite welcome to it, Henrietta," said Miss Carleton, kindly.

"I cau put on a little gold fringe and make a very decent 'Midnight' out of it," said Hetta, indifferently. "Only, Katie, I think you are a goose not to go!"

Katie did not argue the questionshe only painted quietly on and Henrietta Lacy went away.

"Oh, Mr. Merris!" said she, radiantly, as, on ascending the steps of the photographic saloon, she met the handsome young foreman of the printing office overhead. "I've just come from Katie Carleton's. And you ought to see the lovely dress she has been preparing for the masquerade

"Indeed!" Evan Merris's brow darkened slightly. "I thought she had decided not to go."

"I don't know about that," said Miss Henrietta, artlessly; "I only know that she's got a beauty of a dress, black lace, all sprinkled over with gold stars!"

Mr. Merris passed on, and Henrietta entered the saloon, congratulating herself on her finesse.

"I've put a spoke in her wheel, I guess," said the young damsel to herself; "and serve her right for getting Evan Merris away from me, that had known him years before she ever showed her pink-and-white baby-face the truth, either! I did see the dress there, and she has been making it!"

Katie Carleton expected Evan Merris in vain that night. The little bow of fresh blue ribbon in her yellow hair was all in vain; the new ruffle at her throat and the spotlessly ironed white apron were donned to no purpose. She extinguished her little lamp at ten o'clock, and, creeping into her alcovebed, cried herself to sleep, she did not exactly know why.

The next night was the night of the much talked-of masquerade ball. Evan A very long time elapsed before the earth, where the precious metals are Merris hated and dispised these mis- eye could perceive yellow, and a still strewn over the mountains, where cellaneous gatherings from the bottom longer time before green could be disof his heart-and yet, just when carriage after carriage was driving up, and the crowd arriving, he chanced to be standing in the brilliantly lighted street, leaning against a lamp-post, and moodily watched the prettily attired figures flit by.

Suddenly he gave a start. There was the black lace dress, starred over with gold, floating across the pavement, worn by a slight, graceful figure, and leaving a faint odor of musk and patchouly in its pathway. But he did not see the triumphant flash of the vailed eyes, as for an instant they rested on his face.

"There she goes," he murmured to himself, as the diaphanous folds of black and gold disappeared under the decorated archway; "and there, beneath her feet, crash to ruins the aircastles that my silly brain has been building for the last three months!"

So he went on his way, determined to see or hear no more of pretty Katie Carleton, the yellow-haired girl who had somehow contrived to cast a glamour about his heart and brain decidedly prejudicial to the influence of Miss Henrietta Lacy.

But a man's resolves are made neither of gutta-percha nor adamant, and he could not help pausing instinctively in front of the tenement house in which Miss Carleton lived; and as he paused he saw, through the big, brightly lighted window of the grocery below, the slender figure of Katie herself, in a gray dress, like a little nun, buying the humble loaf of bread and ten-penny worth of tea which were to serve for her morrow morning's breakfast.

"It can't be possible!" said Evan Merris to himself. "No, it can'tl"

But just at that moment Katie turned and he saw her whole face; a little sad, perhaps, but quietly self-contained and sweet. Involuntarily he walked in and held out his hand to

Kate dropped the loaf of bread in

"Miss Carleton!"

"How came you here?"

"I might, with better reason, ask how came you here? For I was certain fifteen minutes ago," he added. seeing her surprised and bewildered face, "that I saw you cross the pavemen, opposite Hebe Hall, in a black lace dress covered with gilt stars, and enter the ball-room door."

"Oh, no," cried Katie. "I--I had long ago given up all idea of going; and Henrietta Lacy asked me for the loan of my dress, as she hadn't time to make up one for herself. It was Henrietta you saw, not me."

"Henrietta, eh?" repeated Evan Merris, slowly, as a certain light broke in upon his brain. I always suspected that gir! was not quite straightforward in her dealings, and I'm sure of it now, Miss Carleton."

Then, after a pause, he asked:

"Are you disengaged this evening?" "Quite."

"May I come up and sit with you?" "I shall be delighted," answered simple Katie, flushing all over.

The next day Henrietta Lacy came around to Katie's room, with the black ace dress folded up in a flat paper

"I'm so much obliged to you, dear," said she. "I had such a charming

"So did I," said Katie, who longed for some congenial ear into which to pour the story of her happiness. "Mr. Merris spent the evening here."

"Mr. Merris!"

"Yes. And, oh, Hetta, only think! He has asked me to be his wife, and we are to be married in February; and I don't know how it ever chanced that so much happiness should be in store for me."

Henrietta Lacy bit savagely at her nails, as she listened. So all that plotting and planning had been in vain, after all. And the magnet, Love, had attracted Evan Merris to the right and rue, after all. - [The Ledger.

Colors and the Eye of Man.

Science gives us many interesting details about what the human eye has been and what it may become. The most ancient written documents attest that in times most remote only two the very air of Montana is a stimulant. colors were known, black and red. Perhaps it gathers its magic from the tinguished. It is remarkable that in the most ancient languages the term nuts in the South, and where men Mail and Express. used to designate vellow insensibly passed to the signification of green.

The Greeks had, according to the generally received opinion, the color faculty very highly developed, and us that in the time of Alexander the Great, the Greek painters knew but four colors, namely, white, black, red and yellow. The ancients had no ferred to them as gray and black. It is thus that the colors of the rainbow were only distinguished gradually: the great Aristotle knowing only four of them. It is a well-known fact that when the colors of the prism are photographed there remains outside the limit of the blue and the violet Physiologists tell us that it is reasonable to suppose that as the color organ in the human species becomes highly developed, and even before the remains: When the educated eye of later on?-[Philadelphia Press.

Best Part of a Hide.

Experiments were recently made to determine which portion of a hide of leather gave the best results when made into belting. Four strips, each eighteen inches long and two inches 1852, when one Walter Lowe went in wide were cut and carefully tested in a machine. One of the pieces from the centre of the hide broke at a strain of 2490 pounds, equal to 14,940 pounds per foot of width, while the strip from the upper part of the shoulder parted at 1180 pounds .-[New York Journal.

THE NEW NORTHWEST

Characteristics of the Soil and the Settlers.

A Land of Ready Cash, High Wages and Quick Fortunes.

Beginning with the Dakotas, we enter the vast plains country-monotonous, all but treeless, a blanket of brown grass almost as level as the mats of grass that the Pacific coast Indians plait. It is only a little wrinkled in the finishing— at the top edge and down in the southwest corner. On its surface the houses and the villages stand out in silhouette against a sky that bends down to touch the level sward. Here we find the western edge of the lands which the Scandinavians who have come among us prefer to their own countries. Here we come upon the yellow wheat-fields that turned their kernels into millions of golden dollars last year. Here, also, we see the more than half savage cattle whose every part and possession, except their breath, is converted into merchandise in Chicago. The hard-riding cowboys are here "turned loose," and the not less domesticated Indians in their blankets are cribbed in the national corrals. A great thirst would seem to overspread the Dakotas, for the lands are arid, while the people possess prohibitory liquor laws, and water that is poisoned with

In the Black Hills we prepare ourselves for Montana by a first glimpse of mining. In Montana, where the very first merchant's signboard announced "pies, coffee and pistols for sale," we now see the legend "licensed gambling saloon" staring at the tourists, who may walk into the dens more easily than they can into the stock exchanges of the East. In Montana we feel an atmosphere of speculation. Every store clerk hoards some shares in undeveloped mines for his nest-egg. It is natural that this should be. The stories of quick and great fortunes that daze the mind are supported by the presence of the millionaire heroes of each tale. Moreover, sapphires, rubies and garnet spaded out of the earth like goober hunt for the diamonds which scientists say must be there.

Montana is a land of ready cash and high wages. Lumbermen and miners get as high as seven dollars a day, and yet authors of the highest repute tell the very street-sweepers get twice as much as broom-handlers in New York. Here we find wealth, polish and refinement, noble dwellings, palatial hotels, and numerous circles of words to designate the colors of blue charming, cultivated folk. Their and violet, therefore they always re- mistake has been to despise agriculture. They know this, and with them, to see an error is to repair it.

The mining camps and Californiacolored characteristics of the mountainous half of Montana spread over into Idaho, a baby giant born with a golden spoon. The cattle ranges and cowboy capitals of Montana's grass-(in the spectrum) a distinct impression | clad hills are repeated upon the giganwhich our eyes do not recognize as a tic but virgin savanuas of Wyoming. In Washington all is different again. The forests of Maine and of the region of the Great Lakes are here exaggerated, the verdure of the East reappears and passes into semi-tropical eye becomes what the opticians would and incessant freshness and abunconsider "perfect," this outside band dance. Here flowers bloom in the will resolve itself into a color perfect- gardens at Christmas, small fruits y discernible. Only one speculation threaten California's prestige and the aborgines are bow-legged, boating the year 2500 has discerned and named Indians who work like 'longshorethis now indistinct color, will another men. Cities with dozen-storied buildshadowy band appear to be classified ings start up like sudden thoughts and among the colors 500 or 1000 years everywhere is note of promise to make us belittle our Eastern growths that startled the older world .- [Harper's Magazine.

Florida's Sponge Industry.

The birth of the sponge industry of Florida may be put down for the year the schooner Chestnut to Anclote Key that other men embarked in the busitwo hundred and fifty vessels, from the yawl to the one-hundred-ton Blithe poetess at the gateways of the soul! schooner, employing nearly two thousand men, are now actively engaged in creating an annual revenue of nearly $1,000,000.

Sponges are found in the Atlantic as far north as Jupiter Inlet. The industry at St. Mark's, at the head of the Apalachicola (Wakulla county) competes sixth in rank with Key West. Most of the output goes to New York, about one-third being exported to Germany, France and England. Statistics are very scarce regarding this valuable industry. Sponges are caught by men who are sent out in boats from vessels. Each But sweetest when thy shape phantasmal boat is furnished with yawls and two men, one of whom slowly paddles the boat along, while the other searches the bottom of the sea. For this he is provided with a common water bucket, into the bottom of which a piece of window glass is fixed. When a sponge is seen he takes the grappler, similar to those used to grapple oysters, and his helper so directs the boat that the fisher can catch the sponge and tear it from its fastenings. be "fired." The bucket glass is used mostly in stormy weather. At other times the they are making up time. waters are clear enough to examine the bottom at a depth of twenty feet. study you may know that his goose is After the sponge is taken out of the cooked. water it is cast upon the deck of the vessel or upon the beach and exposed to the sun from twenty-four to fortyeight hours, until it dries. When it is cold, or is frosty, or blowing a gale, the sponge lives for four or five days. When dried the sponges are drop too much." placed in "crawle," made by driving stakes in the water to prevent them won't charge for a question, 1 hope? from being carried away by the Lawyer-Oh, no; only for the answer. waves.

In three days they are taken out and pounded with wooden clubs and again cast into the crawls. This process of pounding and washing is kept up until all the animal matter is removed. The sponges are then strung in bunches and allowed to dry. When sold the proceeds are divided, half going to the vessel, the balance to the captain and crew, the captain getting a small percentage more than the

The sponges are then trimmed down sponges dipped into lime water, in a fast they'll run. solution of one quart of lime to eight

The "Toilette" of Paris.

It is not without a great outlay of money that Paris, France, keeps up the well deserved reputation of being the daintiest and cleanest of all great Part of this amount is devoted to the purchase and maintenance of spades, pickaxes, wheelbarrows, watercarts, disinfectants, sand, brooms, etc. The rest is used to pay the 2600 men and 600 women who every morning remove offal or mud. This small army of street cleaners is divided into 149 brigades, each of which is commanded by a so-called captain, just like soldiers would be. Every man or woman has an appointed task; some wash the sidewalks, others attend to the gutters, others look after the areas or throw sand on the streets and boulevards, which twice a day are inspected by one of the street-cleaning corporation. This explains why the thoroughfares there are almost as well kept as the interior of a Flemish house, and also how it is that refuse or dirt is so farmers got into trouble about a little patch of land, the only valuable thing about which was a cherry tree. Finally one of them chopped the tree down and the other sued him for its value, which was assessed at $3.25. The case has been tried several times and a final judgment has just been rendered. The plaintiff won his suit and getc his aponges. These brought such profit has to pay his lawyer $240 and foot the costs, amounting to $987 more. ness. The Civil War crippled the So these farmers pay for their fun strutting forward ever since. Some feelings. - [Atlanta Constitution.

The Luxury of the Law.

Hope.

Dear sycophant, that dost so fondly cling

To even our worst of sorrows! Bark whose wing

Dauntlessly voyages to illusion's goal! Heedless if it be shadow, if rock and shoal! White bird that carollest thine unweary-

Trebles of song, like those by new-born spring Lured heavenward from some blossom-tinted

Ah, Hope, thou art sweet when mad seas glass wild skies,

When war, pest, earthquake riots in bit-

Or yet when tyranny tortures and en-

A luminous dream named Immortality,

Over the darkness of earth's myriad

-[Edgar Fawcett, in the Cosmopolitan.

HUMOROUS.

The man who is shadowed is under

As is natural it makes a man hot to

No wonder the minutes fly so fast; When you see a man in a brown

He-I love you madly. She-It certainly is madness for you to think of loving me. It is the parachute performer who runs the greatest risk of taking "a Lady (to her legal friend)-You

It is easy for the small boy to "make a clean breast of it," but the rub comes when you want him to wash his

Though humble is his lot 'mongst men, This much must all confess, He is a pushing citizen,

He runs a hand express.

It is curious how a woman who screams at a mouse is not startled by a millinery bill that makes a man

Shopper-Are those fast colors? by men with shears, the loose pieces Clerk-Well, I should say as much. and the roots clipped off and the You just wash it once, and ses how Algernon (who is much given to gallons of water. They are then talking in phrases)—Angelina, I love ready for the merchant.-[New York | you with a fervor- a fervor-worthy a better cause!

> A man never realizes how much valuable advice his neighbors have to give away until he announces his intention to build a house.

Deacon-How do you like the mincities. The "toilette" of Paris costs ister? Stranger-Very much. I have annually considerably over $1,100,000. nothing but praise to offer him. Yes, I noticed that when I passed the contribution plate in your pew.

> Mrs. Brown-I hear your husband was run over by a horse car last night. Was he much hurt? Mrs. Boggs-I can't tell until we agree upon the amount of damages to claim.

> > My wife was once my autocrat, But now, alas! I've two, And all my pride has fallen flat At what I'm bade to do. For years she ever had her way-With some rebellion, maybe-But now just listen to her say, "Come, hubby, mind the baby!"

"You like the old songs, dont you?" he said. "Yes," he answered, "I believe I do." "I wonder what it is that gives them their charm." "I guess it's the fact that they are not so likely to be suug."

She-I really don't think it is nice seldom met with as is the case in other of you to go and borrow money of great capitals .- New York Tribune. papa so soon after we are engaged. He (greatly surprised) - Why, you are the first girl who ever objected to Ten years ago two Pennsylvania it in all my experience.

> "What became of that fool, Saphead, who had more money than he knew what to do with?" Business manl don't remember him. Was he much of a fool? "Perfectly idnotic," "The chances are that he has dropped into society."

A gentleman lately dismissed a $3.25, for which be has lawyers' fees clever but dishonest gardener. For and in several days secured a cargo of to pay amounting to $325. Defendant | the sake of his wife and his family he gave him a character, and this is how he worded it: "I hereby certify that A. B. has been my gardener for over two new calling. At its close the baby in- and the tree a total of $1552, to say years, and that during that time he dustry got on its feet, and has been nothing of lost time and harrowed has got more out of my garden than any man I ever employed."

GROVER CLEVELAND, OF NEW YORK.

After a hard fight from the opposition, which failed to make any great showing, the nomination of Mr. Cleveland was made with a rush which has always characterized his successful campaigns. His support came from the great mass es of democracy, and the domand for his nomination came as with the voice of thunder from thousands of people. The feeble protests were drowned in a sea of clamerous calls not to be hushed save by an affirmative action.

In his nomination the people have expressed their united faith in his honesty, sincerity and integrity, for experience has taught that his administration will be pure and conservative, yet fearless and bold. In placing Mr. Cleveland's name before the convention Mr. Abbott answered the question as to why his nominat on was demanded by the people when he said:

It is because he has crystalized into on it victory is now assured. There are few men, in his position, who make the issue and present it so clear ssue which would appeal to the judgment of the people.

such circumstances to proclaim that for temporary success. When victory in the future. It is no longer the which went into his own coffers. question of a battle to be won on the mistake of our foes, but it is a victory to be accomplished by a charge along ous plans, he turns up in Washingthe whole line under the banner of

There can be no disputing the fact that this policy, inaugurated by Mr. Cleveland, has swept the entire country, until its effects have farmers must have relief!" been felt in nearly every state. In Massachusetts it gave us a Rus-Michigan it gave us Winans for gave us James Campbell for governor, and in 1891, to defeat him, it required the power, the wealth Republican party. In Pennsylvania it gave us Robert E. Pattison. In Connecticut it gave us a Democratic governor who was kept out of office by the infamous conduct ator, and in Nebraska it gave us troduction of the Alliance. Boyd for governor. In the great southern states it has continued in power den:ocratic governors and democratic legislatures.

democracy has been strengthened pected. Mr. Kolb imagined that and the legislature and executive he might be struck with this same are now both denfocratic. In the great state of New York it gave us David B. Hill for senator and Roswell P. Flöwer for governor. With the assistance of President Adams. all these glorious achievements it and county lecturers, to delude the was the wisest and best party poli- farmers into following him out of cy to nominate again the man whose policy made these successes possible. The people believe that these victo- ter he had failed to defeat the deries, which gave us a democratic mocracy in primary election, he is House of Representatives in 1890 seen in cancus with these third and democratic governors and senators in republican doubtful states, are due to the courage and wisdom sonable demands. He demands of Grover Cleveland. And, so be- seats for enough delegates to nom lieving, they recognize him as their mate him, knowing his request great leader.

They will not be disappointed. This same policy will bring cuccess, and Mr. Cleveland will be the next F W. G.

WHERE THE THING STARTED.

When Macune, Powderly, Kolb, Adams and the rest of that notable gathering met at St. Louis-and again at Ocala-and set forth the resolutions and demands, it was but a pretext to organize a third party. They were, like the request of the democratic convention, presented as a plea upon which to kick, and not with any hope or expectation that they would be entertained or accepted. They knew the result before they asked it.

Dishonest demagogues are always on the alert with inventive genius to further their own ambitions and the organization of the Farmers' Alliance and other labor societies were fraudulently established as a stepping stone to the accomplishment of division in the ranks of the two old parties and thereupon the establishment of a third party.

The prince of demagogues, Maoune, when he found himself a defeated and disappointed republican in the state of Wisconsin, he heard of the new order of Farmers' Alliance, and conceiving the idea, emigrated to the Lone Star state and manipulated the organization in the South as a means to fill his coffers with filthy lucre and to foist himself into political notoriety, and sent emmissaries to Alabama, Georgia, and other southern states to organize the "down-trodden farmers" into alliances for protection (?) against monopolies. One of these communistic specimens of farmer loving Texans-W. C. Griffith-was shipped to middle Alabama with head-quarters at Calera, to organa living issue the great principle up-on which this battle is fought out. If he did not events twiff reform he on which this battle is longit out. If he did not create tariff reform, he made it a Presidential issue; he vitalized it and presented it to our parterly. In the beginning this step. ty as the issue for which we could fight and continue to battle, until upof purposes, claiming equal rights to all and special favors to none. They would have the courage to boldly also claimed that no man's religious ly and forcibly as he did in his great or political opinions should be in-message of 1837. I believe that his terfered with. The originators of policy then was to force a national the new party were then working for footing and for numerical We must honor a man who is hon-est enough and bold enough under organizations were perfected on the success of the party upon which those fraudulent claims, Mr. Maprinciple is better than evasion or cune conceived a plan of a Farmers shirking of true and national issues Exchange, organized one in Texas is obtained upon a principle it forms and succeded in making a failure of the solid foundation of party success it to the tune of $75,000, most of

> Now, to further on his nefariton as the editor of the National Economist, the chairman of the working committees. etc. Here he cries to his deluded readers, "the

The third party is now planted and germinated-it will soon be sell, in Iowa it gave us a Boies, in ripe-"I'll call the labor organiza-Wisconsin it gave us a Peck for tions together at St. Louis." Now governor and Vilas for senator, in the arrangements are made. We will all go home, put the lecturers governor and gave us a Democratic in the field, all these lecturers must legislature. In 1889, in Ohio, it be democrats, to tell the people of our wants and their necessities. Insist that, and make the farmer believe, whatever "the people" deand the machinery of the entire mand is democracy. In the meantime you must organize "Gideon's Bands," "Citizens' Alliances," "Alliance Benefit Associations," and next year we will go to Ocala, and demand certain things of the old of the Republican party. In New parties, we can't expect them to Hampshire it gave us a Legislature accept them, and now comes the of which we were defrauded. In third party, the very thing that we Illinois it gave us a Palmer for sen- intended in the beginning of the in-

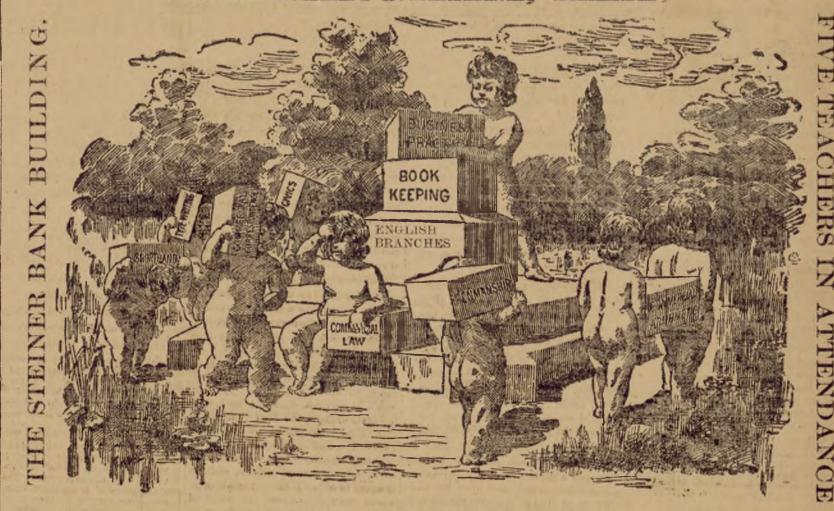

The Ocala convention was held and their demands made known, both republican and democratic In New Jersey the power of the parties rejected them as they exthird party lightning, and he too, "jined the 'Liance," hoping with the party of their allegiance. Afpartyites, then comes more unrea. would not be granted, but made it for a plea to kick out of harness.

Now that the original purpose for which the Alliance was organized by $1.00 a year.

The Best Place to Secure a Business Education is at the

REW WOEER

COLLEGE COMMERCE

Send for Circular.

M. M. FIELDS, Vice President

LEONARD LIPPMAN, President.

G. F. HART, Secretary and Treasurer.

is accomplished, we will probably never hear of it again, after the present campaign is over the People's Party, of which the Alliance is the father, will pass into oblivion where all third party movements

NEGRO SYMPATHIZERS.

have gone before.

The Kolb convention put a negro protection plank in their platform. The third party convention last week elected a uegro to go as a delegate to the Omaha convention. A people's party man was heard to say in Calera the other day that he wanted the negro to vote in the primary with him next month. No wonder these men have fallen away. There is no place in the ranks of democracy for men who believe in or favor in any degree negro equality in primary election. Besides the great underlying principles which characterize the democratic party, besides the policies which make it the party of the people, is the purity, the decency, the respectability which comes of white blood and dle: The nominees of the faction white intelligence. The man who whose delegates were recognized by sits in counsel or stands in rank with the negro forgets the pride of southern manliness in the mire of ig- The mass meeting candidates are norance and filthy association. We all avowed followers of Jones and have no word of censure for the re- organized democracy. The execupublican who does these things, for tive committees of the two factions long since has he been given over are of the same material. This is to his idols. We have no war to indeed a bad state of affairs. Inmake on honest opinion, be it mis- dependent in state canvass, "true placed or true. But to him who blues" at home. "True Blues" in steps out of the highway of democ- state canvass and independent at racy and holds out his hand to the home!" This is a bad state of af ignorant and poluted race, we point fairs. It is hoped that the good alike with pity and scorn. Receive people will act conservatively, and the negro into your party counsels, that for the success of the party and you have broken down the bar- and the election of the best men, riers which held him aloof from your that proper concessions will be firesides; place his vote upon an made. Get tegether, brethren, equality with yours, and you have unite on Jones-let Kolb go. He offered him a sort of honor in your and his ticket don't deserve the suphalls of deliberation and in your port of men claiming to be demotemples of justice; put his intellect and his judgement on a par with yours, and you have robbed your children of their heritage of honor and social supremacy; take his hand semble tomorrow are but things of a in political brotherhood, and you day. The candidates nominated and shatter forever the shrine of purity the men [composing the factions will at which your wives and daughters soon pass away, but every two years worship; stand by him at the ballot box, and your sons will reap a harvest of tainted honor. Let shame and dishonor be the reward of so great perversion of the teachings of a century, They who foster these things will be known as traitors to the tenits of their country's faith, and from these the trust and confi-

Subscribe for the JOURNAL, On-

F. W. G.

WHY IT WAS DONE.

We hear, almost every day, some of the Kolb followers ask: "Why did the Jones convention refuse to seat the delegates claimed by the Kolbites?" They did not refuse to seat any who, on a just and equitable investigation, were found to be entitled to seats. The entire delegation from Bibb and from other counties were admitted; but only one l' from Bibb would go in; one going with Kolb, the other two leaving for home before the conventions were organized, claiming that they had left proxies, but it was never known whether to Brown or

But as to why no attention was paid to the demands of Kolb and his dupes, it can be answered in the came way as is a like question as to the St. Louis resolutions and the Ocala demands. They were unreasonable, and the party asking did not expect them to be granted.

BIBB county politics is in a mudthe state convention, refuse to commit themselves to Kolb or Jones.

THE REMARKABLE CANVASS OF months past and the convention to as and four years we are called upon to establish, maintain and support Democratic principles which are to live always, and I hold the principles of my party higher than I hold the ambition of any man and shall not allow individual preference to control or influence my party allegiance.-E. T. Talliaierro dence of their fellows will be withat Montgomery.

> The Calera Democratic Club was the first in the state to ratify the entire national and state ticket.

--FINE MILLINERY--

Mrs. S. H. McCauley's.

NEAR THE DEPOT.

Montevallo. - A a. A Splendid Line of Trimmed and Untrimmed Hats in the Latest Styles, and at Reasonable Prices.

HANDKERCHIEFS & HOSIERY. Saturday Sales at $1

CORBETT PREESE.

Harness Saddles,

DEALERS IN

HARDWARE & TINWARE,

DACON MATERIAL Stock of Dynamite and Fuse, and empty and loaded

Shells always on Hand.

118 19TH STREET, BIRMINGHAM.

House

W. E. Brinkerhoff & Co.,

CALERA; ALABAMA. Receive Deposits,

Negotiate Loans,

Issue interest bearing certificates of Deposit, and soll exchange on New York Louisville and Birmingham at regular rates charged by the larger cities.

We transact a general banking business, such as that of any incorporated bank in all of its legitimate branches, and would be pleased to open accounts with merchants, manufacturers and planters alike.

Fire and Lief Insurance

Bought, Sold and Rented upon just terms.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE. 1, South Bound, 66 5:10 a. m. 10:19 North Bound, 10:05 p. m. 66 66 7:15 p. ni.

ALABAMA MINERAL.

4:35 p. m. 10:25 a. m. No. 85, Arrives at 86, Departs at

COUNTY OFFICERS. Probate Judge—R. W. Cobb. Circuit Clerk—W. R. A. Milner. Sheriff—W. R. Carter

Register in Chancery-D. R. McMil-Tax Collector-E. F. Vest. Tax Assessor-W. H. Kidd. County Trersurer-A. W. Strickland.

Superintendent of Education-T. N. County Solicitor-J. L. Peters. County Commissioners—John E. Dyeey, T. B. McClusky, R. F. Johnson, D. C. Davis.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Anord to be without it can be a friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send five cents for sample copy. RICHARD K. FOX, Souare. New York City. Franklin Square.

INSURE YOUR LIFE.

Read and profit by the following sound counsel, every word of which smarts with a truism like a sparkling jewel:

"It is a duty you owe to yourself and family to protect them with a reasonable amount of life insurance, where the stoums of the financial world cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot touch them; where the assessor cannot tax them; where they are safe for your family should you die; and where they will become your protection in your old sge should you live. A life insurance will do this and more; therefore, do your duty and insure immediately in some good, old reliable Company."—Extract from a sermon by the Rev. T. De-Witt Talmage.

HUGH T. CAFFEY,

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON CALERA, ALA.

feb12-1v.

. 1. L. PETERS. HENRY WILSON, E. S. LYMAN

PETERS, WILSON & LYMAN,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW, GOSSIP OF THE CRITTIC.

I suppose when a man has gotten married he may be excused from filling his regular appointments be-fore the public. I suppose again he is expected to tell an anxious lot not to be backward but speak out of readers something about his and they should hear from him in a views on the subject of his new existence. In this they will be disap-stood, promising that if elected as know, and those who don't know must find out. If any of our particular friends want to know how we are getting along they must come and see, but doubtless they and that was answered in the af will know very little more after firmative.

have fallen to my lot yet. I have in their praise and well pleased with Hale, where they claimed they were in not yet been hauled about by the his visit. He expects a solid vote at hair, nor pounded with the broom! Gurnee box. All the buttons have had no trouble finding my clothes. I have been Mr. Bonsfield, president of the club, spoken to but twice about stove in a happy speech of 15 minutes, wood, and sent to town only once endorsed the democratic national, to think that wives have been slan-

Just at this time I am exceedingly fortunate in being out of town. It is quite a relief to be out of reach of the hum of politics, and I find it very pleasant. My wife will hereafter run the political part of our household, and if we can arrange it to the satisfaction of all parties in interest she will do the voting. heard a violent third party enthusiast, the other night, singing the verses printed in the People's Advocate. It took two drinks and a

A CARD OF THANKS.

I take this method of returning my undivided thanks to the good people of Calera for the kindness and attention shown to my father, C. L. Harrell, during his late illness, and for kindness shown the family after his death. I desire especially to thank Rev. Z. A. Dow ling and Dr. J. F. Blevins.

S. K. HARRELL.

Affectionately Inscribed to S. M. Adams.

BY A FOURTH PARTY MAN. There was a little preacher, And his name was "Uncle Sam," And he lived long ago, long ago; He found his holy calling Didn't bring in the cash, He decided he would go.

He joined the Alliance To ride into power, And to the Legislature He first made a jump. Straight to St. Louis and Ocala He bowed his sacred (?) head, And swallowd the platforms All in a lump.

To Congress at last He concluded to go 'Till Jefferson's primaries Laid him so low Then back to old Bibb Whose Judge he would be He fled in the greatest of agony; But the people here rejected him too.

Poor Samuel's greed Was not satisfied, For the Farmer's Commissioner He would be, So to Reuben's third parto He went just so Where they swallowed the nigger

Now the ides of August did run, And Samuel's political sun Sank low in the west, For the people had laid him to rest.

Oh! hang up your fiddle and your bow, Oh! hang up your fiddle and your bow,
Lay down your shovel and your hoe,
There's no more hard work for poor little Sam,
He's gone where the demagogues go.
X. Y. Z.

Calera, Ala., June 27, 1892.

THE OUTLOOK IN SHELBY.

THE WORK OF A DEMOCRATIC CLUB.

Some two weeks ago Col. John P. West, the nominee of the Shelby democracy, received an invitation to visit Gurnee and open his cam-Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber, or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes there but failed to meet him. On his arrival at the company's store he met a large, crowd of citizens of Gurnee, intelligent, fine looking, pleasant gentlemen. At 8 o'clock, p.m., the people assem bled in the school house-about one hundred gentlemen and some two dozen ladies-to hear speaking from those who were already present to address them.

The meeting was called to order, by the president of the Gurnee Democratic Club, Henry Bonsfield, who explained the object of the meeting in a clear, forcible and intelligent way. Mr. B. then intro- ferring to Tweed as the founder of an orduced the speakers in a manner entirely acceptable to audience and was born. spokesmen.

Col. West was the first to lead off, and in a plain and easy style talked about forty minntes, presenting the issues and differences involved in the local campaign, abstaining from any thing like personal reference.

He was followed by W. B. Browne tee of Fayette county, of Columbiana, and in one of his plain, forcible and practical talks showed the importance of an aggressive, conservative canvass.

Mr. Browne was followed by others in short talks.

At the close of the speaking Col. West stepped to the front of the way that could not be misunderpointed. Those who have tried it their representative he would not be master but the servant of the people, and would use his best efforts to secure such legislation as they desired. Only one question was asked,

The people of Gurnee are an intelligent and well behaved set of None of the ills so often told of lot of people, and Col. West is high growing smaller every day. Down in before the people each two years advoca-

After the speakers had concluded for groceries. So far I am inclined state and county tickets, and his endorsement was ratified by the entire club, all seeming to be in their happiest moods.

The Club meets every Friday night, and full of enthusiasm.

SENTORIAL CONVENTION.

The Democratic Sentorial Convention, of the Sentorial district composed of the counties of Chilton, Elmore and Shelby, is hereby called to meet at Wetumpka, Ala, on the 7th day of July 1892, for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Senator and such lot of fresh air to recover from the other business as may properly come before it. Each county will be entitled to one delegates to every one hundred votes cas sfor the last democratic state

> H. L. WILLIAMS Chairman Ex. Com. C. L. Bass, Secretary.

MARRIED .- Mr. Sam M. Wyatt to Miss. Nancy C. Lawly at Montevallo June 29th, by Rev. M. W. Jones.

POLITICAL PARAGRAPHS.

confederate cavalryman, now a republican, said a few days ago: "I am a republican, but will not vote for Harrison. Harrison is a narrow-minded, sectional bigot, still believing in hell-fire and infant damnation. He is a man whose illiberal character is now known to the people of the United States, and who can carry neither New York nor Indiana, nor any of the southern states whose delegates nominated him."

Gen. Jas. R. Chalmers, of Mississippi, whose gallantry as a confederate officer was as widely known as the Confederacy, but whose ambition and greed for office caused him to stray away from the fold and drop into republican ranks, is reported as repudiating the nomination of Harrison.

The people of Georgia, where Cleveland's opponents claimed he was not popular, are enthusiastic in his endorsement, and ratification meetings are being held all over the state. The same thing exists in the great state of South Carolina.

Age-Herald: The success of Captain Kolb in this contest would not be a simple charge of administration from one Democrat and one set of men. It would be revolution backward. It a united and solid south: would be destruction to that feeling of confidence and security which twenty years of stability has built up. It would be universal distrust come to take the place of hope, and men would busy themselves in wandering what disaster next? It would mean the displacement of that great body of men who are trained in the conduct of affairs, and the ed in the conduct of affairs, and the trooping in of a horde of small men. whose obscurity has been the result of their own weakness. It would mean the advent of Republicans to the councils of the ruling powers.

The success of Captain Kolb would mean a return to conditions almost as bad as those from which we were rescued in 1874, and worse than all, more woeful than all, it would mean the speedy white depopulation of the Black Belt and its giving over to the absolute and undisputed dominion of a race once more grown turbulent and unbearable.

When a preacher concludes to make an ass of himself he can always succeed. Rev. Dixon Jr., however, not only writes himself down as an unusually large ass in his assault on Tammany, but proves himself an ignoramus by reganization that was old before Tweed

Every man in Alabama who has the perpetuation of peaceful and sound government at heart should be at the service of the State Executive Committee.

Hon. Daniel Collier, of Fayette C. H. who followed Kolb to the convention, has joined the Jones force and been elected chairman of the Jones commit- justify a movement that makes this

The Kolb democrats of Etawa have given up their claims to the democratic organization and their places on the committee have been filled with true

Seale has organized a large and enthusiastic Jones club. Selma claims to be the first city to ratify the nominations of the Chicago convention. Speeches were made by the presidents of the Hill and Cleveland clubs and by E. W. Pettus and Mardis Woods, delegates to Chicago.

Sixty-three democrats at Coalburg, Jefferson county, organized themselves into a democratic Jones club. It is reported that 25 of these voted for Kolb against the party.

Reports from all over the state indithe majority, there is not a handful

The Kolb committee met in Birmingon Tuesday last and filled out the ticket by putting J. C. Fondville on for Secretary of State, and J. P. Oliver as Superintendent of Education.

The republican committee of Shelby county met in Calera Tuesday and put a ticket in the field for county officers. But the names have not yet been made known to the public. It is pretty sure that they will all accept.

The correspondence between Gov. Jones and Capt. Kolb is expected to play an important part in the present campaign. Of course Capt. Kolb knew that Governor Jones would not join him in signing a card of the character refered to. His object was to put the Governor on the defensive. The Governor seems to have fully understoob Capt. Kolb's object, and he covered the ground pretty well in his reply.

Thursday was another exciting and interesting time with Calern's Bese ballers. A game between Ca-Calera and L. & N's of Birmingham, resulted in favor of the visiting team by one score. Our reporter could not get the correct score. Everything passed off pleasantly. No kicking and no the party to express their will and to exergisher by the national congress or the general assembly of the state. bats again soon.

DANGER IN DIVISION.

The New York Sun was probably Col. John S. Moseby, the famous more bitterly opposed to the nomination than any newspaper in the United States; and the news of his nomination was as unwelcome to its editor, Mr. Dana, as to any living man in America, and the state bank and tariff planks of the democratic platfform is in opposition to the views of Mr. Dana. With these objections, he lays aside his prejudices and preferences, and supports Mr. Cleveland because he realizes the fact that the alarming consequences threatened by the iniquitous force bill overshadow every other calamity.

This is patriotism worthy of the approval and consideration of every white man in the south. And as a lesson to our third party friends and the respectable republicans of Shelby county and the state, we reproduce the following extract from the Richmond Times. Read the extract and place yourselves in the position of Mr. Dana and other northern democrats and we believe you will conclude that the only salvation for the entire country is in

A northern editor, who is really not in accord with the democratic party in one of its fundamental doctrines—that of tariff reform-agrees to forget everysectional hate and negro rule. The bare contemplation of a northern man thus teaching southern white men their duty to themselves is enough to make every southerner who ever, even remotely, dreamed of being false to his party and his country, in the present emergency, blush for his treason.

It is to be hoped that we will hear no more such talk in the south. The idea that our own Virginia or any other southern state could be considered "doubtful" in such a contest should be promptly resented by them as an insult. If the south ever had cause to be solid, she certainly has it now more impersshe certainly has it now more imperatively than ever before in her existance.

If a northen democrat with views such as Mr. Dana holds yields so much to save the south from the ordeal of another era of reconstruchis consent to aid, by heralding the with too much forbcarance, submitted to tion of republican president who is bill. There is nothing so dangerous to the south as division in democratic ranks, and we believe that no reform demanded by any class can force bill even a possibility.

the south, can't afford to support Jefierson, taught by Madison and practiced the races. other than the democratic priniples though a devil be its nominees.

KOLB PLATFORM.

Whereas, The democratic party has for saveral years past been composed of two factious, seemingly identical in leading principles and tenents of democratic faith, but irreconcilable on antagonistic policies which have most vitally affected the interests of the people and the welfare of the country; and

Whereas, During that period the people in the Jefferson primary in December, have steadfastly, firmly and with unwayerbut refuse to follow him in his war ing devotion followered the leadership of men whose actions and efforts have been devoted as much to the supremacy of one cate that the Kolb following is now of these factions as the other, while going ting democratic principles and using some shibboleth to appeal to their passions and prejudices in order to avoid and prevent a discussion of the policies which affected their interests; and

Whereas, The people have been mislead and deceived into virtually adopting or indorsing politics antagonistic to their interests and destructive of their prosperity, and are constrained to demand a return to the simplicity of democratic practices and the honesty of democratic methods by which the prosperity of the citizens shall be made paramount to the interest of the dollar, and the public servant shall be made to return to a realization of the fact that the creature cannot be dictator to his creator. and he who is sent is not greater than he who sent him; and

Whereas, The loyalty of the membership of the party has been construed as license to the leaders to arrogate to themselves the functions of autocrats, and cause them to interpret uncomplaining adherence to party as a commission to them as rulers instead of public servants; and

Whereas, This arrogated license and the assumed powers and prerogatives by leaders of the party have gradually grown into and become a most heartless tyranny, a most dogmatic depotism and a most unscrupulous bossism, domineering in nature, them to prevent or destroy legitimate com vindicative in character and merciless in exercise, transcending all bounds of reason, justice or tolerance in all its impious methods and conscienceless management; and possess.

Whereas, The efforts of the members of cise their sovereign powers have been al assembly of the state.

We are opposed to placing convict labor WHOLE

PURE BLOOD GOOD HEALTH

Now is the time for everyone who cherishes good health, to pay particular attention to the condition of their blood and its proper circulation. Nearly all diseases that flesh is heir to are caused and agravated by an impure condition of the blood and a sluggish circulation.

THE KING OF B OOD PURIFIERS Possessing Extraordinary Cleansing Powers

Restoring and Strengthening the whole System. Enriching the Blood producing increased vitality by restoring an impaired digestion and bringing back the bloom of youth to the cheek of the enfeebled and emaciated.

Price, $1.00 per Bottle-6 Bottles for $5.00.

For Sale by All Druggists.

NABERS, MORROW & SINNIGE,

SOLE CONTROLERS,

Birmingham.

A WORD ABOUT THE WEELKY CONSTITUTION.

Greatest of All American Weekly Newspapers, 12 Pages. REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE FOR IT.

world, having its correspondents scattered over the globe, and having a thorthe sturdy champion of the agricultural ough news service from every important interests of the south.

ough news service from every important news center in the world.

4. Its Agricultural Department alone is worth many times its subscription price to every farmer. This department of the south, and much more than any is edited by Dr. W. L. Jones, the leading agricultural authority of the south, wnose service is retained by the Constitution at great expense.

5. Its Woman's and Childeren's Development of the south.

8. It pays more money for its special features and for its news service than any other four of the weekly newspapers of the south.

9. It is the cheapest, being only One Dollar ser year, each paper at the price of a postage stamp. Think of it! Every time a hen lays an egg she pays for

ure to every family, and the name of pers in the world.

1. It is the best of all weekly news- "Aunt Susie," the editress of these de-

papers.

2. It is invaluable to the tarmer and throughout the south.

the farmer's family, bringing each week cheer to the fireside and happiness to the whole are engaged by the year, and their inimitable sketches appear each week.

3. It covers the news of the whole itable sketches appear each week.

tution at great expense.

of a postage stamp. Think of it! Ev5. Its Woman'3 and Childeren's Departments are a source of infinite pleasone issue of the greatest weekly newspa-

Send for sample copies. If you already take it, send the names of six of your neighbors with their addresses. It is the farmers' friend, and no well regulated home should be without it.

Agents Wanted in every Locality.

Liberal terms to agents; and money in working for it. Write for information. THE CONSTITUTION, Atlanta, Ga.

practices and manipulations of party bosses, who seem to labor nuder the hallucination that their will is law, and by some strange and unaccountable way they have been vested with kingly prerogatives and the powers of despots; and that any southern democrat can get file of the party have borne these abuses trol of its issue and management. whims of third partyism, the elec- these impostions with too much recognipulse and constrained by every prompting be made a crime and punished as such. of manhood which should influence the ing our devotion and allegiance to the by Jackson, the Jeffersonian democracy o Alabama, in order to restore democracy to mission shall be elected by the people in the its old land marks as the exponent of the general election. rights of the people, we promulgate the following declaration of principles and pur-credness of homes and the social purity of communities, and we hold the convict system is inimical to all these considerations. Therefore, we favor the repeal of the same as it now exists, by the legislature of Alabama, and we favor such prompt and efficient action upon the part of the chief executive of the state as will bring about these results.

We favor just and equitable taxation with relative exemptions as now provided, so that all property shall be equally liable for taxation; and we demand a change in the present system of listing property shall be discredness of homes and the social purity of of equity to all.

ent system of listing property shall be disclosed and valued, and proper penalties shall be imposed so as to prevent the escape of any property liable to taxation from being listed and taxed as to its value like all ballot in the general election. other property.

We favor the protection of capital by guaranteeing to every person or corporation equal protection with all other citizens with the unquestioned right to do as they please with their own-all property bearing its equal share of taxation.

We are opposed to any and all combines trusts, cliques, rings and syndicates; and favor legislation capable of annihilating the nəfarious system fostered and sustained by petition in business, or any other abuses or damages which may result from their im proper or unjust exercise of the power they by corrupt methods or annulled by sharp in competition with free labor in this state. We are opposed to the national bank system and demand its repeal.

We favor an expansion of the currency to not less than $50 per capita, with every dollar issued a legal tender for all public and private dues and demands, and that all tion, we can't conceive how it is Whereas, The mandood, love of liberty and shall be based on a substantial foundation of appreciation of freedom by the rank and value, with the national government in con-We favor the free and unlimited coinage of silver. We believe that money should be tion and blindly followed these leaders un- a medium of exchange, and not a commotil their homes are in jeopardy and their dity of speculation; and that unlawful comcommitted to the infamous force children are threatened with serfdom as a binations by which enormous quantities of result of policies which most of these lead. money are accumulated for the some purers either approve or refuse to attempt to pose of withdrawing it from circulation in correct; and inspired by every patriolic im- order to interfere with commerce should

We favor the protection of the colored liberty loving citizens, we feel constrained races in their legal rights, and should afto strike for the freedom of our homes and ford them encouragement and aid in the the liberty of our children, and demand a attainment of a higher civilization and citi-Let the cry be organization and return to the rule of the people, for the zenship, so that through the means of kindunity of action in support of the people and by the people. While reaffirm ness, fair treatment and just regard for them, a better understanding and more national, state and county. We. of principles of democracy as enunciated by satisfactory condition may exist between We demand that the state railroad com-

We demand a graduated income tax by the national government.

following declaration of principles and purposes:

We affirm that all power is lodged in the people; that every man is sovereign; that he has the right to vote and act as his judgement dictates without question or challenge, subject only to such limitions as may be imposed by law.

We favor generous and equitable legislation for the relief and benefit of the laboring and agricultural class of the people, and with equal rights to all and special favors to none.

We favor the most liberal public school system that an economical administration of the state government will justify.

We hold above all other considerations the protection of life, the enjoyment of property, the peace and quiet of society, the sacredness of homes and the social purity of equity to all.

vote.

Rosolved further, That we demand of the next legislature the enactment of a law throwing around all primary elections the same safeguard as protect voters and the

TICKET FOR THE STEVENSON

PEOPLE.

REV. DR. TALMAGE

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE'S SUN-DAY SERMON.

Subject-"The Secret Place of Thunder."

TEXT: "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more."—Hebrows viii.

The national flower of the Egyptians is the heliotrope, of the Assyrians is the water lily, of the Hindoos is the marigold, of the Chinese is the chrysanthemum. We have no national flower, but there is hardly any flower more suggestive to many of us than the forgetmenot. We all like to be remembered, and one of our misfortunes is that there are so many things we cannot remember. Mnemonics, or the art of assisting memory, is an important art. It was first suggested by Simonides of Cos five hundred years before Christ.

Persons who had but little power to recall

Persons who had but little power to recall events, or put facts and names and dates in processions, have through this art had their memory reinforced to an almost incredible memory reinforced to an almost incredible extent. A good memory is an almost invaluable possession. By all means cultivate it. I had an aged friend who, detained all night at a miserable depot in waiting for a rail train fast in the snow banks, entertained a group of some ten to fifteen clergymen, likewise detained on their way home from a meeting of presbytery, first, with a piece of chalk, drawing out on the black and sooty walls of the depot the cheracters of Walter chalk, drawing out on the black and sooty walls of the depot the characters of Walter Scott's "Marmion," and then reciting from memory the whole of that poem of some eighty pages in fine print.

My old friend, through great age, lost his memory, and when I asked him if this story of the railroad depot was true he said, "I do not remember now, but it was just like me. Let me see," said he to me, "have I ever seen you before?" "Yes," I said, "you were my guest last night and I was with you an hour ago." What an awful contrast in that man between the greatest memory I ever hour ago." What an awful contrast in that man between the greatest memory I ever knew and no memory at all.

But right along with this art of recollection, which I cannot too highly eulogize, is one quite as important and yet I never heardit applauded. I men that of forgetting. There is a plendid faculty in that direction that we all need to cultivate Weight, through that process, be ten times happier and more useful than we now are. We have been told that forgetfulness is a weakness and ought to be avoided by all possible means. So far from weakness, my weakness and ought to be avoided by all possible means. So far from weakness, my text ascribes it to God. It is the very top of omnipotence that God is able to obliterate a part of His own memory. If we repent of sin and rightly seek the divine forgiveness, the record of the misbehavior is not only crossed off the book, but God actually lets it ness out of memory.

rossed off the book, but God actually lets it pass out of memory.

"Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." To remember no more is to forget, and you cannot make anything else out of it. God's power of forgetting is so great that if two men appeal to Him, and the one man, after a life all right, gets the sins of his heart pardoned, and the other man, after a life of abomination, gets pardoned, God remembers no more against one than against the other. The entire past of both the moralist, with his imperfections, and the profligate, with his debaucheries, is as much obliterated in the one case as in the other. Forgotten, forever and forever. "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." member no more.'

This sublime attribute of forgetfulness on the part of God you and I need in our finite way to imitate. You will do well to cast out way to initate. You will do well to cast out of your recollection all wrongs done you. During the course of one's life he is sure to be misrepresented, to be lied about, to be injured. There are those who keep these things fresh by frequent rehearsal. If things have appeared in print they keep them in their scrapbook, for they cut these precious paragraphs out of newspapers or books and and at leisure times look them over, or they have them tied up in bundles or thrust in pigeon-holes, and they frequently regale themselves and their friends by an inspection of these flings, these sarcasms, these falsehoods, these ruelties.

I have known gentlemen who carried them in their pocketbooks, so that they could easily get at these irritations, and they put their right hand in the inside of the coat pocket over the heart and say: "Look here! Let me show you something." Scientists catch wasps, and hornets, and poisonous insects and transfix them in curiosity bureaus for study, and that is well. But these of whom I speak catch the wasps, and the hornets, and the poisonous insects, and play with them and put them on the mselves and on their friends, and see how far the noxious with them and put them on themselves and on their friends, and see how far the noxious insects can jump and show how deep they can sting. Have no such scrapbook. Keep nothing in your possession that is disagreeable. Tear up the falsehoods, and the slanders and the hypercriticisms.

Imitate the Lord in my text and forget, actually forget, sublimely forget. There is no happiness for you in any other plan of procedure. You see all around you, in the church and out of the church, dispositions acerb, malign, cynical, pessimistic. Do you know how these men and women got that disposition? It was by the embalmment of things pantherine and viperous. They have spent much of their time in calling the roll of all the rats that have nibbled at their reputation. Their soul is a cage of vultures. Everything in them is sour or imbittered. They do not believe in anybody or anything.

If they see two people whispering they

Well, my friends, there are many Christians guilty of worse folly than that. While it is right that they repent of new sins and of recent sins, what is the use of bothering yourself and insulting God by asking him to of recent sins, what is the use of bothering yourself and insulting God by asking him to forgive sins that long ago were forgiven? God has forgotten them. Why do you not forget them? No, you drag the load on with you and 365 times a year, if you pray every day, you ask God to recall occurences which he has not only forgiven but forgotten. Quit this folly. I do not ask you less to realize the tarpitude of sin, but I ask you to a higher faith in the promise of God and the full deliverance of his mercy. He does not give a receipt for part payment, or so much received on account, but receipt in full. God having for Christ's sake decreed, "your sins and your iniquities will I remember no more." As far as possible, let the disagreeables of life drop. We have enough things in the present and there will be enough in the future to disturb us without running a special train into the great gone-by to fetch us as special freight things left behind. Some ten years ago, when there was a great railroad strike, I remember seeing all along the route from Omaha to Chicago and from Chicago to New York hundreds and thousands of freight cars switched on the side tracks, those cars loaded with all kinds of perishable material, decaying and wasting.

After the strike was over did the railroad those cars loaded with all kinds of perishable material, decaying and wasting.

After the strike was over did the railroad companies bring all that perished material down to the markets? No, they threw it off where it was destroyed, and loaded up with something elss. Let the long train of your thoughts throw off the worse than useless freight of a corrupt and destroyed past, and load up with gratitude and faith and holy determination. We do not please God by the cultivation of the miserable. He would rather see us happy than to see us depressed. You would rather see your children laugh than to see them cry, and your Heavenly Father has no fondness for hysterics.

teries.

Not only forget your pardoned transgressions, but allow others to forget them. The chief stock on hand of many people is to recount in prayer meetings and pulpits what big scoundrels they once were. They not only will not forget their forgiven deficits, but they seem to be determined that the church and the world shall not forget them. If you want to declare that you have been the chief of sinners and extol the grace that could save such a wretch as you were do so, but do not go into particulars. Do not tell how many times you got drunk, or to what bad places you went, or how many free rides you had in the prison van before you were converted. Lump it, brother; give you were converted. Lump it, brother; give it to us in bulk.

If you have any scars got in honorable warfare, show them, but if you have scars got in ignoble warfare, do not display them. I know you will quote the Bible reference to I know you will quote the Bible reference to the horrible pit from which you were digged. Yes, be thankful for that rescue, but do not make displays of the mud of that horrible pit or splash it over other people. Sometimes I have felt in Christian meetings discomfited and unfit for Christian service because I had done none of those things which seemed to be in the estimation of many necessary for Christian usefulness, for I never swore a word, or ever got drunk, or went to compromising places, or was guilty of assault or battery, or ever uttered a went to compromising places, or was guilty of assault or battery, or ever uttered a slanderous word, or ever did any one a hurt, although I knew my heart was sinful enough; and I said to myself, "There is no use of my trying to do any good, for I never went through those depraved experiences;" but afterward I saw consolation in the thought that no one gained any ordination by the laying on of the hands of ordination by the laying on of the hands of dissoluteness and infamy. And though an ordinary moral life, ending in a Christian life, may not be as dramatic a story to tell about, let us be grateful to God rather than worry about it, if we have never plunged into outward abominations.

It may be appropriate in a meeting of reformed drunkards or reformed debauchees to quote for those not reformed how desperate and nasty you once were, but do not drive a scavenger's cart into assemblages of people, the most of whom have always been decent and respectable. But I have been sometimes in great evangelistic meetings where people went into particulars about the sins that they once committed, so much so that I felt like once committed, so much so that I felt like putting my hand on my pocketbook or call-ing the police lest these reformed men might ing the police lest these reformed men might fall from grace and go at their old business of theft or drunkenness or cutthroatery. It your sins have been forgiven and your life purified, forget the waywardness of the past and allow others to forget it.

But what I most want in the light of this text to impress upon my hearers and readers is that we have a sin-forgetting God. Suppose that on the last day—called the last day because the sun will never again rise upon our earth, the earth itself being flung into fiery demolition—supposing that on that last day a group of infernal spirits should some day a group of infernal spirits should somehow get near enough the gate of heaven and challenge our entrance, and say: "How canst thou, the just Lord, let tuose souls into the realm of supernal gladness? Why, they said a great many things they never ought to have said, and they did a great many things they ought never to have done. Sinners are they: sinners all."

And suppose God should deign to answer, He might say: "Yes, but did not My only Son die for their ransom? Did He not pay the price? Not one drop of blood was retained in His arteries, not one nerve of His that was not wrung in the torture. He'took in His own body and soul all the sufferings that those sinners deserve. They pleaded that sacrifice. They took the full pardon that I promised to all who, through My Son, earnestly applied for it, and it passed out of My mind that they were offenders. I forgot all about it. Yes, I forgot all about it. "Their sins and their iniquities do I remember no more." A sin-forgetting God! That is clear beyond and far above a sinpardoning God.

How otten we hear it said: "I can for-husband through the darkness. But, no. The house was full of excitement and the neighbors were gathered and stood around the wife of the house, who was insensible as from some great calamity. On inquiry the returned husband found that the little child of that cabin was gone. She had wandered out to meet her father and get the present he had promised, and the child was lost. Then the father unrolled from the blanket the child he had found in the fields, and lot it was his own child and the lost one of the prairie home, and the cabin quaked with the shout over the lost one found.

How suggestive of the fact that once we were lost in the open fields or among the mountain crags, God's wandering children, and He found us dying in the tempest and wrapped us in the mantle of His love and fetched us home, gladness and congratulation bidding us welcome. The fact is that the world does not know God, or they would all flock to Him. Through their own blindness or the fault of some rough preaching that has got abroad in the centuries, many men and women have an idea that God is a tyrant, an oppressor, an autocrat, a Nana Sah ib, an omnipotent Herod Antipas. It is tyrant, an oppressor, an autocrat, a Nana Sah ib, an omnipotent Herod Antipas. It is a libel against the Almighty; it is a slander against the heavens; it is a defamation of the infantice of the infinities

I counted in my Bible 304 times the word "mercy," single or compounded with other words. I counted in my Bible 473 times the word "love," single or compounded with other words. Then I got tired counting. Perhaps you might count more, being better at figures. But the Hebrew and the Greek and the English languages have been taxed till they cannot pay any more tribute to the love and mercy and kindness and grace and charity and tenderness and friendship and benevolence and symmathy and bounteaus.

love and mercy and kindness and grace and charity and tenderness and friendship and benevolence and sympathy and bounteousness and fatherliness and motherliness and patience and pardon of our God.

There are certain names so magnetic that their pronunciation thrills all who hear it. Such is the name of the Italian soldier and liberator, Garibaldi. Marching with his troops, he met a shepherd who was in great distress because he had lost a lamb. Garibaldi said to his troops: "Let us help this poor shepherd find his lamb." And so, with lanterns and torches, they explored the mountains, but did not find the lamb, and after an unsuccessful search late at night they went to their encampment.

The next morning Garibaldi was found asleep far on into the day, and they wakened him for some purpose and found that he had not given up the search when the soldiers did, but had kept on still farther into the night and had found it, and he pulled down the blankets from his couch and there lay the lamb, which Garibaldi ordered immediately taken to its owner. So the Commander of all the hosts of heaven turned aside from His glorious and victorious march through the centuries of heaven and said: "I will go and recover that lost world, and that race of whom Adam was the progenitor, and let all who will accompany Man that race of whom Adam was the progenitor, and let all who will accompany

And through the night they came, but I do not see that the angelic escort came any farther than the clouds, but their most illustrious Leader came all the way down, and by the time His errand is done our little world, our wandering and lost world, our world fleecy with the light, will be found in the bosom of the Great Shepherd, and then all heaven will take up the cantata and sing: "The lost sheep is found." So I set open the wide gate of my text, inviting you all to come into the mercy and pardon of God; yea, still further into the ruins of the place where once was kept the knowledge of your iniquities.

where once was kept the knowledge of your iniquities.

The place has been torn down and the records destroyed, and you will find the ruins more dilapidated and broken and prostrate than the ruins of Melrose or Kenilworth, for from these last ruins you can pick up some fragment of a sculptured stone, or you can see the curve of some broken arch, but after your repentance and your forgiveness you cannot find in all the memory of God a fragment of all your pardoned sins so large as a needle's point. "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more."

And none of that will surprise you if you will climb to the top of a bluff back of Jerusalem (it took us only five or ten minutes to climb it), and see what went on when the plateau of limestone was shaken by a paroxysm that set the rocks, which had been upright, aslant, and on the trembling crosspleces of the split lumber hung the quivering form of Him whose life was thrust out by metallic points of cruelty that sickened the noonday sun till it fainted and fell back on the black lounge of the Judean midnight.

Six different kinds of sounds were heard on that night which was interjected into the daylight of Christ's assassination. The neighing of the war horses—for some of the soldiers were in the saddle—was one sound; on that night which was interjected into the daylight of Christ's assassination. The neighing of the war horses—for some of the soldiers were in the saddle—was one sound; the bang of the hammers was a second sound; the jeer of malignants was a third sound; the yeer of friends and coadjutors was a fourth sound; the plash of blood on the rocks was a fifth sound; the groan of the expiring Lord was a sixth sound. And they all commingted into one sadness.

Over a place in Russia where wolves were pursuing a load of travelers, and to save them a servant sprang from the sled into the mouths of the wild beasts and was devoured, and thereby the other lives were saved, are inscribed the words: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend."

Many a surgeon in our own time has in tracheotomy with his own lips drawn from the windpipe of a diptheric patient that which cured the patient and slew the surgeon, and all have honored the self sacrifice. But all other scenes of sacrifice pale before this most illustrious Martyr of all time and all eternity. After that agonizing spectacle in behalf of our fallen race nothing about phy to east off the annoyances, and they have kept themselves in the smillstor of God's favor, and have realized that these oppositions and hindrances are a part of a mighty discipline, by which they are to be prepared for usefulness and haven. The secretof it all is, they have by the help of the eternal God learned how to forget.

Another practical thought—when our faults are repented of the them go out of mind. If God forgets them, we have a right to forget them. Having once repented of our infelicities and misdemeanors, there is no need of our repenting of them again. Suppose I owe you a large sum of money, and you are persuaded I am incapacitated to pay, and you give me acquittal from that abligation. You say: "I'd cancel that debt. All is right now. Start again." And the next day I come in and say: "You know about that big debt I loved you. I have come int oget you to let me off. I fel so bat about the total propose of the them off. I fel so bat about the total control of the care o

Thousands Of dollars I spent trying to find a cure for Salt Rheum, which I had 1 years. Physicians said they never saw so severe a case. My legs, back and arms were covered by the numor. I began to take HOOD'S SARSA

Mr. S. G. Derry. PARILLA, and flesh became more h Mr. S. C. Derry. Hesh became more acathy, the sores soon hended, the scales fell off, I was soon able to give up bandages and off, I was soon able to give up bandages and off, I was soon able to give up and was." S. G. Dekcrutches, and a happy man I was." S. G RY, 45 Bradford Street, Providence, R. I.

HOOD'S PILLS cure liver ille, constipation, biliousness, jaundice and sick headache.

ADVICE TO WOMEN

If you would protect yourself from Painful, Profuse, Scanty, Suppressed or Irregular Menstruation you must use

BRADFIELD'S FEMALE REGULATOR

CARTERSVILLE, April 28, 1886.
This will certify that two members of my immediate family, after having suffered for years from Menstrual Irregularity, being treated without benefit by physicians, were at length completely cured by one bottle of Bradield's Female Regulator. Its effect is truly wonderful. J. W. STRANGE.

Book to "WOMAN" mailed FREE, which contains valuable information on all female diseases. BRADFIELD REGULATOR CO., FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISE'S.

- Kow is--Your Blood?-

I had a malignant breaking out on my leg below the knee, and was cured sound and well with two and a half bottles of Other blood medicines had failed C. BEATY, Yorkville, S. C.

'I was troubled from childhood with an aggravated case of Tetter, and three bottles of Cured me permanently.

WALLACE MANN,
MANN, MA

Our book on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free. Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.

here. All genuine goods bear lend us 2 cent stamp for 32-page DR. HARTER MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo.

YOU WANT PAY THEIR WAY nce (Only 25c. years' work, you can save many Chicks annually, and make your Fowls earn dollars for you. The point is, that you must be able to detect trouble in the Poultry Yard as soon as it appears, and know how to remedy it. This book will teach you. It tells how to detect and cure disease; to feed for eggs and also for fattening; which fowls to save for breeding purposes; and everything, indeed, you should know on this subject to make it profitable.

Rent postpaid for twenty-five cents in 1c. or 2c.

Book Publishing House,

FRED'K DUTCHER DRUG CO.,

The Books Boys Road.

The truth is that it is not the boys who read "bad books" who swell the roll of youthful criminality; it is the boys who do not read anything. Let any one look over the police court of a busy morning and he will see that the style of youth gathered there have not fallen into evil ways through their depraved literary tendencies. They were not brought there by books, but more probably by ignorance of books, combined with a genuine hatred of books of all kinds. There is not a more perfect picture of innocence in the world than a boy buried in his favorite book, oblivious to all earthly sights and sounds, scarcely breathing as he follows the fortunes of the heroes and heroines of the story .-- Kansas City Star.

How's This?

We offer One Hundred Dollars reward fea any case of catarrh that cannot be cured by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure.
F. J. Chenery & Co., Props., Toledo, O.
w., the undersigned, have known F. J.
Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions, and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.
West & Truax, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo,

WALDING, KINNAN & MARVIN, Wholesale
Druggists, Toledo, O.
Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Testimonials sent free Price 75c. per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

The Only One Ever Printed. CAN YOU FIND THE WORD?

These is a 3 inch display advertisement in this paper, this week, which has no two words alike except one word. The same is true of each new one appearing each week, from The Dr. Harter Medicine Co. This house places a "Crescent" on everything they make and publish. Look for it, send them the name of the word and they will return you BOOK, BEAUTI-FUL LITHOGRAPHS OF SAMPLES FREE

It is said that Rev. Dr. Conwell, of Philadelphia, had a law practice yielding a revenue of $20,000 a year before he entered the ministry.

Brown's Iron Bitters cures Dyspepsia. Malaria, Biliousness and General Deblifty. Gives Strength, aids Digestion, tones the nerves—creates appetite. The best tonic for Nursing Mothers, weak women and children.

Colonel Steadman, who has just been made commander of the Grand Army, department of Iowa, is only forty-three years old.

To Cleanse the System

Effectually yet gently, when costive or bilious, or when the blood is impure or sluggish, to permanently cure habitual constipation. to awaken the kidneys and liver to a healthy activity, without irritating or weakening them, to dispel headaches, cold or fevers, use Syrup of Figs.

Senator Ransom, of South Carolina, is supposed to be the best dressed and most polished man in the senate.

MALARIA cured and eradicated from the system by Brown's Iron Bitters, which en-riches the blood, tones the nerves, aids diges-tion. Acts like a charm on persons in general ill health, giving new energy and strength.

Herbert Spencer was tendered a nomination for alderman in London, but he de

Wm. Sprague Smith, Providence, R. I., writes: "I find Bradycrotine always cures headache." All druggists, fifty cents.

Queen Virtoria has made the Khedive of Egypt a knight of the Order of Bath. BEECHAM'S PILLS are a painless and effectual emedy for all bilious disorders. 25 cents a remedy for all bilious disorders. box. For sale by all druggists.

TO $15 Per day at home ing jewelry, watches, tableware, etc. Plates the day of jewelry good as new on all blode.

SHORTHAND.

can learn shorthand without a porters have done, and earn from $100 to $200 per month. Perseverance, practice, a good book (suited to a self-learner) and Special instructions are all you need. Send $2 for Phonographic Manual with special instructions—postal note, draft or currency. special instructions—postar note, draft or currency.

Address John J. Squier,
(Cut out this adv.) Box 668, Eureka Springs, Ark.

No 24 1892

It's flying in the face of Nature to take the ordinary pill. Just consider how it acts. There's too much bulk and bustle, and not enough real good. And think how it leaves you when it's all over! Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets act naturally. They help Nature to do her own work. They cleanse and renovate, mildly but thoroughly, the whole system. Regulate it, too. The help that they give, lasts.

They're purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, the smallest, easiest, and best to take. Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and alk derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels are promptly relieved and permanently cured. One tiny. sugar-coated Pellet for a gentle laxative—three for a cathartic.

They're the cheapest pill you can buy, for they're quaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned.

You pay only for the good you

This is true only of Dr. Pierce's

"August Flower"

"One of my neighbors, Mr. John Gilbert, has been sick for a long time. All thought him past recovery He was horribly emaciated from the inaction of his liver and kidneys. It is difficult to describe his appearance and the miserable state of his health at that time. Help from any source seemed impossible. He tried your August Flower and the effect upon him was magical. It restored him to perfect health to the great astonishment of his family and friends." John Quibell, Holt, Ont. 3

OWN DOCTOR

By J. HAMILTON AYERS, A. M., M. D.

This is a most Valuable Book for the Household, teaching as it does the easily-distinguished Symptoms of different Diseases, the Causes and Means of Preventing such Diseases, and the Simplest Remedies which will Alleviate or Cure. 598 PAGES, PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

The Book is written in plain, every-day English, and is free from the technical terms which render most Doctor Books so valueless to the generality of readers. This Book is intended to be of Service in the Family, and is so worded as to be readily understood by all.

ONLY 60 CENTS, POSTPAID.

(The low price only being made possible by the immense edition printed.)

Not only does this Book contain so much Information Relative to Disease, but very properly gives a Complete Analysis of everything pertaining to Courtship, Marriage and the Production and Rearing of Healthy Families; together with Valuable Recipes and Prescriptions, Explanation of Botanical Practice, Correct Use of Ordinary Herbs.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with Complete Index.

With this Book in the house there is no excuse for not knowing what to do in an emergency. Don't wait until you have illness in your family before you order, but send at once for this valuable volume.

ONLY 60 CENTS, POSTPATO. Send postal notes or postage stamps of any denomination not larger than 5 cents.

BOOK PUBLISHING HOUSE, 134 Leonard St., N. Y. City.

"Laugh a Little Bit."

Here's a motto just your fit: Laugh a little bit.' When you think you 're trouble Lit. Laugh a little bit."

, Look Misfortune in the face. Brave the beldam's rude grimace; Ten to one't will yield its place If you have the grit and wit Just to laugh a little bit.

Keep your face with sunshine lit;-"Laugh a little bit."

Gloomy shadows off will flit , If you have the wit and grit Just to laugh a little bit.

Cherish this as sacred writ:-"Laugh a little bit."

Keep it with you, sample it;— Little ills will sure betide vou. Fortune may not sit beside you, Men may mock and Fame deride you, But you'll mind them not a whit If you laugh a little bit.

-[J. Edmund V. Cook, in St. Nicholas.

THE EDITOR'S WOOING.

BY HELEN FORREST GRAVES.

The editor had lighted his cigar just as the level light glimmering through his by no means immaculate pay for." "sanctum" windows, indicated that the glorious orb of day, somewhat smoke, was about to disappear behind, not exactly the western hills, but what came to the same thing in a city, the western roofs and chimney tops.

Karl Rubens, the editor of the weekly Shiner, was a tall, bright looking man of thirty years, one of those andividuals whose very face and featares indicate that they are born to conquer destiny. He had been very successful through life, but it was because he had demanded success with a courageous persistency that would not be denied. Brown-haired, with careless, wavy locks, drooping low upon his forehead, and dark-brown eyes, verging upon black, he was not handsome, yet the eye rested with pleasure upon his face, and in his light editorial coat, somewhat worn at the elbows and shiny at the seams, and the velvet cap, tasseled and braided with gold, he looked every inch the chivalrous and frank-hearted American. Or, we might phrase it "gentleman," did we not secretly believe that the former title is far the mobler and more comprehensive of the

As we said before, Mr. Rubens was just drawing the first inhalation of his Havana, when the door opened softly, and a beautiful young lady rustled in; a young lady whom he had met a score of times in the gas-lighted drawing-rooms of "society," whose beauty he had worshipped afar off, and whom he had unconsciously asassociated in his mind with diamonds, pearly silks and tulle draperies, looped up with hot-house flowers.

He started up, coloring, and thrusting his weed behind a pile of "encyclopedias."

"Miss Ainslie!"

"Am I interrupting you, Mr. Rubens?" she asked, softly.

"Interrupting me? Not in the least in the world; in fact, I feel very much honored by - by - please take a

And Karl tipped a heap of yet unscissored newspapers off the nearest chair and drew it eagerly forward. Blanche Ainslie sat down, her paleblue silk dress subsiding round her like the billows of a sapphire sea.

Bianche Ainslie was very handsome, with azure eyes, and bright, chestnutbrown hair, while her complexion, although rather pale, was clear as ivory, and her features were as delicate as if she had been a Greek girl in the days of old Praxiteles.

